The political barometer at Democratic headquarters has fallen so rapidly since the Jefferson-Jackson Day dinner that it now stands dangerously close to the storm-warning area. Two weeks ago there was a flourishing crop of vice-presidential aspirants on the Democratic side. Today you can cover miles of Capitol corridors without finding a single shy candidate for second place on the Truman ticket.

"What's happened in the last two weeks?" one puzzled Senator asked. "Everything is changed. Everyone believes we're going to get licked."

A canvass last week of the top Democratic leadership in the two Houses and representative state chairmen, national committeemen and committeewomen turned up no one who thought Harry could win.

What caused the decline in faith in Harry? Some said it was his poor performance in his party-celebration speech that did it—coming right on top of Henry Wallace's Bronx victory and the mounting Southern troubles. Others said not even all that would have set off this psychological slump unless there were a secret conviction in most Democratic hearts that the Truman cause had always been doomed to failure.

Mon. 3-8-48

If not Harry? Whatever the case, a few top Democrats are actually thinking of doing something about replacing Truman as the party candidate. The first name that pops up when they discuss the question is still that of General Dwight D. Eisenhower. His statement certainly removed him from the Republican picture, but, the Democrats ask, must that close the door on us, too?

For the liberal-minded ones, there is Bill Douglas. Though he definitely removed himself as a possibility for Vice President with Truman some time ago, some of his friends feel the Justice would not refuse the number-one position if it were available under proper conditions. Of course, his views on civil liberties are even less acceptable to "white supremacy" Southerners than Truman's. So those who support him think he has a chance only if the Southern revolt comes off.

At this point, we enter the field of what sounds like pure fantasy. For example, it is suggested that if a fourth party, the anti-Truman Southern Democrats, took the field, an attempt should be made to persuade Henry Wallace to give up his candidacy in favor of an amalgamation with the Northern liberal Democrats behind Douglas. Alternatively, there is a Southern scheme to force the nomination of an acceptable compromise between Truman and the present anti-Truman forces, in the person of James F. Byrnes. While all this may appear highly unrealistic, it is so serious that many important Democrats are determined to tell President Truman, at the earliest possible moment, how bad things look. Up to now, he remains undismayed. The last words Washington heard him say as he took off for vacation were, "I'm just as happy as I can be."

DEMOCRATS HOPE FOR PARTY UNITY

~~N. Y. Times~~

Leaders Look to 2-Day Talks of New National Executive Body in Capital Next Week

N. Y. 34d

By CLAYTON KNOWLES

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, March 4—The top leadership of the Democratic party, eager to restore party unity, is looking ahead hopefully to next week's two-day meeting of the next national executive committee.

Named just a week ago, the new committee includes four Representatives from the Deep South and two others from the border States of Arizona and Oklahoma. Senator J. Howard McGrath, Democratic National Chairman, expanded membership in the committee from twelve to sixteen and, in addition to inceasing Southern representation, spotted other members from other good geographical areas.

The coming meeting assumes a larger importance in Democratic national affairs because it will be held on the two days immediately preceding the March 13 Washington gathering of the Conference of Southern Governors. The special session of the Governors has been called to determine what course the South will take in view of President Truman's unwavering stand for civil-rights legislation.

The Southern revolt, however, is but one facet of the over-all problems that will confront the executive committee, though there is no other single issue of greater importance. Fri. 3-5-48

The committee, ostensibly called together to plan for the national convention in July, will consider also other big domestic and international issues with particular attention being given to the Palestine situation, source of deep distress among certain Democratic elements, and the whole European Recovery Program.

Looking forward to the pure mechanics of the campaign, the committee must deal also with the matter of finances. The Democratic national organization, lacking a treasurer for months now, was not in as good financial condition at a corresponding time in either the 1940 or 1944 campaigns. The party treasury, which stood at $119,000 on Jan. 1, now runs to about $500,000.

Despite rebellious talk south of the Mason-Dixon Line, proceeds of most of the Jefferson-Jackson Day dinners in that area will find their way into the party till, according to usually reliable sources. North Carolina and Tennessee, it is said, will set the lead in this direction.

A new treasurer is to be named, and the committee may decide how additional funds up to the $3,000,000 Hatch Act limitation can be raised.

As plans now stand, executive committee members will be locked in session all day Thursday. That evening they will get together with Democratic members of Congress at a reception at the Mayflower Hotel. The next day, apart from other business, they will visit at the White House with President Truman.

Seven members of former National Chairman Robert E. Hannegan's committee have been called over to the new one. They are: Mrs. Lennard Thomas of Alabama, Mrs. Edward Heller of California, Edward J. Kelly of Illinois, Representative Mary T. Norton of New Jersey, David L. Lawrence of Pennsylvania, Senator Theodore Green of Rhode Island and Myrc

G. Blalock of Texas. N.Y. 3.5

New members represent Arizona, Colorado, Indiana, Kentucky, Nebraska, New York, North Carolina, Oklahoma and Wyoming.

MAKING TRUMAN THE "SCAPE GOAT"

The Lighthouse Fri. 6-4-48

When Truth gets a hearing, it will reveal that all this fighting against President Truman by certain people in the South and their Northern ilk, is just the old trick of "Whipping the Devil Around the Stump." The real issue is the Constitution of the United States, and the Bill of Rights. Of course, because he is President of the United States, Mr. Truman had the courage to defend the purpose of that sacred document. They, the reactionaries would destroy it while hiding their purpose under the cloak of States Rights. These people do not hate President Truman, but they despise the Constitution of the United States, because it offers equal rights for all. They are using Harry S. Truman as a "Scape Goat" upon whom they can vent their spleen.

There is so much being said nowadays about loyalty, and we are glad to have this question more and more and more to the front. Why not put on a campaign to ascertain who are the loyal citizens, or the so-called loyal citizens; those who believe in the constitution, or those who refuse to accept it. You most assuredly will not find the loyal Americans among those who are ready to say "To Hell with the constitution!!! We don't want it if it protects one and all." You don't have to put on the Witch-hunt to find this crowd. In times like these they are plentiful. It looks like open season for them in the halls of Congress. They are there. They openly damn the Bill of Rights, and call the President of the United States a hyprocrite and traitor because he has had the courage to defend the constitution against its traduces. This is the crowd that needs watching.

Progressive Demos Not To Disband Chairman Says

34d

The Progressive Democratic Party has no intention of disbanding following the decision and order of Judge J. Waties Waring at Charleston on Friday, John H. McCray, state chairman, said Tuesday.

The PDP, in a special state convention July 16, 1947, voted to continue the organization as a medium of education, organization and instruction for its members, but to work within the framwork of the Democratic party.

Lighthouse

This, the chairman said, will be the procedure from now until further changes are made. In its new role, PDP will function much like the Labor Democrats, the Citizen Democrats, both in South Carolina, who work not as separate parties but as parts of the state party organization. Sun. 7-25-4

"This change in status will not affect our organization materially," chairman McCray said. "It will ismply mean we are inside and will work there, whereas before we were on the outside and had to work more orlessasan independent unit."

He said also that the organization had done too much good work to be dissolved at a time when somebody must help these newly enfranchised people prepare themselves and exercise their rights.

Howevver, he said, he would request of the state executive com--mittee that the name "party" be dropped from the title of the organization, and that it be known henceforth as simply, "Progressive Democrats."

Good For South

The Constitution

Atlanta, Ga.

Editor Constitution: So much has been written lately about the "death" of the Democratic Party that I thought I would like to have my little say.

I am a Democrat only so long as its platform and leaders uphold the ideals on which the Party was founded, and I draw a definite line there. Now that they have thrown the South overboard to satisfy other interests in the East and West, I am a free lance voter and expect to vote for the best man be he Democrat or Republican. Mon. 7-26-48

Truman was certainly not picked as a running mate with FDR in 1944 for his ability to be a good Chief Executive, but he was picked because it was thought that he would do the least harm to the ticket. This reflected a weakness in the Democratic Party at that time. Truman, as President, has not been too wise in his selection of cabinet members and his proposals for checking inflation and other economic ills have carried no suggestions from him as to how this was to be done, other than go back to wartime controls which do not go over so big in peacetime.

A political party is no stronger than its Chief and with Truman as the Chief we might as well start all over again and maybe in about 20 yea a new Democratic Party will come out of he growing South with a platform that appeals to the masses and not the special minority inter

The breakup of the Democratic Party co be a God-send to the people of the South becau now they can vote for whom they please a this should encourage a two-party system. Whe the time comes that the South is not taken for granted in its politics, it will be a new day for everyone in it.

McGrath Admits Truman Civil Rights Plan Phony

Daily Worker

New York

WASHINGTON, May 2.—The Democratic Party's national chairman, J. Howard McGrath, admitted in substance yesterday that President Truman's civil rights program was phony. Mon. 5-3-48

He admitted this when he said that the President was not trying to invade the "states' rights," abou which Southern white supremac Democrats are so much concerned.

These Southern Democrats have protested that the President's references to anti-lynching, anti-poll tax and anti-Negro discrimination were invasions of "states' rights."

Replying to these complaints, McGrath said in a broadcast today:

"The people simply don't realize that the President has never said a single word about invading states' rights. There is not, and never has been, any intention to upset or invade the rights of the states under our Constitution."

McGrath said Wallace's candidacy might cause the Democrats to lose New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois and California. 5-3-48

The Party Will Not Disintegrate

The News

BY E. L. HOLLAND, JR.

SCRATCH THE "AVERAGE" MAN on the street and you will find an amateur politician. At least he has opinions. They may not be well defined; his beliefs may seem shallow; he may find it difficult to keep his mind on one aspect of the present political situation. But he is thinking about what is happening to the Democratic Party. 34

There are exceptions to that, of course.

Tuesday this writer spent several hours passing through Birmingham streets — and into a few offices—to ask two basic questions:

1. What do you think of the future of the Democratic Party?

2. What do you think of the convention system for nominating a party candidate?

Answers to the second question, obtained from a number of persons, indicated that few had gone so far as to consider any other system. We have conventions, and that's that.

Birmingham, Ala.

Too Many 'Deals'

AT LEAST TWO willing to talk politics briefly did say this: That while we probably will long continue to have the convention system, it is faulty in that too many "deals" are made. Said one citizen: "The thing is all right until they get to the convention. Then there's a lot of trading and principles go out the window." Fri. 7-16-48

Both were particularly critical of the Dewey-type dealing at Philadelphia, when much attention was paid by Dewey men to each "possible" delegate.

None questioned, except one federal officeholder, indicated any belief that Harry Truman could win the November election. On the other hand, none indicated belief that Dewey had anything to offer the South.

A man who turned out to be a minister replied to a question about the Democratic Party's future with: "It's shot to hell." He went on to say that "the man from Missouri" just didn't have what it took to lead the party. He added that he himself had come from Missouri, and he remembered the Pendergast situation.

This citizen suggested that if the Republicans take over, and then there is a panic or other national economic trouble, the Democrats might have a chance to resume national leadership.

Why Not The 'Constitutional Democratic Party'?

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER: Now that we have "disaffiliated," we should make the name conform to our views.

We have several times changed the name of the party. Jefferson called it the Republican Party. Jackson called it the Democratic Republican Party. Cleveland and Wilson called it the Democratic Party. But the leaders of the present national setup do, not reflect the political philosophy of the great Democrats of the past.

Dixiecrats and Southern Democrats connote sectionalism. A New York Democrat may be as proud of his native land as a Southern man is of his—if that be possible. One is reminded of the Virginian who advised his son: "Never ask a gentleman where he is from. If he is from Virginia he will say so. If not, why embarrass him?"

In reverse, it may embarrass a New York State Democrat to be called a Dixiecrat. There have always been, and I believe still are, good Democrats outside the South.

THE Northern Democrats maintained the party organization during the entire period of the Civil War. In 1864, Gen. McClellan, the Democratic nominee for president, received 1,800,000 popular votes in the northern states. President Lincoln's popular vote for re-election was less than 500,000 more than McClellan's. The Northern Democrats solidly opposed the adoption of the 14th and 15th Amendments and the Reconstruction Acts. Appreciation of this loyalty is one of the reasons of the South's traditional devotion to the national party.

State's Rights is perhaps first in the Democratic creed. But we also believe in federal rights. We insist, though, upon the federal government confining its activities in those subjects delegated to it by the states, and keep its nose out of affairs not so delegated. We believe in human rights as superior to property rights, when the two conflict.

JEFFERSONIAN is not sufficiently comprehensive. Great as he was, he did not originate all the Democratic doctrines. Ronssean, Voltaire and other Frenchmen who antedated Jefferson, fought and suffered for some of the things we believe in.

Even the dictator Napoleon had an idea we endorse—"The tools to him who can use them," and Mr. Lincoln, the first among Republicans, was a firm advocate of "white supremacy."

YOU may not be very good in the definition of words, such, for example, as "bolter." Be that as it may, you—and the Hudsons—are maintaining the "fine tradition" set by your predecessors, one of whom, Col. Thomas C. DeWolf, who occupied your chair about 100 years ago, was a near relative of my maternal grandfather, Samuel H. DeWolf, a member of the Mobile Bar of that period. Always of Diverse Elements

The Constitution

The present predicament of the Democratic Party is neither new nor strange.

It always has been a party of diverse elements. As its success in the four consecutive Roosevelt terms was due to an alliance of the Southern and Western agricultural interests with those of labor and the city masses in the East, so the victories of Cleveland and of Wilson were due to similar forces. Cleveland was opposed by some of organized labor for his previous use of troops in the railway strike. But it was the great mass of immigrant laborers, particularly the Irish, which gave strength to the Democratic State machines in the East.

In all its victories, the two by Cleveland, the two by Wilson, and the four by Roosevelt, the victories have come about because of the presence of the explosive "protest" force in the social status of the country. Atlanta, Ga.

Protest The Democratic Party has never been productive of a surplus of leaders. The "politics of protest" usually have created the leader. This was true all the way back to the time of Jefferson and his creation of the party in his social and economic contest with Hamilton. Jackson took the raw new discontented strength of the West and the frontier States and broke the control of the Bank of the United States and the money power. Only Buchanan, product of party maneuvering over the issue of slavery, slid in as a compromise candidate. He was picked because he was weak. Tues. 5-25-48

It has been said of all the Democratic Presidents, as it was of Roosevelt, "that he never let any other leader develop."

This is not true. Explosive political protests which have catapulted the Democratic Party into power have inevitably been built about one man.

Two Parties There was a Democratic Party before the War Between the States. It called itself "The American Democracy.' This came in time to be simply "The Democracy," and later on, the Democrats.

The party which grew up after the War Between the States more or less attached itself to the promoters who thronged through through the South after the failure of Reconstruction.

Reconstruction was all that has been said of it, cruel and stupid, corrupt and mean. It was an armed occupation, not a series of political events as some of the commentators try to make it. It was corrupt and degrading in its influences, and it matched with its cruelties anything any occupying army has done save the concentration camp butcheries of Hitler.

But, once the economic promoters in the East saw Reconstruction would not make them rich, they abandoned it and allowed the South itself to smash it and to drive out the scalawags and thieving carpetbaggers of the time. Tues. 5-25-48

This Democratic Party, called "The New Departure Democrats," aligned itself with the promoters in the name of progress and the "New South" began to emerge.

Toombs Not everyone was happy about this turn. Not all the old Democratic leaders of the prewar and the war years joined it.

There were many former Southern leaders who stayed clear of it.

One of these was Georgia's famous Robert Toombs. It was he who had helped smash Reconstruction and it was he alone, with his great oratory and his courage, who "locked the door of the State Treasury and threw the key away." The looters have done well, but because of Toombs they have never been able to steal the State white. The Constitution

But, in 1872, looking at the party in Georgia, Toombs wrote his old friend, Alex Stephens, who also was withdrawn from "The New Departure" Democrats:

"The mongrel crew who call themselves Democrats apparently want Tilden elected for the same reason that Falstaff rejoiced at Prince Hal's reconciliation with the old King . . . 'Hal, rob me the exchequer.'" Atlanta, Ga.

Again Ten years later he had not changed his mind. Interviewed at the Kimball House in Atlanta, he said:

"The South is ruled by as cowardly and venal a lot of politicians as ever lived . . . like putrid bodies in the stream, they rise as they rot . . . they grovel in the dust before Northern money."

He did not like the sight of former Confederate generals serving the ends of the promoters. Tues.

Georgia's Tom Watson was to take this same growing discontent, the politics of protest, and put it into the Populist Party. He split Georgia. He all but overcame the Democratic Party. The Populist revolt swept the nation, to be sold out in 1896. It never came back. 5-25-48

The Democratic Party has never been one big happy family.

It is united only when abuses of power build up a protest strong enough to bring out the votes behind some leader able to take the force of protest and make them articulate.

G.O.P., Democrats In Red; Wallaceites Are Solvent

The Courier-Journal

Washington, April 28 (AP)—The Republican and Democratic National Committees ran into the red in financing operations in the first two months of this campaign year. Louisville, Ky.

But the National Wallace for President Committee, the C.I.O. Political Action Committee, and Americans for Democratic Action said they spent less than they took in. Thurs 4-29-48

The financial records are on display in the office of the clerk of the House. All political organizations are required by law to report periodically to Congress on contributions and expenses. This was the picture for the first two months of 1948:

The Republican National Committee reported contributions of $90,834.41 and expenses of $129,492.64, a difference of $38,658.23.

The Democratic National Committee said it received $16,022 and spent $190,861, a difference of $174,839.

The Democrats said their bank balance dropped from $315,367 at the start of the year to $221,529. They reported debts of $20,063 and $95,000 out on loan. Biggest outstanding loans were $50,000 to the New York State Committee and $30,000 to the California Committee.

The G.O.P. did not report its bank balance or debts—that information is not required by law. The Wallace group said it took in $65,647 and paid out $55,417, leaving $10,230 in the war chest.

Americans for Democratic Action said they collected $38,139 and spent $18,379, leaving them $19,760. The C.I.O.-P.A.C. reported $117,468.54 in contributions. Sales of literature raised its income to $118,541.84. Expenditures were $60,640.25, leaving a $57,901.59 balance. Thurs. 4-29-48

What Is The Democratic Party?

The News

Birmingham, Ala.

Chairman Gessner T. McCorvey of the Alabama Democratic Executive Committee appears to have solved his own dilemma as far as loyalty to the party goes this year, but he has not solved it for all Alabamians. Mr. McCorvey draws a distinction between the national Democratic Party and the Alabama Democratic Party. Primary allegiance, he says, is to the state Democratic Party. Alabama Democrats, he counsels, can refuse to support the national ticket and still be true to the party.

That statement leaves many questions. What is the Democratic Party in Alabama? Is it the State Executive Committee, or is it the voters in the Democratic primary? What will Mr. McCorvey advise if the side he advocates loses in the May 4 primary election? Sat. 4-17-48

Democratic voters in that election may send to the national party convention delegates who have promised to walk out of the convention at several points in the proceedings if they think the South is being mistreated, or they may send delegates who have said they would battle for the South and its ideals to the very end of the convention.

Suppose, next May 4, Democratic voters clearly indicate they prefer their delegation to go uninstructed. They may well do that, since that course is being advocated by such stalwart Democrats as former Gov. Chauncey Sparks, Sen. Lister Hill, Atty. Gen. Albert Carmichael, Gov. Folsom, and more than a score of other candidates for delegate. In that case, will not the Democratic Party in Alabama be those who have thus voted, instead of Mr. McCorvey and those who believe like him? The News

Is the Democratic Party of Alabama the majority of the Democrats of the state as they indicate their attitudes on issues now, or is it the members of the state committee elected two years ago when no such issue existed? We would suggest waiting until May 4 before deciding what the Alabama Democratic Party believes.

There is the major question, too, of whether the national Democratic Party is a party composed of Democrats throughout the country, or whether it is, as Mr. McCorvey believes, a collection of state Democratic Parties. Do Democrats owe primary allegiance to the state party and only secondary allegiance to the national party? Or do they owe loyalty to the national party through their state organizations? Which comes first, the nation or the state? Birmingham, Ala.

It is not easy to answer all these questions. One's conscience is often the deciding voice. But it may be suggested that, in some respects, the answer was indicated as far back as 1865. Sat. 4-17-48

Transformed Party

The Post

Washington

As a Negro voter, I was prepared to go Republican last week. Today, I'm not so sure. It's not that I think the Democrats can win; it's the way that opposition to Southern die-hards made me feel. It's the way people near the microphone at the convention told the gentleman from Alabama goodby when he bade them farewell. It's the way someone explained why there was no answer to the roll call: "Mississippi's gone home." It isn't even what I think the Democratic Party is at the moment; it's what it showed Wednesday afternoon that it is capable of becoming.

The trouble with the South is that it lives in the past. Like my aunt in Alabama says when she thinks your dress is not becoming, "Looks like South before the War." I've been in the South all my life, and know Southern whites as well as they think they know Negroes, but even I did not believe they would let the Democratic Party walk into the twentieth century and leave them holding a cardboard Confederate flag that came apart in the parade. 7-21-48

Labor, Negroes Ask Firm Plank On Civil Rights

Herald Tribune

New York, N.Y.

Warn Democrats Against Another 1944 'Straddle'; Back Full Truman Plan

Fri 7-9-48

By Jack Steele

PHILADELPHIA, July 8.—Powerful labor and Negro groups served warning today on the Democratic National Convention's resolutions committee that they would not accept another platform "straddle"—like that of 1944—on the crucial civil-rights issue.

Representatives of more than a dozen such organizations, rubbing salt into the party's sorest wound, demanded that the 1948 Democratic platform give "100 per cent" indorsement to President Truman's civil-rights program, the source of the threatened Southern revolt against Mr. Truman's nomination.

Their demands, which apparently enlisted the support of a majority of the eighteen-member platform drafting subcommittee, promised to upset the carefully laid plans for a compromise civil-rights plank patterned after that of 1944—which simply promised minority groups "the right to live, develop and vote equally with all citizens and share the rights that are guaranteed by our Constitution."

Stand by Agreement

The anticipated public battle over the civil-rights issue failed to develop at today's platform hear-hearing when Southern members of the drafting committee adhered scrupulously to a prearranged agreement not to cross-question witnesses who castigated Dixie Democrats for their opposition to civil-rights legislation during the day-long session. Herald Tribune

The Southerners told reporters, however, not to be misled by their silence today, which they said was merely based on the strategy of holding their fire until the committee meets in executive session on Saturday to begin actual platform drafting. New York, N.Y.

They declared that they would then demand not only the platform not to go an inch beyond the 1944 declaration on civil rights, but include a strong states' rights plank to reassure the South against any attempt to enact Federal legislation aimed to enforce

Most of the Northern members of the committee, on the other hand, were equally emphatic in their assertions that the 1948 civil-rights plank must go beyond that of 1944, with some insisting that it include specific indorsement of the President's proposals for anti-lynching, anti-poll tax, anti-Jim Crow and fair employment practices legislation.

The Southerners responded that in such an event most of the Dixie delegates would carry out their threat to walk out of the convention and nominate their own Presidential ticket at a rump session.

Decision Up to Truman

There the civil-rights battle hung tonight, but with every indication that the final tough decision will be left to President Truman himself. Senator Francis J. Myers, of Pennsylvania, the committee chairman, has promised to submit the platform to the President for final approval.

Whatever the committee's final decision on civil rights may be, Mr. Truman will be put squarely on the spot. If it is a compromise plank like that of 1944, he in effect will be called upon to repudiate his own program. If it indorses his program, he will be forced to brave the full ire of the South in the midst of a convention at which his nomination is at stake. Herald Tribune

The Congress of Industrial Organizations touched off the civil-rights controversy today by issuing the first demand for complete platform indorsement of the President's program.

James B. Carey, C. I. O. secretary-treasurer, called for adoption of a "Roosevelt platform" with the Truman civil-rights program as one of its key planks.

"We must not seek to evade responsibility for this minimum program of civil rights by placing blame on a small minority of willful men," he declared in a shaft aimed at the Southern Democrats. New York, N.Y.

Asks Repeal of Taft Act

Mr. Carey also was the first to raise the second most perplexing issue facing the Democratic platform writers when he called for repeal of the Taft-Hartley act, which he denounced as a "weapon for union busting" and "for economic aggression against the working people." Fri. 7-9-48

The plaform committee is similarly split on this act, which the President vetoed only to have the

National Group Seeks to Drive Wedge Between 'Fourth Party' and Rank and File Voters

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 2—The National Democratic organization moved today to drive a wedge between the Dixiecrat movement and rank and file Southern voters, offering its blessing to any state Democratic committees pledged to support the Truman-Barkley ticket in the November election.

Fri 9-3-48

New York N.Y.

The action was aimed directly at the situation in South Carolina where a split developed yesterday in the Democratic Executive Committee over the naming of a slate of Presidential electors pledged to vote for the Thurmond-Wright ticket of the States Rights party.

Inquiries from the dissenting minority to Democratic National Headquarters here prompted a statement by the party's controlling agency today that it would "recognize and support an officially organized state committee pledged to support the National Democratic ticket.

Minority Action Hailed

In a telegram to the dissenting group, William J. Primm Jr., acting for National Chairman J. Howard McGrath, said that when the "regular Democrats" of South Carolina had been officially organized "there can be no course for the Democratic National Committee to take but to recognize the group as the official Democratic party of South Carolina."

Mr. Primm hailed the action of the minority at the Columbia, S. C., meeting as "the beginning of a repudiation by the people all over the South of the bolters who rule the Dixiecrats."

First reports of the minority action at Columbia hinted at a party purge of the bolting Dixiecrat elements. This, however, would be out of the question as long as the state controls the election process. At most, the national organization, through the dissenting minority, could present a rival slate of electors pledged to vote for the Truman-Barkley ticket.

The minority of the South Carolina Executive Committee asked the national committee specifically what its position would be in event it formed a party organization to replace the one it felt had left the national party by abandoning the ticket designated at the national convention.

Fri 9-3-48

Prim Sends Telegram

Mr. Primm sent the group the following telegram:

"The Democratic National Committee appreciates the action of loyal Democrats of South Carolina in standing by the regular Democratic party and its nominees headed by President Truman and Senator Barkley.

"The committee approves of the program you have stated to assure that the regular Democrats of South Carolina have an opportunity to vote for the regular party nominees.

"When you have officially organized the regular Democrats of South Carolina through proper procedures there can be no course for the Democratic National Committee to take but to recognize the group as the official Democratic party of South Carolina.

"The group now organized under the name of States Rights party, or Dixiecrats, has bolted the Democratic party. Neither they nor their leaders can be recognized as Democrats any more than Henry A. Wallace and his Progressive party can be considered Democrats. Both the Dixiecrats and the Wallaceites have one thing in common—the aid and comfort they are giving to the Republican party. The Dixiecrats are a fourth-party movement, deliberately designed by their leaders to aid the Republican party."

Fri 9-3-48

Stassen's Role Emphasized

Meanwhile, Chairman McGrath took notice of reports that President Truman's Labor Day speech at Detroit would be answered at the behest of Gov. Thomas E. Dewey by Harold E. Stassen, his unsuccessful opponent from the Republican Presidential nomination.

He charged that the Republican "affection for silence" on the party's record had caused Governor Dewey "to turn over the task of wooing the voters to a roadshow troupe of John Aldens." He criticized Mr. Stassen's Albany proposals for dealing with high prices, labeling them "rationing by high prices."

Senator McGrath said under the system proposed by Mr. Stassen, "there is more food for the rich because the poor cannot afford to buy as much as they need."

"Meantime using Stassen as his John Alden in the opening visit of the Republican courtship of the voters gives Dewey more time in which to duck the issue by running for the Presidency on hearsay," said Senator McGrath.

The Advertiser

Editor, The Advertiser:

I am very glad to see a few more Democrats that dare [illegible] their neck to speak out for the best interest of our state. We have everything to lose and nothing to gain in tearing down the Democratic Party. Our able senators will fight every attempt to pass a civil rights bill. They have always been our bulwark against such legislation, and they will continue to be. I have full confidence in them.

Thurs 9-9-48

However, if they are restrained by a change in Senate procedure in case of a Republican victory, then we can expect the [illegible] personally not in favor of F. E. P. C. in any form in our state. It would call for two whites, one Negro approximately. This we do not want.

Montgomery, Ala.

However, at this time there is a greater number of Negroes per hundred thousand employed than whites. This has been true for a long time for reason of wages and ability to stand strenuous tasks.

In the skilled field, Negro labor doesn't fare so well, due to unions and protective labor laws.

If the Republicans succeed in killing labor protection, you will see almost immediately Negro mechanics and other skilled forms of labor flocking into industry and on construction jobs at cheaper wages than whites are willing to work.

They will eventually set the wage scale and whites will be required to meet it or go unemployed. If these conditions come about industry throughout the South will welcome F. E. P. C It will be their one excuse to hire cheaper labor and "[illegible]." They have this figured as they go about financing this bolt against the Democratic Party.

Date 9-9-48

The sad picture about these things is the dragging of the Negro skeleton across the board, stirring up hatred among the very class that needs this protection; thus, causing them to vote their only hope of a continued decent standard of living out of their hands. The small business man and farmer rises and falls with labor. A few "disgruntled" politicians will have made political gain; the common people will be the losers. We still have a chance. What are we to do about it? I would like to see more good Democrats like Senator Hill and Atty. Gen. Carmichael speak out. 1950 is coming.

Washington Calling

Democratic Party May Be On Way Out

By MARQUIS CHILDS

34d

WASHINGTON.

WE MAY well be watching, without thus far having caught its true meaning, the liquidation of one of the two major political parties. What is happening in Democratic ranks is more than a temporary break between the two poles of the party in the North and in the South.

It is more than the accident of a presidential candidate with whom various groups are dissatisfied. Mr. Truman is not the cause of the crack-up. He merely happens to find himself at the climactic moment when bitterly contending forces are seen to be irreconcilable.

What is happening in the South is obvious. What is happening in the North is not quite so clear, but it is just as significant of the revolution that is taking place.

Last week I spent two days in Detroit and I talked with a good many people who are directly or indirectly in politics. Even a glimpse of the pattern of change in that great key industrial center seemed to me to reveal the kind of splitting-off that can mean the end of the Democratic Party as we have known it in recent decades. The Advertiser

It is not that Michigan will almost certainly go Republican this Fall. After all, Wendell Willkie carried that state by a narrow margin in 1940 and Franklin Roosevelt took it in '44 by a margin almost as small. It is traditionally a Republican state. Montgomery, Ala.

The new and striking factor is the direction in which the labor vote in the industrial centers is moving. These voters are going down a road that leads away from the Democratic Party.

FOR A variety of reasons, Henry Wallace's third party seems likely to poll a substantial vote in November in Detroit and in the other automobile cities. One reason is the large number of Negroes, particularly in Detroit, with an acute new consciousness of injustice and discrimination and a militant new political awareness. Tues. 3-9-48

Walter Reuther, who is now solidifying his remarkable victory over the Communist faction in the United Auto Workers, is dead set against Wallace. The UAW executive board last week denounced Wallace's candidacy as a "Communist party maneuver to advance the foreign policy interest of Soviet Russia."

But the same resolution called for the formation of a new "Progressive" party after the 1948 elections. An invitation was extended to CIO, A. F. of L., the Railroad Brotherhoods, farm and white collar groups to join in creating a new party. Reuther has several times recently pronounced a plague on both the old parties, plainly hinting his desire to see a third party started that would be free of the Communist taint. The Advertiser

It takes no great political genius to see where this leads if it continues. The Wallace party, if only because it is a convenient front for the Comunists, is certain to remain in being after '48. That is one splinter party. Montgomery, Ala.

A Reuther party built around the non-Communist labor-left would be another. So would the remnants of the old Democratic Party. With the South pulling out, still another party would be created—a Southern splinter dominant in the poll-tax states. So far as national elections are concerned, these splinters would break against the solid mass of the Republican Party. That realization is deeply disturbing to some who feel that the third-party road is a dead end. Tues. 3-9-48

THEY URGE as an alternative the necessity for new forces to take over and rejuvenate and revivify the Democratic Party. They argue that new parties in this country have always come into being by building on the foundations of the old; while third parties have sprung up, flourished briefly and then withered away.

From 1932 through 1944, the scrambled elements of the Democratic Party were held together by the political genius of President Roosevelt and the idea of the New Deal. Even when he attempted a "purge" of Southern reactionaries, as he did in 1938, he carried the South along with him. In the same way he carried the great urban centers, where labor-left voters returned the scorn and distrust of the Southern bourbons a hundred-fold.

Those who argue that the Democratic Party should be refashioned in a new form point to the Roosevelt heritage. On this foundation, they insist, a new beginning can be made. They believe that even in the South, as industrialization increases there, a new Democratic Party will evolve with genuine ties with the North. This is the kind of debate which will be heard increasingly as the tide of change cuts deep into the Democratic Party of tradition. Tues. 3-9-48

LONG AND TALMADGE

34d

New Republic

N. Y., N. Y.

Return of the Long and Talmadge machines to power has given a new boost to the Southern Governors' efforts to rule or wreck the National Democratic Party. Earl K. Long, brother of "The Kingfish," and Herman Talmadge, son of Eugene, have gained legal control of the Democratic Parties in Louisiana and Georgia.

Earl Long, not so effective an orator as his brother but just as ambitious, was chosen as the next Governor of Louisiana in a runoff primary with Sam Houston Jones. Jones had defeated him in the 1940 race, so the victory a few days ago ended Long's eighth politically lean year. He managed to weather attacks connecting him with the "Louisiana Scandals" which sent Governor Richard Leche and several other political bosses to prison in 1939.

In Georgia, young Herman Talmadge won legal control over the state's Democratic machinery when the Georgia Supreme Court voted unanimously to vest party power in the Talmadge faction. Mon. 3-8-48 This ended ten months of contest and confusion and probably ended also the political career of Governor M. E. Thompson. The Thompson group, which has been tacitly recognized by national Democratic officials, was declared to be without any official standing. Each of the groups had held its own convention and branded the other as "rump Democrats" and "bolters."

Uninstructed. Another important development has just come in Virginia. Its Governor, William M. Tuck, has requested the state legislature to rewrite the law to permit selection of uninstructed presidential electors. At the same time, he asked Virginia's General Assembly to pass a bill that would remove the names of candidates for President and Vice President from ballots in that state. The law would put only party labels on the ballots and would bar the name of any party unless it had been listed in the last presidential election, or unless its candidates polled 10 percent of the vote at some general election within the last five years. Mon. 3-8-48

Such a law would knock out Henry Wallace's third party, as well as any move by Truman to enter Virginia's election with some new modification of the Democratic Party label. The Mississippi and South Carolina state legislatures, the only other two in the South meeting this year, are expected to follow Virginia's lead in freeing their electors to oppose Truman if and when the time comes.

Why Not Cooperation?

To the Editor of The News:

This is written by a non-partisan who is fully aware of the crucial situation this and other freedom-loving countries are now confronted with, and is addressed to those who proclaim their partisan affiliations, sometimes loudly and oftentimes "too long." The occasion demands that the plain, unvarnished truth be spoken in understandable Americanese. The News Fri

At a time when Western European countries, in order to save themselves and what's left of their shattered civilization, have decided that their only hope for survival is to form a union and look to the U. S. A. for inspiration and material assistance, we here in the U. S. A. see at least one of our major political parties falling apart like a jalopy held together by nothing more substantial than chewing gum and haywire. 4-2-48

On the other hand, the party that hopes to benefit from the disassembling of its opposition's party machinery is in little better condition to serve the common interest. This fact alone should cause those who put the national welfare ahead of party loyalty to demand an answer from the politicians they elect to represent them, as to why, at a time like this, they have chosen to present an exhibition of disunity, the like of which the U. S. A. has been free of for almost a century.

Is it because insufficient time has elapsed that neither of the two parties have been able to solve the civil rights issue which is amply provided for in our Federal Constitution, or because they just couldn't get around to it until now at the most inopportune time in our entire national history?

In any event, it being an unsolved problem but not an insoluble one, it seems to me to be as worthy of non-partisan cooperation as the two parties' practice in foreign affairs. Fri. 4-2-48

Rivers Flaunts Dixie Revolt; Plans Fund-Raising Dinner

Montgomery Advertiser

E. D. RIVERS

ATLANTA, March 4.—(AP)—National Democratic Committeeman E. D. Rivers in a fiery statement late Thursday, flaunted a boiling Southern revolt over President Truman's civil rights program and asserted Georgia still would stage a Jefferson-Jackson Day dinner.

34d

Rivers, a former governor, declared "those who are unashamed and unaffraid to stand up and be counted for the party of Jefferson and Jackson will be given an opportunity to contribute, to meet, to dine . . . and rededicate themselves to the cause of the common man. Montgomery, Ala.

"The ramparts of the Democratic party are being stormed front and rear by the reactionaries and the dreamers . . .

"If the national committeeman stands alone in Georgia on the burning deck of the party ship, let it be remembered that he chooses to remain there fighting the fires of passion that threaten to consume her." 3-5-1948

Rivers assumed responsibility for the national party fund-raising dinner after William T. Dean, former chairman of the affair, suddenly resigned last week.

Dean is a close associate of Gov M. E. Thompson. Both Dean and Thompson have been close politically with Rivers.

Rivers said a date and speaker would be announced when headquarters for the dinner are opened in Atlanta.

"There will be no quotas, no organized drive, just an opportunity for voluntary contributions to the national party," he said. "We will hold the dinner, however few there may be."

His announcement was an unexpected development on a rocky road from the beginning for the Jackson Day rally. First, Thompson announced that National Party Chairman Howard McGrath would address the Georgia dinner, March 5.

Growing Southern resentment against the civil rights program forced a change in plans and Senator Lister Hill, of Alabama, was substituted as speaker.

Nothing But Speculatio

If anything at all can be said with certainty about the troubled Democratic Party outlook, it is that President Truman will not voluntarily withdraw as a candidate for the nomination. The quality of stubbornness in his own character, coupled to an understandable pride, is sufficient assurance of that. His statement of Thursday was no surprise. He could not say anything else except that he expected a Democratic victory in November.

Birmingham, Ala

Mon.

There can be little more than speculation now about the party's outlook. The convention is still months away. Both domestic and international affairs are in such fluid state at this moment that no one knows with any sureness what may happen next. 3-29-48

Will the convention insert a strong civil liberties plank in the platform? If it does not, what will be the attitude of Southern revolters? We hear our best political commentators talking about dissent from the president's attitudes in important Eastern and Midwestern states. But no single Democratic leader from New York or Massachusetts or Illinois has taken a public stand. Marquis Childs, usually a calm individual not stampeded into making any wild guesses, devoted a column last week to some possibilities which do not sound thoroughly logical to all of his readers. Doris Fleeson, who may have inside sources of information, has several times hinted strongly at Northern disapproval of Truman. But neither of these writers has made statements which are far outside the gossip stage.

The News

It is even possible that the president's explanation of the Palestine stand has made headway with some of his critics on that score. In California the national convention delegates, after a four-hour meeting, announced that they are now "firmly pledged" to Truman. Sen. Murray, of Montana, says that he is "greatly encouraged" over the president's explanation of his position on Palestine. Birmingham, Ala

These are items which indicate a swing back of some into Truman's column. Nor does anyone know what effect the Russian situation may have on the party's attitude toward the president. Should Russia begin to relax her pressure as a possible result of Truman's requests for UMT and selective service, there is a possibility that his political stock will rise again. If conditions become more tense, the president's position also may be strengthened. Mon. 3-29-48

There is thus nothing sure except that no one knows. Whatever one reads at this stage of affairs is the sheerest sort of speculation.

WASHINGTON—A TEST IS SOON TO COME in the Senate that will have far-reaching political significance in this year of division. It may well determine whether the Democratic Party is to remain an effective unit or whether it is to shatter into warring fragments.

The test will come over the issue of cloture. Will a sufficient number of Northern Democrats join with Republicans to shut off Senate debate and thereby make it possible to adopt an anti-lynching or an anti-poll tax bill?

Birmingham News

Under the rules of the Senate, two-thirds of those present and voting must vote in favor of cloture—a limitation on debate which would end a Southern filibuster. Repeatedly, in the past, cloture has failed and the hated legislation has been drowned in talk.

Tues 3-30-48

There had been some expectation that this time enough Democrats, following the lead of President Truman's civil rights message, would go for cloture. But that was before the revolt within the Democratic Party threatened a breakup beyond hope of repair.

* * *

Southerners Make A Test

TODAY NORTHERN DEMOCRATS are acutely aware of the emphasis that Southern leaders will put on cloture. The Southerners may take it as the final test of whether they remain within the framework of their party.

This unhappy situation promises to produce acute political colic. On the day of the cloture vote, certain Northern Democrats will discover that they must have a long neglected hospital checkup. They will not be present and voting when the roll is called.

This is the strategy of those who feel that in the present desperation there is only one course left—to save the remnants of the Democratic Party. They would try to preserve the alliance between the Northern and Southern wings so that the present shattered forces may some day be reformed to fight another battle.

These are the same men who are talking of saving the party by side-tracking Mr. Truman. With cloture rejected, the Southerners would fall in line behind a substitute ticket and the basic structure of the party would thereby be preserved.

Powerful forces see in the present Southern revolt a heaven-sent opportunity to split the conservative Southern wing from the Northern wing, with its reliance on organized labor. To break up what is regarded as an unnatural alliance is the real goal. Birmingham Ala.

In the South, these forces are concentrated in the most reactionary wing of big business. The Southern Industrial Council of Nashville, Tenn., has sent out a flood of propaganda intended to fan the revolt.

Tues 3-30-48

The stake is, of course, the lower wage base in the South. By paying the Negro less than the white worker, a reservoir of cheap labor helps to maintain the base. Anti-discrimination laws would end all that.

* * *

Revolt Is Deep

NOT MUCH HAS BEEN NEEDED to touch off the Southern revolt, according to reports from that region. Feeling is deep and widespread.

What Southerners took more or less quiescently from President Roosevelt, they would not hear of from Mr. Truman. In part, at least, this seems to come from a sence of betrayal by one who had represented himself as their ally. A prominent Southern politician, in a letter to the president, put it this way:

"When I talked to you at the Democratic convention in Chicago in 1944, you said you were not in favor of this kind of enforced equalization. That is one of the reasons I worked in your behalf for the vice presidential nomination."

All this adds up to the likelihood that no civil rights legislation will be passed at this session. While the Republicans may shed crocodile tears at that outcome, they will not be too distressed.

They are well aware that if legislation were passed now, President Truman would deserve not a little of the credit. If, on the other hand, they wait until next year, when there will presumably be a Republican president and overwhelming Republican majorities in Senate and House, no one will have any doubt as to where credit should go.

These are the somewhat sordid realities of behind-scenes politics. They show men acting under the compulsion of swiftly-moving events that spin the wheel of fortune so fast most politicians, accustomed to the slower tempo of another day, cannot keep up with the changes. Another whirl might bring Mr. Truman's number up again, but the professionals are not counting on it.

All Hope of Victory Is Gone

Atlanta, Ga. Tues 4-6-48

WASHINGTON—The revolt against President Truman in the Democratic Party has reached the point where Northern city bosses have surrendered all hope of winning the Presidency and are looking only for a substitute candidate who will be least harmful to their State and local tickets.

Jacob M. Arvey, successor to Ed Kelly as head of the Chicago machine, was the first city boss to throw Truman overboard, but the movement he announced already was equally under way in a score of other big industrial centers.

It is a fairly safe bet that, in addition to the Chicago delegation, the bulk of representatives from New York City, Boston, Philadelphia, Boss. Frank Hague's New Jersey cities, Cleveland and Detroit will vote against Truman. In California, Jimmy Roosevelt, Democratic State Chairman, has said he still is on Truman's side but Los Angeles and San Francisco are seething with opposition.

FIRST and foremost, the city bosses are scared to death of Henry Wallace. They frankly fear that Wallace would draw more votes than Truman in industrial sections, with a probable effect of transferring control of the Democratic Party in these areas to Wallaceites in the after-election reorganization. 4-6-48

This is the same attitude that caused Kelly, Hague, Flynn and other big-city bosses to fight so hard against renomination of Wallace for Vice President in 1944. It was touch and go then, for example, whether Kelly could hold his delegation against Wallace. In order to hold it Kelly personally entered Sen. Scott Lucas for Vice President. Kelly never got aboard the Truman bandwagon, because he was afraid that on a "unit rule" test Wallace would win the whole Illinois delegation.

The city leaders fear that Truman would carry down to defeat most of their candidates for lesser offices. With Truman and Wallace dividing the Democratic votes fairly equally, Republican nominees would be likely to win a lot more congressional seats and other local plums.

The Truman opposition right now is shouting for Gen. Dwight Eisenhower mainly because it has no other place to go. Neither the city bosses nor the experienced politicians of the South have any real hope that Eisenhower, after spurning the Republican nomination, is going to rush to the rescue of hopelessly divided Democrats. The Constitution

But talk of Eisenhower is useful to rally sentiment against Truman and hold it until the party leaders determine whom else to go for. Atlanta, Ga.

NOR DO the Democratic leaders, North or South, see any conceivable chance of reuniting these sections before next November. The difference between them is so pronounced and definite that any presidential candidate acceptable to the Northern cities would be anathema to the South and vice versa. Tues 4-6-48

What the Northern city bosses are looking for is a candidate who would come closest to holding Democratic votes in their bailiwicks against Wallace. The man most favored to that end is Justice William O. Douglas, of the Supreme Court, but it is doubtful if he will give up his lucrative lifetime job for a forlorn hope. Certainly the South would be as much against Douglas as Truman. Atlanta, Ga.

The Constitution

Boss Arvey is said to be touting Sen. Lucas as the best Northern city bet. Lucas might prove fairly acceptable to Democrats of the Southern border States, but the 10 States of the so-called Solid South would settle for him. Tues

The prospect continues to be that Democratic votes will split three ways: Between Truman or some other candidate backed by Northern Democratic regulars

New Republic

THE BIG domestic news this week is the growing despair of the Democrats. Following the Jackson Day-dinner flop, Truman's prestige took a further giddy decline in the handling of the Palestine issue. Party leaders are at last asking themselves if it's possible to switch to another candidate. The practical answer is Yes, but it means almost certain defeat. It's a repudiation of the party's own leader and record.

Wallace, and a dyed-in-the-wool Southerner such as Sen. Harry Byrd, of Virginia, or Sen. Walter George, of Georgia. 4-1-48

The Roosevelt coalition is fast falling apart, Wallace leading off one wing, Southern reactionaries another. There's no fun in any of this for middle-of-the-road progressives.

With all Truman's mistakes and ineptitudes, they feel he's been right on social legislation, the Taft-Hartley Act, taxes, the Marshall Plan and civil liberties. Truman's position now is a good deal like that of Lincoln's successor Andrew Johnson, who managed to alienate almost everybody in a remarkably short time, some for good reason. The Democrats ditched Johnson, and the Republicans and the money powers took over. Things look good for them today, too.

Funds Raised By Democrats To Combat Truman Proposal

Montgomery Ala.

JACKSON, MISS., Feb. 22.—(AP)—Mississippi Democratic leaders, aided by some out-of-state representatives, began raising funds Sunday to fight the Truman leadership of the national party.

Approximately 250 of them at a meeting here pledged $61,500 toward an initial goal of $100,000.

It is to be spent not only in "advise" the people and gain their support in combatting the national party's sponsorship of "anti-Southern" legislation.

Gov. Fielding L. Wright, of Mississippi, spearhead of the movement to purge the party of leaders he says are not in accord with the "principles of true white Jeffersonian Democrats," asserted: Mon. 2-23-48

"We want to kick out these birds who stole the party from us. We want to see the South revive the conservative Democratic party."

Sees Realignment

If the movement is successful, he continued, it will lead to a realignment of major political parties.

"We will have a conservative party and a radical party," the governor said.

"Let's kick out those leaders and get them under the flag they ought to be under—the radical flag."

"We've got to have other states with us if we are going to accomplish anything," Wright continued. He added, however, that Mississippi will go ahead with its fight even without outside support.

States represented at Sunday's meeting, in addition to Mississippi, included Texas, Louisiana, Alabama, Georgia, Tennessee, North Carolina, South Carolina.

The governor said representatives of other states were invited to the meeting "to plan one program we all can get behind." An executive session followed the open meeting.

Can't Compromise

In the present fight, Wright said, "we can't go back, we can't compromise. . . . because we are fighting for a principle and you can't compromise on a principle."

"They (the national party leadership) are offering us a Southern vice-president," Gov. Wright declared. "They gave us a vice-president four years ago, and look what we've got."

He warned:

"If you fail this time, you might as well forget about making the voice of the South heard."

"Don't ever think this move-

Wallace W. Wright of Jackson, a business man and not related to the governor, conducted the money-raising phase of today's meeting.

Pledges ranged from $25 to $5,000. After Wright had announced a total of $31,500 pledged, he received notice that the civilian colonels on the staff of Gov. Wright in Jackson would guarantee another $25,000.

"This is the people's fight," Wallace Wright told the gathering. "It is going to take money.

"We are trying to cooperate with other states representing 127 electoral votes."

He said the "fight" must be made now because, on the basis of the next census, the South expects to lose some of its seats in the electoral college.

ment is confined to the South," he continued. "It is spreading all over the United States because we are fighting on high ground, for states' rights."

He predicted that many Republicans would join in the movement "because they are disturbed about conditions."

Sunday's meeting was another development in agitation against the national party leadership that has become more pronounced since Wright's inauguration Jan. 20. Mon. 2-23-48

Break Urged

At that time he proposed that Southern Democrats "break" with the national party unless it cease sponsoring such legislation as anti-lynching and the FEPC bill—both recommendations of President Truman's civil rights committee.

Truman Strategy to Hold Left Wingers Without Losing Southern Support Has Run Into Serious Trouble

'HALF BOLT' IS SOMETHING NEW

By ARTHUR KROCK

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28—The war-delayed crack-up of the political combination which Franklin D. Roosevelt loosely covered with the label of the Democratic party, and which Harry S. Truman inherited in damaged condition, is now showing wide and expanding rifts. These developed from the successive strain of the Feb. 17 by-election for Congress in the Bronx, where third-party forces under Henry A. Wallace were successful, and the deliberate program this week of the Virginia Democratic organization to withhold the state's electoral votes from the national party nominees. But beneath the surface the dynamic origins of the split have long been in motion. Sun. 2-29-48

Mr. Roosevelt attracted to Democratic tickets for a number of years the votes of a majority of Negro citizens, who, when they are politically solidified and other groups are divided, can determine the outcome of elections in several large states of the Northeast. The Bronx election implied that this solid pro-Democratic front is breaking for various reasons which even Mr. Truman's new emphasis on Federal legislation it has favored apparently did not remove.

Mr. Roosevelt, though he separately endorsed all the legislative items which Mr. Truman sent to Congress in one package, never pressed them at a time or in a way to persuade the Southern Democracy they actually impended, as Mr. Truman has now persuaded them. Hence, with the war emergency and then the war greatly assisting his strategy, Mr. Roosevelt held the South, whose Democratic organizations are now in arms against his successor.

Change Over Moscow

The Times

The late President also, beginning with the recognition of Soviet Russia, had public opinion with him in his fraternal dealings with Moscow which, through Hitler's attack, advanced to the war alliance with Russia against the Axis and the appeasement policy that reached its peak at Yalta. Therefore, the opponents of our current course toward Soviet Russia who form the hard core of Mr. Wallace's support stayed in the Democratic political combination from which they now have broken away. The Palestine crisis has alienated other units. Only the right and middle wings of organized labor, of the roving groups that affiliated with the Democratic party during the Presidency of Mr. Roosevelt, give Mr Truman any assurance of continued support. New York, N.Y.

The march of events since his succession having brought the Democratic party to the point of violent fission, the President felt obliged to take certain calculated risks. Last year, because he approved the advance text of a speech on foreign affairs by his Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Wallace, he had to make a choice between reversing his Russian policy and his Secretary of State, James F. Byrnes, or dismissing Mr. Wallace from the Cabinet. This incident progressed inevitably into a third-party movement led by the ousted Secretary. This year, in an effort to hold the support of non-Southern groups who are pressing for Federal laws against lynching, the poll-tax and racial segregation and selection of any kind, the President proposed his omnium "civil-rights" program to a Republican Congress whose majority would be certain to add strength to it that Democratic Congresses could not to pass at least the anti-poll tax and anti-lynching items. This has led inevitably to the uprising in the South against the Presidential candidacy of Mr. Truman. 2-29-48

Two Surprises for Party

That uprising is the second surprise that has come to the managing party politicians who urged the President to make the decisions he made and assured him the calculated risks would add up to a voting profit. The first was the Bronx by-election.

The Democratic party managers, recalling that the organizations in the South have never carried through any threat to desert the national ticket, noting also that on the civil-rights program the Republicans offer only more of the same, prophesied to the President that his selected strategy would decimate the Wallace movement, hold the essential large states in the North, East and West and produce the usual crop of electoral votes in the South.

Questions Raised

Current indications, though these may change—and mounting Soviet aggression may change them—are wholly to the contrary. And the developing splits have raised these questions, as Virginia Democrats prepare to revise their laws so that the state's electors may withhold their votes from the national party ticket if the organization decides to do so and the voters approve:

(1) If the President finds no formula to pacify the Southerners on his civil-rights program, and the Democratic convention nominates him on a platform substantially including this program, will several Southern delegations walk out before the convention makes its decisions—thus leaving their state organizations normally free to withhold their electors from the ticket on the Virginia pattern?

(2) Will enough Southern Democratic electors accordingly transfer their votes to another Democrat to make doubly certain the defeat of the convention nominee, barring a Democratic landslide elsewhere (which no competent observer expects)?

(3) Are the answers to these questions so likely to be in the affirmative that the party will reverse the political precedent that began with Theodore Roosevelt in 1904 (the first time a President by succession was ever nominated for a full term), and choose another candidate than Mr. Truman—possibly on his own motion? The Times

(4) Or will the President and the convention find some means to placate Mr. Wallace and disperse his following, letting the Southern Democracy go its way and concentrate all hopes on the rest of the country? New York, N.Y.

Face-Saving Concessions

Some believe that an affirmative answer to the last question is not beyond the realm of possibility. They base their opinion on the expectation that before November, perhaps even by convention time, Russian policy will have obliged Mr. Wallace to take a stand that will break up his support and open his way back to the Democratic party. And they think this prospect may be hastened by face-saving concessions which Mr. Truman will order into the party platform. Sun.

But however these questions are finally answered, the split from the party of the Southern wing is deep and wide. 2-29-48

Differing from a bolt to the Republicans, which the Southern organizations have never led and always sent to oblivion any Democrats who have, the Southern procedure would be a "half bolt" under command of the regulars themselves. It was not envisaged when Mr. Truman made his choices among the "calculated" risks.

Little Hope for the Democrats?

WASHINGTON—One of the most influential Southern Democrats in the United States Senate takes a hopeless view of his party's chances to recapture control of Congress and retain the Presidency in the coming national election.

For that reason he sees little to be gained in the current agitation for a Southern revolt against President Truman because of controversial phases of his civil rights program. Thurs 2-26-48

It is not that he feels the South should not assert itself in affairs of the party on issues of the kind. Like most other Southerners, he has strong convictions on the subject.

But it is the futility of the situation, as regards the election outlook, that causes him to pursue a more cautious course.

As this Southern Senator sees it, President Truman and the Democratic Party are headed for a disastrous defeat in November. After remaining in power for a period of some 16 years, the Democrats, he believes, are again slated to become the minority party.

It is an opinion that is coming to be shared by a growing number of Democrats. The reasons for feeling this way are too numerous to be dealt with at the moment. They may be summarized briefly as growing (1) out of the Wallace third-party movement, (2) the inability of the President to hold diverse elements of the party in line, and (3) the general tide of political events, built on the desire of the people for a change.

It is still too early, of course, for informed sources to undertake a firm prediction on the outcome of the election that lies ahead. Many factors remained to be revealed yet. Much may depend on the candidates to be selected by the Republicans for their Presidential ticket. Also, there is still an outside chance that the Democrats may be able to bring enough pressure to bear on Henry A. Wallace to persuade him to forego his third-party plans

But the point of it is that the prospects, as they appear at the present, are none too bright for the Democrats. The Wallace candidacy could easily be a decisive factor alone. In a close election he could easily take enough votes away from the Democratic ticket to give the Republicans a comfortable victory. There are increasing signs that he will be able to do this.

If the Democrats, then, are headed for defeat in November, this Southern Senator, who prefers to remain in the background, believes it would be to the best interest of the Southern wing of the party to defer action until after the election.

The Constitution

The time for the South to assert itself in demanding a greater voice in the affairs of the party will come, he says, when the party is reorganized after a disastrous defeat. Such a reorganization will be inevitable, perhaps, if defeat does come in November. Atlanta, Ga.

Then it will be possible for Southern States to serve notice on the party just what is to be expected in the way of adherence to Southern customs and traditions. It will be time enough then for the South to talk of pulling away from the party, if its demands are not met.

With defeat staring the party in the face, nothing is to be accomplished by agitation for revolt, it is held. The Senator's thesis is that it would be far more effective for the States of the region to wait for the party reorganization that is sure to come with the return of the Republicans to power. Thurs 2-26-48

More sober-minded members of Congress from the South are not so much concerned by anti-poll tax and anti-lynching bill provisions of the President's civil rights program as they are his recommendations for legislation to eliminate segregation of the races in interstate commerce transportation.

There is a feeling on this point that the President's recommendations, if carried out to the letter, might be extended so far as to prohibit segregation of races in the public schools and even in churches. This is a point on which Southern members will never go along. Thurs

Nor are they bothered so much about the proposed Federal Fair Practices Employment Commission. It is their feeling that other sections of the country would find more difficulty with this than the Southern States.

It is the race segregation thing that counts the most. So long as that issue is raised within the Democratic Party, the South, it is declared, will have to deal with it through threats of revolt.

Democrats Heal Some Bitterness

The News

Birmingham, Ala.

BY DREW PEARSON

WASHINGTON—Democratic chieftains made some progress in healing "civil rights" bitterness during their closed-door sessions last week—but not too much.

348

This time some of the rebellion came not merely from the South, but from the North. Ed Flynn, boss of the Bronx and the man who had much to do with nominating Truman in 1944, declined to attend. After Truman, without consulting Democratic leaders, announced that he was a candidate, Flynn sent word that he was not coming to Washington "to play ring-around-a-rosie." Tues.

Ed Kelly, ex-mayor of Chicago and another stalwart who helped put Truman in office, also failed to show up. 3-16-48

On the other hand, homespun Ex-Gov. Bob Kerr, of Oklahoma, keynoter of the last Democratic convention in 1944, this time keynoted the drive to restore harmony.

"If we want to win the election this year," reminded Kerr, "and I know that's uppermost in the minds of all Democrats, we've got to work together as a united party. The Democratic Party is big enough to have disagreements—even big disagreements like this one—and still present a united front."

Kerr spoke after Chairman Howard McGrath had argued, implored and coaxed that Democratic factions patch up their split over Truman's civil-rights program.

"I'll admit that the president's message may not have been timed well and some may object to the manner in which it was presented to Congress," said McGrath, "but after all it is the mandate of the party. Civil rights was part of the 1944 party platform. All President Truman did was ask Congress to put into law something to which the Democratic Party already is committed."

McGrath went on to point out that Truman's message was misunderstood by many people, especially that part relating to "segregation" of races in public carriers. All the president did, in effect, was to call attention to a Supreme Court ruling that Jim Crow laws were illegal on buses and other carriers in interstate transportation, the Democratic chairman emphasized.

Republicans Have Troubles, Too

McGRATH GOT STRONG SUPPORT from his fellow Rhode Island senator, Theodore Green, and from Indiana's bulky Frank McHale. The News

"This trouble in the party has been greatly exaggerated," declared the alert 81-year-old senator from Rhode Island. "The Republicans have their difficulties too—over the question of choosing a nominee. I think that the strife within Republican ranks will become more and more bitter as the campaign wears on.

"All this talk about Truman not being a strong candidate doesn't make sense," continued Green. "We can win with him if Democrats give him their united support. There was a feeling that Roosevelt would be defeated when he ran for a third term in 1940 and a fourth term in 1944. Birmingham, Ala.

"Now, as then, we put too much stock in what the newspapers are saying. All the big papers in Rhode Island opposed Roosevelt, while 80 per cent of the Republican-controlled press in the rest of the nation was against him. He won overwhelmingly despite this editorial opposition. Harry Truman will do the same." Tues. 3-16-48

McHale belittled the "Wallace threat" to Democrat election chances.

"The people of Indiana are traditionally against third parties," said the committeeman from Indiana. "Teddy Roosevelt received only slightly more than 40,000 votes in Indiana when he ran as a Bull Mooser, and Father Coughlin's third party in 1936 was laughed at in my part of the country. That's why we're not worrying about Wallace and his Commie supporters."

Southern Ire Continues

HOWEVER, SOUTHERN SPOKESMEN asserted they were all the more incensed by the civil-rights message because Southern states were well on the way to eliminating the discriminations Truman singled out. Lynching is now practically nonexistent in the South. Some Southern states already had repealed the poll tax. Others, including Virginia, were preparing to do so. Tues.

In Alabama, Southern spokesmen said, colored workers were paid the same wage scale as whites in many industries. In North Carolina white and colored teachers get the same salaries. 3-16-48

McGrath said he was well aware of these strides, therefore understood the criticism leveled at the administration's program. That criticism, however, he contended, should not be directed personally at the president, who was only carrying out party policy, laid down by Franklin Roosevelt.

The Business Before Us

The State Legislature meets this morning.

The Constitution

Demo

The Acting Governor's call, which under Georgia law prescribes and limits the business of such special sessions, asks the following legislation:

34d

1. Providing for the mandatory inclusion of the individual names of candidates for President and Vice President of the United States, along with the names of the electors and party designation on the official ballot for the general election.

Mon 9-27-48

2. Providing for the electors of any political party to cast their votes only for the nominees of their party designation.

3. Providing for the repeal of that portion of the present State law, Code Section 34-1905 as amended, which reads as follows: "Provided, further that such candidate shall also file a petition for that purpose signed by not less than five percent of the registered voters in that territory or that such political party shall have cast no less than five percent of the votes in the last general election next preceding for the election of such officer."

Atlanta Ga.

4. Providing for an amendment to Code Section 34-1904, as amended, so that certification of nominees of a political party or candidates may be made not later than twenty days before the general election.

5. Providing for such other legislation as may be deemed necessary to accomplish the foregoing subject matter specifically and not otherwise.

Acting Gov. Thompson has thus given the Legislators ample leeway to work out a plan acceptable to all. We trust they will seek to do so without delay or partisanship, remembering that Governor-nominate Herman Talmadge is on record as concurring with the need for changing our general election laws to make them more democratic.

The Constitution is glad that Georgia voters are to be given the fullest possible choice of candidates on Nov. 2.

Mon 9-27-48

We are even happy that the Wallace electors are to be accorded a place on the ballot although we are sure they would rather have gone through with the pretense of presenting an illegal petition and then crying "un-American" when Secretary of State Fortson ruled against them. As it is, they will get few votes in Georgia . . . and no dollars from sympathetic suckers in Harlem and Hollywood who resent what would appear to be Georgia's high-handed decision to keep them off the ballot.

We are gratified, too, that Gov. Thurmond AND President Truman will have their names on the ballot so that Georgians may vote for either or neither, as they please.

But while we welcome the news that the Dixiecrat candidate is to have a place on the ballot, we shall continue to urge thoughtful Georgians to vote either Democratic or Republican.

We shall do so because we are convinced, in the first place, that it is to Georgia's interest to remain in the party and not undermine our Congressmen and Senators, most of whom occupy powerful committee positions which enable them to represent us most ably in the national forum where the issues which concern us are to be determined.

Mon 9-27-48

We shall do so, secondly, because Gov. Thurmond has not the remotest chance of being elected and because, for once, we agree with the Savannah Morning News, which declares: "The ironical thing about the South Carolinian's complaint, that his three opponents are striving to win the votes of the minority in sections outside the South, is that the gentleman himself and his fellow Dixiecrats are striving with equal vigor to win what is certainly a minority vote of the entire country when he asks Southerners to back his own ticket."

We long have advocated establishment of a real two-party system in the South.

But we want to see it comprised of the two national parties, so that the men we send to Congress will not be political eunuchs.

If Georgia is to go for Dewey on Nov. 2 then let it be by its citizens voting for Dewey . . . and not because, by voting for Thurmond, thoughtless Georgians place the State in the doghouse with both the majority and minority parties of government.

Sticking by the Party

The Constitution

The Constitution congratulates Sen. Russell, Reps. Lanham, Pace, Brown, Wood, Camp and others of the Georgia delegation who have publicly announced their support of the Democratic Party.

34d

Fri 10-29-48

We commend their thinking and position to every voter in the State, as well as other members of our congressional delegation who have not yet been willing publicly to take a stand with their Party.

Certainly no one can accuse any of the Southern gentlemen of favoring the Federal Employment Practices Act. Indeed, in their very statements pledging support to the party and its nominees, they make it clear that they have intentions of opposing the President's so-called civil rights proposals at every opportunity.

Atlanta Ga.

But they are loyal Democrats.

They will stick with the party because they are convinced that the most effective way of preventing passage of such ill-advised force bills is to remain in the positions of prominence which are theirs by virtue of their party membership.

We were impressed, in this connection, with an example cited by the Macon News earlier in the week.

"What civilian, next to the President, was most influential in the control and direction of the United States Navy during the late war and the fateful years immediately preceding?" the News demanded.

Fri 10-29-48

"The answer, of course, is Carl Vinson, Representative in Congress from the Sixth Georgia District, who was Chairman of the powerful House Naval Affairs Committee during that period.

"And how did Mr. Vinson come to occupy that powerful position? Solely by reason of the fact that he was a Democrat, elected by a Democratic constituency in a Democratic State. Even now, since the Republicans gained control of Congress in 1946 and Mr. Vinson on that account lost his Chairmanship, he is the ranking Democrat on the Committee. And if the Democrats are victorious in the November election, Mr. Vinson will again become Chairman of this immensely powerful Committee. That is, he will if he is still a Democrat and his constituency and his State retain their Democratic status.

"But if Mr. Vinson turns Dixiecrat and Georgia gives its electoral vote to Thurmond and Wright, Mr. Vinson won't be Chairman of the Committee in the event of a Democratic victory; and in the event of a Democratic defeat, he won't even remain the ranking Democrat on the Committee, because he won't be a Democrat. Certainly the Democrats, even when they constitute the minority, are not going to reward their enemies with important congressional positions. So it will be all down the line. Mr. Vinson is only our local example, illustrative of the fact that the South's hope for influence in Congress is conditioned on its congressional leadership remaining Democratic. And it cannot remain Democratic unless it supports the nominees of the Democratic Party."

Fri 10-29-48

We are gratified that not only have several of our congressional leaders finally realized that they can best uphold Southern traditions by remaining in the party, but also that more and more voters are coming to see through the Dixiecrat fallacy.

Democratic Chiefs In Georgia Oppose Revolt

Journal Guide

By NNPA News Service

ATLANTA, Ga.—Leaders of both factions of the Democratic Party in Georgia were in agreement that secession from the national party is no answer to President Truman's 10-point civil rights program.

Roy Harris, Chief lieutenant of Herman Talmadge, ousted claimant to the Georgia governorship, editorialized on the proposed revolt in his political weekly, the Augusta Courier. Harris argued: "Stay in the Demicratic party and fight the rascals."

Norfolk Va

Acting Governor Melvin E. Thompson, leader of the other faction in Georgia, is on record as opposing party revolt. He believes that the President's proposals calling for anti-poll tax, anti-lynching, anti-discrimination and anti-segregation legislation can be fought best within the party. He helped fight a Mississippi-sponsored revolt at a recent meeting of the Southern Governors' Conference.

At the recent Southern Governors' Conference at Tallahassee, Fla., there was talk about the South seceding from the Democratic Party if President Truman did not back down on his civil rights program, but the conference adopted a 40-day "cooling off" period before the South takes any action to break with the Democratic Party.

A Quiet, Political Essay

Jun 10-3-48

On Capitol Hill the tumult and the shouting have died. The captains and the clowns have departed. The Legislature is gone from us, reminding us, as the cynics say, that parting is such sweet sorrow.

The job done was, in most respects, a good one. The crackpots will have their day and a place on the ballot. The official Democratic Party in the State properly, I think, revealed its unwillingness to bolt.

Atlanta Ga

Calling the special session by Acting Gov. Thompson delighted the Talmadge faction no end. It took the Talmadge people off a spot which had its members squirming and as uncomfortable as a man at the county fair in a pair of tight shoes.

Electors who will cast their votes for the President for the people of Georgia who stay in the Democratic Party have been named. It is up to Georgia voters. Will they waste their votes on the so-called Dixiecrats and Wallaceites, or go for one of the major parties?

Dewey As it now stands, the Dewey ticket has an excellent chance in Georgia, if enough Democrats bolt the ticket to the Dixiecrats. That chance has been improved by the forthright statement in behalf of states' rights by the Dewey running mate, Gov. Earl Warren. More and more Georgians are swinging to the Dewey ticket.

I still hold the Dixiecrats to be a fraud and a folly and a dead-end political street which any Democrat will regret taking. Their use of States' Rights as a party name also is incompatible with the facts. They are not the Democratic Party as they now admit, but a bolted fourth party tied with the Wallaceites in an effort to beat the party. As a Democrat, I believe in the two-party system and I hope the Republicans willcarry the State if the party can't.

Talmadge There remains, then, the balloting on Nov. 2 and the subsequent inauguration of Herman Talmadge as Governor of Georgia. Now that relative quiet has come, let us try to analyze him factually and reasonably.

Young Talmadge, at 37, is an unknown quantity. He has not held office. His several weeks as Governor in the disputed period of 1947 when he was elected by the Legislature, an action nullified by the State Supreme Court, revealed only that he devoted himself earnestly to the job. The court decision was most fortunate for him, as the disorder which developed from hangers-on and from some members of the Legislature who had drunk not wisely but too well, plus the highly emotional overtones of the event, disturbed the people, including many who supported him. It was badly handled.

He is a graduate of the State University. He is admittedly a shrewd, intelligent young man with a personality which makes friends easily. In the 1947 Legislature it made some friends of those who came as enemies.

He had a good war record, in combat zones of the Pacific, including participation in some landing assaults in which the Navy and Marine Corps worked together.

He has had one youthful marriage which was of short duration. His second has been, and is, a happy one. His wife is a fine young lady. They have two children. It is not true, as whispered, that they have several times been separated and were waiting only for the primary results to call it quits. They seem happy with one another.

During the campaign his opposition first began, by innuendo, to charge him with drunkenness. Later this was brought into the open by young Talmadge himself. His opposition foolishly tried to insinuate he was in an intoxicated condition during the campaign and this boomeranged, as it was obvious no man who was speaking two or three times a day in public view could be in such condition.

Future What his conduct in this respect was before the campaign I do not know. From what I could learn he may have sown a youthful college wild oat or so. He came back from the Pacific to join often with old friends and veterans in frequent celebrations of return. These stopped well before the campaign and there is now no reason to ascribe to them serious implications, that is, for the future. With his whole political career just beginning, it would seem folly to assume that he hasn't enough common sense to exact from what appears to be an unusual and brilliant opportunity the most there is in it. He is "in" and his course would seem to indicate an ambitious plan to justify the confidence of the people so that he may ask of them additional honors.

Task It will not be easy. It is inevitable that to the winner flock all those who make their living of trying to make winners beholden to them in some degree, large or small.

Our political system of contributions inevitably creates obligations. But it is not through the major appointments that a Governor trips himself. A combine of road contractors, for example, joined to get what they could, would be relatively uninterested in naming the director of the Highway Department, or its administrator. But they would be very interested in getting a reliable man in the laboratory, another in the inspection group, and still another in the finance office.

There will be tremendous pressure put on young Talmadge. More, I imagine, than has been put on any Governor in a long time. He has a chance to win to him much of the leaderless group which formerly was in the Rivers camp. He has a chance, even, to win, in the years ahead, much Negro support. And more and more they will be voters. They are important to the economy of Georgia and their economic welfare is a measure of our general progress. All this he cannot fail to know. I believe he will be a good Governor if the people will let him. He himself must realize that he can be a good Governor only with increasing public support. He must earn it by keeping it. He is intelligent. Therefore, it seems to me the analysis is optimistic. Only he can change it.

Common Sense

The adherents of Herman Talmadge, ousted from control of the Democratic party organization in Georgia after Herman had failed in his attempt to seize the governorship itself, are now back in control. The Record

The Talmadge group won control in the election that re-elected Gene Talmadge, father of Herman, to the governorship. The elder Talmadge died before he could take office and Lieutenant Governor M. E. Thompson was finally made governor after a silly two-governor interval. Wed.

Thompson attempted to set up his own party organization which has been recognized by the national Democratic party. Now, however, the courts have settled the issue. The legal organization is the Talmadge group. 2-25-48

And this, of course, is plain common sense. The control of the Democratic party organization was not affected by Talmadge's death and there was no reason in logic to attempt to change it after his death. The reasons for the change were all political. Columbia, S.C.

Talmadge Turns Down Dinner For Democrats

The Advertiser
Montgomery, Ala.

ATLANTA, Jan. 23.—(AP)—Herman Talmadge turned thumbs down Friday on Georgia's Jefferson - Jackson Day dinner and thus set off a political chain-reaction of sharp charges and counter-charges. Sat. 1-24-48

Talmadge refused an invitation to attend the March 5 affair to raise funds for the National Democratic Party. He charged that Gov. M. E. Thompson and his associates had pocketed for personal political propaganda $42,000 contributed at last year's dinner.

Gov. Thompson suggested late Friday that Talmadge was placing "petty partisanship" above national democratic interests and the national welfare.

A Quiet Political Essay

Thurs.

Atlanta, Ga.

Georgia's Supreme Court has put the State Democratic Party reins into the hands of the Talmadge faction. With that issue now resolved, it is possible to talk politics . . . as it was not before. 2-26-48

It is at once apparent that Georgia's delegation to the convention at Philadelphia will not go pledged to President Harry S. Truman.

If he finally is the nominee of the party, the Georgia delegation will hardly refuse to go along. But, until he is the nominee, one may be sure the Georgia delegation will refrain from supporting him . . . and, further, will be looking for another candidate.

The whole strategy of the Southern States, with the exception of Mississippi and South Carolina, likely will be to make the fight within the party.

This means that unpledged delegations, or delegations pledged to some favorite son, will go from every deep South State which sends a delegation. If Sen. George will permit, his name is the most likely for Georgia's 12 votes on the early ballots. And Georgia's delegation will go to any man who might have a chance of winning the nomination over President Truman.

Possibility If some person with personality could be projected before the convention, it is not at all improbable that he could get the nomination. But, in late years the Democratic ranks have been lacking in men of personality great enough to have national appeal. After Roosevelt's glittering skill at public relations, almost every political pundit has seemed as dull as the minutes of last month's meeting. Thurs 2-26-48

There will be other states with favorite sons. This means that Harry Truman will not be named on the first ballot, as seemed likely a few months ago before Henry Wallace went into his corn dance, and the Civil Rights proposals came to sit, like Banquo's ghost, at the Truman political table.

So, the big fight will be at the convention, within the party.

Electors As it now appears only Mississippi is sure to go off the reservation, with South Carolina almost sure so to do. Mississippi plans to have the Legislature repeal the statute, which all states have, requiring the electors to be on the ballot. So does South Carolina. The Constitution

Once the statute is eliminated the Legislature may give the Governor the right to name the electors, or the Legislature itself may elect them. Atlanta, Ga. Thurs. 2-26-48

Platform This course is wholly unnecessary, as such electors finally would have to vote for the party nominee or go off and sulk. It already is obvious that not enough electors will be withheld to throw the election into the House of Representatives.

President Truman would have to throw more gasoline on the fire to bring about a real South-wide revolt. Thurs

What the convention likely will end up with is the Democratic platform of 1944, which Sen. McGrath said would suit him, a statement largely overlooked in the haste of the news agencies to report the protest by four Southern Governors. 2-26-48

Georgia Locally, within Georgia, the court decision definitely was helpful to the Talmadge organization. It enables its leaders to work closely with county organizations, and to name the election officials. The Constitution

More than anything else, it was a psychological boost, causing the band wagon riders to itch to sit down . . . they having been standing for some time. Atlanta, Ga

Still, it was not without relief to the Thompson faction. It was relieved of its pledge to whoop things up for Harry Truman and to go for him on the first ballot. Mr. Truman is not an asset in the South today. Thurs 2-26-48

Most pleased of all were the Georgia Representatives, and Sen. Richard B. Russell, all of whom used to have bad dreams about the possibility of two primaries.

Worthy Goals For Achievement

Daily World Atlanta, Ga.

The Georgia Negro Democratic leaders, meeting in Atlanta Friday, adopted far-reaching plans calculated to chalk up the largest vote ever to be cast by Negro Georgians, mapped an all-out attack upon the pernicious purge campaign by the Talmadge forces and adopted stern measures by which their organization and its affiliated chapters can meet the challenge and sheer embarrassment from recalcitrant members, such as Larkin Marshall, who has allowed himself to be used as a "catspaw" in the hands of professed friends of the Negro supporting the Wallace third party movement. Sun. 5-23-48

For these splendid overtures in good government and forthright leadership, the Negro Democrats are to be highly commended. And we take peculiar pride in the splendid tribute they paid to President Truman, who long before the Civil Rights program was ever proposed, demonstrated his honesty and sincerity toward the oppressed minorities in America, both as president and senator. The marvel is that Negroes throughout America have been so hesitant to give similar expressions of appreciation to the man who has meant so much to us.

In another sense, it is not too early to sound a word of warning to Georgia Negroes. The ensuing months between now and September 8, may be expected to be crucial ones. Already the Talmadge forces are scheming to defeat by fair or foul means, the efforts of qualified Negroes to vote. Plans are afoot, according to testimony given before the Atlanta meeting Friday, by which the Talmadge leaders will seek to betray the Negro voters by appealing to certain of their numbers to go out and work among them to persuade Negroes to vote for him on the grounds that he will grant them equal justice and privileges as all other Georgia citizens. Sun. 5-23-48

All of these schemes, of course, will fail. Negroes will have no truck with Talmadge and his henchmen. Honeycombed words will not change their suspicions and fears of a man who believes inherently in White Supremacy. And though he and his stalwarts may change their words and their approach, sensible Georgians will not mistake these words for a change of heart

Talmadge Denounces 'Coalition'

The Constitution
Atlanta, Ga.

By M. L. ST. JOHN
Constitution Staff Writer

MACON, July 2—Two Congressmen attending a State Democratic Convention here today, which virtually launched the gubernatorial campaign of Herman Talmadge, quickly indorsed the Convention's boom to draft Gen. Eisenhower for President and U. S. Sen. Russel for Vice President. Sat.

More than 5,000 delegates demonstrated with roaring applause to swing the nation's first State Convention openly and unanimously behind the draft-Eisenhower boom. 7-3-48

The Convention asked President Truman to withdraw as a candidate for the Democratic nomination for President; asked Gen. Eisenhower to accept the nomination and Russell to be his running mate; or, if Eisenhower refused, urged the Presidential nomination upon Georgia's Junior Senator.

Rep. E. E. Cox, of Camilla, veteran firebrand in the House, declared Eisenhower probably would have a better chance of leading the Democrats to victory than any other man on the horizon. However, he doubted if Eisenhower will accept a draft. Russell would strengthen any ticket on which he might appear, Cox asserted.

Observing that Georgia has the strongest representation of any State in the Senate, Cox added that he wouldn't be adverse to seeing the Georgia delegation honor Sen. George with the Presidential nomination.

Rep. Don Wheeler, of Alma, completing his first term as Congressman, declared he is heartily in favor of an Eisenhower-Russell ticket. If this is impossible, he would like to see the Georgia delegation fight to the last for the nomination of Sen. Russell. He said, "The Democrats have no chance with Truman," and that he would rather be defeated even with a candidate other than Truman, since he believes Truman's candidacy will destroy the Democratic Party."

Sat.

Rep. Steve Pace, of Americus, had no comment. 7-3-48

The reconvened 1946 State Democratic Convention, which originally nominated the late Eugene Talmadge for Governor, today placed its blessings upon Talmadge's son, Herman, as he enters the race for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination.

Leading Convention speakers presented Herman Talmadge as Georgia's next Governor, and Talmadge himself unleashed what was tantamount to his opening campaign speech as he delivered a blistering attack upon Acting Gov. Thompson. Atlanta, Ga.

He all but paid his entry fee. That is anticipated for tomorrow.

The Convention crowd booed Gubernatorial Candidate Joe Rabun when he was introduced. It gave meager applause to Gubernatorial Candidate Hoke O'Kelley, and then a few called, "Where's M. E.?" A member of Thompson's inner-council, Judge J. M. C. Townsend, of the Court of Appeals, was presented without incident. However, his opponent, Judge Augustus Roan, was applauded. The Constitution

The Convention erased its illegal white primary rules, but it made plans to restrict party membership in the future to "true and intelligent Democrats."

A suggestion was made by Atty. Charles Bloch, of Macon, that legislation be passed restricting participation in the Democratic Primary to Democrats. The Georgia Democratic Party would prescribe what constitutes a Democrat in Georgia. Bloch said the Republicans and Wallaceites could hold their own primaries.

Bloch's recommendations for strict educational tests, regardless of race, and for a presidential preferential primary also were applauded.

The auditorium resounded with applause as Talmadge attacked Thompson's record in office, denounced the Rivers-Arnall coalition, and lashed President Truman's civil rights program.

"Never before have we seen a private citizen take charge of the Governor's office and operate it for his personal gain and aggrandizement," Talmadge said. "The Acting Governor has been forced to sacrifice his close personal and political friends in order to install in office mere stooges who will call out the orders given to them by this former Governor."

"From the very outset of the present administration it has been a mixture of discredited politicians whose thinking, views and philosophy are entirely separate and apart from that of the people of Georgia," he went on. "Not since the 1860's when Federal bayonets ruled a prostrate South have we had a State administration who have so completely surrendered themselves to subversive and alien groups, representing not Georgia thinking, but views mostly in line with interests foreign to Georgia." The Constitution

Talmadge branded Thompson's purchase of Jekyll Island, "at a time when vital State services were needed," as a "betrayal worthy of Benedict Arnold."

"The present administration hopes by a controlled bloc vote, road trades and patronage to salvage this election," be charged.

Talmadge said Thompson had added 2,500 new State employees.

He said Thompson had not carried out the platform on which the late Gov. Eugene Talmadge was elected. He said everyone knew that Thompson "was not, never has been and never will be" in sympathy with the program nor platform upon which the people elected Eugene Talmadge.

Marvin Griffin, of Bainbridge, and Superior Judge T. Hicks Fort, of Columbus, other speakers, principally assailed the Rivers-Arnall-Thompson coalition, as did Frank Gross, of Toccoa.

Griffin drew a roar from the audience when he referred to them as "plug-hat political bosses who would ride to hell with the devil himself, if they could sell the tickets and collect the money."

Fort referred to the marriage of "Romeo Rivers and Juliet Arnall with 'Me Too' Thompson as flower girl." Atlanta, Ga.

Robert Elliott, of Columbus, and Mrs. Iris Blitch, of Homerville, were introduced as Georgia's next committeeman and committeewoman. Sat. 7-3-48

Mrs. Eugene Talmadge and Mrs. Herman Talmadge drew much applause when presented.

Former House Speaker Roy Harris, Floor Leader Elliott, and House Speaker Fred Hand, individually, offered the resolutions which asked Truman's withdrawal and the drafting of Eisenhower and Russell. The resolutions were unanimously adopted.

Voting for President in Georgia

Constitution

Atlanta, Ga.

Surely the Democratic Party authorities in Georgia are not going to name only electors for President who are pledged to vote against President Truman.

If they do, they will thereby disfranchise voters in Georgia who may want to vote for Mr. Truman. This is so because under the archaic laws for electing a President, the vote is actually for electors who will elect the President and is not for any candidate for the office.

The Constitution of the United States merely provides that each State shall appoint electors, in such manner as the Legislature may direct, and that such electors shall elect the President.

In compliance with this constitutional provision, the General Asesmbly of Georgia has directed by law that electors be chosen on the election day provided by Congress for choosing electors. This law says nothing about candidates for President and it is not even legally necessary that the name of any candidate appear on the ballot.

The practice has been that the Democratic Party authorities name the electors who are to be voted for and that the electors so named are tacitly pledged to vote for the Party nominees for President and Vice President, whose names have been printed on the ballot carying the names of the electors. In this way by common consent the people of the State have had a voice in the election of a President.

Defection But now, since the Southern defection from the Democratic Party on the civil rights issue, it is suggested that the State Democratic Executive Committee name electors to be voted on in the November election, who shall be pledged to vote against Truman, and that no other electors be named on the Democratic ticket in the presidential election.

The politicians in charge of the machinery of the Democratic Party in Georgia can do this thing if they want to, in which event the thousands of good Democrats in this State who desire to vote for Truman and Barkley cannot vote their choice at all. If they vote under such circumstances, their ballots in fact will be against the candidates for whom they desire to vote.

George L. Googe, American Federation of Labor head in Georgia, who was a delegate to the national Democratic Convention, suggests that these desiring to vote for Truman and Barkley be given the opportunity by the naming of a second set of electors, to be placed on the ballot with the other set.

Fair Way This is the fair thing to do. We are in favor of according to all Georgians who oppose the President the right to vote against him. But it would not be fair play, nor in accord with the system of representative democracy under which we live, to disfranchise voters in this State who want to vote the ticket nominated at Philadelphia.

Constitution

We do not believe that those in charge of the Democratic Party machinery in Georgia will tolerate such doings. We do not see eye to eye with them on many matters, but we give them credit for being fair thus far. They may deem it important to defeat Mr. Truman in Georgia. They cannot think his defeat important enough to warrant suspension of the democratic process of a fair, free ballot.

Georgia Votes Lost to Truman

Detroit

ATLANTA—(AP)—Georgia's 28 Democratic National Convention votes lined up solidly against President Truman Monday.

A 72-member delegation was selected by the State Democratic Executive Committee. The delegates were instructed to vote as a unit. Tues. 6-1-48

Party leaders said they would fight Mr. Truman's nomination and his civil-rights program.

They emphasized, however, that Georgia Democrats would not bolt the party or the National Convention if they lose on the convention floor.

GEORGIA'S DELEGATES WILL NOT BOLT PARTY

Times

ATLANTA, Ga., May 31 (UP)—An anti-civil rights delegation will represent Georgia at the Democratic National Convention, but the group definitely will not bolt the party even if the racial program is "forced upon us."

New York, N.Y.

State Chairman James S. Peters made this clear today as the Georgia Executive Committee, meeting here, named convention delegates and alternates and chose State Rep. Robert Elliott of Columbus, Ga., as the new National Committeeman from Georgia.

Mr. Elliott, a lawyer, was House floor leader for Herman Talmadge's forces during the 1947 legislative fight over Georgia's double governorship.

Tues. 6-1-48

His selection was made informally by party leaders and is scheduled for routine ratification by the delegation.

Mr. Peters, one of Mr. Talmadge's chief lieutenants, said the delegation would keep the civil-rights fight within the party.

"If we are defeated in our civil-rights fight, we are going back to Georgia as good Democrats," he said, "and then leave the question to the Democrats of Georgia to decide." Tues 6-1-48

State Democrats Map Registration Campaign

(34 l:) Demo. Daily World

Atlanta, Ga. World 1-8-48

Sweeping measures designed to step up the registration tempo among Georgia Negroes were adopted by representatives to the biennial session of the Georgia Association of Citizens Democratic clubs Wednesday at Macon.

The delegates, gathered from 78 counties and 8 congressional districts, approved employment of a full-time executive secretary for the Association, voted approval of separate voting precinct in the forthcoming gubernatorial election and pledged vigorous support to the prosecution of a voters' education campaign on a statewide scale.

ROOSEVELT DINNERS

In an effort to bring about a substantial and immediate increase in the contributions from the clubs throughout the State, the delegates called for renewed emphasis upon the Roosevelt Dinner celebrations on January 30, which has been set apart as the day when Negro Democrats of the state would pay special tribute to the work and memory of the late Franklin D. Roosevelt. It was voted that the proceeds from these dinners would be applied to the statewide campaign for registration and voters' education. All dinners, it was voted, would be held simultaneously by each of the several clubs in each county.

POLICY COMMITTEE

The one-day gathering of county and district leaders empowered the President to name a policy and procedure committee, charged with the responsibility of setting forth rules by which all clubs should be governed for the duration of the approaching campaign; authorize the release of news for public information and pass upon the acceptability of political aspirants for the several posts to be filled. This move, like that of separate voting precincts, is designed to promote harmony within the ranks among the Negroes and to minimize misunderstanding and needless friction.

CONGRESSIONAL LEADERS

Chairmen and co-chairmen for each of the state's 10 congressional districts were named, to give complete coverage to the cultivation of Negro voters and increase of registration. Full power was vested to each congressional leader to summon such support from the various counties over which he presides as, in his opinion, he may deem necessary. These designated district workers will begin work at once. Thurs 1-8-48

PURGE CONTINUES

A surprising number of delegates reported the existence of an underhand, silent purge of Negro voters from the registration books, intimidation and veiled threats in other counties, and plain deception in other counties. One delegate told of the existence of 1300 qualified Negro voters on the rolls with only two being permitted to vote in an election in which a sheriff and two city officials were to be elected. From one of the deep Southwest Georgia counties, a delegate told the leaders that one registrar gave as his excuse for refusing to register Negroes that all the registration blanks had been exhausted. Numerous other cases of irregularities were reported. The leaders pledged to level a double-edged attack upon these devices to obstruct the registration of Negroes.

BOSWELL AMENDMENT 1-8-48

The leaders also pledged financial and moral support to Alabama Negroes and other groups in their fight against the Boswell Amendment, which is aimed specifically against the Negro voters of that state. "This amendment," declared one speaker, "like the white primary law, is unconstitutional. And I believe that all that is necessary to have the iniquitous bill invalidated is to get it into court," he said. 34 l D

City Insurance Man Rejoicing, Says Board of Education Elected Him Solely On His Qualifications

~~The Black Dispatch~~ 34 l D

By Mal Whitby

Sat 1-17-48

BOLEY. — A typical Irvin S. Cobb Negro stereotype story or 'Amos-Andy' skit, that a great mass of Negroes have objected to, was presented "in the flesh' here Saturday from 1[illegible]:30 to 2:00 p. m. in the King theatre by Mr. George R. Ragland, public relations director of Langston University and Oklahoma City insurance man with a handful of state job holders, who held a rump political [illegible] which elected the new Langston faculty man to cha[illegible]ip of his group.

The m[illegible] the result of a determined [illegible] of state job holders to [illegible] control of the Oklahoma [illegible] Democratic Association [illegible] body in special session last Dec. 6 in Oklahoma City's Chamber of Commerce hall, voted to recommend to the regular February convention, enactment of law prohibiting any job holder from serving in official capacities in the Democratic association.

Oklahoma City Okla

The state job holders immediately rebuffed and set to work to wrest control from the present chairman, J. W. Sanford, and thereby prevent passage during the February session of the bill barring state job holders.

Leading the fight for control of the Democratic Association is Mr. George R. Ragland, who presided over a meeting of state job holders on December 20 in his insurance company office on the second floor of the Slaughter building, and in the auditorium on the 3rd floor of the same building.

One chief lieutenant of Mr. Ragland's job holders crowd is O. B. Graham, who for the past year has irregularly printed an oversize handbill used as Ragland's mouthpiece. At each of their meetings Graham has reached into his pockets and brought out a well worn copy of a supposed constitution of the State Negro Democratic Association, which he has repeatedly refused to permit this reporter to examine.

Reading from the smeared, folded, fragile looking paper, Graham assured attending job holders at the Slaughter Bldg. meet and Saturday's Boley session, that the assembly was a bona fide call session, which provides, according to Graham's document, that any five counties may call a special session if the state chairman refuses to issue a call.

The state chairman, J. W. Sanford, was approached on the night of Dec. 20, following the first meeting of the job holders, relative to calling a special session, and Mr. Sanford refused, saying: "I think it down right foolish to have people coming way across the state when the February meeting is just a month off. I have not been properly approached and my last remark is, I have no comment."

Evidently disagreeing that their approach was not in conformity with the constitution, Mr. Ragland is said to have telephoned certain state job holders and aspiring ones to leave their positions and come to Boley Saturday morning at 10 a. m.

This reporter arrived in Boley at 7:40 a. m. and proceeded to the only place of activity on Main street, the post office in the four-story Masonic temple. Postmaster Dolphin had not heard of the meeting, nor had three carriers who were busy loading a jeep with the early morning mail.

We wandered north three blocks on main to find not a soul astir and crossed over to return down the west side of Boley's 'main drag', and back to the post office where we could see southward to the highway down the only outlet to and from the city.

About 9 a. m., W. C. Owens, Boley merchant, entered the post-office to pick up mail and said he heard there was to be a meeting, but knew no details.

Another hour passed and the first car of job holders arrived. Mrs. T. W. Grissom, Bristow politician employed at Taft, brought Mrs. Pearl Howard, Guthrie resident employed at Taft, and a third woman in a Buick sedan, and remained in the car until two other groups came.

W. A. Dobson, another Taft employee, soon arrived in a large coupe with his wife, and "Major" Walter E. Seward of McAlester. This reporter approached Mr. Dobson who was trying to find place of the meeting. No one seemed to know and soon Mrs. H .C. McCormick of the Training School, drove up and informed us that the meeting would be held at the King theatre.

Back down the street to the theatre and examination found the door to be padlocked. Soon arrived Boley city teacher L. G. Ashley and son, and Ashley volunteered to find a man with the key.

Another wait and Ashley returned, unlocked the theatre to find it uncleaned from the night before and as cold as a refrigerator.

Two big wood-coal heaters (in a theatre) were stocked up and a giant fire soon raged. The few of us decided to go to some warm place to give the King theatre time to heat up.

Everyone was out of site as we reached the street but the dirt main-drag was now active with out-of-town cars. Down to millionaire Forest Anderson's Farmer's National Bank, and here they were, packed into the lobby four deep.

This reporter pricked his ears, milled around in the large assembly and overheard pretended Ragland supporter's express almost cut-throat remarks about the new Langston Public Relations expert, and one feminine voice was heard to say, "maybe he (Ragland) turned over on the highway" and several burst into laughter.

About eleven o'clock a Boley youngster came to the bank and notified the crowd of Mr. Ragland's late arrival at the theatre and the group promptly went up main street for the meeting.

Three groups of job holders were in different corners of the theatre discussing strategy, which proceeded for ten or fifteen minutes with Ragland and E. W. Warrior, new Taft employee, arranging a card table before the movie screen and calling the group to order.

Warrior took the floor and explained that he had been made chairman to go see Mr. Sanford, "we went," he continued, "so we called this meeting . . . What is your pleasure?"

C. R. Johns, prominent civic and school worker from Seminole arose, came forward and lengthily described his activities over the past week in talking with principles of both political groups in an attempt to effect some reconciliation, which he said had proved "a failure."

Some interpreted Johns' remarks as a bid to head the organization until the February session when the entire state delegation would vote upon all reorganization proposals.

Johns' ended his appeal with the statement that he had carefully read the constitution with Mr. Sanford on Friday and had reached conclusion that "this meeting (Boley) is not legal."

O. B. Graham jumped to the floor and gruffly said, "I'll tell you, I wrote the constitution and I ought to know whether it's legal." Then pulled out the many-folded, smeared paper and began reading about "Five counties may call on the chairman to call a special session . . ."

Johns interrupted him to add, "all I say is, make sure you are legally in session," and took a seat.

Warrior then called for the committees to meet and Dobson asked "what time shall we return."

Warrior answered, "we're not going anywhere, you may not come back." Seven or eight persons went toward the entrance behind a curtain drop and were heard discussing some issues to be voted upon by the waiting group.

During the interim, Joe Johnson, of Payne county, talked for fully ten minutes in a confusing circle, one moment his hearers thinking he was throwing darts at Ragland and other job holders and the next, confusingly saying "we should not have someone to head the organization who is a job holder."

Once he said "there's just too much of this 'peacock strutting' and continued 'butting in' on some program as our representative . . if that's what you want you can have it!"

In short the group returned to their seats and Mrs. W. A. Dobson, formerly of McAlester, went to the chair and read from a paper three "charges against state chairman J. W. Sanford."

The charges read were: (1.) President called state organization to elect a general candidate; (2.) Charged with keeping references and minutes and refusing to give same to the organization; (3.) President became a 'dictator' by moving elected officers without consent of organization. Therefore, the committee moves to impeach the present president and a complete re-organization of the Negro Democratic Association.

Warrior moved that Ragland be elected to fill out the unexpired term as president and was seconded by H. W. McNamee, of Dewey.

A majority of the group stood for the motion and none opposed. Warrior then introduced George R. Ragland who began with the same re-hashed line, "If we are to keep the social gains realized under the late President Roosevelt we've got to cling to the Democratic banner," that this writer learned by memory months ago.

In referring to his reported 'political plum' appointment to the Langston faculty, Mr. Ragland branded a lie that Gov. elect Roy J. Turner had anything to do with the appointment. The new faculty member said a Mr. Patterson offered him the job of Public Relations Director, for in his own words, he said, "George, you have the ability to sell anything and I think instead of so much adverse publicity about Langston you could sell Langston to the people."

"The Board of Education named me to the job solely on the basis of my qualifications," said the Public Relations job holder. Further, said the college faculty member, "I'm not begging, I've built up a business that caused me to have to pay income tax on $8000 in earnings last year.

Ragland jumped on the Board of Regents and laid the whole plight of the state Negro school directly on their doorstep, singling out a Mr. Nash, Frank Buttram and a Tulsa member named Rogers as personally responsible for the small sums of state funds given Lankston from legislative appropriations.

Warrior took the floor at Ragland's conclusion to name him to serve what was called the "unexpired term of J. W. Sanford." O. B. Graham, Tulsa, and receiving a state job after the last state election, seconded Warrior's motion, but C. R. Johns loudly interrupted to state "NOT READY! . . . I want the record to show the fact that I am opposed to naming any man holding a state job to any position in the association."

"Major" Seward of McAlester, joined in dissent on manner of acting on the hatched-up charges, which also called for "complete re-organization of the state association."

H. C. McCormick jumped up surprisingly, the fourth man yelling from the floor, and said "the methods are entirely improper . . . impeachment of the administration couldn't be done unless charges were brought against Mrs. Grissom (Taft) and all the others."

Warrior out-talked all the muddle and blabbered, "We can do anything we want to do here today!" But in the next breath, Warrior, the man who replaced Ed Goodwin, whom Ragland has boasted he personally removed, recommended that the phrase including officers other than Sanford be stricken.

The muddle became more muddled and five men were haranguing at top voice and simultaneously, Seward said they "were childish and amateurish in trying to railroad things . . . the whole procedure is wrong," said Seward.

Warrior rapped until Mr. Ragland's office secretary's notebook jostled off the flimsy card table and yelled over other voices the motion to strike the phrase. A standing vote passed the motion.

McCormick brought a man named Johnson from Hughes county up front to make a talk. It was well past 1 p. m. by then, and the group was ready for relaxation after so much hub-bub, and this man Johnson made it pure comedy relief.

Immediately shouting and waving arms in typical Irvin Cobb mountain preacher style, the aged man had the group rolling before he completed his first statement. Some probably could not have survived another five minutes of hilarity propounded by Johnson.

Ragland followed Johnson and asked if anyone had records of the state association. Warrior brought laughter by answering in evident sincerity, "We have from today on . . . but as for committee membership, we don't know anything."

Ragland then stated, "we've got to have money to sell our program, who's the chairman of the finance committee?" Graham said McCormick was chairman and McCormick, busy inviting various folks out to dinner following the meet, straightened up to shout, "Graham doesn't know what he's talking about!"

Ragland then named John Emerson, Tulsa business man, as as finance chairman, and McCormick named to work with him.

Kenneth Johnson, Langston veteran student who has a fifteen minute Sunday morning commentary period over WKY, 9:15 a. m., entered the hall and delivered a message to McCormick. McCormick went about the hall to various job holders whispering something, and when this writer contacted Johnson, he related that a Mr. Borgman of the Board of Affairs had tried to reach the job holders by phone to order them back to their state jobs.

According to Johnson, Mr. Borgeman is said to have related over the phone that job holders can only participate in politics when in legal session, and "this approach is NOT . . . Get the hell back to your jobs immediately."

The meeting might have 'Amos-Andied' into the night, naming committees and the like, had not the Borgeman call been announced.

The writer and Kenneth Johnson were invited by Major McCormick along with others to dinner at his home on the campus of the Boys Training School on the outskirts of the all-Negro town.

A large table set for twelve was arranged and promptly Mr. Ragland headed the table and said, "I want these two young men to see what a real democratic meal is like, and , directed us to sit on his left and right.

Immediately, the new Langston faculty member related, "this time yesterday I was in Houston, enjoying fresh fried fish cooked right on the beach while my toes were trickling in the gulf . . . hours later at Dallas, I boarded a plane for Oklahoma City, and this afternoon you men have elected me to head your association. Fellows, I want to tell you . . . that's a long way to climb for a poor cotton-picking boy from the canebreaks of Louisiana."

(Ed. Note: . . . and people want to know what happened to vaudeville.")

Those registered at the affair were:

Truman Issues New Battle Call Against Reactionaries; Sidesteps Friction In Party

Montgomery, Ala

President Takes Sly Slap At GOP; Re-Outlines His 10-Year Program; Dixie Leaders Boycott Dinner

By D. HAROLD OLIVER

WASHINGTON, Feb., 19—(AP)—President Truman called on his party Thursday night to battle against "reactionary conservatism" and the "privileged few" in the coming elections.

"This is a year of challenge," he said. "I propose that we meet that challenge head on.

"The people will again decide whether they want the forces of positive, progressive liberalism to continue in office, or whether, in these challenging times, they want to entrust their government to those forces of conservatism which believe in the benefit of the few at the expense of the many." Advertiser

The president spoke at a Jefferson-Jackson Day dinner.

He avoided any direct reference to dissatisfied elements in his party. Neither did he mention the Republican Party or any of its presidential nomination contenders by name.

But, in an apparent slap at Republicans in Congress, he denounced critics of his ten-year social improvement program outlined in his January legislative message.

He called them "timid," "defeatists," "backward-looking," and "men of small vision and faint hearts."

"The timid people say that this can't be done," he said referring to his program for improving social security and justice, production, education, and housing.

'Must Dedicate Ourselves'

"I know that it can be done," he declared repeatedly, "and we of the forward-looking faith must dedicate ourselves to the proposition that it will be done."

"If anyone chooses to call this politics," he concluded, "then it is the politics of Jefferson and Jackson, Wilson and Roosevelt—and it is good enough for me."

There was only a faint indirect reference to the uprising of Southern Democrats against his "civil rights" program for Negroes, a program which caused some Southerners to boycott the dinner.

This was when he referred to Jefferson's conviction that "true democratic prograss could be attained only by extending political and economic liberty, religious freedom, and educational opportunity."

One of his civil rights proposals would abolish the poll tax in the South. Others would make lynching a federal offense, abolish Jim Crowism, and guarantee Negroes equal opportunity for work. Montgomery Ala

White House aides, when asked about the omission from the speech of the anti-segregation and other issues, said these were already a matter of record and did not require reiteration.

Party System Lauded

Listeners read only two possible though indirect references to Henry A. Wallace's third party effort. One was when the President said:

"The party system prevails in this country. I believe in it and have confidence in it. It constitutes the most effective means of presenting the issues of the day to the American people."

Another instance they cited: "Progressive liberals will rally to the Democratic Party, even though they do not happen to be members of the party, because they know that the Democratic Party is their best fighting force for the triumphant achievement of worthy goals."

Mr. Truman went to the Mayflower Hotel for his main address after dining at a Statler banquet, set up to care for an overflow audience — at $100 a plate. Dinner officials called it a sell-out, with 2,900 guests at both places. Advertiser

Television and radio carried the speeches to other dinners throughout the country.

After re-outlining his 10-year program and asserting farmers, workers, and business men had profited far more under recent Democratic administrations than under their predecessors, Mr. Truman came to the price question.

"I want business earnings to grow as our whole economy thrives and prospers," he said. "But we know from experience that profits based upon excessive prices and inflation are built upon sand. The structure will crumble if the foundation is not made firm.

10 PM

"In the interest of business as much as any other group, we must win the fight against inflation to avoid disaster. In the interest of business as much as any other group, we must make the next 10 years a period of extraordinary achievement."

No mention was made of his previous demand for standby price and wage controls, which Republicans and some Democrats oppose. Montgomery Ala.

The President drew an analogy between issues in Jefferson's and Jackson's times and those of today. He said the choice today is "between a parcel labeled progressive liberalism and parcel labeled reactionary conservatism. . .

"The parcel of reactionary conservatism may be wrapped in bright colors and gay tinsel, but when you open it, you always find party rule for the benefit of the privileged few. Fri 2-20-48

Not So Smooth

"Inside the parcel of progressive liberalism, however, you always find government for the benefit of all the people—true democratic government."

In advance of the banquet, Democratic officials predicted a show of unity through the presence of James A. Farley, former party chairman who broke with the late President Roosevelt, and the attendance of some Southern legislators. 34

However, it was not all sunshine and roses for the Truman forces as several Dixie groups announced they had cancelled their dinner plans. They want no part of the President's proposals for anti-poll tax, anti-lynching, anti-segregation, and no-color-line-discrimination-in-employment legislation.

Mrs. Olin D. Johnston, wife of the South Carolina senator, said she would not attend "because I might be seated next to a Negro." Fri 2-20-48

Gov. and Mrs. Strom Thurmond, of South Carolina, previously had cancelled.

Mrs. Johnston said her party of 45 had dwindled to about 30 because some of the others felt as she did. She was a vice-chairman of the dinner committee and was to have been seated at the head table. 10

Mrs. Johnston said the flare-up was "symbolic of party leaders' efforts to get minority votes through 'civil rights' proposals that led to threats of a Southern bolt."

Anti-Civil Rights Parley Set Today

WASHINGTON, Feb. 19.—(AP)—A group of Southern Congressmen, Thursday, called a meeting for Friday, to organize opposition to President Truman's civil rights program.

Representative Colmer (D), Mississippi, said representatives from "about a dozen" Southern States have indicated they will attend.

A resolution already has been drafted pledging the group to cooperate with the Southern Governors' Conference in opposing the President's program. Mr. Truman recently asked for anti-lynching, anti-poll tax and anti-segregation legislation.

The resolution already has been approved at separate meetings of some state delegations, including those from Arkansas and Alabama.

Colmer and Democratic Representatives Cox, of Georgia, and Hobbs, of Alabama, headed a group of Southerners arranging the meeting.

The purpose of the meeting, one organizer told a reporter, "is to serve notice on the administration that we will oppose the so-called civil rights program and that we will resist inclusion of any of its provisions in the platform of the Democratic party."

Dozen Empty Seats Silent Reminder Of Dixie Protests

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20—(AP)—President Truman headed into the 1948 campaign today with a call for the common people to rally around in a battle against "the privileged few." Fri 2-20-48

"This is a year of challenge," Mr. Truman told Democratic Party members last night, "I propose that we meet the challenge head on."

In a 30-minute Jefferson-Jackson Day speech the president never did refer directly to the challenge he faces from angry Southerners in his own party.

Nor did he mention directly the threat to Democratic presidential chances offered by Henry A. Wallace's third party.

But he spoke highly on Thomas Jefferson's attacks against "laws that restricted citizenship." And he said the Democratic Party still believes in protecting the rights of "all the groups and individuals in our nation."

Mr. Truman lumped opponents of his legislative program together as the forces of "reactionary conservatism." Sat. 2-21-48

He described those who stand against his proposals for improving social security, justice, production, education and housing as "defeatists," "backward-looking" and "men of small vision and faint hearts."

He said the Democrats offer a "parcel of progressive liberalism" and "progressive liberals will rally to the Democratic Party."

"They know," he said, "that the Democratic Party is their best fighting force for the triumphant achievement of worthy goals."

But while the president was making his confident speech the Southern revolt within his own party got hotter still.

Sen. Byrd (D., Va.) asserted in a speech at Richmond that Mr. Truman's Civil Rights Commission had urged a "mass invasion of states' rights."

* * *

SOUTHERN CONGRESSMEN from at least three states called a conference today to organize against the anti-lynch, anti-poll tax and no-color-line proposals.

Rep. Colmer (D., Miss.) predicted that representatives from about a dozen states would attend. A resolution opposing the president's program was ready for adoption. The group planned to work with Southern governors in the protest.

Sen. McGrath, of Rhode Island, Democratic national chairman, told a reporter he will see governors of five Southern states on the matter Monday. He listed the chief executives of South Carolina, Texas, Arkansas, Virginia and Maryland.

Whatever they have to report, McGrath said, will be passed along to Mr. Truman. He promised nothing further.

The president talked twice last night—first impromptu to one section of the Jefferson-Jackson dinner at the Statler Hotel and then in a prepared address to the section at the Mayflower.

* * *

AT THE STATLER he struck at attempts by the GOP-controlled Congress to cut his budget and reduce federal taxes.

Conditions in the world now, he said, are "too grave" to give control of government spending to "a Congress which does not, and does not care to understand what the facts are."

In his address he sized up this year's political battle as a fight between a Democratic Party of "progressive liberalism" against a "reactionary conservative" opposition which he said is behind the wealthy and "favored few."

He didn't even mention the Republican Party by name.

But he declared that if the "common, everyday man" is truly informed, "he will not turn the government over to a bunch of reactionaries who are trying to take us back to 1896."

The empty table in front of the president as he spoke had been reserved for the party of Sen. Olin Johnston (D., S. C.). Johnston has criticized Mr. Truman's civil rights proposals.

News

When President Truman spoke at the Jefferson-Jackson Day festivities in Washington, "Table 23" of the banquet hall was vacant. The South Carolina group that had reserved the space boycotted the dinner because of the president's recent stands on a number of issues, and because there was to be no segregation in the banquet hall. But Mr. Truman matched those vacant seats with some omissions of his own. He said nothing about the civil rights controversy that has arisen in the party. He answered none of his critics. His entire speech was devoted to efforts to rally all Democrats and all liberals around the progressive principles of Jackson and Jefferson.

Perhaps the president gave the cue for the future attitude of the party leadership. In his civil rights message to Congress he, in a sense, passed the ball to the rank and file of Democrats. It is his job, as party leader, to set forth principles and to suggest application of those principles. But when he does that, he shares with others of the party responsibility for action.

Birmingham ala

President Truman has had his say on the question of federal action on such matters as poll tax, lynching, federal employment practices and segregation. There is no necessity for his continuing to hammer away on his recommendations. In view of the reactions to his suggestions, he did well not to touch upon them again in his Jefferson-Jackson Day speech. It will be still better if he does not press the matter. News

But of course the issue is not yet settled. There is still the question of what the 1948 party platform will say. The Southern elements most aroused by Mr. Truman's earlier stand will not rest quietly until the conventions are over.

In their fight over the civil rights plank in the party platform, Southern Democrats might remember, however, that the results will be influenced by what the South does in the meantime. If we take the attitude that there is no possibility of the South's being wrong on these issues, that our way of dealing with civil rights questions is above reproach, it will be only adding force to the demands for national action. But if the South moves more earnestly and quickly to reexamine the possibility of injustices within its own states, the pressures from without will ease up.

Sat. 2-21-48

The issue is not the simple one of state's rights, or of civil rights. It is one of state's rights and civil rights. If the South blindly insists that no civil rights question is at stake, it can expect further attacks upon state sovereignty.

President Truman's silence on the issue may be construed as possibly indicating a desire to give the South a chance to take action, not in mere revolt against the possibility of federal intervention but also to lessen whatever reasons some persons may see for intervention. Birmingham Ala

But the president did have some things to say for all Democrats, Southern and Northern. He sought to fix the minds of party members upon the basic principles of liberalism, of freedom and growth for all men. Perhaps he thought that more attention to these fundamentals would cause some of the controversial issues to fall into better perspective. Sat. 2-21-48

Demo Distress Signals Hoisted By Party Chiefs

Southerners Snub Jackson Day Rally Account Of Negroes

Thur. 2-19-48

WASHINGTON, Feb. 19—(AP)—The Democratic National Committee raised an out and out distress signal today in the face of the Henry A. Wallace third party drive.

Chairman J. Howard McGrath said he hopes Wallace will "realize" that he can accomplish nothing but "the defeat of the Democratic Party's program of practical liberalism in 1948."

McGrath virtually appealed for abandonment of the Wallace campaign in a radio speech last night.

The address followed McGrath's frank admission that the victory of a Wallace-backed candidate in Tuesday's New York congressional election is a big danger sign for the Democrats.

In the New York race, Leo Isacson, running as an American Labor Party candidate with Wallace's support, upset Democrat Karl Propper by a wide margin.

* * *

WALLACE, ON a speech-making tour of the South, gave no indication that he plans to heed any call to "come home, all is forgiven."

Instead he announced at Miami Beach that his supporters have obtained 464,000 signatures on a petition to put his name on the primary election ballot in California. Franklin D. Roosevelt carried the state by only about 475,000 votes in 1944.

Meanwhile the row between national Democratic leaders and party members in the "Solid South" flared up again in Washington.

A group of Southerners cancelled their reservations for the big $100-a-plate Jefferson-Jackson dinners tonight where prominent Democrats will rally around President Truman.

The issue was one which has brought a chorus of rebel yells from south of the Mason-Dixon Line in recent weeks: The color line.

Mrs. Olin D. Johnstolumn 1 of the South Carolina s d she decided not to atte n- ner "because I might d next to a Negro."

She said her party of 4 had dwindled to around 30 because some of the others felt the same way.

McGrath told reporters a dozen or more Negroes planned to attend the two dinners here. He said he could not order any segregation.

Mrs. Johnston called the flareup "symbolic of party leaders' efforts to get minority votes through 'civil rights' proposals that led to threats of a Southern bolt."

* * *

McGRATH SHOWED deep concern over the Wallace threat in his radio address. He said he thinks Wallace himself is "sincere" enough, but added:

"The fact that the loudest applause for Henry Wallace comes from Communists, Communist fellow travelers and reactionary Republicans causes me to believe that the bulk of Henry Wallace's support is coming from those whose basic allegiance is not to the American way of life.

"I hope that Henry Wallace will realize that unscrupulous forces who look to Moscow for inspiration and guidance see in his candidacy a chance to disrupt the normal activities of our two-party system and bring about the chaos and confusion of splinter parties that has sent so many nations of Europe into governmental collapse.

"I hope that Henry Wallace will repudiate the supporters of his cause whose only real hope is that they can defeat the Democratic Party's program of practical liberalism in 1948 and turn the government over to reactionaries and isolationists." Times

* * *

EARLIER IN THE DAY McGrath said the Democratic Party will make a "grave mistake if it does not learn a lesson" from the New York election. He added:

"It is evident that the fight against communism on the left and toryism on the right cannot be won unless every Democrat resolves to get out and vote."

Harold E. Stassen, candidate for the GOP presidential nomination, called the victory of the Wallace man in the Bronx Democratic stronghold good news for the Republicans. New York N.Y.

It indicates, Stassen said at Spokane, Wash., that working men and women who used to vote for Roosevelt are leaving the Democratic Party. Thur. 2-19-48

However, Sen. Aiken (R., Vt.) said the American Labor Party victory showed "dissatisfaction with both the old parties." He declared:

"Many voters are disgusted with the lack of good government on the part of the Democratic administration and the lack of progressive ideas on the part of Republican Party leaders."

Aiken often differs with the GOP leadership.

SEN. LUCAS (D., Ill.), assistant Democrat leader in the Senate, told reporters the result did not mean much.

Sen. Ives (R., N. Y.) put it this way:

"I'm not surprised at the small Republican vote because they did not expect to win. "I'm not surprised at the ALP vote because they got out 100 per cent. I am surprised at the Democratic vote because they were supposed to win."

* * *

REP. SADOWSKI (D., Mich.) said "the only thing that can save President Truman is to change our foreign policy and nominate Sen. Pepper (D., Fla.) for vice president."

Pepper's political views are such that he was mentioned for awhile as a possible running mate for Wallace. He scotched those reports with statement that he intends to remain a Democrat.

With President Truman as the main attraction, the Jefferson-Jackson celebration is expected to draw around 2,900 tonight.

It was divided into two sections—at the Statler and Mayflower Hotels.

Mr. and Mrs. Truman and daughter, Margaret, will dine at the Statler, where the president will make a short speech. Then the party will go to the Mayflower, where he will make his main address.

The second speech at 10 p.m., Eastern Standard Time, will be carried by the radio chains and television.

Wallace Says He Has No Communist Advisers

MIAMI, Fla., Feb. 19—(AP)—Henry A. Wallace, third party presidential candidate, concludes his Florida tour with a speech in Bayfront Park tonight.

Wallace, who arrived at Miami Beach from Tampa and StZ Petersburg yesterday, said at a press conference he welcomed the support of anyone who is for peace.

Wallace said he did not have a 'single" Communistic adviser and would not welcome the support of Communists.

Hill To Replace McGrath At Atlanta

The Savannah Morning News

The Advertiser

FOR the student of political science who approaches his subject from a strictly objective standpoint, the arrangement by which Democratic National Chairman J. Howard McGrath, of Rhode Island, is denied the opportunity to address the Jefferson-Jackson Day dinner in Atlanta March 9, offers some curious twists of fate, involving history as well as politics. Wed.

Instead of listening to Senator McGrath, who is a firm supporter of President Truman's civil rights program, the disciples of Jefferson and Jackson will be regaled by Senator Lister Hill, Democrat, of Alabama! Montgomery, Ala.

The idea behind the switch from McGrath to Hill is obvious. The leaders who are staging the dinner were fearful that the Rhode Island national chairman of their party might somehow, somewhere in his speech, refer favorably to the Truman program for a Federal anti-lynch law, for a Federal anti-poll tax statute and for an FEPC, while bespeaking the virtues and the statesmanship of the Sage of Monticello and while lauding the fiery progressive Democracy of Old Hickory, from the hills of Tennessee. Advertiser Wed. 2-25-48

On the other hand they know that the member of the Upper House from Alabama, with Websterian vehemence, in the name of all the illustrious sons of a bygone South, who fought from Manassas to Gettysburg, will castigate with good and hearty adjectives, the Truman program, the report of his Civil Rights Commission, and, if need be, all anti-Jeffersonians and anti-Jacksonians, whether they hail from Rhode Island or from the uppermost tip of Maine!

INASMUCH as a Senator from Alabama thus is engaged to do what a national chairman from Rhode Island might have done, had things been different, in the name of Jefferson and Jackson, it is not inappropriate to consider a few pertinent historical items regarding Alabama and Rhode Island, respectively.

Alabama is not one of the original thirteen colonies — she entered the Union in 1819—but at one time in her eventful history she was proud to boast of having the capital of the Confederacy within her borders, none other than the charming city of Montgomery, a city which to this day holds high the torch of states' rights and supports the Stars and Bars as against the Stars and Stripes when it comes to a choice between the G. A. R. and the U. C. V.!

Montgomery, Ala.

In Alabama's capital was born Senator Hill who was educated in Montgomery's pleasant environs, who attended the state university and who has been nurtured on the principles of states' rights and on the cherished manners and customs of the Old South, a gentleman and a scholar who bows to no man when forensic eloquence is wanted. The Advertiser

Rhode Island, on the other hand, is one of the thirteen original colonies, and one of the things about which her historians have boasted since the early Seventeenth Century is that she was founded by Roger Williams, a Welshman, in the year 1636.

Originally Williams settled in Massachusetts, but he was forced to flee from that colony, along with several companions, to escape Puritan persecution. (A note can be made here, with justification, by a Southerner that the Puritans were the forerunners of the abolitionists and later of the Northern brand of New Dealers!) Montgomery, Ala.

WHAT was it about Massachusetts that Roger Williams didn't like? The answer is that he disliked the same kind of thing a Southerner today dislikes who believes in states' rights and who is opposed to governmental restrictions from a national regime in Washington. In a nutshell, Williams, as Rhode Island's own historians will tell you, had absolutely no sympathy with the Massachusetts principle of controlling through the civil government the consciences of men! 2-25-48

With that philosophy in mind he was one of the organizers of the First Baptist Church of Providence, said to be the first in America, and the Baptists to this day stand for religious freedom, for freedom of conscience, and in principle for states' rights! In the Providence which Roger Williams helped to establish, Democratic National Chairman McGrath was born—but, alas, times have changed, and we find this ofifcial head of an erstwhile Jeffersonian party as much opposed to the principles Roger Williams once advocated as Williams was opposed to the New Dealish philosophies of the Massachusetts Puritans! What a strange political evolution. No wonder it will be Hill batting for McGrath in Atlanta March 9! Wed. 2-25-48

GOP Offers 'Too Little, Too Late,' Says Kerr

The Constitution

Atlanta, Ga. Wed. 3-24-48

By M. L. ST. JOHN

Georgia's long delayed Democratic "love feast" drew an enthusiastic crowd of 900 men and women here Tuesday night to hear Oklahoma's former Gov. Robert Kerr blast the "reactionary and confused Republican leadership by offering too little and too late while Communism sweeps over Europe and Asia."

As the crowd overflowed the two civic rooms at the Ansley Hotel and sent 100 persons to eat in the Owl Room, National Committeeman E. D. Rivers, sponsor of the Jackson-Jefferson Day dinner, hailed it as the greatest gathering of Democrats in the history of such dinners in Georgia.

Democrats of many factions and State leaders of various political beliefs were present. Presented to the audience were Acting Gov. Thompson, former Gov. Ellis Arnall, former gubernatorial candidates James Carmichael, Abit Nix and Blanton Fortson, and Joseph Rabun, who, with Thompson, is a candidate for Governor this Summer. The Constitution

Conspicuously absent were Herman Talmadge and State Democratic Chairman James Peters.

Kerr said on the domestic front all measures that would provide better opportunity and greater security to more people today "are prisoners of war behind barbed wire entanglements of Republican legislative committees."

The Democratic orator called upon America to provide leadership so the freedom-loving people of the world wouldn't have to turn to Russia. He called upon the Democrats to provide leadership so the people wouldn't have to turn to an incompetent Republican Party. Atlanta, Ga.

Lashing at Republicans, Kerr said the Republican majority still argues and bickers and delays today, nearly a year after Sec. of State Marshall proposed a co-operative plan for European recovery as a basis for peace and months after the President called a special session to implement that proposal. Wed. 3-24-48

Mrs. Virginia Polhill Price, Georgia's Democratic National Committeewoman; Mrs. Thompson, Mrs. Rivers and Mrs. Kerr were among the women at the head table.

Labor was represented by George Googe, of the American Federation of Labor, and George Hathawoy, of the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

Justices Tom Candler and T. Grady Head, of the State Supreme Court, were among the Statehouse leaders present.

Democrats of State Refuse To Join Southern Revolt

The Courier-Journal

By THORNTON CONNELL.

The Democratic Party of Kentucky yesterday refused to join in the Southern Democratic rebellion against a second term for President Truman. Jus. 3-16-48

The invitation to bolt the party was extended by Herbert Holmes, chairman of the Mississippi State Democratic Executive Committee. It was turned down by J. Lyter Donaldson, chairman of the Kentucky Democratic State Central Executive Committee.

In an answer yesterday to a telegram sent Sunday, Donaldson told Holmes: Jus. 3-16-48

"Being of the opinion that pending international problems necessitate a united front to combat foreign enemies, I do not believe it opportune to promote sectional differences within our party at this particular time. For this and other reasons I cannot join with you in calling the conference suggested in your telegram."

(34d)

Holmes had asked Donaldson to join him in calling a conference of states-rights Democrats in the Jackson, Miss., Municipal Auditorium at 10 a.m., Monday, April 12.

Ky 1

He also had asked Donaldson or some member of the Kentucky committee to "meet with us in Jackson Monday, March 22, at 10 a.m., at Heidelberg Hotel, to approve details of conference, select temporary chairman, keynote speaker, etc."

In a postscript to his telegram, Holmes said, "On Tuesday (today) I will issue call for conference jointly with other chairmen who want to go forward with this movement." Jus. 3-16-48

Clements' Stand Noted.

While Donaldson did not say so, his action in turning down the bid to secede from the Democratic Party as headed by President Truman and the Democratic National Committee is believed to be in accord with the wishes of Governor Earle C. Clements. Clements said Saturday his support of a presidential aspirant would be guided by the Democratic State Convention, expected to meet in late May or early June.

Holmes told Donaldson in the telegram that "Action of Southern Governors in Washington Saturday clears way for holding conference of States Rights Democrats. This should be done at earliest possible date to plan and approve united action. Mississippi Democratic Executive Committee has authorized me to call this conference."

Many Letters Received.

Donaldson said the telegram from Holmes is only one of many letters, telegrams, and telephone calls he has received on the Southern revolt against President Truman's civil-rights program. In Washington Saturday seven Governors of States in the South resolved they would support only candidates for President and Vice-President who hold views similar to their own on civil rights. Jus. 3-16-48

Donaldson disclosed that he also had replied in the negative when asked last week by William P. Baskin, Bishopville, S. C., for his views on the wisdom of calling a conference of Democratic leaders of the South for a similar purpose. Baskin is chairman of the South Carolina Democratic State Executive Committee.

Democrats Upheld.

Donaldson told Baskin that regardless of some of the announced policies of Democratic leaders which may conflict with the traditions of the South "and be in opposition to our concepts of local State Government," that:

"In my opinion we have the indisputable fact that from the Democratic Party and the Democratic Party alone can we expect to receive under a liberal form of government benefits such as have accrued to our people in the past, and such as we may expect in the future under the administration of our Government by the nominees of the Democratic Party.

'United Front' Urged.

After pointing out to the South Carolinian the belief that "we must have a united front to combat foreign enemies," Donaldson said: Jus. 3-16-48

"I believe the great majority of the Democrats in Kentucky share with me the opinion above expressed and such being true I do not believe we could serve our people or our country by participating in a conference, the purpose of which and the probable result of which would be to impair the success of our Party in the national election of 1948, and thereby impair the welfare of our nation."

Donaldson said yesterday that he will call the Democratic state committee to meet after adjournment of the Legislature to issue a call for Kentucky's Democratic State Convention to elect delegates to the Democratic National Convention in Philadelphia July 12.

Kentucky will have 26 votes in the national convention. Presidential electors, a new state committee, state chairman, and Kentucky members of the party's national committee also will be selected at the state convention.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE GOVERNOR, THE LIEUT. GOVERNOR, AND THE LEGISLATORS OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF KY. AND THE HON. J. LYTER DONALDSON, CHAIRMAN OF THE STATE CENTRAL DEMOCRATIC COMMITTEE.

Gentlemen: The Courier-Journal

The Third District Negro Democratic Organization directed a Committee to present to you this testimonial of their gratitude for your approval and the passage of measures affecting the welfare of our people.

Immediately after the Governor's inauguration, we received a bid to confer with you on the needs of our group. On Dec. 17, 1947, we presented you a program of our desires for general improvement, viz; increased appropriation for our three State Educational Institutions which you readily approved, and the same was passed. In addition, we recited to you the serious situation of Red Cross Hospital, and of the pressing need for scientific nurse training. For this purpose, we asked you for an appropriation of $50,000. You readily agreed to raise the State Aid from the mere pittance of $4,500 to "a sum that will surprise you." You generously gave us $60,000.

We gratefully acknowledge your support in the passage of House Bill No. 447 which "authorizes hospitals, by a majority vote of their governing bodies to admit Negroes to instruction in Nursing, Medicine, Surgery, and related courses." Louisville, Ky.

Our Committee made three trips to Frankfort, and were cordially received by each of you. Thurs 4-1-48

We further acknowledge the refusal of the Governor, the Lieut. Governor, and the Hon. J. Lyter Donaldson, Chairman of the State Central Executive Committee to join with other Southern States in setting up regional schools of higher training for Negroes, and the further refusal of the above named Chairman to join in the Southern revolt against our President, the Honorable Harry S. Truman, because of his Civil Rights program. We hail this as the greatest unprecedented act of statesmanship toward minority groups in the history of our great Commonwealth.

We appreciate your open-mindedness and your attitude of forthright fairness, and pledge you our loyal co-operation.

Respectfully,

Committee—3rd District Negro Democratic Organization.

LOUISIANA STRIKES TRUMAN OFF BALLOT

~~The Times~~

Democratic State Committee Substitutes Thurmond Ticket —Shock to National Party

Sat 9-11-48

By The Associated Press.

BATON ROUGE, La., Sept. 10—President Truman's name was knocked off the Louisiana ballot today and he will be only a write-in candidate in the Nov. 2 general elections. New York, N.Y.

The States' Rights Democratic candidates—Governor J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina for President and Governor Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi for Vive President—were declared the Democratic party nominees in Louisiana.

The Louisiana Democratic State Central Committee took this action by unanimous vote on a resolution by Judge Leander Perez of St. Bernard and Plaquemines parishes (counties).

The resolution voiced the Southern revolt against the National Administration's civil rights program and policies. Sat 9-11-48

The resolution said in part that the action was taken because "it is the duty of the Democratic State Central Committee to support candidates for President and Vice President who will preserve the tradition of the people of this state and protect their rights of self-government and all other states' rights in accordance with our American way of constitutional government as opposed to candidates for said offices who are pledged to support the enactment of Federal laws to regiment our people, to destroy their right of state government and to force upon them foreign ideologies such as the Russian 'all-races law,' called here the F. E. P. C., which contains a fundamental threat to our American way of life and which would set up a Federal police state for the certain destruction of our American freedom and liberties." Sat 9-11-48

The resolution also declared that Governors Thurmond and Wright "both have pledged themselves to support, defend and preserve the right of the people of each state to local self-government and all state's rights and property within our American constitutional framework of government."

Rooster Symbol Is Used

Judge Perez explained that the ballot would be headed by the regular Democratic party's rooster symbol. Immediately beneath it will appear the names of Governors Thurmond and Wright; then will follow the electors' names; and after them the names of candidates nominated in the Aug. 31 Louisiana Democratic primary. The committee met to certify the primary election returns.

To "prevent a split in the vote" for the nominees of the Aug. 31 primary in the general election, Judge Perez said States' rights electors who have qualified with the Secretary of State would be asked to withdraw.

Judge Perez said the names of President Truman and Senator Alben W. Barkley of Kentucky, Vice Presidential candidate, would not appear on the ballot; and they can be voted for only on a write-in basis.

The state's ten Democratic electors were not officially pledged to the Thurmond-Wright ticket by the central committee's action. They are unpledged. Louisiana electors are customarily unpledged. In reply to a question from the floor during the meeting, Judge Perez said.

"It isn't necessary. These are men who have told us they would not vote for Truman. I am one of them. I know them."

Judge Perez told the committee the party is "at a crossroads."

"It's a matter of self-preservation," he declared. "Are we going to lie down supinely and see the resurrection of carpet-bagging in the South?" he asked. Sat 9-11-48

"We represent the Democratic party of Louisiana. Our responsibility is to take such action as will protect the people of our state and unless we stand up as men and be counted, we will not be protecting our American way under our constitutional government.

"This resolution is a test. Are we going to protect our American way or bow down to the will of those three un-American conventions at Philadelphia?"

Committee member Dudley Desmare of New Orleans asked, "does this mean we're leaving the Democratic party?"

"No," shouted Chairman Henry Sevier of Tallulah. "This is the Democratic party."

Both the Republican and Progressive parties have qualified elector slates to appear on the ballot.

National Committee Surprised

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 10—President Truman was cruising on the Potomac when the news reached Washington of Louisiana's swing into the States Rights column. This action by the Democratic State Central Committee of Louisiana hit the Democratic National Committee as a heavy shock, for this state had been confidently counted on Truman's side.

Chairman Howard McGrath would only say that the National Committee is studying the legal aspects of the Louisiana move.

Heretofore the National Committee had been convinced that the States Rights strength would be confined to Mississippi, Alabama, South Carolina and half of Florida.

Choose your Army school before you enlist. Ask about the new technical school plan today at the United States Army and United States Air Force recruiting station, 39 Whitehall Street, New York.

Louisiana And Democracy

The decision of the Louisiana Legislature that HARRY S. TRUMAN and ALBEN BARKLEY may be represented on the state's ballots in November but not as Democrats raised interesting questions.

Louisiana took part in the Democratic Convention in Philadelphia and did not walk out, as did Mississippi and part of the Alabama delegation. Under traditional interpretations, therefore, Louisiana Democracy was morally bound to support the nominees of the convention as the Democratic candidates.

Some little time after the convention, it was indicated by political figures in Louisiana that the state would support the States' Rights candidates, Gov. J. STROM THURMOND of South Carolina and Gov. FIELDING WRIGHT of Mississippi. No formal action was taken at that time.

Only a few days ago, however, the State Democratic Committee met and voted to take the names of TRUMAN and BARKLEY off the ballot and substitute THURMOND and WRIGHT. When this move was roundly and widely denounced as dictatorial and probably illegal behavior, Gov. EARL LONG called the Legislature into special session.

It was then decided that the TRUMAN-BARKLEY ticket could be on the ballot, but could not use the word "Democrat," or employ the symbol of a rooster that has long been emblematic of the Democratic Party. Further, it was officially held, THURMOND and WRIGHT are the candidates of the real Democrats.

While we do not go along with Mr. TRUMAN and do not go for his proposals, especially including his so-called civil rights program, we wonder whether Louisiana has not gone too far and may eventually regret it. It is a question of techniques and of the proprieties, as well as of practical politics. It amounts to disregarding principles of great worth in maintaining the two strong parties absolutely necessary under our system of government.

On the other hand, however, maybe Louisiana has the right idea in setting up the States' Rights group as the real Democratic Party and leaving Mr. TRUMAN and his strangely conglomerate following to find a name for themselves. We have felt all along that Southerners should work within the framework of the party rather than split off to any splinter group. Perhaps this is the best way to start the Democratic Party back to its historic policies and practices.

Cheating The Voter

Wash. Post

Thousands of citizens who read their newspapers yesterday morning must have asked themselves whether they were living in America or the curious Land of Oz. In our supposedly free and democratic contest for the selection of a national leader the name of the President of the United States had been stricken from the ballot in Louisiana by a political committee. The people of that State will have no opportunity to give the President a vote of confidence unless they write his name on the ballot. In other words, they are denied a free choice among the candidates. The effect is so utterly at variance with customary assumptions about the American system of government that it may shock the people into some serious thinking about the obsolete and unreliable method by which the President is chosen.

Sun. 9-12-48

Wash. D.C.

34d Demo

It is futile to condemn the Dixiecrats who have directed this maneuver and similar coups in other Southern States. They are merely taking advantage of the tools of confusion and obstruction which an obsolete system places in their hands. Louisiana is one of several States which still cling to the fiction that the President is chosen by a group of electors named by the States. It does not require that the names of the presidential and vice presidential candidates appear on the ballots, although the Democratic State Central Committee seems to have decreed in this instance that the States' Rights candidates shall be listed.

It permits the splitting of votes among individual electors, instead of requiring votes to be cast for or against an entire slate.

thus buttressing the assumption that the electors are to exercise their discretion in the choice of a President and Vice President.

Finally, the electors themselves are nominated, not by vote of the people, but in State political conventions. This adds up to dictation by a select group of politicians as to where Louisiana's lot shall be cast in a presidential election.

Sun 9-12-48

The really alarming fact is that the right of Louisiana and other States to thwart the will of the people in choosing a President is deeply imbedded in the Constitution. The transition from government of the elite for the people to government by and for the people has never been recognized in the law. So we have 48 different schemes in 48 different States for determining how each will make its influence felt in a presidential election. The door to finagling is not merely ajar; it is wide open. The amazing thing is that a system so fraught with hazards and uncertainties has not previously been utterly discredited.

By forcing the issue at last the Dixiecrats may in the end render a national service. The country needs a new electoral system under which the people may vote directly for the flesh-and-blood candidates of all legitimate parties and not for dummies who may or may not reflect the popular will. And the electoral votes of each State should be divided among the candidates in the same proportion as the popular vote in that State is divided. How long must the country wait for a statesman to take hold of this issue and make a name for himself in addition to safeguarding our electoral system?

Louisiana Bill Opens Ballot To Truman

By the Associated Press.

Baton Rouge, La., Sept. 26.—The Louisiana Legislature today voted to admit President Truman's name to the state general election ballot—without letting him be called officially a Democrat.

Mar 9-27-48

The State Senate unanimously passed a bill revising the State General Election Law to allow the President to be nominated by petition. The Democratic State Central Committee dropped his name from the ballot September 10 by officially indorsing the nominees of the States'-Rights Democrats.

The bill now goes to Governor Earl K. Long for signature.

The State Central Committee voted to pledge its elector candidates to the States'-Rights Democratic ticket of Governors J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina and Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi. The move barred Truman from the Louisiana ballot since the deadline for nominating by petition already had passed under the election law in effect then.

Democrats to Use All 'Legal Means'

New York N.Y.

National Committee Says States Rights 'Fraud' Keeps Ticket Off Ballot

By Robert J. Donovan

WASHINGTON, Sept. 10.—The Democratic National Committee, declaring all-out war on the States' Rights Democrats, promised today to use "every legal means" to get the Truman-Barkley ticket on the ballot in Louisiana, South Carolina, Mississippi and Alabama.

After two days of conferences among high-ranking committee members William J. Primm jr., assistant to Senator J. Howard McGrath, of Rhode Island, Democratic National Chairman, issued a statement today accusing Louisiana Democratic leaders of "fraud."

Mr. Primm charged that yesterday's action of the Louisiana State Democratic Central Committee in striking the Truman-Barkley ticket from the Louisiana ballot and substituting the ticket of the States' Rights Democrats, or Dixiecrats, was "high-handed and arbitrary."

Assails Louisiana Tactics

"Tactics employed in Louisiana to deprive the people of the right of a free choice in the general election," Mr. Primm said, "are virtually identical with means used in Alabama, Mississippi and South Carolina by small groups in these states. To find a similar situation one must go behind the 'iron curtain' of Eastern Europe . . .

"Every legal means at the command of the National Committee will be employed to insure that the people of Louisiana and every other state are given the opportunity to cast a free ballot in November and that they are not deprived of their democratic rights by fraud or other devious means."

Mr. Primm charged that states' rights tactics in "taking over the Democratic party machinery in certain states and thereby depriving the people of those states of a free ballot is intolerable." He called their methods "flagrantly dishonest and fraudulent."

"The leaders of the Dixiecrat movement," he said, "have cleverly seen to it through subterfuge that the States' Rights party is nothing more than a wing of the Republican party and and is being financed by oil and private utilities interests.

Sun 9-12-48

Charges Republican Aid

"Recent happenings in Indiana offer irrefutable evidence of their Republican party connections. Petitions for the necessary signatures to place the Dixiecrats on the ballot there were printed in the state Republican campaign headquarters. The Dixiecrats were counseled and assisted in every possible way by Republican members of the state elections board, and the two Republican members of the board voted to accept the Dixiecrat petition as legal."

Mr. Primm added that the petition was attacked in the courts and the Dixiecrats were ruled off the Indiana ballot. The states rights candidates are Governor J. Strom Thurmond, of South Carolina, for President, and Governor Fielding L. Wright, of Mississippi, for Vice-President.

What has happened in Louisiana, Alabama, Mississippi and South Carolina is that the Democratic organizations of those states, rejectng the candidacies of President Truman and Senator Alben W. Barkley, of Kentucky, because of their civil rights stand, have put up electors pledged to the Thurmond-Wright ticket.

Mr. Primm's statement implied that the Democratic National Committee will go into the courts to get the Truman-Barkley electors on the ballot, but it gave no indication when this would be done or what the basis of the action would be.

Sun 9-12-48

Mr. Primm promised that the action of the Louisiana State Democratic Committee would not "go unchallenged by the people of Louisiana and the Democratic party."

"The vast majority of the citizens of Louisiana," he said, "are Democrats, and they have been denied the right to vote for the nominees of their party.

Sun 9-12-48

"The action of a small clique of men who have assumed dictatorial powers beyond all concept of democracy has deprived the people of Louisiana of a free ballot. This action cannot be tolerated and will not be tolerated by the people of Louisiana."

Mr. Primm said the Dixiecrats are in reality a fourth party and that the Louisiana Democratic committee thus "committed a fraud on their own people" by putting its stamp of approval on the Thurmond-Wright ticket.

"The Democratic National Committee," he added, "has clearly stated its position that the Dixiecrats are a fourth party. They are not Democrats, and the National Committee has called upon all national committeemen and national committee women who are supporting the Dixiecrats to resign."

The committee, it was learned, is considering ways of throwing rebels out, if they will not resign.

In this connection the committee is centering its attention on the Democratic manual containing the party rules. Section 11, [illegible] with the power of the Committee says: "The National Committee is empowered to expel members for cause and has exercised this prerogative, as in 1896, when it expunged from its rolls the names of members actively opposing the election of the Presidential nominee (William Jennings Bryan)."

Time Lack for Printing Cited by Coe, Blair

Fri 10-8-48

BY B. L. KREBS
(The Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

Baton Rouge, Oct. 7. — Louisiana supporters of President Truman lost their last chance today to get the president's name on the state ballot under the Democratic designation and rooster.

The president's name, however, has already been submitted by petition in accordance with an act adopted at the recent special session of the Legislature, and his electors will appear under the designation of the "Truman-Barkley party," with the Democratic donkey as the emblem.

Three New Electors

The Democratic state central committee recently threw three Truman-Barkley electors off the Louisiana ballot, substituted new electors pledged to vote for Governor J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina for president and Governor Fielding Wright of Mississippi for vice-president, and ordered them designated as the candidates of the Democratic party, to appear under the traditional Rooster used in Louisiana.

Two Lake Charles labor leaders, Athan Coe and Darrell H. Blair, who filed suit in the East Baton Rouge parish district court to enjoin Secretary of State Wade O. Martin, Jr., from having ballots printed unless the names of Truman and Barkley are carried as the Democratic candidates under the Rooster, withdrew the suit this afternoon in Judge Carlos Spaht's division of district court.

Robert Weinstein and Warren D. Coleman, attorneys for the two plaintiffs, submitted a letter of withdrawal from their clients, accompanied by a formal statement of the reasons for the withdrawal. The statement was admitted to the court record after it had been signed by Coe and Blair, at the insistence of Leander H. Perez, attorney for the Democratic central committee.

Printing Stars Saturday

The reason given for withdrawal of the suit was that it might result in the secretary of state being unable to print the ballots in time for the November general election, with the result that the voters of Louisiana would be denied the right to participate in the selection of presidential electors.

Printing of the ballots must be under way not later than midnight Saturday, according to a letter from Thomas J. Moran's Sons, state printers, which was read in the brief court session. With the Coe-Blair suit out of the way the secretary of state's office is proceeding with arrangements for the ballot printing, which will be a 24-hour a day operation.

Fri 10-8-48

Whether five sets of electors are to appear on the ballot, or only four, will have to be determined in a couple of days. This will be dependent on the proposed withdrawal of the "Dixiecrat" supporters who nominated Thurmond and Wright by petition under the designation of "States' Rights Party" and with the Statue of Liberty as their emblem.

Others on Ballot

Other groups of electors who will be on the ballot regardless of the course followed by the States' Righters are:

The state central committee electors, pledged to Thurmond and Wright, and designated as the "Democratic party," with the rooster as their emblem.

The Truman-Barkley electors, named by petition a few days ago and designated as the "Truman-Barkley party," with the donkey as their emblem.

The Dewey-Warren electors, named as the Republican party, with the elephant as their emblem.

The Wallace-Taylor electors, named as the Progressive party, with the pelican as hteir emblem.

Coe and Blair, in their suit seeking to compel the secretary of state and the state central committee to permit Truman to use the name of the Democratic party on the ballot, and its emblem, contended that the central committee had acted illegally in ousting the Truman-Barkley electors from the November ballot and pre-empting the Democratic party name and emblem for its new Thurmond-Wright electors. One charge in the petition was that the call for the meeting of the party committee at which this action was effected did not disclose that any such plan was to be submitted.

A temporary injunction which they obtained against the secretary of state was suspended when Judge Spaht granted the defendants suspensive appepal. Both sides to the litigation then attempted to take the matter direct to the state supreme court, but Wednesday the high court declined to exercise its supervisory powers and sent the suit back to Baton Rouge for trial.

Fri 10-8-48

Percy Files Exceptions

Today Perez, for the state central committee, and Assistant Attorney-General John Madden, for the secretary of state, filed exceptions of lack of jurisdiction and of no legal right of action. The suit was withdrawn, however, before the exceptions were argued.

Perez additionally filed an answer to the petition, in which he denied any illegality in the central committee action, and asserted that the llegation of fraud had been "wilfully and falsely made."

After Judge Spaht signed a formal order dismissing the suit at the cost of the plaintiffs, Perez remarked that the costs could well include a fee of "maybe $2000" for attorneys for the defendants, because of the temporary restraining order that was improvidently and illegally used."

'Good Order,' Says Weinstein

"We do not believe," Weinstein rejoined, "that the order was improvidently or illegally issued. We say it was a good order,"

Judge Spaht interposed to comment that the proper procedure would be for the defendant attorneys to apply for a rule if they feel entitled to a fee from the plaintiffs.

Coe and Blair in their statement as to their reasons for withdrawing the suit told the court they had expected to take the matter directly to the supreme court of Louisiana for a quick and final decision.

"We were in good faith and still are in good faith," the statement continued, "in our desire to see the names of President Truman and Senator Barkley as candidates for president and vice-president appear on the ballot under the official Democratic emblem, and in the Democratic column as the official nominees of the Democratic party. The supreme court, instead of exercising its supervisory powers, sent the matter back to the district court, where it has again come up for hearing.

Fri 10-8-48

Time Factor Cited

"Irrespective of the outcome in the district court, the matter will without question be taken again to the supreme court. All of this takes time and necessitates delay. The secretary of state and the committee took a suspensive appeal from our restraining order. No doubt even if we win in this case they will again take a suspensive appeal from any preliminary injunction which we might obtain.

Fri 10-8-48

"The time between now and the date of the election is critically short. We had hoped that a final disposition of our case could be made before the election and in time to enable the printing of the ballots and the distribution of the election paraphernalia. We have been informed by the state printer that unless he can commence operations by Saturday, it is possible that the ballots may not be printed and distributed in time for the election.

"Since the supreme court of Louisiana did not exercise its supervisory jurisdiction and dispose of the matter finally, we feel that

Party May Oust Members Of Committee Backing States' Rights Group

WASHINGTON— (AP) —The Democratic National committee called on Louisiana voters Saturday, to overturn the "flagrantly dishonest and fraudulent" barring of President Truman's name from the state's ballot.

In a hotly-worded statement threatening possible court action, William J. Primm, Jr., assistant to National Chairman J. Howard McGrath, challenged action of the State's Democratic committee in substituting the States Rights ticket for the Truman-Barkley combination.

Primm said this "high-handed and arbitrary act" had "deprived the people of Louisiana of a free ballot," adding:

"This action cannot be tolerated and will not be tolerated by the people of Louisiana."

Primm noted that States Rights party supporters had qualified under Louisiana law as a separate party, choosing 10 electors for Gov. J. Strom Thurmond, of South Carolina, and Gov. Fielding Wright, of Mississippi, their nominees.

He said the State Democratic committee by its action in approving this slate had "committed a fraud on their own people."

"The Dixiecrats have every right to form a new party," he declared, "but the tactics they are employing in taking over the Democratic party machinery in certain states and thereby depriving the people of those states of a free ballot is intolerable. Such methods are flagrantly dishonest and fraudulent."

To Use Legal Means

Primm promised that "every legal means at the command of the national committee" will be used to get Mr. Truman back on the ballot in Louisiana.

He topped this threat of court action with another call for Democratic committee officials who are supporting the States Rights ticket to resign their party posts.

Primm said this would apply to William H. Talbot, of New Orleans, Democratic national committeeman, and a member of the Louisiana state party's executive committee.

Asked what would happen if Talbot and others refused to quit, Primm pointed to a section of the national party's by-laws. This gives the national committee the right to expell members who don't support the regular Democratic nominees.

Primm said such action had been taken in 1896 by the national committee. He would not forecast a similar move by the present committee.

In New Orleans. Talbot was quick to reply.

"It's true I am a national committeeman," he said, "a member of the group that makes up the steering committee of the national party.

Sun 9-12-48

"But that doesn't mean if the national group decides to mislead the people that I am going to sit silently by and not express my views or those of my people."

Talbot reiterated that he will not resign. and insisted the U. S Supreme Court has upheld the state committee as supreme.

"If expel they will," he added, "it's their move."

News elsewhere was good—and bad—for Mr. Truman.

The New York State CIO Political Action committee added itself to the list of organizations formally supporting the Truman-Barkley ticket.

But in Illinois, Henry Wallace's Progressive party carried to the State Supreme Court its fight for a place on the ballot. The state certifying board had turned down the party's petition.

Dewey Gets Rest

Democrats have been fighting to keep the Progressives off the ballot in critical Illinois. If the Wallace group gets on most political observers think the balance would be tipped steeply for the Republicans, who already are claiming they will sweep the state.

Sun 9-12-48

Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, the Republican nominee, went back to his Pawling farm for a rest after a New York City conference with Gov. Robert F. Bradford, of Massachusetts.

Dewey, who leaves next Sunday for his first formal speech of a Western tour at Des Moines, Sept. 20, said he and Bradford talked about greater cooperation between the states and the Federal Government.

The possibility was mentioned that Gov. Earl Warren, of California, the vice-presidential nominee, might be assigned to bringing about such cooperation in the event Republicans win.

Dewey said that was possible. He added that he hadn't talked about it to Warren yet.

Mr. Truman pointed up some of his Western tour speeches in a week end rest on the presidential yacht Williamsburg. He starts out Friday for Dexter, Iowa, to open his tour with a farm talk there.

Dewey will be following the president closely into three major cities on their separate tours.

Louisiana Legislature Acts To I estore Truman to Ballot

Courier Journal - Fri 9-24-48

Authorizing Bill Is Approved By Committee

34

Baton Rouge, Sept. 23 (AP)—President Truman appeared assured today of a place on Louisiana's November ballot.

Louisville Ky

The State Legislature in special session kept rolling a proposal to restore his name. The measure would give Truman supporters until October 5 to file a petition with the secretary of state signed by 100 qualified voters nominating 10 elector candidates pledged to him.

Alternative Plan Stricken.

An alternative procedure to permit the Democratic National Committee to file a slate of elector candidates with the secretary of state was stricken in committee. That provision was a fighting matter to States'-Rights Democrats in battle with the national committee.

The amended bill received unanimous committee approval and is expected to receive House action tomorrow.

Truman and his running mate, Senator Alben Barkley of Kentucky, would be listed on the ballot under some party name yet to be selected. The original bill would have listed them as "National Democrats," but this provision was dropped in an amendment approved by the committee today.

Fri 9-24-48

States'-Rights candidates, Governor J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina and Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi, would be listed as the regular Democratic candidates. The State Central Democratic Committee, ruling party body in the state, declared them the state party's candidates September 10, dropping Truman from the ballot.

Governor Earl K. Long summoned the Legislature last night to consider restoring Truman to the ballot and also to take up 27 State Administration proposals.

Leander Perez, south Louisiana political leader who sparked the State Democratic Central Committee's September action, said the compromise bill to restore Truman to the ballot was the result of a conference with Governor Long.

"This is the best bill we could devise under the circumstances," Perez told the committee at its short hearing on the measure. "I wouldn't say it is a good bill, because of my opposition to Truman, who would return carpetbaggery to the South."

He said the nominating petition by the 100 qualified voters would specify some symbol to head the Truman ballot, but that the traditional rooster of Louisiana Democrats would be restricted to the Thurmond-Wright ticket.

Rights Spokesman Says Truman Backers Are 'Whistling in the Graveyard'

By CLAYTON KNOWLES
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 13—Judge Merritt H. Gibson, campaign director for the States Rights Democratic Party, asserted today that the leadership of the Democratic National Committee, was "whistling in the graveyard" in threatening court action to get the Truman-Barkley ticket on the ballot in Louisiana.

He said that the Louisiana State Democratic Central Committee had passed over the President and his running mate in favor of Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, and Gov. Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi" in a voluntary unanimous action." Also, he held, this body was the "duly constituted committee" of the Democratic party.

Mr. Gibson's statement was issued as William J. Primm Jr. assistant to Senator J. Howard McGrath, Democratic National Chairman, conferred with lawyers on the legal course to be pursued in Louisiana and other states where Democratic electors might be instructed to vote for the States Rights' ticket.

Mr. Primm had no comment on the Gibson statement which was in response to his own charge that the action of the Louisiana State Central Committee was part of a plan "to deprive the people of the right of a free choice in the general election."

Judge Gibson described the proposed suit by the Democratic National headquarters "as a desperate final gasp on behalf of Mr. Primm's repudiated candidates."

Technically, the names of President Truman and Senator Alben W. Barkley were not removed from the ballot in Louisiana by the action of the Central Committee since the names of none of the national candidates appears on the ballot in the state. Only the names of the ten electors appear under the name, and emblem, of any given party in the state.

State's Democrats To Back Thurmond; President's Votes Must Be Write-ins

Baton Rouge, La., Sept. 10 (AP).—President Truman's name was knocked off the Louisiana ballot today and he will be only a write-in candidate in the November 2 general elections.

The States' Rights Democratic candidates—Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina for President and Gov. Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi for Vice President—were declared the Democratic Party nominees in Louisiana.

The Louisiana Democratic State central committee took this action by unanimous vote on a resolution by Judge Leander Perez of St. Bernard and Plaquemines Parishes

Resolution Attacks FEPC

The resolution said in part that the action was taken because "it is the duty of the Democratic State central committee . . . to support candidates for President and Vice President who will preserve the traditions of the people of this State and protect their right of self-government and all other States' rights in accordance with our American way of constitutional government as opposed to candidates for said offices who are pledged to support the enactment of Federal laws to regiment our people, to destroy their right of State government and to force upon them foreign ideologies such as the Russian 'all-races law,' called here the FEPC, which contains a fundamental threat to our American way of life and which would set up a Federal police State for the certain destruction of our American freedom and liberties."

Sat 9-11-48

Use Party's Symbol

Judge Perez explained the ballot would be headed by the regular Democratic Party's rooster symbol. Immediately beneath it will appear the names of Thurmond and Wright; then will follow the electors' names; and after them the names of candidates nominated in the August 31 Louisiana Democratic primary.. The committee met to certify the primary election returns.

To "prevent a split in the vote" for the nominees of the August 31 primary in the general election. Perez said State's Rights electors who have qualified with the Secretary of State will be asked to withdraw.

Judge Perez said the names of Truman and Senator Alben Barkley of Kentucky, vice presidential candidate, would not appear on the ballot; and they can be voted for only on a write-in basis.

Perez told the committee the party is "at a crossroads."

Truman On Louisiana Ballot?

The News

The strange and unfortunate situation in Alabama, in which there is now no prospect that voters who desire to support President Truman in the November election will have an opportunity to do so, is unhappily recalled again by developments in Louisiana.

Thurs 9-23-48

Birmingham Ala

In that state a special session of the Legislature has been called by Gov. Earl Long to consider placing the president's name on the ballot.

34d

A few days ago the State Democratic Committee acted to declare Thurmond and Wright the Democratic nominees in that state. The effect of the action was to remove Mr. Truman's name from the ballot and list the elector nominees under the "States' Rights" candidates. Protest against this summary action has been followed by the special session call.

It seems likely that the Legislature will now act to restore the president's name to the ballot as the candidate of the "National Democratic Party." National Democratic Chairman McGrath has protested against listing Mr. Truman other than as the national party nominee.

Just how the Louisiana Legislature will direct the make-up of the ballot is not yet certain, but it seems probable that the voters of that state will have a chance to choose between the two Democratic candidates.

It will be remembered that at a recent special session of the Florida Legislature action to that end was taken. And in Tennessee, the prospect is that Truman elector nominees will be on the ballot and that a Thurmond slate also may be presented.

But in Alabama no provision has been made for Truman elector candidates to appear on the ballot.

State Sen. Joseph Langan, of Mobile, leader of a group desirous of supporting the national Democratic Party, has said that court action is contemplated to force the Democratic elector nominees in Alabama, who are pledged against Mr. Truman, to vote for the president. But how such action would come out and what effect it could have in this election are questions. It would be far better if Alabama Democrats had a clear choice between Truman and Thurmond.

Thurs 9-23-48

It is maintained by the States' Rights group, of course, that voters had a chance to express their will in the May primary when the anti-Truman elector nominees were chosen. But the situation then was very confused and uncertain. It seems highly unlikely that all the voters then felt that if the anti-Truman candidates were chosen, that would shut off all chance for voting for the nominees of the national Democratic Party. The action taken in Florida and now foreshadowed in Louisiana testifies to the possibilities in such situations.

Whether it is feasible at this late date to provide an opportunity for Alabama voters who wish to do so to support Mr. Truman we do not know, but it is evident that the present situation is deeply regrettable.

Mississippi Demos Ready To Give Nod To States' Rights Party

The News
Birmingham, Ala.

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 3—(AP)—The states' rights movement was expected to receive endorsement of its presidential and vice presidential choices here today from the Mississippi Democratic Convention.

The convention has been "in recess" since June 22. It was called back to approve or disapprove action of state delegates who walked out of the national convention in Philadelphia and reassembled at the States' Rights conference in Birmingham, Ala., July 17.

Gov. J. Strom Thurmond, of South Carolina, was picked at the Birmingham meeting to head the States' Rights ticket. Gov. Fielding L. Wright, of Mississippi, was selected for vice president.

Indications were that the convention would pledge its nine candidates for presidential electors to vote in the electoral college for the Thurmond-Wright ticket. 8-3-48

Such a pledge would mean that any electors for the National Democratic Party candidates of President Truman and Sen. Alben Barkley would have to get on the state's ballot through some other means than the official Mississippi Democratic Party. Jnl. 8-3-48

The Thurmond-Wright ticket could be assured of the state's nine electoral votes if the Democratic Party polls its usual strength in November.

* * *

PARTY LEADERS invited opponents to the States' Rights program to speak when the convention opens.

Chairman J. Knox Huff, of the Democratic Executive Committee, said the only Democrats who contacted him for possible speaking time were student groups at Millsaps College and Mississippi College. Jnl. 8-3-48

Some opposition to the States' Rights program developed at the University of Mississippi as a 25-student delegation left for the convention.

Three students, Tom Griffith, of Ackerman; Wayne Williams, of university, and Carl Turner, of Fulton, said the delegation did not represent "the majority opinion of politically conscious Ole Miss students" and said it should attend as individuals instead of as a group.

ALABAMA States' Rights Democrats have chartered a 52-passenger plane to fly to Houston, Tex., Aug. 11 for a rally there.

Gov. J. Strom Thurmond, of South Carolina, States' Rights Democrats' choice for president, is scheduled to make his formal acceptance of his nomination for president on the States' Rights ticket.

MEANWHILE, State Sen. Joseph N. Langan, of Mobile, had not announced final plans for a meeting of pro-Truman Democrats. Sen. Langan left yesterday for two-week National Guard encampment.

Sen. Langan, a colonel, will help direct training activities during the two-week stay at Ft. Benning, Ga.

He has called a meeting of the president's supporters in Montgomery Aug. 16 to choose a slate of electors who will vote for Truman. Last week he said he was considering shifting the convention to Birmingham and holding it at a later date.

Delta State Democrats Vote To Back Thurmond, Wright

Montgomery Advertiser

JACKSON, MISS. — (AP) — The Mississippi Democratic Convention Tuesday approved the walkout of the state's delegates at the national convention, and pledged their electoral college candidates to support the states' rights ticket.

The action was taken as the state convention, recessed on June 22, reconvened.

Two college students spoke in opposition to the states' rights movement. They were followed by other college students supporting the movement.

In other resolutions the convention:

1—Approved the action of Mississippi delegates in joining the states' rights conference in Birmingham, Ala., July 17 after the National Democratic Convention walkout.

2—Nominated South Carolina Gov. J. Strom Thurmond and Mississippi Gov. Fielding L. Wright as candidates of the Mississippi Democratic Party for president and vice-president; and pledged their electoral college candidates to them. They were chosen at the Birmingham conference at the states' rights standard bearers. Wed. 8/4/48

3—Called for a "campaign of education so as to acquaint the people in each county with all the facts pertaining to the states' rights movement." 8/4/48

4—Commissioned the nine electoral candidates as delegates to a "convention of the Democratic parties of the several states to be held at Birmingham" on Oct. 1.

5—Declared that the sense of Tuesday's convention is that all candidates for office on the state Democratic ticket should publicly declare their support for the states' rights plans. 8/4/48

6—Called on Mississippi's congressional delegation and candidates for Congress to declare how they would vote if Congress should have to decide the presidential election. (The election goes to Congress if no presidential candidate gets a majority in the electoral college.) 8-4-48

7—Continued the convention in recess until Nov. 23, unless called into session by proper authority before then. The convention had been in recess since its forst meeting on June 22.

The procedure of recessing instead of adjourning prevents any other group which might claim to be the Democratic Party of Mississippi from holding an official convention. Wed. 8-4-48

The nine candidates for electors individually announced to the convention that they would vote in the electoral college for Thurmond and Wright.

UNIVERSITY, Mss., Aug. 15. — Everette (Hairline) Harper of Moss Point was named Sunday at University of Mississippi to serve as temporary chairman of a permanent student organization of States' Rights supporters.

Harper, Rebel grid star, who receives his law degree Friday night, announced that an Executive Committee composed of one student from each Mississippi college and university would meet at States' Rights headquarters, Hotel Heidelberg, Jackson, Aug. 30, to form a permanent students' organization.

"A Serious Business"

Ken Deshotel of Washington, La., national chairman of the College and University Division, States' Rights Organization, told Sunday's meeting of delegates from six Mississippi and two Tennessee colleges that the States' Rights movement "is not a fight against negroes." Deshotel, appointed to his position by the States' Rights Democrat Steering Committee, is student body president at L. S. U.

"Unless we do something about it, this country is going socialistic," he said. Mon. 8-16-48

Calling the States' Rights movement "a serious business," he said: "It is downright disgraceful how ignorant college students are about history and government. We will brief students throughout States' Rights Organization on such matters as the Constitution and the American Revolution."

Many Colleges Take Part

Delegates chosen by individual college caucuses Sunday to serve on the Executive Committee were:

Peyton Alexander of Hattiesburg, State College; Robert A. Kates of Vivian, Louisiana Home Junior College; Mary Ruth Jones, Clarksdale, M. S. C. W.; Eric Anderson of Memphis, Millsaps; State Representative Rex McRaney, Mississippi Southern, and John C. Murray of Brandon, Ole Miss.

Others will be named later.

Harry Hutchins of Hattiesburg, Cumberland University student and member of the States' Rights Executive Committee, attended Sunday's meeting, as did Billy Notman, unofficial observer from Mount Union College, Alliance, Ohio. Other Resolutions

In other resolutions the convention:

1. Approved the action of Mississippi delegates in joining the States' Rights Conference in Birmingham July 17 after the National Democratc Convention walkout.

2. Nominated South Carolina Gov. J. Strom Thurmond and Mississippi Gov. Fielding L. Wright as candidates of the Mississippi Democratic Party for President and Vice-President; and pledged their Electoral College candidates to them. They were chosen at the Birmingham conference as the States' Rights standard bearers.

3. Called for a "campaign of education so as to acquaint the people in each county with all the facts pertaining to the States' Rights movement."

4. Commissioned the nine electoral candidates as delegates to a "convention of the Democratic Parties of the several states to be held in Birmingham on Oct. 1.

5. Declared that the sense of the convention is that all candidates for office on the state Democratic ticket should publicly declare their support for the States' Rights plans. 8-4-48

6—Called on Mississippi's congressional delegation and candidates for Congress to declare how they would vote if Congress should have to decide the presidential election. (The election goes to Congress if no presidential candidate gets a majority in the Electoral College).

7—Continued the convention in recess until Nov. 28, unless called into session by proper authority before then. The convention had been in recess since its first meeting on June 22. The procedure of recessing instead of adjourning prevents any other group which might claim to be the Democratic Party of Mississippi from holding an official convention. Wed. 8-4-48

Nine Electors In Accord

The nine candidates for electors individually announced to the convention that they would vote in the Electoral College for Thurmond and Wright.

Governor Urges States' Righters To Hear Young Minister, Clark Of Vanderbilt

Jackson, Miss., Aug. 4.—Opposition to the States' Rights movement in Mississippi spoke its piece to an attentive but unresponsive audience of delegates to the State Democratic Convention here Tuesday.

Approximatly 25 students describing themselves as representing groups at Millsaps and Vanderbilt, occupied a space under a banner reserved for "Opponents of States' Rights."

Gov. Fielding L. Wright, vice-presidential candidate on the tSates' Rights ticket, personally rose to urge the solidly States' Rights political delegation of the state to "hear what they have to say."

Wed. 8-11-48

Maddox Is Booed

The governor rose after the first of the opposition speakers had been roundly booed toward the close of his talk.

"I personally disagree with everything he has said," the governor told the delegates after George Maddox, of McComb, a Millsaps student, and spokesman for the group, had read a prepared speech.

Maddox told the delegates to the state convention that the States' Righters have "picked out one thing to claim as a violation of state sovereignty."

He said that the rapping being given Truman's civil rights recommendations in the South is a selection of only one thing to claim as an infringement on state's sovereignty.

"But you have never objected to flood control programs, subsidies for farmers and education, and TVA or any of the other things the government has brought in to your profit," Maddox charged.

Attacks Voting System

The young Millsaps student attacked the state's outmoded voting system and the precinct conventions as undemocratic.

"You are attempting to repudiate the trend of the times by fighting the civil rights program," he declared.

Maddox held that Mississippi is one-half negro populated and that negroes are being discriminated against.

Following these remarks, the crowd roundly booed Maddox, with especial emphasis coming from large crowds of students from Ole Miss, Mississippi State College and Mississippi Southern as well as Hinds Junior College and Millsaps students in the south wing of the auditorium.

This group was loud in its support of States' Rights and carried banners and placards, along with Mississippi State flags.

Segregation's End Urged

The other spokesman for the oppostion, Hardy Clark of Vanderbilt, spoke extemporaneously.

He openly advocated breaking down of the segragation rules and said that "we could find a middle line."

Clark told his audience that "I am a native Mississippian, having been born at Natchez, but I can't support this States' Rights movement."

"I have more faith in the Democratic Party of old than of any Republican Party leadership," he said.

Following the opposition talks, several speakers from colleges favoring States' Rights took the floor.

Trumanites Prepare To Wrest Control From States' Rights Rivals

Thurs. 11-4-48

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 3.—National Democratic Party leaders in Mississippi who supported President Truman's election prepared Wednesday to wrest control from the opposing States' Rights wing.

Members of the proTruman group are scheduled to meet here Thursday to determine the next step in their apparently new-won roles as patronage dispensers in Mississippi. In announcing the meeting, Phil Mullen, editor-legislator of Oxford and vice chairman of the national faction, said, "We want to see where we are."

Cites McGrath's Attitude

Mr. Mullen pointed out that Chairman Howard McGrath of the National Committtee had already recognized the national party and its leaders in the state, and that steps to put them in power awaited only word from Washington.

If Chairman McGrath carries out his pre-election promise to recognize the National Democrats, Frank Mize of Forest, brother of Federal Judge Mize, would become chairman of the party Executive Committee in the National Committee's files and Clarence Hood Jr., lumberman of Meridian and Mrs. John Clark of De Kalb, national committeewoman.

Holding those posts, insofar as the Democratic State Committee is concerned, are Knox Huff of Forest, committee chairman; J. B. Snider of Clarksdale, national committeeman, and Mrs. Hermes Gautier of Pascagoula, national committeewoman.

Thurs. 11-4-48

Mr. Mullen said, "Those senators and representatives who did not attack the President are Democrats insofar as we are concerned." He also said, "A majority of the people in Mississippi are Democrats—they were just misled and exploited by inflammation of the racial issue during the campaign."

Sees No AntiSouth Laws

Stating there has been no anti-South legislation enacted by Congress during the past 16 years, Mr. Mullen said emphatically, "There will be none passed during the next four years."

"National party leaders know our problems, and they want to help correct them—not agitate them," he said.

Mr. Mullen said his group is going to be "very friendly" to Senator Stennis, who confined his opposition to President Truman to efforts to "preserve constitutional government."

As to Senator James Eastland (D., Miss.), who was active in the States' Rights movement, Mr. Mullen said:

"So far as we (National Democrats) are concerned, Senator Eastland is still a Dixiecrat."

The party's vice chairman disclosed that his group considers Representative John Bell Williams of the Seventh Congressional District in the same category as the senior senator.

Since many of the leaders in the national party movement were identified with the administration of the late Governor Johnson, and its chairman is from Senator Eastland's County of Scott, the senior senator may fare better than anticipated by Mr. Mullen. Also to be considered is the fact that Senator Eastland was first appointed to the Senate by the late Governor Johnson, and he has consistently supported him as well as his son, Paul B. Johnson Jr., in his races for the governorship and United States Senate when the Bilbo vacancy was filled.

Pro-Truman Democrats Organize In Mississippi

Herald Tribune
New York, N.Y.

JACKSON, Miss., Oct. 4 (AP).—Fifty-five pro-Truman Democrats formed their own state party machinery Monday asserting that "the Southern way of life is safest in the hands of the regular Democratic party."

340

They attacked the states' rights movement as "unrealistic, negative and backward looking," and said "it was suggested by demagogic politicians and front men for grasping corporations."

Frank Mize, former State Motor Vehicle Commissioner, was elected chairman of the newly formed state exe utive committee and seventeen of the committee's twenty-four members were selected.

N.Y. N.Y.

The regular Mississippi Democratic committee led its followers out of the national Democratic party shortly after the Philadelphia convention. It has pledged its support to the states' rights Democratic ticket.

Governor Fielding Wright, of Mississippi, who first attacked Mr. Truman's civil rights proposals and called for a states' rights movement in his inaugural speech here last January, is that ticket's Vice-Presidential candidate. Governor J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina is the Presidential candidate.

South Threatens To Bolt "Liberalized" Democrats

The Argus

Fri 1-23-48

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 20—(Special)— Making condemnation of the liberal actions of the Democratic party toward Negroes one of the major points of his inaugural address, Governor Lewis Wright took office Wednesday. He threatened that if national leaders of the Democratic Party and President Truman continued disregard for Southern customs and traditions might lead to a "break with the party in a national election." Representative Rankin and Senator Eastland praised his statements.

340

At the open house for the Governor and Mrs. Wright following the inauguration, Negroes were barred. A group of about twelve Negro leaders from Jackson College attempted to join the line going into the executive mansion. A highway patrolman steered them to the rear of the mansion and told them to line up there, it would be very late before they would be able to see the Governor. Thy dispersed sometime later.

Fri 1-23-48

Asserting there is a campaign of abuse and misrepresentation "being leveled against our section by those who seek to tear down and disrupt our institutions and our way of life," Governor Wright charged that "the advocates of today's anti-Southern legislation are using as their tools such infamous proposals as F. E. P. C., anti-lynching legislation, anti-poll tax bills and now anti-segregation.

The proposal of the committee appointed by the President of the United States to study and make recommendations under the guise of preservation of civil liberties are dangerous and threaten the destruction of those traditions and customs so vital to our way of life, said the Governor.

Would Give Electoral Votes To States' Rights Man—Delegates Pass Their Test Of 'Allegiance'

By KENNETH TOLER

From The Commercial Appeal
Jackson, Mississippi, Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., June 22.—The Democratic state convention voted unanimously Tuesday to instruct its national convention delegates to "walk out" of the Philadelphia meeting and hold a Southern conference at Birmingham in event President Truman is nominated and indorsement is given his civil rights proposals.

The Alabama meeting would nominate a states' rights presidential candidate who would receive Mississippi's nine electoral ballots.

Opposition Folds Up

Every action of the convention was by unanimous vote as preconvention reports of opposition from certain quarters folded up. Several of those opposed to the "walk out" proposal were present but did not raise their voices or cast dissenting votes. Wed. 6-23-48

Before ending the day-long session, the delegates took steps to block a "rump" convention by those who would have the delegates and electors support any national convention nominee by recessing instead of adjourning until Aug. 3.

Another precaution against defection in the ranks of the delegates, electors and members of the new State Executive Committee was an "allegiance test" given each before the names were presented for nomination and election by the convention.

Everyone nominated agreed to abide by the provisions of the resolutions presented by Chairman T. J. Tubb of West Point, and unanimously adopted, including Governor Wright, Senators Eastland and Stennis and the seven representatives. The Commercial Appeal

Re-election Unopposed

Carrying out the unanimity which prevailed, no opposition was offered to the re-election of J. B. Snider, Clarksdale editor and former lieutenant governor, as national committeeman, and Mrs. Hermes Gautier of Pascagoula as national committeewoman. Preconvention agreements were reached whereby Tom Dunn of Meridian withdrew from the committeeman contest and was elected permanent chairman of the convention, with Mrs. Hubert Lipscomb of Jackson declining to offer her name in opposition to Mrs. Gautier, who succeeds Mrs. William Kendall of Natchez, who did not seek re-election. Memphis, Tenn.

New chairman of the State Executive Committee is Knox Huff of Forest, who succeeds Herbert Holmes of Senatobia, who relinquished his post after 16 years. Mr. Tubb was named vice chairman, and W. H. Anderson of Ripley was renamed secretary. Wed.

Keynoting the convention, Senator Eastland said Mississippi Democrats must maintain their independence "and fight all groups who attempt to destroy us." 6-23-48

"The only weapon we have is to withhold electoral votes from those who would destroy us. There is no hope in any other course. We must use our electoral votes to protect our states and our people. We must make the politicians bid for us. We cannot afford to be 'in the bag.' We must remain in a bargaining position. The

"Had we not shown our independence this year. the civil rights program would already have been enacted. Commercial Appeal

"Mark this prediction: If you do not remain independent, both the candidates of the major parties will in October be preaching racial and social equality. We must keep the reins on and we can do this by being independent." 6-23-48

Senator Eastland said if the Mississippians adopted the policy of fighting the matter out in the party, as some groups had suggested, and then lose and go along with the national ticket, "we lose our independence of action, we lose all bargaining power and our defeat is certain and our destruction inevitable." Memphis, Tenn.

"No Chips On Shoulder"

He said the national convention delegates should go to Philadelphia next month and make it plain that "we will not be kicked around, embarrassed, humiliated or improsed upon by any group of politicians, and that we will not permit our institutions, our homes and families or our government to be bartered for the votes of any group, and that we will fight all political parties, all politicians and all candidates who attempt to destroy us."

"I don't think that we should go to the national convention with a 'chip on our shoulder' or make unreasonable demands. Mississippians have defied those who would oppress them—why should we not defy them now?"

He said Northern opposition to the South is coming from "the babble of alien voices, babble from people who have formed great pressure groups bent upon the destruction of our form of government and our way of life." 6-23-48

The convention, which elected Representative T. N. Gore Jr. of Quitman County as permanent secretary, also named two state-at-large presidential electors in addition to the seven elected last week in the congressional district caucuses. It also selected state-at-large "simon pure states' rights" delegates to the national convention.

Clarence Morgan of Kosciusko, elector in 1944, who refused to support the Roosevelt-Truman ticket, and Edmund Taylor of Greenville were the state-at-large electors named. Mr. Morgan and three other 1944 electors were made "free agents" by the state convention that year, when they announced they would not support the national convention nominees because of inclusion of an anti-white supremacy plank in the platform. The Commercial Appeal

Delegates Are Named

Electors previously named and confirmed were J. Murphy Thomas Jr. of Tupelo; Representative Jack Frost of Oakland; Frank Everett of Indianola, 1944 elector; S. Hurd Horton of Grenada; Walter Dent May of Mendenhall; Jesse Byrd of Leakesville and Julius Brent of McComb. Memphis, Tenn.

State-at-Large national convention delegates named Tuesday included Governor Wright, Senator Eastland, Senator Stennis, Lieut. Gov. Sam Lumpkin, Representatives Rankin, Whitten, Whittington, Abernathy, Winstead, Colmer and Williams; W. E. Gore of Jackson; Chairman Holmes; Mr. Huff; E. B. Truly of Fayette and J. O. Emmerich of McComb. Alternates are H. M. Faser of Jackson, Andrew Sullivan of Macon, Oscar Johnston of Scott; L. W. Brown of Starkville; Boswell Stevens of Macon; James McClure of Sardis; Porter Denton of Marks; Paul Moore of Calhoun City, J. C. Rankin, Truman Confer on Rights

The Post Washington, D.C.
Wed. (34d) 6-23-48

Representative John E. Rankin (D., Miss.) said yesterday after a talk with President Truman that he hopes the Democrats can reach a "satisfactory" agreement on the touchy civil rights issue.

Rankin, foe of the President's racial rights program, said if the party convention in Philadelphia next month adopts the same racial plank contained in its 1944 platform, "I am assured that it will be adhered to."

Democratic National Chairman J. Howard McGrath told southern Governors opposing Mr. Truman's racial program earlier this year that he would be glad to support the 1944 plank as part of this year's platform.

Rankin said the 1944 plank was "far les soffensive" than one proposed by Republicans at their party conclave. He said the GOP plank "msut be a disappointment to decent Republicans throughout the Nation."

The 1944 Democratic plank pledged Democrat to a belief that "racial and religious minorities have the right to live, develop, and vote equally with all citizens and share the rights that are guaranteed by our Constitution." It called on Congress to "exert its full constitutional powers to protect those rights."

Mississippians Plan Convention Walkout

The Post
Washington, D.C.

Jackson, Miss., June 22 (AP).—Mississippi Democrats adopted resolutions today which leaders said are intended to obligate the State's delegates to walk out of the national party convention if President Truman is nominated.

The resolutions, however, made no mention of a walkout but T. J. Tubb of West Point, chairman of the resolutions committee, said in an interview: Wed.

"The intention of the resolutions committee is that the delegates are obligated to walk out if Truman is nominated or if the civil rights program is not repudiated."

The State convention will elect national convention delegates and presidential electors. A nominating committee, which will propose names for the convention's action, has been instructed to be fully satisfied that their nominees will be persons who will abide by and be governed by all resolutions adopted without opposition. 6-23-48

The resolutions committee report was adopted without opposition. The resolutions said that delegates to the national convention "are without power or authority to bind or pledge the support of the Democratic Party of Mississippi, to support and vote for the nominees" of the national convention if President Truman or any other candidate supporting his civil rights program is nominated, or if the program is not repudiated.

Confusion At Jackson

Before Democrats protesting against the Truman civil rights proposals opened their meeting in Jackson, Miss., Gessner T. McCorvey, Alabama Democratic state chairman, expressed the view that Mr. Truman will be nominated on the first ballot at Philadelphia.

(34d)

In Jackson, Gov. Laney, of Arkansas, and Gov. Wright, of Mississippi, expressed the view that the president's nomination can be prevented. The News

A Jackson resolution calls for a convention in Birmingham to take "appropriate action" in case the action of the convention is unacceptable. Possibility of nominating a candidate for president representing this group is suggested. Birmingham,

On the other hand, Mr. McCorvey sees the formation of an electoral group as the best means of opposing Mr. Truman and his civil rights proposals. Ala.

This would seem to indicate that Mr. McCorvey is dubious of getting immediate results from any "walkout" at the convention, though he ran as a "walkout" candidate for convention delegate and elector.

* * *

Mr. McCorvey is quoted as expressing the belief that, besides nominating Mr. Truman, the convention will adopt a civil rights platform plank unacceptable to the South, even though it may be expressed in generalities. However, he is opposed to holding a separate convention and nominating a Southern candidate. Tues. 5-11-48

Obviously Mr. McCorvey is looking at this phase of the matter in realistic terms. No nominee of a Southern group would have a chance of election.

Yesterday Georgia's state delegation decided not to participate in the Jackson meeting, except as observers, objecting to approval by the resolutions committee of a proposal for a separate convention in Birmingham in July if the Philadelphia convention adopts the Truman civil rights program.

These reports emphasize the confusion within the ranks of these protesting Democrats. Gov. Laney commented before the Jackson meeting began that "we are to some extent playing in a new field, and for that reason are not being specific." Tues.

As for Mr. McCorvey's idea of blocking Mr. Truman's election by throwing the matter into the House of Representatives, there are pertinent questions also. Suppose that would mean election of an unacceptable Republican? 5-11-48

Apparently that would be all right with a good many anti-Truman Democrats. But where would that leave the party, and just what would be accomplished?

Mississippi Is Dead Serious

The Atlanta Constitution

Atlanta, Ga. Tues 6-1-48

JACKSON, Miss.—Whether they get anywhere with it or not, and whether they are right or wrong, Mississippi is dead serious in its fight against Harry Truman. The second State to secede from the Union in the War Between the States has again followed South Carolina in its walkout, and has, figuratively speaking and in spirit, seceded again from the Union.

Her argument roughly follows this trend of thought. Mississippi, along with the rest of the South, admittedly has done nothing for the Negro. In economic bondage to the North, through many restrictive factors such as the high tariff and the discriminatory freight rates, the South has herself been in an economic serfdom, and has had nothing with which to do anything for themselves. Mississippi has seen the time when she was so poor she didn't have the money to buy stamps to send out income tax notices to her citizens. She has seen the time when her credit was so bad that nowhere in the United States could she sell her securities.

But, so her people say, as she threw off her economic bonds, as industry flowed in, as she freed herself from cotton serfdom and began to prosper a little, the Negro shared in her prosperity. He was getting his share of the better schools, the better medical facilities, that were beginning to be the lot of all Mississippians. These things would have continued. But, the right to vote she will not grant, nor will she ever tolerate any breakdown of her segregation laws.

Gov. Fielding Wright's statement that if the Negro expected to go to white folks' schools, sit in theaters and public buildings with whites, they should move to some other State, was unpolitic and got a very bad reaction from liberals and men of good will throughout the country. In Mississippi it was taken for what the Governor meant it to be—a bitter but forthright statement of the truth as Mississippi sees it. So far as the Mississippian is concerned there will be no radical change in the relationship of the white man and the Negro in Mississippi, and if such a change is forced, the Negro will have to go—as he is already going in great numbers. It will cause a tremendous dislocation in the economy of Mississippi, but a temporary one, they feel.

They are serious about this. They feel it so strongly that they are ready, they say, to bolt the Democratic Party and vote for some favorite son—Sen. George, Sen. They do not hope to elect a candidate, but they do hope that they can so weaken both Truman, if he be the party nominee, and the Republican candidate, that the election will be thrown into the House of Representatives, as it would be if no party had a majority.

What will happen between now and convention time nobody knows. But Mississippi is as mad as she sounds in the press. And she is a little hurt with Georgia because the angry cries are not arising from there in a swelling chorus also. But she thinks Georgia is "safe."

Mississippi Truman Slate

The News

Sat 7-24-48

Bham Ala

The leader of a group of Mississippi citizens desirous of supporting the national Democratic Party nominees in the coming presidential election announces that a pro-Truman slate of elector candidates has been accepted for listing on the ballot in that state.

Filing of the names with the secretary of state was made under a 1948 act of the Legislature. The measure provides that when a state party pledges its slate to candidates other than those of a national party, a national party elector ticket may be placed on the ballot by affidavits setting forth that its members, if elected, will support the national presidential nominees.

This development in Mississippi and the likely authorization by the Louisiana Legislature of the filing of a Truman slate in that state indicates that Alabama citizens alone may be without opportunity to vote for Mr. Truman if they wish to do so. That would be an extremely regrettable distinction.

Pastor Blames Seating of Bolters From Mississippi On Dead 'Mikes'

34d

The Courier-Journal

Sun. 7-18-48

Louisville Ky.

Asked Roll Call, Wasn't Heard

If microphones on the floor of the Democratic National Convention had not gone dead suddenly last Tuesday, Mississippi's delegation might not have bolted.

The Rev. Charles G. Hamilton, Aberdeen, Miss., said failure of the intercommunications system probably caused him to lose his fight to seat a delegation opposed to breaking away from the Democratic Party.

Wright's Group Seated.

Mr. Hamilton, who is chairman of Mississippi Young Democrats, was in Louisville yesterday on his way home from Philadelphia. He is a native of Covington and attended Berea College.

The "dead-mike" incident came after delegates, led by Governor Fielding Wright, had been seated over the opposition of Mr. Hamilton's delegation in a fight before the convention credentials committee.

Some members of the credentials committee carried the fight before the entire convention, presenting a minority report favoring Mr. Hamilton's delegation. However, after a voice vote on the question, the chairman ruled in favor of Wright's delegates. Those in favor of Mr. Hamilton's group then demanded a roll call. But the chairman didn't hear them because their microphones went dead at just that moment.

Then Another Mix-Up.

Mr. Hamilton said yesterday he believed his group would have been seated if the roll call had been taken.

Later the convention chairman said written votes on the issue would be counted, but there was a mix-up on this, too, according to Mr. Hamilton. He said he was told some states turned in votes favoring his faction but that these were not recorded.

Mr. Hamilton said he did not push his fight further. His delegation did not support the civil-rights plank fully and it suited him for the Wright group instead of his own to be put "on the spot" on that issue, he said.

He blamed the Wright forces for the severe civil-rights plank. Mississippi, he explained, earlier had been promised a milder plank if it would pledge itself to stay in the party.

Felt Hands Were Tied.

Mr. Hamilton said the bolters did not represent the wishes of the people of Mississippi.

"The whole idea is to elect a Republican President," he charged, adding that Governor Wright is a lawyer for power and other interests.

"Those in the walkout," he said, "consisted of a few Democrats who honestly believe the world is coming to an end, plus Tennessee Coal & Iron, Electric Bond & Share, Mississippi Power & Light, Alabama Power, Gulf Oil, Humble Oil, Tidelands Oil, Southern Railway, and one of the Connecticut life-insurance companies."

Mississippi's determination beforehand to bolt caused resentment among other Southern delegations, the visitor reported. Others felt this tied their hands and prevented them from making much progress, he explained.

Says People Unconsulted.

Mr. Hamilton recalled that the Wright delegation contained some of the Democrats who bolted the party in 1944, 1940, 1936, 1928, and as far back as 1916.

He said he told the credentials committee the delegation was not selected by Democrats but at conventions of the "new party" which he said "took over Democratic conventions and which includes Republicans, carpetbaggers, scalawags, and bolters."

"The people of Mississippi have never been consulted by them," he charged, "and the people have not been allowed to vote on whether they want to leave the party."

Mr. Hamilton said his group would submit a list of electors to Mississippians in November elections. Besides the two sets of Democratic electors there will be two sets of Republicans and possibly a Wallace list.

He came away from Philadelphia feeling that Democratic chances of victory are good. The main factor, as he sees it, is Russia. Truman will gain votes by anything that country does now, he said. High prices also are winning votes for Democrats, especially among the women, he reported.

Mr. Hamilton said he is supporting Truman, although he admits Mississippi generally "does not like him."

"Senator Barkley will be a big help to the ticket, though," he said.

JACKSON, Miss., April 16—(AP)—Women Democrats of Mississippi plan to send 50 delegates to the National States' Rights Conference in Jackson May 10.

Some 700 women decided on this action yesterday at the state's first statewide political meeting solely for women.

Gov. Fielding L. Wright, leader in the Mississippi states' rights campaign, and the only man allowed at yesterday's meeting, told the women that the "Southern movement" was directed toward "constitutional government and sovereignty of our states." He said sovereignty "is much in danger at this point." The News

The governor said that "I have learned long ago that the most effective force behind any movement is to have ladies working actively for that movement." Fri. 4-16-48

Earlier, a male reporter, sent to cover the meeting, was barred and subsequently was replaced by a girl reporter. Birmingham, Ala.

Mrs. Mary Louise Kendall, of Natchez, who recently resigned as national Democratic committeewoman, told the meeting that "this is a crucial time in our lives." Mrs. Tom Corckett, of Jackson, was elected permanent chairman of the women's group, and Mrs. Halla May Pattison, of Jackson, as secretary.

FEPC UNAMERICAN REP. RANKIN SAYS

West Point, Miss., July 7. — Terming fair employment legislation recently enacted by the New York Legislature and signed into law by Gov. Thomas E. Dewey "a diatribe of un-Americanism," Rep. John Rankin last night took to task proponents of "so-called civil rights" measures which would do "incalculably more harm than good." Thurs. 7-8-48

Speaking to a West Point civic club, the Democratic congressman said the national legislation of the pattern in effect in New York would "destroy small business." The people "have not been given the facts," the fiery legislator declared, "or they would not have nominated Dewey" at the Republican national convention to campaign for the presidency.

Those promoting the civil rights movement "are doing more to harm the Negro in the South" through their efforts along this line "than could possibly be done in any other manner," Mr. Rankin charged. "There are only four ways of dealing with the Negroes," he declared: "Deportation—out of the question at the present time; amalgamation — even more out of the question; extermination — impossible; and segregation — the only fair solution."

Rep. Rankin, who has served 28 years as congressman from the First District, predicted that he would be re-elected this year for his fifteenth term "on the first ballot." He is opposed by Claude Clayton of Tupelo and Judge Raymond Jarvis of Booneville.

Leader Says Resolutions To Permit Walk-Out At Convention

JACKSON, MISS.—(AP)—Mississippi Democrats adopted resolutions in convention Tuesday which leaders said were intended to obligate its delegates to walk-out of the national party convention at Philadelphia July 12 if President Truman is nominated.

The resolutions, however, made no mention of a walk-out but T. J. Tubb, of West Point, chairman of the resolutions committee said in an interview:

"The intention of the resolutions committee is that the delegates are obligated to walk out if Truman is nominated or if the civil rights program is not repudiated."

The State convention will elect delegates to the National Convention and presidential electors. A convention nominating committee will propose names for the convention's action, and the committee was instructed to be fully satisfied that their nominees will be persons who will abide by and be governed by all resolutions adopted by the convention.

The resolutions committee report was adopted without opposition. 6-23-48

The resolutions specified that delegates to the National Convention "are without power or authority to bind or pledge the support of the Democratic Party of Mississippi, to support and vote for the nominees" of the National Convention if President Truman or any other candidate supporting his civil rights program is nominated, or if the program is not repudiated.

Gov. Fielding Wright, who keynoted the anti-civil rights drive in his inaugural address last January, was sitting in the audience when the convention adopted the report of the resolutions committee.

The governor jokingly asked a reporter, "where is all that opposition that is supposed to develop?" Montgomery Advertiser

He referred to pre-convention reports that there may be opposition to the walkout angle of the states' rights plan.

The governor said he had not studied the resolutions carefully but that it was his impression that even though delegates might not be specifically instructed to withdraw, the sentiment of the convention "was in that direction." 6/23/48

Sen. James O. Eastland (D), Mississippi, told the delegates in the keynote speech that "the only weapon that we have is to withhold electoral votes from those who would destroy us."

"If we adopt the policy of fighting the (states' rights) matter out in the party," Eastland said, "and, if we lose, then go along, we lose our independence of action, we lose all bargaining power and our defeat is certain and our destruction inevitable.

"We have only one sure weapon now and that is our electoral vote. The only other thing we can do is to marshal northern public sentiment. We cannot, however, marshal northern sentiment unless we first convince them that we intend to defend ourselves."

MISSISSIPPI MEANS IT

JACKSON, MISS. (NR correspondent)

Mississippi Democrats have bound their Philadelphia delegation hand and foot to vote against President Truman and to walk out of the convention if he is nominated or if a civil-rights plank, unsuitable to the white supremacists, is adopted. To make absolutely certain, the Mississippi Democratic convention ordered the nine presidential electors to cast their electoral votes only for candidates who have "positively taken a stand for states' rights and have condemned the civil-rights program." May - 5 - 48

Each delegate, alternate and elector was taken behind closed doors and confronted with a list of resolutions to which he had to adhere before being approved. If the delegation walks out in Philadelphia, it will head for the proposed rump convention of Southern Democrats at Birmingham on July 17.

The Mississippians mean business. Their next move is planned for Philadelphia just before the national convention opens, when revolt leaders are going to try to get 15 Dixie states into a caucus. Their ultimate aim is a united plan of action and their own candidate. So far, they have got few solid promises from their neighbors.

States' Rights Group Plans Bolt of Party

The Call Kansas City Mo.

By JOHN R. HENRY

International News Service Staff Correspondent

JACKSON, Miss. — (INS) — The threat by the states' rights democrats to bolt the national democratic party if President Truman is nominated remains to be tested in the wake of new blasts against his civil rights program.

The fnal test for the so-called "Dixie Revolt" probably will come at a states' rights "rump" meeting set for Birmingham, Ala., on July 17 in the event that Mr. Truman is nominated a week earlier at Philadelphia.

A second democratic presidential candidate presumably will be nominated then if the national conventon fails to heed the demands of the states' rights group representing nine southern states.

This action was taken in a four-hour, cut-and-tried session at Jackson, Miss., yesterday.

Leaders of the so-called "revolt" adopted a three-point program designed to block Mr. Truman's nomination and force the democratic party to repudiate a civil rights plank in its 1948 platform.

The procedure includes:

1. That the national convention be informed that delegates from states in the circle of states' rights democrats cannot support Mr. Truman or any candidate who advocates the civil rights proposals.
2. That the Birmingham meeting be held if the national convention nominates Mr. Truman, regardless, and approves the civil rights program. Democratic executive committees of each state would select delegates to the Birmingham meeting. They would not exceed the number of electors in the state they represent.
3. That Arkansas Gov. Ben Laney, who was named permanent chairman of the states' rights conference, be empowered to activate a campaign committee. It would raise funds. Members of this group would include two spokesmen for each state represented at the Jackson meeting. They also would be appointed by state democratic executive committees or by

2,500 persons—less than expected—from nine southern states comprised the crowd which heard South Carolina Gov. J. Strom Thurmond accuse Presiden Truman of stabbing the south i the back.

After Thurmond sounded th keynote of the meeting, othe speakers denounced fair employment practice bills, anti-poll tax and anti-lynch legislation and other proposals of the civil rights program. 5-21-48

Observers pointed out, meanwhile, that the meeting was recessed indefinitely without a real test of the states' rights weapons.

A "gag" rule was adopted by voice vote at the outset of the session to prevent the states' rights group from backing any presidential candidate at this time, or from discussing the possibilities of nominating one of their own in the event Mr. Truman is chosen by the national party.

The resolution, providing for the Birmingham "rump" session, also beclouded the question of a second democratic candidate. It stated only that the Birmingham meeting would be held to take "all necessary and appropriate action." The Call

Laney admitted that effectiveness of plans made at the Jackson meeting depends entirely on the individual democratic organizations of the southern states.

Five chairmen of state democratic executive committees attended the session. One of them, James S. Peters, of Georgia, said that he could not now commit members of Georgia's democratic party to walk out of the national convention even if Mr. Truman is nominated. Kansas City, Mo.

Peters explained that he is unable to speak for Georgia's voters further than to say they oppose the civil rights program and Mr. Truman's nomination.

Other state chairmen at the meeting included Gessner T. McCorvey, of Alabama: Herbert Holmes, of Mississippi; W. P. Baskin, of South Carolina and Arthur L. Adams, of Arkansas.

JACKSON, MISS., Feb. 9.—(AP)—The late Sen. Theo G. Bilbo, battler for "white supremacy" in the South, was eulogized in the Mississippi legislature at special services Monday.

The memorial service came after two weeks of agitation in the legislature for punitive action against Democratic Party leaders who sponsor "anti-Southern" legislation.

It preceded, by three days a statewide meeting of Democrats called by Gov. Fielding L. Wright to plan action to force the national party to stop sponsorship of anti-segregation, anti-lynch, anti-poll tax and FEPC legislation.

Forrest Jackson, formerly attorney for Bilbo and unsuccessful candidate for "the man's" Senate seat, made the principal address. The Advertiser

He termed Bilbo "This matchless Mississippian, this determined protector of Southern traditions, noble statesman, faithful friend; Bilbo, the dreamer; Bilbo, the builder; the 'stormy petrel' of Mississippi politics since 1907."

"Like all men, he was not altogether perfect," Jackson said.

"We, as friends, however, may rejoice in his real achievements for the common good. Montgomery, Ala.

"We, as Mississippians, may cherish the memory of one who, as a public servant, regardless of personal consequences, was determined to the last in the fight for what he believed to be right for the most people and for the preservation of our principles, traditions and customs, our way of life, for posterity.

"Take him all in all, we shall not soon look upon his like again," Jackson said.

"He was thinking ahead of his time," Jackson said. "He was building for the future. He was truly skilled in public affairs and the art of government. His passion was the preservation of what we know as the American way of life." Tues.

Lieut. Gov. Sam Lumkin, who presided over the joinst session of the House and Senate, told the lawmakers: 2-10-48

"As time runs on the historians survey the pictures of these troubled days, there will arise in it no figure more courageous than Sen. Theodore G. Bilbo."

Others who participated in the services included A. B. Friend, Bilbo's senatorial campaign manager; Sen. Houston Evans and Rep. Evelyn Gandy, Bilbo's legislative researchists.

At the conclusion of the services Rep. Walter Ray, of Madison County, introduced a bill to establish a memorial to Bilbo in the State Capitol which now has memorials to anyone.

President Plans Lunch With Negro; Carolina Democrats Talk Bolt

2-10-48

JACKSON, Miss., Feb. 9.—The Mississippi House of Representatives Monday urged Gov. Fielding L. Wright to call an early Southwide meeting of Democrats to force the national party to respect and perpetuate the rights of the South.

It passed a concurrent resolution which said Wright should take the initiative because "a majority of the Southern governors adopted dilatory tactics when the situation calls for speedy action.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9.—(AP)—Senator Eastland (D), Mississippi, proposed Monday, that the Solid South block the presidential nomination of any Democrat who opposes Southern views on "Jim Crow" legislation.

In a Senate attack on President Truman's civil rights proposals, Eastland said:

"No candidate would be nominated if it were known that he would not receive the South's electoral votes.

"The machines of the North which control the party are not crazy. They will nominate no candidate whose defeat is certain."

Eastland, a "White Supremacy" advocate, said that the President's proposals on racial segregation and anti-discrimination would "degrade, mongrelize and destroy the South." The Advertiser

"And here we have a Democratic president, sponsoring it," he added. Montgomery, Ala.

The White House earlier Monday said that Mr. Truman would not "retreat" from any of his civil rights program. He has recommended: Setting up a Fair Employment Practices Commission, making lynching a federal offense, banning state poll taxes, ending all segregation on trains and buses. Tues. 2-10-48

Ross Scorns Story

Presidential Secretary Charles G. Ross dismissed as "a strange story without foundation" a published report that Mr. Truman might soft pedal his travel segregation proposal.

By a coincidence, Monday, the White House released a February travel schedule which includes a luncheon date with the Negro governor of the Virgin Islands, William H. Hastie.

Meanwhile, Senator J. Harold McGrath, the Democratic national chairman, said the subject of his speech in Atlanta, March 5, "has not been decided on." 2-10-48

He added that "it will certainly be in keeping with the friendly spirit of cooperation in which the investigation was extended."

There had been a report that he was inclined to make the civil rights issue the core of his talk before Georgia Democrats. But in Atlanta, Gov. M. E. Thompson said he couldn't believe that McGrath would violate "the proprieties of the occasion." Another Democratic leader said he was assured that McGrath would not talk on civil rights. 34d

Blood Still Boils

Southern blood continued to boil, in Capitol Hill speeches.

Said Representative Pace (D), Georgia: "It is apparent now that our (Democratic party) leaders are more concerned about their own political preferment than with the welfare and loyalty of the people of the South.

"The hour is drawing near" for Southern Democrats, opposed to President Truman's civil rights program, to decide upon a "future course of action," Pace said.

"We must first try to prevent being driven out of our own party," he declared on the House floor, "or keep it from adopting new policies and principles which disregard our own interests and welfare. Montgomery, Ala.

"Our success in these efforts will determine in good measure our future course of action."

As Pace spoke, another Southern congressman, Representative Harris (D), Arkansas, made public a letter to the President in which Harris asked that Mr. Truman "refrain" from further insistence on enactment of the civil rights program. Tues. 2-10-48

'Jeffersonian' Democrats

The News

A mass meeting in Mississippi of self-styled "true white Jeffersonian Democrats" threatens a break with the national party over President Truman's civil rights proposals. Perhaps it would be well to recall some of the writings of the Sage of Monticello. Let us quote a few statements by Thomas Jefferson: 34d 2-23-48

Democrats are "those who identify themselves with the people, have confidence in them, cherish and consider them as the most honest and safe, although not the most wise, depository of the public interest."

"No government can continue good but under the control of the people."

"I know of no safe depository of the ultimate powers of society but the people themselves; and if we think them not enlightened enough to exercise their control with a wholesome discretion, the remedy is not to take it from them, but to inform their discretion by education."

"It is an axiom in my mind that our liberty can never be safe but in the hands of the people themselves."

"Equal rights for all, special privileges for none." Birmingham, Ala.

"Equal and exact justice to all men, . . . freedom of religion, freedom of the press, freedom of the person under the protection of the habeas corpus; and trial by juries impartially selected—these principles form the bright constellation which has gone before us." Mon. 2-23-48

"The care of human life and happiness . . . is the first and only legitimate object of good government."

And we might also quote this summation of Jefferson's beliefs as voiced by one of his biographers, George F. Hoar: "He had a steadfast and abiding faith in justice, righteousness and liberty as the prevailing and abiding forces in the conduct of states, and that justice and righteousness were sure to prevail where any people bear rule in perfect liberty."

If the "Jeffersonian Democrats" of Mississippi can square their attitudes and purposes with the quotations above, they are entitled to their name.

The Truman proposals, to which the Mississippians object, are unwise, but other Democrats can be sincere and within their rights in upholding them.

'STATES RIGHTS' REBELS WARRING

Mississippi Notes Split in Ranks of Revolt

The Times-Picayune

(The Associated Press)

Jackson, Miss., March 19.—Mississippi's Jeffersonian state's rights Democrats, revolting against the national party leadership, may soon find a split within their own ranks.

From at least three sectors of the state there are coming cries of "dictatorship" when state party leaders sponsor legislation to allow the Jeffersonian Democrats to break with the national party.

The bills to which objections are being raised would:

1. Allow members of the party to vote in a presidential election without regard to party lines and without fear of reprisal from the party.

(Present law requires party members to support party nominees and to remain in harmony with declared party principles.)

2. Allow delegates to the electoral college to cast their votes without regard to party lines. Sat. 3-20-48

Judge Herbert Holmes, chairman of the state Democratic executive committee, and other state party leaders claim the revolt of the states' rights Democrats is a "grass roots" revolt.

But George McLean, editor of the Tupelo (Miss.) Journal, and Rep. Phillip E. Mullen, Oxford, Miss., newspaperman, contend it is not.

McLean says it was "inspired at a high state level by party politicians."

Through the intensive "grass roots" educational campaign the party leaders are conducting, it may ultimately become a "grass roots" movement in Mississippi, he says. But right now, he contends, it is confined to the "top levels." Sat. 3-20-48

And therein lies the fight.

Holmes contends that without enactment of the two bills into law, Jeffersonian Democrats, under present law, will have no choice but to vote for the nominee of the national party.

Under the proposed bills, he says, they could vote for electors pledged by the party convention to vote only for some strong champion of states' rights, some man who would fight the civil rights program advocated by President Truman.

But McLean, Mullen and Harold W. Gautier, Jackson county Democratic executive committee chairman, sees danger of state party leader "dictatorship" if the bills are enacted and nothing more is done.

Under the bill allowing presidential electors to vote without regard to party lines, Gautier points out, regardless of how the people vote, party leaders could instruct the electors to vote as the leaders want and absolutely disregard the will of the people or even to thwart it.

Holmes denies party leaders have any desire or intention to dictate how the presidential electors shall vote.

House Speaker Walter Sillers, beater of one of the larger bass drums of revolt, also denies this hotly.

He points out that from the beginning of the move, when Gov. Fielding L. Wright called for action against party leaders in his inaugural address January 20, this has been a "people's movement."

But Mullens points out that if the state Democratic convention nominates only one slate of electors, pledged to vote for a Jeffersonian Democrat, if there are any Democrats in the state who want to support the national party nominee they will be robbed of that right.

To prevent that he has introduced a bill in the House to allow any group of persons to qualify as a slate of presidential electors. Each would swear to the secretary of state that it would support a certain nominee or that it was unpledged.

His bill provides that above the names of each slate of electors would be printed the name of the candidate to which it is pledged or a notation that it is unpledged.

This, he says, would allow every Democrat to vote either for a Jeffersonian Democrat or for the party nominee.

Walter Sillers says the bill is unnecessary.

Under present law, he says, the state convention could nominate two slates of electors—one pledged to the party nominee and one unpledged.

But Gautier wants action while the Legislature is in session to insure Democrats will have an opportunity to vote for either of two such slates. He is afraid, he says, that if the matter is left to the convention it may choose to name but one slate.

Neither McLean nor Mullen is prone to take any specific action if the Bullen bill is not passed but with Gautier it is a different matter.

How far he could go in splitting the ranks cannot be estimated but he threatens dire action unless he has a guarantee there will be two slates of electors.

McLean and Mullen say that in their sections there is little "grass roots" interest in the Jeffersonian Democrat movement.

All of this comes on the eve of the day when mass meetings will be held in each of the state's 82 counties to hear a statewide radio broadcast by Gov. Wright.

In that Wright is expected to explain to these "grass roots" meetings what the civil rights program would mean to the South and why he feels it necessary that the campaign of the Jeffersonian Democrats be made a success.

The meetings are scheduled for 3 p. m., tomorrow with Wright's address to originate in Natchez, to begin a half-hour later.

W. W. Wright, chairman of the "grass roots" campaign committee, estimates some half-million Mississippians will hear the address.

Mississippi Is Dead Serious

Atlanta, Ga. Tues. 6-1-48

JACKSON, Miss.—Whether they get anywhere with it or not, and whether they are right or wrong, Mississippi is dead serious in its fight against Harry Truman. The second State to secede from the Union in the War Between the States has again followed South Carolina in its walkout, and has, figuratively speaking and in spirit, seceded again from the Union.

Her argument roughly follows this trend of thought. Mississippi, along with the rest of the South, admittedly has done nothing for the Negro. In economic bondage to the North, through many restrictive factors such as the high tariff and the discriminatory freight rates, the South has herself been in an economic serfdom, and has had nothing with which to do anything for themselves. Mississippi has seen the time when she was so poor she didn't have the money to buy stamps to send out income tax notices to her citizens. She has seen the time when her credit was so bad that nowhere in the United States could she sell her securities.

But, so her people say, as she threw off her economic bonds, as industry flowed in, as she freed herself from cotton serfdom and began to prosper a little, the Negro shared in her prosperity. He was getting his share of the better schools, the better medical facilities, that were beginning to be the lot of all Mississippians. These things would have continued. But, the right to vote she will not grant, nor will she ever tolerate any breakdown of her segregation laws.

Gov. Fielding Wright's statement that if the Negro expected to go to white folks' schools, sit in theaters and public buildings with whites, they should move to some other State, was unpolitic and got a very bad reaction from liberals and men of good will throughout the country. In Mississippi it was taken for what the Governor meant it to be—a bitter but forthright statement of the truth as Mississippi sees it. So far as the Mississippian is concerned there will be no radical change in the relationship of the white man and the Negro in Mississippi, and if such a change is forced, the Negro will have to go—as he is already going in great numbers. It will cause a tremendous dislocation in the economy of Mississippi, but a temporary one, they feel.

They are serious about this. They feel it so strongly that they are ready, they say, to bolt the Democratic Party and vote for some favorite son—Sen. George, Sen. Byrd, or even Wright himself—putting them up as the candidate of a new party calling itself a Democratic Party. They do not hope to elect a candidate, but they do hope that they can so weaken both Truman, if he be the party nominee, and the Republican candidate, that the election will be thrown into the House of Representatives, as it would be if no party had a majority.

What will happen between now and convention time nobody knows. But Mississippi is as mad as she sounds in the press. And she is a little hurt with Georgia because the angry cries are not arising from there in a swelling chorus also. But she thinks Georgia is "safe."

Editor Constitution: In Harold Martin's article of June 1, he makes the statement that "Mississippi, along with the rest of the South, has admittedly done nothing for the Negro." Who admits this besides Harold? I think a great deal has been done for the Negro by Southern people, although I often wonder why. Evidently Harold has been bitten by the same bug which attacks many Southern writers who have had a taste of the big time, namely, always belittle and scold the South to be popular with New York publishers.

Some Mississippi Delegates Aren't Following Bolt Line

The News

Birmingham, Ala.

JACKSON, Miss., June 4—(AP)—Some delegates to Mississippi's Democratic Convention here June 22 are cool to withdrawal from the national session, in event of disagreement.

342

Judge Herbert Holmes, chairman of the State Democratic Executive Committee, yesterday predicted a harmonious state convention. He declared the convention will "live up to" resolutions adopted at the Dixie Conference of States' Rights Democrats. Fri. 6-4-48

One of these proposals was that Southern delegates withdraw from the Philadelphia convention if it supports President Truman or his civil rights program.

But Phillip E. Mullen of Oxford, a convention delegate and state representative, said, "All of us are for states' rights and are opposed to Truman. We are for Gov. Fielding L. Wright. But we don't like the mechanics of the way the movement is being run."

He added, "I am not going to vote for any bolt from the party."

Delegate Ned Lee of Eupora said delegates from his county are unpledged. Fri. 6-4-48

"We are going to the convention uninstructed to vote as a unit," he said. "I don't think it is democratic for a group of politicians to get in a hotel and figure out a plan, and then expect the state to go down the line in backing it up."

SOUTHERNERS GATHER OVER STATES' RIGHTS

JACKSON, Miss., May 9 (AP)—Leaders of the states' rights Democratic movement sought today in pre-convention sessions for a common ground of action acceptable to all states to be represented at the meeting opening here tomorrow.

342

The convention is expected to launch a full-fledged revolt against President Truman and his civil rights program and other measures considered invasions of states' rights. The Times

The tentative resolutions committee, headed by Horace B. Wilkinson of Birmingham, an Alabama Presidential elector, met for three hours discussing procedure that would work for Democratic National Convention delegates and Presidential electors.

When the committee recessed its executive session in mid-afternoon to meet again in the evening, Mr. Wilkinson said, "it's possible that there may not be common ground for all the states."

"Difficulties arise," he said, "because of the variations of law and party regulations governing primaries, delegates and electors in the several states. What might work in Alabama might not work in Texas." New York, N.Y.

The committee meeting took place after the Governor of Mississippi, Fielding L. Wright, told the state's Negroes in a radio address that Mississippi would never tolerate abolition of racial segregation no matter what laws the National Congress passed. Mon.

The broadcast by Mr. Wright had been advertised as one to the Negro population. 5-10-48

"If any of you," said Mr. Wright, "have become so deluded as to want to enter our white schools, patronize our hotels and cafes, enjoy social equality with the whites, then kindness and true sympathy requires me to advise you to make your home in some state other than Mississippi."

Race Problem In Mississippi

THIS COLUMN, reporting on certain race incidents in Mississippi, recently stated that the president's civil rights message unfortunately had resulted in a reign of terror for Negroes in Mississippi.

Since then Congrs. Williams and Abernethy, of Mississippi, have been good enough to bring certain facts to my attention which show that some of the previous reports were incomplete or erroneous. For instance, while two Negroes were badly beaten up by the police of Jackson, Miss., yet both Negroes had criminal records, and in one case the Negro bystanders came to the aid of the white policeman. Obviously the policeman was conducting no reign of terror.

In the case of two incidents in Kosciusko, that city has an excellent reputation for law, order and fairness to the colored race.

Furthermore, the Supreme Court of Mississippi recently leaned over backward to give a fair trial to a Negro, Sandy Magee, accused of killing a white man. Three times the court reversed a lower court's decision which gave Magee the death sentence.

In view of the above, it is only fair to cort my previous mistaken impression about treatment of Negroes in Mississippi, which I am delighted herewith to do.

Atlanta, Ga.

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo.—(NNPA) The Missouri Democratic Committee, meeting here last Tuesday to select a time and place for the Democratic State Convention, sidestepped the issue of President Truman's civil rights program. Fri

Although not openly discussed, the issue was believed to be uppermost in the minds of committee members. However, much the Democrats may want to avoid any discussion of the subject, it looms as an important issue in the fight for state offices as well as for the electoral vote in the Presidential election next fall.

Two of the three candidates for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination avoided direct answers to the question of whether the state party's platform would contain civil rights plan, modeled after President Truman's 10-point legislative program on the subject.

Ray McKittrick, of St. Louis, said, "I don't think it is a state issue."

NO COMMENT Fri

Forrest Smith, state auditor, said he did not care to comment.

Daily World

Political observers, however, were agreed that the issue would not be easy to sidestep as both major parties and the Wallace third party movement will make determined bids for the large colored vote in St. Louis and Kansas City as well as for that of other minority groups. Supporters of Henry Wallace in Missouri have made civil rights one of their major points in their appeal for the support of colored voters. Several colored Democratic leaders are said to be expecting a civil rights plank in the state platform.

Says Women Were Snubbed At GOP Meet

(340) St. Louis

Argus, St. Louis

As a result of the Stephens-[illegible]ingly fight for National Committeeship of the state republican organization Dr. G. J. Dixon finds a big fight on his hand to retain his leadership in the Nineteenth Ward. Fri 5-7-48

Since the State Convention last Saturday, May 1, at the Jefferson Hotel, the colored women leaders have not hid their feeling about what some call a "snub" by the Stephen-Dix forces who ruled the Convention. Not a Negro woman was given political recognition so far as being elected delegate to the Republican National Convention which meets in Philadelphia in June, this was regarded as an insult to their intelligence. Hitherto they had received such an honor.

In the meanwhile, the breech between Dr. Dixon and Wm. A. Morant widens as the women tell about the recognition they received when Morant was in the leadership in the district. Negro women, it is being pointed out have been elected delegates to Natonal Republican Conventions consistently for the past twelve years. In 1936, Mrs. Blanche Edwards; 1940 Mrs. Maude Oswald; 1944 Mrs. Carrie Baker and Mrs. Naomi Oldham were elected. But at the 1948 State Convention they refused to send one Negro woman to the National Convention.

U. S. Falls, who is seeking to wrest the Republican Committeeship from Dr. Dixon in the Nineteenth Ward is believed to have the backing of the Hobb's faction for commitee. A protest meeting will be held in the Nineteenth Ward Wednesday evening, May 12, 8:30 o'clock at Carver House, Cardinal and Bell avenues. Speakers will include Rev. J. W. Smith, pastor, Sunny Mount Baptist Church, who is a strong civic leader, Mrs. Ed Collins, Rev. B. B. Story and other candidates.

Arkansas Negroes Set To Take Over Seats If Democrats Take Walk

LITTLE ROCK.—(AP)—Negroes will be ready to take over if Arkansas' White Democrats walk out of the National Convention at Philadelphia in July.

Such a walk-out has been suggested as a possible step in the South's opposition to President Truman's civil liberties proposals,

Dr. J. M. Robinson, president of the Arkansas Negro Democratic Association, said Saturday, that group had named seven delegates to attend the National Democratic Convention. Sun. 4-4-48

He said the executive committee authorized election of delegates to "take the seat vacated by any insurgent who leaves the Convention Hall and deserts the party." The Advertiser

The opposition to Truman's proposals was not mentioned, but Robinsoon said he recommended the action in view of "controversial circumstances now existing." Montgomery, Ala.

Strategy To Be Mapped For Truman's Defeat At Parley In Jackson

Wright Suggested

Florida Democrats Set To Vote First Ballot For Mississippi Chief

JACKSON, MISS., March 20.—(U.P.)—The leaders of Mississippi's and Arkansas' Democratic Parties Saturday night picked May 10 as the date for a southwide Democratic convention, where strategy will be laid to block President Truman's nomination as the party's presidential candidate.

The convention will be held in Jackson. 34d

Thus, the rebellion against President Truman's 10-point civil rights program was trying to become a cohesive movement that could dictate to the national party. Southern Democratic leaders have charged Mr. Truman with "stabbing" the South in the back and he and other northern Democratic leaders with selling out the South for opportunism. 3-21-48

Florida Democrats qualify a solid state of delegates to the Democratic National Convention Saturday and they pledged themselves to cast their 20 votes on the first ballot for Fielding L. Wright, scholarly-looking governor of Mississippi and No. 1 leader of the revolt.

Free to Vote Any Way

After the first ballot, the Florida delegates will be free to cast their votes for any candidate "acceptable to the South." As far as the rebels are concerned, this means a candidate who will announce his open opposition to the civil rights program, including an anti-lynch act, abolition of poll taxes and abolition of Jim Crow in interstate travel.

The action of the Florida Democrats, meeting at Tallahassee, was regarded here as no more than gesture to Wright for fighting the civil rights program. Wright has disclamed any desire to be president. The Advertiser

Wright was the first Southern Democratic leader to put his anger against Mr. Truman into words publicly. He denounced the civil rights program when he was inaugurated last Jan. 20. Subsequently, Mississippi became the center of the revolt.

At Historic Natchez, Wright, in a radio address broadcast by 30 radio stations, told Mississippians holding mass meetings in all of the state's 82 counties that Mr. Truman's program would ruin the Southern way of life.

Appeals for Support

He also appealed for financial support in the fight against the civil rights program. Metal buttons bearing the picture of Thomas Jefferson and the inscription "State's Rights Jeffersonian Democrats" were sold at the mass meetings Saturday.

The call for the southwide convention here was issued jointly by Judge Herbert Holmes, chairman of the Mississippi Democratic Executive Committee, and Arthur L. Adams, his counterpart in Arkansas. Montgomery, Ala.

The southwide revolt plan advocated by Mississippi was presented to a Conference of Southern Governors in Washington March 13 by Wright. It was endorsed by the governors of Alabama, Georgia, Texas, Arkansas and South Carolina. 3-21-48

Since then, Gov. Millard Caldwell of Florida has called for Mr. Truman's defeat, as has Ed Crump, the Tennessee political leader. Mississippi's Demorcats already have pledged themselves to support presidential and vice-presidential candidates who openly oppose the civil rights program. This action has been endorsed by the Mississippi legisaltiore.

Pledged to Walk Out

First, an attempt will be made to block the nomination of Mr. Truman or any other candidate who will not stand up for "states' rights." Mississippi delegates are pledged to walk out of the Democratic national convention in Philadelphia if Mr. Truman or some other candidate with his views is nominated. z

The next step would be to hold a separate convention in the South and name a favorite son for president. Then, each Southern state would send its electors to the electoral college pledged to cast their votes for the Southern son. The Advertiser

If all Southern states joined in the revolt, the Southern son would be sure of 127 electoral votes. Thus, Mr. Truman or other candidates the Southerners do not like would miss 127 electoral votes. Sun. 3-21-48

The ultimate hope is that neither of the candidates nominated by the National Democratic and Republican Parties would get a majority of the votes in the electoral college. In such a case, the election would be thrown into the House of Representatives, where each state, regardless of size and number of electoral votes, would have only one vote.

Sen. James O. Eastland (D), Mississippi, and presumably the other leaders of the revolt believe that if this happens, the two national parties will compromise on a Southerner. In this case, the Southern states would not have to worry about their "rights." Montgomery, Ala.

McCray Encouraged By Hearing

34d

PHILADELPHIA, Pa. — (SNS) — John H. McCray, president of the Progressive Democratic Party of South Carolina, said Wednesday that he was encouraged over the hearing given by the Democratic Credentials Committee to her unsuccessful attempt to defeat the seating of the delegation headed by Senator Olin D. Johnston, of South Carolina.

McCray uttered surprise at the conduct of Governor Strom Thurmon, who refused to submit to questioning by Judge George Vaughn of St. Louis, Mo., only Negro on the Credentials Committee headed by Congresswoman Mary Norton, of New Jersey. At the Tuesday hearing on the delegate-seating protest, Governor Thurmon threatened to walk if his delegation was refused seating. When Judge Vaughn asked him whether he would answer a few questions, the governor said: "I will answer you nothing."

McCray said that he was calling a caucus Thursday morning of observers from his state, Georgia and Alabama to discuss a new political approach in the Deep South. TEXAS ROWS OVER LANEY

Tue. 7-13-48

PHILADELPHIA, July 12.—(AP)—Governor Ben Laney of Arkansas, States' Rights presidential aspirant, told the Texas delegates he will not vote for President Truman if Mr. Truman is nominated.

34d

Laney also said he does not propose to vote for Governor Thomas E. Dewey.

Speaking before the Texas delegation, Laney conceded that whatever convention vote he gets will be "the protest vote against the President's Civil Rights program and the Chief Executive himself."

The Texans had asked Laney to say whether he would bolt the Democratic Party if he failed to win its presidential nomination. The Texas delegation's decision whether to support him hinged on his answer.

BOLT BARRED——

The 50-vote Texas delegation is bound by its state convention not to bolt the party. Texas National Committeeman-Elect Wright Morrow of Houston had said he would back Laney "if he will go with the nominees of the party."

Southern states supporting Laney's candidacy are bitterly opposed to President Truman's Civil Rights program which calls for anti-poll tax, anti-lynching, anti-segregation and fair employment practices legislation.

Some have theatened to bolt the convention if any of the Civil Rights program is indorsed in the party's platform or if, as seems certain, President Truman is nominated.

FIGHT IN OPEN——

Long-smoldering dissension within the Texas delegation broke into the open in debate over the two resolutions.

Carrying the ball for a right wing group which has been flirting with the Southern revolt movement was former State Senator Joe Hill of Austin. He was author of the resolution to back Laney.

Robert W. Calvert of Hillsboro, state Democratic executive committee chairman, offered the resolution specifying that the Texans would back no bolters.

"I will not cast my vote for any man who is committed to a program which will take our electoral votes and cast them for anyone else than the nominee of this convention," Calvert said.

Hill called Calvert's resolution a "document of defeat." He denied that his own was anything but a resolution to carry out the directions of the May 25 state convention.

Synthetic Issue of 'Civil Rights' Forced by North

PHILADELPHIA, July 14.—The synthetic issue of "civil rights," which finally set the two breeds of convention Democrats to shrieking and clawing like so many crazy Frenchmen, had been deferred with horrible apprehension all week.

During that time a sub-committee of a sub-committee groped among the subleties of pig-latin, double-talk and Carolina geechee for a paragraph couched in harmless but resounding euphemisms.

It was a hopeless quest. The Northern clique, a mongrel kidney produced by wanton cross-breeding of Socialists, Communists and ivy-league misanthropes, with occasional infusions of despondent Teutonic and Scandinavian blood from the grain and lumber states out West, had no particular use for the Negro, himself, as the ghettoes of the North do prove. But they have always had a surly hatred of the Southern Democrat's confident air of racial superiority and the late Franklin D. was the one power that had kept them from inciting race riots during his reign.

Actually, under Roosevelt, the Negro had enjoyed no more familiarity with the white folks than he had under Coolidge, who just ignored the question, except that in Roosevelt's presidency, in underworld resorts of New York, rich white trash, excluded from decent company within their own tribe, went gallivanting under a pretext of democracy. The Negro's gain was the dubious honor and cultural novelty of brief association by night with Caucasion outcasts in a type of hoe-down with political undertones.

* * *

THERE is an old formula, familiar to the kind of editorial writers who wear green visors and write ringing denunciations, which the gentler statesmen would have employed in these difficult phases of their party's declaration of principles. It holds for "loud adjectives and weak verbs" and it has often been used by both parties in the past.

The Examiner

Indeed, the late Woodrow Wilson ennobled it in much of his correspondence with the German government in 1915-16. And inasmuch as this plan often has appeased malcontents and preserved peace and unity, the yearning of the boys in the smoke-filled room this week was by no means despicable.

Los Angeles, Calif.

In the end, the obstreperous continentals from the New York political slums refused to be denied their issue and their fight. The results were sure to be sad and bloody in time.

Thurs. 7-15-48

The debates of the sub-committees on these poignant problems will be heard often again as original material throughout the nation during the campaign. The Truman party, no longer the Democratic Party of 16 years ago and certainly not the party that sent Harry Truman to Washington as Senator, will try to take virtue to itself and to depict Tom Dewey as a Simon Legree.

* * *

BUT if there is one thing that Mr. Dewey does better than he does all others in his go-downs with the Democrats it is to see their promises and go them several better. If they promise to abolish segregation in the Army and to exonerate Negro patriots who disobey, Mr. Dewey will have no reason to stop there.

Thurs.

After all, his own party came to be known as Uncle Tom's Cabin in many Northern cities a quarter of a century ago because the Republicans first hit upon the idea of rewarding colored loafers from the ward and precinct organizations with sinecures in the city halls and state capitols, even as the white ones were rewarded. He owes nothing to the Southern tier of states and expects nothing from them in November. Therefore, while promising amnesty for any colored Joe who rebels at segregation, he can also promise 20 years in Leavenworth to Nordic bigots who rebel at the absence of it.

Try to out-promise him on Palestine and he will raise you a million immigrants with the flip of a chip, and the best the land-locked isolationist can hope for once they really get down to betting other people's lives, labor and taxes, will be a cave in the lee of some mountain and a diet of roots, berries and frog-legs.

* * *

AS THE orators burbled and grunted, rising betimes to enormous growls of idealistic passion, a Mr. Austin F. Cross, of the Ottawa Citizen, eased into that portion of the press coop which had been set aside as a sort of lazarette for the isolation of Republicans.

This sorry breed was way off their manners, by the way, and had left the littered hall with unseemly smirks and grins during the renewal of the mournful rites for Roosevelt.

On being reminded softly that after all this was a deeply spiritual, if pagan, exercise, jangling the tenderest nerves of all true Democrats, a nameless mocker from a tabloid had said that the Nazis one day, in a rebirth of religious freedom, would hold similar orgies for their late diety.

* * *

MR. CROSS allowed, with no petulance but as an observation, that the Americans seemed to him to be self-centered in these matters of ours. We hold our awful routs with a satisfaction that seems not entirely justified to students of the best in government. We carry on these disorders with an assumption that the rest of the world should draw nigh, pay heed and respect our forms.

The Examiner

To be sure, they do draw nigh and they pay more and more heed but the vulgarity appalls even the most generous strangers. On the other hand, we have neither knowledge of nor interest in the customs of our neighbors, the Canadians, in particular. Mr. Cross said they would be holding on August 5 to 7 the first convention of their Liberal Party since 1919, an event of considerable moment, he made bold to believe and invited some of us to visit them at their own quaint folkways.

Los Angeles, Calif.

On the subject of the absorption of Canada by the United States, often raised in such little meetings, he agreed that the Americans would manage to enact a reasonably fine pogrom, avec slaughter, should we ever try to rule from Washington, under our Constitution and with our Supreme Court, the province of Quebec with its winsome admixture of the authorities of church and state.

McGrath—Wrath

National Democratic Chairman's Many Slaps At South Thought Deliberate By Some Voters

The News
Sun 8-15-48
Birmingham

BY FRED TAYLOR

Some have grown to feel that National Party Chairman J. Howard McGrath, the Rhode Island senator, delights in affronting Southern Democrats. They seem to think he derives some peculiar satisfaction from taking a slap at rebellious Southern party members on the touchy "civil rights" issue, particularly since the walkout of Alabama and Mississippi delegates at Philadelphia.

TAYLOR

Whatever his intentions, Chairman McGrath, who seemingly becomes very earnest and sympthetic about Southern problems when you sit down and discuss them with him, has repeatedly aroused the ire of Alabamians and other Southerners.

James Free, writing from Washington, said that "Chairman McGrath evidently still does not realize just how much resentment Mr. Truman's 'civil rights' program, and particularly his non-segregation policies, have aroused south of the Mason and Dixon line."

34d

Free cited McGrath's recent announcement that all race segregation had been banned in national Democratic headquarters—a step the GOP has not seen fit to take—as one of the chairman's especially galling acts to Southerners.

DOES HE CARE?—McGrath either doesn't realize this, or he just don't care.

Sun 8-15-48

It is difficult to believe that the man attempting to direct a successful presidential campaign would deliberately toss electoral votes out of the window. But apparently that is exactly what Sen. McGrath has been doing and still persists in doing.

Observers feel that his latest slap at the South may easily cost Truman North Carolina, Tennessee, Kentucky and Missouri, if they already had not been lost to the national party ticket.

* * *

OIL — McGrath frantically poured oil on troubled Southern waters for several weeks before the Philadelphia convention. He apparently thought — and hoped —that the Southern rebels (as they always had done) would fall in line when the national convention got under way.

Attractive Dorothy Vredenburgh already was secretary of the Democratic National Committee. Bill Primm, formerly of Montgomery and son-in-law of the late Sen. Josiah Bailey, of North Carolina, was brought in as assistant to McGrath. And other Southerners were recruited on the committee.

But reports now are that McGrath is about to lose these aids as a result of his directive banning all race segregation in committee headquarters.

Sun 8-15-48

* * *

STAPP'S POLITE REJOINDER—Another example of how McGrath rubs Southerners the wrong way occurred when the chairman wrote Albert Stapp, Birmingham business man and walkout delegate-at-large to the Philadelphia convention a friendly and cordial letter.

For one thing, McGrath thanked Stapp for his services on the convention's committee on rules and order of business. This, of course, was politely appropriate. He also wrote that he hoped to have Stapp's advice and counsel on matters pertaining to the presidential campaign.

This last touch did not set very well with Stapp, particularly in view of his walkout in protest against the national convention's adoption of the strong "civil rights" plank in the platform. And, further, because Stapp already was actively campaigning for the Thurmond-Wright States' Rights Democratic ticket.

What irritated Stapp most was the fact that he received the letter on the same day McGrath announced his segregation-banning order.

Stapp sat down and wrote a reply to the national chairman in polite but unmistakably clear language.

* * *

"MISAPPREHENSION"—I quote Stapp's letter in part:

"In view of the misapprehension under which you are apparently laboring, I feel it my duty to inform you that, in view of the action taken at Philadelphia, I cannot support the nominee of the national party. I might add this decision was reached with somewhat of a feeling of sadness and disillusionment because my paternal grandfather, my father and I have supported the principles of the Democratic Party, as outlined by Thomas Jefferson, for almost 130 years.

Sun 8-15-48

"If all of the principles embodied in the platform at Philadelphia were enacted into law constitutionel government, as we know it, would be destroyed. There would be, in my judgment, little remaining of the traditional liberty, justice, freedom and democracy we have known for 170 years.

"We in the South must be allowed to solve the problem of our bi-racial civilization, evolution and patience, not by police state methods. To this end my heart, my hands and my resources are irrevocably pledged."

HOW TRUMAN FELT—Truman T. Felt, graying and able longtime Washington staffer for The St. Louis Star-Times, is secretary of the National Press Club.

I saw him at the Philadelphia convention and shot a question at him he has been asked many times by ribbing newspapermen since the 1944 Democratic National Convention at Chicago. His only answer now is to shrug his shoulders and grin.

It was then, of course, that Harry S. Truman was picked as vice presidential running mate of Franklin D. Roosevelt. And it was then (after Truman's nomination) that Truman Felt wrote a piece for The Star-Times, which was printed on Page One under the following head:

"How Truman Felt"

Democrats Set Up All-Negro Division

Chicago Member of House in Charge of Biltmore Office

Representative William L. Dawson, a Democratic leader in Chicago, took over control Monday of an all-Negro division in the headquarters of the Democratic National Committee in the Biltmore Hotel.

34d

Mr. Dawson, who is assistant to Senator J. Howard McGrath, of Rhode Island, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, told the press he planned to open two division offices, one probably in Chicago, to solicit contributions among the Negroes of the Mid-West, and one on the Pacific Coast. The Pacific Coast office will be in one of three California cities—Oakland, Los Angeles or San Francisco.

New York N.Y.

Asked if the continuance of the Negro group was not in conflict with the announcement last week by Mr. McGrath that the Negro division would be abolished and its Negro workers apportioned to other units, Mr. Dawson replied:

"Four years ago I was assistant to the national committeeman and we had this same sort of an organization. It was not publicly known as the Negro division then, but it was carried on the budget of the national committee as the Negro division. This year it will not be known as the Negro division, even in the budget, for we will raise our own funds and expect to have a residue to give to the national committee for its other work."

The Republican National Committee maintains a Negro division.

Wed 8-11-48

Robert L. Bruce, national chairman of the Truman for President National Crusade, a rival Negro group which aims to raise $1,000,000 for the Truman campaign chest, announced that the five Tammany district leaders of Harlem had contributed $100 each. Mr. Bruce said the Tammany district leaders of Harlem had promised to raise "thousands of dollars" before Labor Day for his organization, which has headquarters in the Hotel Theresa, Seventh Avenue and 125th Street.

Confirming the change, National Chairman J. Howard McGrath told a reporter that the committee "merely is being consistent" by putting into effect a policy urged by President Truman for Government jobs and the armed forces.

Mr. McGrath said the committee was abolishing its Negro division as such and distributing its Negro workers among other units.

Unites With South In War On Truman

Atlanta Constitution

By DAVE MOORE

United Press Staff Correspondent.

New Jersey Democratic Chieftain Frank Hague has joined the snowballing drive to dump President Truman and draft Gen. Eisenhower for the Democratic Presidential nomination. Mon. 7-5-48

The retired Mayor of Jersey City, who has long been a Vice Chairman and one of the most powerful figures of the Democratic National Committee, yesterday carried with him into the Eisenhower camp most if not all of New Jersey's 36 votes at the Democratic Convention eight days from now. Atlanta Ga.

It was the first time a key Northern industrial state had been brought openly into alliance with the Southern States whose Democratic leaders are committed to a bitter-end fight to substitute Eisenhower for Mr. Truman.

NEW YORK, July 4—(INS) Gen. Eisenhower today refused to deny or confirm a published report that he would accept an "honest draft" for the Democratic presidential nomination. He authorized Robert Harron, press chief at Columbia University, to say "there will be no comment until further notice."

Although there still was no word from Eisenhower to indicate he had modified his earlier statement that he "could not accept nomination to high political office," big-name Democrats in other key states were rallying to the "draft Ike" drive. 7-5-48

James Roosevelt, eldest son of the late President, announced in Los Angeles, that he expects "quite a crowd" at the caucus of anti-Truman Democrats which he and 17 other party big-wigs have called in Philadelphia on the eve of the Convention next Saturday. He said important party officials in six States have telegraphed acceptances of invitations to the caucus, and that "numerous" others have accepted by telephone. Previously, James S. Peters, National Committeeman from Georgia, had accepted.

Sen. John J. Sparkman, Democrat, Alabama, appealed to Eisenhower in a radio broadcast to accept the call of "duty" and consent to run. He said there are 10 "overriding" reasons why Eisenhower should now change his mind about staying out of politics.

Radio Commentator Drew Pearson predicted that President Truman would withdraw his name from the nomination contest before the Convention gets underway unless Eisenhower issues a new statement this week flatly repudiating the "draft" movement.

Hague, who previously had publicly announced that New Jersey Democrats would support President Truman for the nomination, announced his switch at a meeting of New Jersey Democratic leaders in Asbury Park, N. J.

"The public is looking for world leadership," he said, "and the public will not get world leadership in either President Truman or the Republican candidate.

"Gen. Eisenhower led us to victory in the greatest war in history and we want him back to complete the job." Atlanta Ga.

Heague headed off any protests that Eisenhower might not accept the nomination. "I say he (Eisenhower) should be drafted," the Democratic leader said.

The New Jersey leaders roared their approval, and whooped through by acclamation a resolution naming Eisenhower the choice of the State's delegation to the Democratic Convention.

Virginia and Georgia State Conventions had taken similar pro-Eisenhower stands last week, assuring the General of 54 first-ballot votes. 7/5/48

A letter, written yesterday by James A. Perry, Georgia Public Service Commission member, called on President Truman to "step aside" in favor of the former general.

If Hague carries all of New Jersey with him, as he usually does, the total number of votes will rise to 90.

In addition to these, there are 58½ other Convention votes which probably will go to Eisenhower on the first ballot. They belong to Southern delegates whose State Conventions instructed them only to "fight Truman to the bitter end."

Mr. Truman will go into the Convention with 286 pledged first ballot votes. It takes 618 to nominate a candidate.

James Farley, former Democratic National Chairman, said in New York that he was "astounded" by Hague's switch. Farley said he couldn't believe there still were people who "would question the integrity of Gen. Eisenhower's written word" that he is not available for nomination. He said he "of course" would support Mr. Truman.

Political observers, however, regarded Hague's switch as a highly significant straw in the political winds. They recalled that the shrewd New Jersey chieftain was the first big Democrat to publicly switch from Henry Wallace to Mr. Truman in the Democratic vice-presidential balloting at Chicago in 1944, which indirectly led to Mr. Truman's present position in the White House.

Roosevelt said Democrats in all parts of the country were lining up for the pre-convention caucus, and that more acceptances were expected within the next few days.

Acceptances were received from Carl V. Rice, Democratic National Committeeman from Kansas; Sen. Claude Pepper, of Florida; Monroe Sweetland, Oregon National Democratic Chairman; Thomas R. Mahoney, Chairman of the Oregon delegation, and Lester W. Loble, Montana State Democratic Chairman.

William Ritchie, Nebraska Democratic Chairman, said last night more than 200 delegates to the Party's National Convention would attend the preconvention caucus.

"I, myself, intend to vote for Mr. Eisenhower and expect to see him nominated and elected," Ritchie said. 7/5/48

"I believe that the majority of the Nebraska delegation will vote with me.

"I am certain Gen. Eisenhower will accept the nomination if it is tendered him," he added.

Jacob M. Arvey, Chicago Democratic leader, said Illinois may place Gen. Eisenhower's name in nomination for President at the Party's National Convention.

Arvey has led an Illinois-for-Ike boom. He predicted the nomination would stampede the Philadelphia convention, and was cheered by New Jersey's boarding of the Eisenhower bandwagon.

Many of the anti-Trumanites are talking of Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas as the second choice if Eisenhower rules himself out. There were reports that he would issue another and final "no" statement this week.

As the boom gathered more momentum over the weekend, Perry issued his appeal in a letter to President Truman.

"It is no time for name calling," Perry wrote. "I know you are a sincere, loyal American. That you have been advised by friends to your own political hurt, few will question.

"This is no criticism for anyone in official authority in our country, but the fact remains, with limited exceptions, we have twittled our thumbs for two years while Russia has prepared to destroy the civilization of the peoples of the world. Indeed, we played the role of Chamberlain in his efforts to appease the whims of a criminal maniac.

"Won't you please, sir, cast aside the little bickerings of personal ambition, and avail yourself of the opportunity of a lifetime to leave your name high on the scroll of immortals who gave even more than you are now called upon to give? Your opportunity for service lies in your joining in the cries, from coast to coast,, that General Eisenhower answer the call to lead America in an effort that will save the civilization of all the world."

Perry concluded by asking the President to come forward with the declaration: "General Eisenhower, come and take charge."

The Los Angeles Times published a story last night saying that Gen. Eisenhower has informed a committee he would accept the Democratic nomination for President only if President Truman placed his name before the National Convention.

The article, from New York and written by Times Political Editor Kyle Palmer, said this information was received from a Democratic leader who said he was present when the Committee approached Eisenhower. The name of the Democrat was not given.

The times quoted its informant as saying that unless such a condition for his nomination is met Eisenhower will issue a statement definitely taking himself out of the running before the Convention begins balloting.

Meanwhile aboard the Truman train en route to Bolivar, Mo., a top aide said that President Truman is "absolutely convinced" that opposition to his nomination will collapse at the Democratic National Convention.

Oregon has pledged its first-ballot vote to Mr. Truman. The willingness of its two top delegates to sit in on the anti-Truman meeting appeared to indicate that a draft-Eisenhower move might pick up steam in the convention if it got off to a good start.

Three of the Southern signers of the call-to-arms telegram said that others from their state delegations undoubtedly will attend.

Sen. Lister Hill of Alabama said it is "safe to say that all his state's 26-man delegation plus the 26 alternates, will show up. Gov. William Tuck of Virginia said he will probably be accompanied by several other Virginia delegates, including Sens. Harry F. Byrd and A. Millis Robertson, and State Party Chairman Alvin Massenburg. 7/5/48

Gov. Ben T. Laney of Arkansas said "several members" of his state's 22 delegates would accompany him to the meeting.

Sy Bevan, Michigan National Committeeman and one of the signers of the telegram, said a majority of Michigan delegates want Eisenhower. But State Chairman John R. Franco said a majority want Mr. Truman.

I. G. Beall, Arizona State Committee Treasurer, who also signed the appeal, said he could not tell how many, if any, Arizona delegates would attend the caucus. Chairman Steve Langmade of the state delegation said he believes they will stick with Mr. Truman.

President Truman, traveling to Bolivar, Mo., to dedicate a monument, was described by a close associate as regarding Eisenhower as a Republican at heart, and believes the Geenral would reject a Democratic nomination.

Harlem Leaders Rebel Against O'Dwyer's 'One-Man' Rule; Ruth Whaley Gets Raymond Jones' Post

New York Age

7-17-48

New York, N.Y.

BY CONRAD CLARK

According to Harlem political leaders, Mayor O'Dwyer now faces a "Harlem rebellion" from his Democratic leaders "uptown" for his one-man domineering fight to run Tammany and all New York Democrats.

With the bribery that was tossed against Harlem Tammany leaders now called by the District Attorney's office "unfair and unfounded" oldtimers see again the greatest challenge that confronts Harlem in every major political campaign, the lack of Negro leadership.

Three Negro leaders who are now on the "out" with O'Dwyer and may have "patronage" turned away from their clubs to handpicked favorites of the Mayor, whom he can dictate to, regardless of their being elected by the people or not are J. Raymond Jones, leader of the 13th A. D.; and Joseph Ford, 12th A. D. South. Also a leader in the 12th North is Cecil Carter, who is now linked with the other three leaders to form a "bloc of operations" it is reported.

Jones, who with his other "leaders" voted for Valente for Surrogate was until recently Deputy Commissioner of Housing by appointment of "The Man" O'Dwyer, a post now being filled by Atty. Ruth Whitehead Whaley, who was defeated in 1945 for City Councilman.

New York Age

The proposed plan of "The Man" is the same old ruse that "downtown" who dictates the policy of giving patronage is being used here in Harlem "to whip insurgents in line."

The "change" now that is taking place, by taking patronage from the elected leaders and turning it into channels to handpicked leaders is an old story that is too familiar to politicians in Harlem.

An example cited in the "acquiring" of the present leadership by Pinckney over the late Fred Dickens.

New York, N.Y.

Although the elected leader of his district by the county committemen, Dickens was "blacklisted" by Tammany, Pinckney was "handpicked" and the patronage was given to him, years before he was elected.

When patronage fails a club, the "faithful captains" gradually leave, and drift over to the "new" club where the patronage is, and so was the start of Pinckney.

FIRST MAJOR HEADACHE

Tammany first received its first major headache more than 12 years ago, when Attorney Henry Shields with his Beaver Club, then on 138th street and Eighth avenue, began to organize the then 21st Assembly District.

Sat. 7-17-48

The District was at that time being run by the Chicopee Club, with a white leader, but eventually Shields and his club took over the district at a meeting on Amsterdam avenue, that was supervised by the Police Department, due to its fiery nature.

A similar "insurgent" group, called the Ramapo Club was also in the fight for the district's leadership, and with the joining of the two clubs, the district was finally won for the Negroes, who were in the majority of the mixed Democratic voters of the 21st.

Herbert Bruce, a well-known restaurant and club owner, was the new leader, and since his "leaving politics" Negro politicians have never been able to find another leader.

Tammany Hall has never been able to dictate to Bruce, and he was also a very unpopular leader "downtown", although he was held very much in respect for his "refusing to compromise or sellout".

New York Age

A Harlem leader, C. M. Shavers, of 14th A. D., who was the only one to vote the way that "The Man" wanted in the Surrogate's fight, succeeded the late Jim Pemberton, the first Negro leader in that district.

Democratic (New York)

Handpicked by Tammany years ago, when Stand and Neal, since replaced by orders of the present Mayor, were "top bosses". Pemberton was given to his members, and it is from his district that Hugo Rogers, president of the Borough of Manhattan received the designation that placed him in the

New York, N.Y.

Rogers is now said to be the chosen favorite of the anti-Sampson and O'Dwyer forces to replace Sampson as head of Tammany Hall.

7-17-48

Congressmen Powell, who is from Ford's club is not wanted by O'Dwyer, and Assemblyman William T. Andrews, who was first sent to Albany by the Beavers-Ramapo Club is not wanted by that group anymore which is headed by Attorney Carson De Witt Baker.

RECOGNITION AT LAST

New York Age

AT LONG LAST the citizens of Brooklyn are going to get recognition with the opportunity this year of positively electing their first Negro to the Assembly. We say positively because in the past few years there have been attempts to elect Negroes on the Republican and on the American Labor party tickets but each time they were snowed under in an avalanche of Democratic votes.

Sat. 7-31-48

That cannot happen this year because both the Republicans and the Democrats have designated Negro candidates and they will be running in opposition to each other. The American Labor party has also endorsed the candidacy of Bertram L. Baker.

Elective representation has been something that Brooklynites have sought for years. There have been determined campaigns in the past but the odds against Negro candidates have been too great for any of them to be elected. Either they ran against a whole field as in the case of the campaigns for City Council or else they ran as candidates on the minority ticket against white candidates on the dominant party in the district.

New York, N.Y.

Now with Negro candidates opposing each other, there is no way for a Negro not to be elected to the Assembly this year from Brooklyn. That, incidentally, will also add to the prestige of Negroes in the state legislature and mean that after the votes have been counted on election day, New York City will be able to boast of five Assemblymen—four from Manhattan and one from Brooklyn. With the continued influx of Negroes into the Bronx it will be only a matter of another campaign or so when the Bronx will also elect a Negro Assemblyman.

It begins to look that at long last the Negro is getting somewhere politically in New York City. We should not rest on those few laurels, however, because there are still many offices to which Negroes should be elected but are not. One of these is as State Senator. Another is as General Sessions judge. We have made the beginning. Now let's keep up the fight until we achieve the political recognition that is due us by virtue of our strength numerically as citizens in this great city.

Tammany's Compromise on Surrogate Post Improves Bid for New Judge

The Afro-American
Baltimore, Md
Sat
7-31-48

NEW YORK (NNPA)—Harlem's Democratic political leaders, apparently have won at least a moral victory in their fight with Mayor William O'Dwyer over the selection of a candidate for Surrogate of New York county.

Whether or not they gained anything in the way of political patronage, however, remains yet to be seen.

Tammany Hall last Friday announced that General Sessions Judge John A. Mullen had been named as a compromise candidate for the Surrogate post and that a peace agreement on patronage had been reached with Mayor O'Dwyer.

Thus ended a bitter fight, which saw Harlem leaders lined up with Tammany Hall against the mayor who denounced Tammany and set up a rival organization of his own to distribute New York's lucrative political plums.

Records Cleared

The naming of a compromise candidate for Surrogate was seen as a moral victory for the Harlem leaders because they emerged with clean records from what they termed "a fight to smear their political integrity."

Also, the election of the compromise candidate will still leave open to them one of the objectives for which they fought—a judgeship vacancy in General Session Court which they hope will go to a colored man.

The fight with the mayor stemmed from Tammany's support of General Sessions Judge Francis L. Valente for the Surrogate position. He supported City Council President Vincent R. Impelliteri.

History of Fight

When Harlem leaders lined up with Tammany, the mayor called immediately for and received the resignation of J. Raymond Jones, colored deputy commissioner of housing.

Sat

He demanded also that Hugo Rogers, president, Borough of Manhattan, fire Joseph E. Ford, chief examiner in Rogers' office. Ford is the right hand man of Congressman Adam C. Powell Jr.

Rogers, who was deeply indebted to Ford politically, "rode the fence" on the mayor's order and sidestepped the dismissal of Ford.

Leaders Back Tammany

In a test of strength of the two factions, Tammany ousted Frank J. Sampson, the mayor's leader at Tammany Hall and elected Rogers, whose nomination was seconded by [illegible] other colored Harlem [illegible] to elect him.

The mayor countered this move with an announcement that he would not recognize Rogers as Tammany leader and that any patronage dispensed by his office would clear through Sampson and not Rogers.

With the Republicans entering a strong candidate in the race for the Surrogate post and the Democratic forces split, it became necessary to compromise. The mayor yielded in his support of Impelletri. Valente stepped down as a candidate and Mullen was named.

Bribe Charge Unfounded

When the Harlem leaders lined up against the mayor it was charged that they had accepted $1,000 each for their votes for Judge Valente.

The charge tipped off an official grand jury investigation but District Attorney Frank Hogan found the charge unfounded and the colored leaders' names were cleared in the incident.

Smear Campaign Told

They pointed out however, that this was not the first time efforts had been made to blacken their political character.

When Ferninand Q. Morton, colored, resigned as chairman of the Municipal Civil Service Commission three Harlem leaders were called on the carpet by Commissioner of Investigations John P Murtagh and questioned on reports that they had offered the job to the highest bidder.

Investigations showed these reports also to be unfounded.

Lost U.S. Judgeship

When a vacancy occurred in the Southern District Court of New York and the name of City Magistrate Vernon C. Riddick, colored, was being prominently mentioned fo rthepost, some leading dailies attacked the proposal to fill the post on the basis of race, ignoring Mr. Riddick's qualifications.

The appointment went to a white man from the Bronx.

Spied on at Convention

The latest attempt which observers say was designed to smear the Harlem leaders occurred during the recent Democratic Convention at Philadelphia.

Evidence has been produced to show that when Ford, Jones and Cecil Carter arrived at the convention, through a pre-arrangement with officials of the Normandie Hotel, Carter was placed in a room in which a microphone had been installed.

Afro-American

The speaker was on the other end of the wire in the room of a detective from Hogan's office.

To Push Probe

Hogan has denied that anyone from his office had any connection with the installing of the microphone in Carter's room, but hotel officials openly admitted that the microphone had been installed, and Carter and Jones say they will press for a full investigation of the incident.

Baltimore Md.

Although the Harlem leaders said they knew of no reason why they might be spied on during the convention, it was assumed that Hogan was seeking further information on the alleged selling of their votes to Valente, although he had already cleared them on this issue.

Sat.

Deal Based on Patronage

Sources close to the uptown leaders declare that there never was any "deal" to sell their votes to Valente.

7-31-48

A deal had been made, however, in which they had offered their votes to Valente on the condition that, if elected as Surrogate, a colored man would be named to succeed him as General Sessions Judge.

Since Mullen is a General Sessions judge, if he is elected as Surrogate this vacancy will still be open, but it could not be learned last Friday whether or not a colored man was promised this job as a part of the compromise agreement.

North Carolina Democrats Refuse to Instruct Delegates

The Courier-Journal
Louisville, Ky.

Raliegh, N. C., May 20 (AP)—North Carolina Democrats today told their national-convention delegates to vote as they please on a presidential nominee. Fri

The biennial state convention adopted without debate and without dissent a resolution which called for an uninstructed delegation. The party selected 40 delegates to cast the state's 32 votes at Philadelphia in July.

The convention's resolution committee tabled a proposal that the delegation be instructed not to vote for nomination for President Truman or "anyone else who advocates the civil-rights program." 5-21-48

Although the convention made clear its stand against the program through frequent cheers and applause for unfavorable mention to it, the platform failed to mention civil rights.

The platform indorsed "the broad principles o fthe Democratic Administration," but reaffirmed "the historical devotion of our party to the rights and powers of the Governments of the several States."

The keynoter, Col. William T. Joyner, Raleigh, had declared that the proper way to settle party differences "is by debate and action within the Democratic Party." Fri. 5-21-48

"There has been talk in other states of revolt against the national Democratic Party," Joyner said. "I can think of nothing so ineffective. I cannot think, I do not think, that any revolt is threatened in North Carolina."

Lockers Take 50 Million Dimes.

Fifty million dimes were inserted last year into the familiar steel lockers seen in railroad, airline, and bus terminals throughout America, according to Steelways Magazine.

RALEIGH, N. C., Aug. 10.—(INS)—North Carolina's States' Rights Democrats Tuesday moved closer to a court fight against an Elections Board ruling which denied them a place on the State ballot.

The States' Righters received permission to have county election boards check the names appearing on the party's rejected petition.

David Clark, Charlotte publisher, asked the State Board of Elections for permission to send the 18,000 signatures to county boards where qualified voters will be certified as such.

The petition was refused last because such certification had not been made before a deadline.

Clark said he wants to have the names certified before filing suit against the board's ruling. Clark contends that the names did not need to be certified before the deadline.

Oklahoma Edge

OKLAHOMA CITY.—Here in Oklahoma, which is half Southern and half Northern, they are having an old-fashioned political contest. It is politics in the accepted American tradition, with no modern gadgets.

Thur 9-30-48

That is to say, neither the Dixiecrats nor the Wallaceites are on the ballot. The race is between Republicans and Democrats, which is why this is one of the few really doubtful States.

While Democratic leaders are purposely not making any claims, the Truman - Barkley ticket may even have a slight edge as of the present. With stops on his two-day schedule, President Truman has campaigned across this State like a candidate for sheriff, trying to increase what may be a small advantage.

If the Dixiecrats and the Wallace party were on the ballot, Democratic defeat would have been certain. Expert observers believe Wallace might have polled 40,000 or 50,000 votes, virtually all of them taken from the Democrats.

In the southern part of the State, settled largely from Texas, Arkansas and the deep South, the Dixiecrats would have taken Democratic votes from the other end of the political scale. In the Democratic primary, Gomer Smith, veteran rabble-rouser, violently harangued the southern counties on the race issue, painting a lurid picture of the races forced to mingle in swimming pools and other public places as a result of the President's civil rights program.

Although he was defeated by former Gov. Robert S. Kerr, Smith got a sizable vote. All the Dixiecrats can do in protest is stay home on election day. If they stay home in numbers, it could have a decisive effect, since the Democrats' best hope is a large turnout November 2.

Thur 9-30-48

A SHREWD and resourceful politician, Kerr is taking a neutral stand on civil rights. He has said, that, if elected to the Senate, he will not vote for any law contrary to Oklahoma's State schools.

The real States-righter and opponent of Federal enforcement of civil rights is the Republican senatorial candidate, Representative Ross Rizley. Rizley is running in place of Senator Ed Moore, a wealthy Republican oil man who decided to retire.

Rizley voted against the bill in the House to abolish the poll tax in the Southern States where it is still a prerequisite for voting. Both on the domestic and the international side his record is largely reactionary, and Kerr and the Democrats will use it against him. This may help to offset the appeal of his genial, hearty personality.

Rizley is, in short, an unreconstructed Republican of the predawn, pre-Herbert Hoover era. If Gov. Thomas E. Dewey means to reshape the party and give it a new direction, as his speeches indicate, he will sooner or later have to come to grips with the Rizleys, and particularly if they show up in numbers in the new Congress.

TULSA is a hotbed of unreconstructed Republicanism. Repudiated in the rest of the State, the hard core of isolationist diehards survives there, promoting an organization called pro-America, successor to America First. They are Roosevelt-haters who believe "that man" deliberately brought on the war with all its evil consequences.

These black Republicans do not care for the Dewey campaign nor, for that matter, for Dewey himself. They would have preferred Senator Robert A. Taft, and their real love was Taft's Ohio colleague, Senator John W. Bricker.

They are keeping their criticism of Dewey to the privacy of the club locker room. They will work hard for the GOP ticket and spend money generously, as in the past, in the belief that any Republican is better than a New Deal Democrat.

Oil money is an important commodity in Oklahoma politics. Detached observers guess that Senator Moore spent upward of a half million dollars of his own money in his campaign six years ago.

Thur 9-30-48

Kerr is said to be worth 10 million dollars, most of it made in oil. He was a popular Governor and is rated a highly effective vote-getter.

As in certain other States, the weight of both ability and appeal is on the Democratic side when one examines the congressional candidates. Thus, Oklahomans are properly proud of the national reputation won by Representative Mike Monroney of Oklahoma City for his constructive record in the House. With only weak opposition, Monroney seems fairly sure of reelection. Late in October, Dewey will invade this State, and even if he should succeed in carrying it himself it is highly doubtful that he can pull GOP congressional candidates along with him.

2 Negroes Charge Young Democrats Barred Them

Louisville, Ky.

Sun. 2-22-48

McAlester, Okla., Feb. 21 (AP) — Two Negro delegates were denied admission to the Young Democrats' state convention today, but the presiding officer said the action was not sanctioned by the convention itself.

The Negroes, A. C. Johnson and Dalphin Thompson, Oklahoma City, were stopped at the convention door in the Aldridge Hotel by Police Sergt. Mike Mayfield and Deputy Sheriff Thad Conn.

Both officers said they acted on request of league officials. However, Buck Cartwright, Wewoka, state president of the Young Democrats, insisted the organization had not acted to bar the Negro delegates. 2-22-48

Will Remain With Democratic Leaders

Kansas City, Mo.

Fri. 5-21-48

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla. — (INS) — Gov. Roy J. Turner went on record Wednesday as declaring that Oklahoma will join no bloc of southern states in opposition to national democratic leaders.

Turner was invited by Gov Beauford H. Jester of Texas to join an alliance of southern and western democrats to give these areas a louder voice in party affairs. 5-21-48

Jester indicated that Turner looked with favor upon the plan but the Oklahoma Governor issued a statement declaring he doesn't intend to join "any bloc in opposition to our national democratic leaders."

However, there were strong indications that Oklahoma's delegation to the national democratic convention will not be committed entirely to the renomination of Mr. Truman.

James C. Nance, speaker pro tem of the Oklahoma State senate and a power in state politics declared himself against President Truman. Nance picked Senator Barkley of Kentucky as his first choice for the nomination.

OKLAHOMA CITY—Appreciation of Negro balloting strength in Oklahoma has been thrown to the wind declare Republican leaders as they view with dismay recent blows that have been struck Negro efforts by the Democratic party.

Some of these blows have resounded throughout the nation and have awakened other states to the sense of their responsibilities and incited them to action, while Oklahoma's predominant political party still thrives on the votes of the minority group to whom it has only made promises.

Chicago Ill

This declaration came last week when two duly elected Negro delegates from Oklahoma county to the state convention of Young Democrats were refused admittance by a uniformed policeman with instructions to do so because of Oklahoma's segregations laws.

GOP Leader Speaks

"That should be enough,", declared Harvey Deaton, campaign manager for Carmon C. Harris who made an unsuccessful Republican bid for a seat in congress against Mike Monroney in the last election. "Enough to convince Negroes that a world of promises and a few appointments are made merely to clinch their votes," continued Mr. Deaton.

Deaton cited the popular Ada Lois Sipuel Fisher fight to enter Oklahoma university and served notice on Negro voters that a plea for more time to do justice to Langston is but another promise because "for 40 years Democratic leaders and especially gubernatorial aspirants have pledged the accreditation of Langston university and have done nothing about it.

Forsee Vote Action

It is believed, in Republican ranks that the establishment of a Negro law school at the state capital in answer to a U. S. mandate and refusal to admit Negroes to a Democratic convention will cause Negro voters to rebel against the Democratic party in county, state and national elections.

The rebellion, it is believed, will not be serious in county campaigns, but will be felt severely in state and national races. This is true because the Negro vote is unquestionably a great factor in electing a major candidate.

Sat 3-6-48

Fear Progressives

However, while Negro voters will show at the polls their resentment to unfavorable Democratic actions to desires nearest their hearts, Republicans to whom this strength would ordinary go fear the definite support the Progressive Party will receive from Oklahoma Negroes because of Wallace's liberal program and record of fights for minority groups.

The ultimate effect of what these political developments will have on Republican chances to secure pre-eminence at the polls in Oklahoma is difficult to determine at this time, but many observers believe that it will in the long run work to the benefit of the Republican party and "the needs and rights of Negro people.".

The Oklahoma County Democrats are announcing for general information a few of the vital planks necessary for the continuation of the Negro to become a complete citizen.

In a few days the registration period for voting will began and all Negroes must, if we are to succeed as a group, register.

The Oklahoma county Negro Democrat is sponsoring and supporting:

Sat 9-24-48

1. The appointment of child welfare workers.
2. The appointment of sales tax collectors.
3. A low cost housing project.
4. More law enforcement officers, especially a Negro cruiser.

The Oklahoma county Negro Democrat, presently, feels that the voters of this county are entitled to know more about how each elective office affects our group and more about the candidate that aspire to the position.

In thinking about voting and elections, campaigns and candidates, let us think also of how we as a group, quite distinctive, can benefit from any one elective office. To recognize our ability as a voter is perhaps the most significant part of our struggle for complete citizenship.

Black Dispatch

Okla. City

Many of our group will for the first time be eligible for a trip to the polls, and it is our aim to urge, push and assist all to take advantage of this necessary part of our system of government.

The Oklahoma county Negro Defocrats will have a meeting soon, which will be announced in this paper, so watch for the notice and bring all the folks you know to this meeting. We will discuss methods of assisting in getting every person of age to register.

THE DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM

New York Times

Foreign Policy

So far as the paramount issue of foreign policy is concerned, the Democrats had the advantage over the Republicans in the drafting of a party platform. The Democrats at least knew who their candidate was to be, and could shape their plans accordingly. The Republicans had no such certain knowledge. Mr. Dewey was in the lead for the nomination when the platform was drafted, but its authors could not be certain then whether the candidate ultimately chosen by the convention would be Mr. Dewey or Mr. Taft, or, in the event of a deadlock between these two, a compromise candidate who might be Mr. Vandenberg or might, on the other hand, be Mr. Martin or Mr. Bricker. Accordingly, they had to write a platform broad enough, in its sections on foreign policy, for any one of these potential candidates to stand upon. Hence the ambiguities and generalities in which some of the Republican views are stated.

Handicapped by no such lack of certainty regarding the identity of their candidate, the Democrats have given an all-out endorsement to the foreign policies of the Truman Administration. They specifically pledge—as the Republicans do not—continuation of aid for Greece and Turkey under the "Truman Doctrine"; adherence of the United States to the highly important International Trade Organization recently perfected at Havana; international control of weapons of mass production, including the atomic bomb, and redemption of the promise given by our Government of a loan to the United Nations for the construction of its headquarters in this city. None of these subjects received specific mention in the Republican platform. Furthermore, whereas the Republicans have written a plank on reciprocal trade treaties which could mean anything and at present means nothing, the Democrats have pledged a restoration of the reciprocal trade program in the form originally and successfully sponsored by Cordell Hull.

Thurs.

The Republican pledges on foreign policy reflect the division of opinion within the party on such questions and the necessity of marking time until a candidate was chosen. The Democratic pledges are concrete and specific.

7-15-48

Thu

II Domestic Policy

On questions of domestic policy the Democrats lack the near-unanimity of opinion which they have achieved in matters of foreign policy. To cite one example: the party has been sharply divided on the question of labor legislation. It is all the more remarkable in these circumstances—and it certainly must be confusing to many rank-and-file members of the party—that the Philadelphia convention should have plumped for outright repeal of the Taft-Hartley Labor-Management Relations Act, which was, in fact, enacted into law only with the aid of Democratic support in Congress. This is a plain and unmasked bid for "the labor vote" in the 1948 campaign; but such a maneuver is hardly consistent with the fact that 106 Democratic members of the House of Representatives voted to override the President's veto of this very legislation, whereas only 76 supported that veto. These 106 members, most of them now candidates for re-election, will certainly be caught in an odd position, next November, trying both to stand on the merit of their voting records and at the same time support the declared position of the party. 7-15-48

A second major domestic issue on which the Democratic party has been divided is, of course, the much-disputed question of civil rights. Here the disagreement runs so deep that the issue could not be settled in committee. The controversy was carried to the floor, and the convention, after first snowing under a Southern proposal for a "states' rights" plank, then adopted by a much closer vote a resolution going beyond the somewhat noncommittal language of its platform committee to commend Mr. Truman strongly and explicitly for his civil rights program. The consequences of this action, from the point of view of Democratic unity and the party's prospects in the South, remain to be revealed. But the issue, long-smoldering, presumably had to be met openly someday in national convention, and was.

For the rest, the domestic sections of the platform emphasize the social gains—in social security, fair labor standards and many other similar matters—achieved under the leadership of Mr. Roosevelt, and promise a consolidation and expansion of such gains. They also promise a vast new program of federal subsidies to the states to help support many local activities which were once thought to be the exclusive responsibility of the states themselves. 7-15-48

No objection was made to such subsidies on the part of the champions of "states' rights." Customs have changed in this respect, and intervention by the National Government in local affairs is welcomed when it takes the form of contributions from the National Treasury.

The Platform

Herald Tribune

Thurs. 7-15-48

The Democratic platform is lengthy, and filled with the self-praise which the party needs to keep up its courage through the months ahead. There is no advance of the past sixteen years, whether political, social or economic, which is not attributed entirely to the Democrats' foresight and statesmanship; and no setback but is laid squarely at the feet of Republicans. The platform didn't quite say that all the soldiers, sailors and airmen who fought in the war had been Democrats, but it comes close to giving that impression. New York, N.Y.

This approach is no novelty in party platforms, and it might be harmless enough if in this instance it did not embrace the whole area of foreign policy. One of the hopes for the coming months is that foreign policy will be kept free of narrowly partisan discussion. Through his adviser, Mr. John Foster Dulles, Governor Dewey has been preparing to keep in touch with current negotiations, so as to take no stand which might needlessly complicate or distort them. In his keynote speech Senator Barkley was careful to give to Republicans in Congress due credit for shaping foreign policy. But the platform affords no intimation of the statesmanlike efforts which have marked both parties, and by its exaggerated claims threatens to bring into the heat of the campaign questions which should be dealt with solely from the point of view of national interest.

On domestic issues the platform restates positions which the majority of the Congress has again and again overridden; it might have been framed, indeed, on the basis of an exclusive reading of Mr. Truman's numerous veto messages. By its demand for an outright repeal of the Taft-Hartley law, in particular, it goes clearly against the popular mandate to undertake a new approach to labor problems; and it goes against that majority of the Democrats in Congress which voted for the bill. The chief weakness in this field is less that of the platform than of the party which stands back of it. The Democrats at the end of their long regime, divided among themselves and with control of only a portion of the government, have grown incapable of putting into effect even their more desirable measures, and incapable of administering with a minimum of efficiency the day-to-day affairs of government.

The bright spot in the platform is the plank of civil rights, which achieved its present form after a bitter fight on the floor. But this clear and notable statement was not won without weakening the party and threatening a bolt of Southern electors in November. By a curious irony this plank, specifically commending President Truman for his courageous stand, was a belated tribute to the man whom the party had done so much to discredit and belittle. Mayor Humphries of Minneapolis, who led the fight to have it adopted, was one of those who a short while before had been suggesting that President Truman was not fit to run. If this respect for Mr. Truman's considerable qualities had been expressed by the liberal wing at the start of the convention, the Democratic party would be able to go into its campaign with some inner integrity and confidence. 7-15-48

As it is, it must go forward under a leader whom its most enlightened elements have condemned as faltering and inadequate.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., July 12. — The Democratic platform in its present form avoids any pledge to enact a permanent FEPC or legislation outlawing lynching or abolishing the polltax, the Daily Worker learned late today. The civil rights plank as it now exists is no more than the broad generalization of the 1944 plank rewritten in narrative form. Tues.

Sen. Francis J. Myers (D-Pa) chairman of the committee called off a press conference this afternoon, pleading the press of committee work as an excuse. But newsmen speculated that the Pennsylvania Senator's real reason was his desire to avoid any discussion of the knotty civil rights issue at this stage. The committee of 18 convened at three this afternoon and was still working at a late hour tonight. New York, N.Y.

Meanwhile, it was reported, White House pressure had forced the subcommittee to stiffen its plank on labor and prices. A member of the drafting committee who declined to be quoted assured reporters that the draft platform called for outright repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act. 7-13-48

CONSERVATIVES TAKE OVER

But there were indications, now that the Douglas boom had spent itself, that conservative forces were openly taking over control of the convention machinery. These forces, who occupy a position somewhat to the left of the Southern white supremacy bourbons, are made up of substantial business men, border-state Democratic leaders and bosses of the city machines. Although they went along reluctantly with the New Deal in the days of FDR, they were never enthusiastic about labor or social legislation. Daily Worker

These groups are booming Sen. Alben Barkley (D-Ky) for the vice-presidential nomination. Immediately after Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas announced he would accept neither first nor second place on the ticket, Barkley supporters rushed into the vacuum. New York, N.Y.

Gov. Earl C. Clements of Kentucky, chairman of that state delegation, announced it would place the Kentuckian's name in the nomination. Most observers late today felt that Barkley's election to the second place on the ticket was virtually assured. 7-13-48

However, the liberal groups which were working for a Douglas nomination, were not happy. Even President Truman, who urged Douglas to accept the post, was reported here as opposed to Barkley, giving the reason that his home state was too close to Missouri. Daily Worker

Barkley indicated the conservative position he would like the party to take in his keynote speech, prepared for delivery tonight. Nowhere in its 8,000 words was the phrase civil rights mentioned.

The nearest approach to this crucial issue was a quotation from the Declaration of Independence asserting that "all men are created equal." But Barkley hastened to add that this didn't mean they were actually created equal; it only meant they deserved equal opportunity under the law regardless of race, creed or color.

The Barkley speech devoted three sentences to labor. One praised the Wagner Act. One denounced the Taft-Hartley Act, without mentioning it by name. And one criticized the Republicans for its failure to centralize labor activities of the government within one department.

For the rest of it, Barkley hailed the record of 16 years of democracy and condemned the GOP in the 80th Congress. He praised the Marshall Plan, warned against inflation, and pointed out the sinister role of the Grundy machine in the Republican National Convention. New York, N.Y.

How far the Americans for Democratic Action forces will go in opposing Barkley is uncertain. The strongest candidate for the Vice-Presidency next to the Kentuckian is Sen. Joseph O'Mahoney (D-Wyo) whose proposals to curb monopolies have given him a liberal standing. But there was no indication that ADA had decided on support for the Westerner. Tues.

On the Truman front, the ADA had frankly thrown in the sponge. Although associates of Jack Kroll, director of CIO-PAC, hinted they might "sit on their hands" during the election campaign, concentrating on congressional elections, other ADA leaders were openly pro-Truman. Mayor Hubert Humphrey of Minneapolis told the Minnesota delegation today it should come out "clearly and strongly" for Harry Truman. 7-13-48

Neither the CIO nor the ADA have gone along with the Pepper boom, despite the presence of several of their leaders in the early caucuses. In fact, the move to nominate the Floridan seemed to be getting nowhere late today, and his supporters confessed that defeat was inevitable.

"Our only hope was that if Claude could emerge as a liberal leader during the convention, he might play a role in rebuilding the party on liberal lines after November," one Pepper supporter told the Daily Worker. "But even that doesn't look hopeful now," he concluded.

The only fighting role the few liberals might play in the convention now would be to battle on the floor for a progressive platform. With the plank on civil rights expected to straddle and evade the issue, there has been some talk of a minority report and a fight on the floor. Daily Worker

A MINORITY REPORT

Humphrey, a member of the subcommittee, has threatened to make such a report. A poll of his delegation today, however, indicated that only eight of the 18 were in favor of filing a minority report and carrying the controversy through to the end. Leon Henderson, ADA chairman, has been completely silent so far today.

At the other end of the political arc, the southern revolt had dwindled from a roaring fire to a flickering candle light. Southern states caucusing today reaffirmed their intention of accepting no platform which did not assert state's rights, denounce civil rights. They said they would vote for no candidate who did not accept their program. But at this stage, a bolt from the convention seemed hardly likely.

It was announced, however, that Gov. Ben Laney of Arkansas would be placed in nomination against Truman. He was certain of votes from Arkansas, South Carolina and Mississippi and probably half of Alabama's 26. His friends claimed the votes of 10 states for him. But even these, plus the 100 claimed by Pepper's supporters, would not be enough to prevent Harry Truman from receiving a majority on the first ballot. New York, N.Y.

OPENS AT 12:14 P.M.

The convention opened this afternoon at 12:14, 44 minutes later than scheduled. Galleries were empty and attendance on the floor was scanty. The absence of the New York delegation, busy with a state caucus, made a noticeable hole. Tues.

As Pepper pointed out yesterday, "this is not a happy convention." The lack of spirit was very evident today. Delegates are drooping, and not entirely from the heat. The opening speech by Sen. J. Howard McGrath (D-RI) did not arouse them. 7-13-48

The delegates also heard the following:

- Sen. Myers said the Democratic Party will regain control of Congress in the November elections.
- Arthur C. Kaufman, head of Gimbel Brothers and president of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce, urged Democrats to be nice to business and to free business from state control.

Back at Broad and Walnut, where the Bellevue-Stratford houses the Democratic National Committee, all was relatively calm. Ex-Sgt. Marty Snyder continued his loudspeaker campaign for Eisenhower across the street. But the national committee hung out its own loud speaker and played loud music. Otherwise things were almost peaceful in this hot and sticky city of Brotherly Love.

PRAISES DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM

In refreshing contrast to the Republican Party with its straddling of important issues, the Democratic convention showed courage in deciding squarely on vital controversial questions. In particular, against the determined opposition of the reactionary Southern Democrats, it adopted a specific plank on civil rights which spelled out in detail President Truman's recommendations for a Federal Fair Employment Practice law, abolition of the poll tax as a requirement for voting, and an anti-lynching bill, recommendations which the Republican majority in Congress failed and refused to adopt. Thurs.

It took courage for the liberal majority at the convention to adopt that plank, for it meant a walkout by the reactionary and racially biased delegates from Alabama and Mississippi. 7-22-48

The platform favors labor's rights by calling for the repeal of the Taft-Hartley bill, which was drawn by the Republican leaders with such vindictive antagonism toward organized labor that it has already been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court in certain important provisions.

The Democrats favored extension of the social security system as recommended by President Truman and turned down by the Republican majority in Congress, and again they spelled out the improvements in detail. Their platform favors federal aid to education so as to give every child an equal chance for a good education despite lack of money or racial discrimination practiced in certain states, again following Truman's recommendation which the Republicans failed to adopt. It called for federal aid to make it possible to build homes to rent at low cost, which the Republican majority in the House of Representatives refused to adopt. It called for a decent bill, free from anti-Semitic or anti-Catholic bias, for the admission of displaced persons fleeing from Soviet terror, who now fill refugee camps in Western Europe. Thurs. 7-22-48

The platform is a truly liberal one following in every respect the recommendations made by President Truman to Congress. Since the platform also favors opposition to Soviet aggression, it will, despite its progressive character, be opposed by Wallace and his Communist supporters.

THE PLATFORM

Daily Tribune

What the Democratic platform in its final form will say about civil rights may be of great political importance. Still, it is unfortunate that so much attention has been directed to this matter that other aspects of the platform have been largely lost to view.

Mr. Truman's strategy is, of course, transparent. His purpose is to hold together the divergent elements which won for Mr. Roosevelt, among them the south, the big city machines, various minorities in the north, the left wingers, and organized labor. Mr. Roosevelt succeeded in holding together these often conflicting interests, partly thru patronage and cajolery and largely thru downright deceit. He was an artful promiser to the Negroes, the Poles, the Zionists, the AFL and many others, but his word was not good as they all can testify. Chicago, Ill.

He promised Charles Rozmarek in a secret conference four years ago in Chicago to take good care of Poland when he was selling Poland down the river to Stalin. He pretended to indorse the Zionist program of an independent state in Palestine but made a secret deal with the Arabs to do nothing without consulting their wishes. As for the Negroes, they would not be clamoring now for the civil rights program if he had made good his promises to them, as he could have done at any time during the long years when he had congress under his thumb. He had majorities of his own in congress that were adequate had he cared to use them, and he could have counted upon an overwhelming majority of Republicans as well. Wed. 7-14-48

This is one of Mr. Roosevelt's promissory notes that Mr. Truman is now obliged to meet, for he can't win unless he can hold the Roosevelt following and he hasn't Mr. Roosevelt's gift of facile deception. Rightly or wrongly, Mr. Truman has decided that the bark of the southerners is worse than their bite. The country will watch developments with interest.

Some of the other promissory notes are also of great interest, particularly those to organized labor. Mr. Truman is, of course, personally committed to the repeal of the Taft-Hartley law, regardless of what the platform makers, many of whom voted for the law, will have to say on the subject. What is of equal or greater importance is the fact that Mr. Truman is also committed to a policy of price fixing and the rationing of "scarce materials." If he has his way, the government is going to run the economy of the country just as certainly as if the Socialist party had won the election and he was its chosen leader.

The people of the United States have not yet realized how fully Mr. Truman is committed to this policy. It is what he has in mind when he talks about controlling inflation. His program has the full indorsement of some of the most influential of the labor leaders, including the dominant figures in the CIO, such as Murray and Reuther, and a good many in the AFL as well. These men are socialists in all but name and the more socialistic they are, the more certainly they are for Truman. Wed. 7-14-48

It is no accident that a Socialist newspaper like the New Leader is pulling for Truman. If he is elected, he will have a mandate to destroy the free economy and Mr. Murray will not complain if Mr. Truman acts in the name of inflation control rather than nationalization, for the result will be the same. The section of the Democratic platform having to do with this subject should therefore be read with great care. It may be even more significant than the plank on civil rights.

50 DEMOCRAT CHIEFS O.K. PLANK ON CIVIL RIGHTS

Chicago Daily Tribune

Will Defy South at Convention

Mon. 7-5-48

Minneapolis, July 4 (Special)—Mayor Hubert H. Humphrey blew a fanfare today for a battle over a civil rights plank at the Democratic national convention which meets at Philadelphia July 12. He released a statement signed by 50 Democratic leaders in 20 northern states, saying they intend to write President Truman's civil rights program into the party's national platform.

The subject is the most controversial confronting the Democratic conclave. Southern Democrats have threatened in some states to carry the fight against Truman not only into the Philadelphia meet but also into the electoral college and split the party. The revolt was touched off by the President's espousal in a special message to congress Feb. 1 of a civil rights program.

Propose Cure Of Abuses

It included proposals for laws against lynching, poll tax, and racial discrimination in interstate transportation facilities. It called for fair employment legislation.

In releasing the statement, Mayor Humphrey said that as a member of the resolutions committee he would present it at Philadelphia as the view of Democrats who deem the program essential to national welfare. He was aided in the drafting and circulation of the document, he said, by James Roosevelt, chairman of the California Democratic state organization, and by Jacob Arvey, Cook county, Ill., chairman.

"We shall actively seek," the leaders declared, "to make the accomplishment of this program (Truman's) a part of our party platform for 1948.

"Moral Strategy" Measure

The text of the statement follows: 7-5-48

"The report of the President's committee on civil rights is one of the most important measures of moral strategy devised by the United States in modern times.

"Altho its recommendations do credit to all sections of American life represented on the nonpartisan committee, its sponsorship will remain a landmark in the history of this Democratic administration.

"As an examination of America's political conscience, it dramatized the internal vitality of our democracy and eloquently challenged the rest of the civilized world.

"As active members of the Democratic party, and as citizens, we support this program. Many of us will be delegates to the national convention in Philadelphia. The issue of civil rights is in the worthiest tradition of our party. We hereby declare that we shall actively seek at Philadelphia, to make the accomplishment of this program a part of our party's platform for 1948.

Principles Are Basic

"Any dispassionate examination of this report will reveal that its fundamental principles are as old as our nation. The report measures the intent of our most cherished documents against the reality of the present and recommends concrete legislative measures to close the gap between profession and practice in the field of civil rights.

"We believe that the gravity of the present international situation cannot fail to convince patriotic leaders of our party everywhere that neither imagined rights, private economic interests, nor cherished customs of any section of America can remain sacred if they jeopardize the position of our nation in world affairs.

"It is a measure contributing to the moral strength of America as a free nation that we uphold the President's civil rights policy.

"The cost of operating this policy must, we believe, be measured in the same coin."

Northern 'Vigilance' Group Asks Drafters to Call for Anti-Lynching, Anti-Poll Tax, F. E. P. C. Laws; Platform for Taft-Hartley Act's Repeal

By Robert J. Donovan

PHILADELPHIA, July 13.—The Resolutions Committee of the Democratic National Convention was embroiled tonight in a fight over civil rights, precipitated by a Northern move to write into the 1948 platform indorsements of specific anti-discrimination measures.

These measures, proposed by Mayor Hubert H. Humphrey jr., of Minneapolis, member of a "vigilance" group fighting for a liberal platform, included anti-lynching and anti-poll tax legislation, provisions for non-segregation of races in the armed forces and "equal opportunity in employment." This last would be tantamount to indorsement of a fair employment practices law.

These recommendations, arousing deep opposition among Southern delegates, were submitted by Mayor Humphrey as the 108-member resolutions committee met to complete the draft of the platform. Wed. 7-14-48

The draft is expected to go to the convention floor for final action tomorrow afternoon. Although the preliminary draft has not been made public, enough information has leaked out of committee to indicate that the platform will pledge the party to repeal of the Taft-Hartley law.

Because of the fact that more Democrats in Congress had voted for the Taft-Hartley act than against it, it was believed that a pledge to repeal the measure would provoke a sharp fight in the resolutions committee. A committee member said tonight, however, that the repeal proposal had been accepted with little controversy.

Arms to Israel Backed

On the subject of Israel, Senator Scott Lucas, of Illinois, a member of the Resolutions Committee, said the group unanimously had approved a stand favoring lifting of the embargo on arms shipments to Israel and calling on the United Nations to modify its arms-control program.

This stand was hailed by New York delegates as an improvement over an earlier draft which favored lifting of the arms embargo subject to a prior decision of the U. N. 7-14-48

The platform also calls for immediate and full de jure recognition of Israel and economic aid to the new state, it was reported.

Senator Lucas revealed tonight that the South had won a victory when the Resolution Committee agreed to drop a section upholding Federal rights to the oil-rich tidelands.

As the Resolutions Committee toiled through hours of work tonight in its session on the roof garden of the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel, it appeared that the one issue which was really causing trouble was civil rights. And the amendment submitted by Mayor Humphrey went right to the heart of the controversy which has tortured the Democratic party since President Truman sent Congress his civil rights program last winter.

Amendments Are Specific

The controversial section of Mayor Humphrey's amendment read:

"To secure these rights, we pledge ourselves to support Federal action to guarantee to all Americans:

"1. Personal safety from the brutal crime of lynching and mob violence.

"2. Equal opportunity in employment.

"3. Full and free political participation.

"4. Equal treatment in the armed forces."

Mayor Humphrey's proposals were an amendment to a preliminary draft platform drawn up during the last two days by an eighteen-member drafting committee. The proposals were submitted when the Resolutions Committee met today to consider for the first time the preliminary draft and to put the platform in final form for presentation.

Like the 1944 civil rights platform in the Democratic platform, the preliminary 1948 draft contained no specific recommendations for anti-discrimination measures.

It said that the Democratic party was responsible for "the great civil rights gains made in recent years in eliminating unfair and illegal discrimination based on race, creed or color." It pledged the party to continued efforts to eradicate discrimination.

Language Is Stronger

In language somewhat stronger than the 1944 plank, it said that minorities must have the "right to live, the right to work, the right to vote, the full and equal protection of the laws." It called on Congress to guarantee these rights. 7-14-48

Even this stand went further than many Southern delegates wanted to go. Furthermore, it omitted what many Southerners had insisted upon—a strong states' rights declaration, opposing Federal interference in state problems such as the racial issue. But Mayor Humphrey's amendment went completely beyond what Southern delegates have said they would accept.

Should it be approved by the open against this program." The committee continued silent.

It was evident, however, that the compromise plan to retain the wording of the 1944 plank, and mollify the South with added States rights language, was running into behind-the-scenes trouble.

Mayor Humphrey and Representative Celler (N. Y.) told reporters they wouldn't take less than a declaration for the "high spots" of the Truman civil rights program.

"I don't care if they (the Southerners) do walk out," said Celler.

CIO Secretary-Treasurer James B. Carey led off the day's witnesses with a call for a plank demanding repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act and adoption by the Democrats of a "Roosevelt platform."

As part of it, he said the convention should adopt the Truman civil rights policies, saying, "We must not seek to evade responsibility for this minimum program of civil rights by placing blame on a small minority of willful men."

Philadelphia Revolt

Washington Post

The Democratic platform as rewritten on the convention floor late yesterday afternoon is a defeat for the Southerners and may be summed up as a Truman manifesto. The delegates simply would not compromise on the burning issue of civil rights which has rocked the Democratic Party. The commitment of the party to the belief that "racial and religious minorities must have the right to live, the right to work, the right to vote, the full and equal protection of the laws, on a basis of equality with all citizens, as guaranteed by the Constitution" could mean much if it were to be fulfilled by the Southern States, which have the power to make it effective. But many Southern leaders rebelled against even the statement of this elementary principle. And it was their intransigence, together with the feeling that the party should go to the country as the party of liberalism, that induced the convention to spell out exactly what was meant by the original generalization of the Resolutions Committee.

7-15-48

Washington D.C.

A tumultuous debate on the floor led to the incorporation of a pledge to work for Federal legislation guaranteeing the rights of full and equal political participation, equal opportunity of employment, "security of persons" and "equal treatment" in the armed services. This was certainly a franker pledge than the promise simply to use all "constitutional powers" to assure and protect the rights that were enumerated in the committee's civil rights plank, and the Southerners were left in high dudgeon. Thus the South's flare of rebellion has been repulsed rather than compromised by what may be a historic convention, although, in deference to the South, the platform-makers had eliminated entirely the plank for Federal control over tidelands oil, and no further action on this score was offered on the floor of the convention.

Washington Post

The platform added to its appeal to what Mr. Roosevelt would have called the "under-privileged" by courting the labor vote with a plank pledging repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act. While this extreme stand supports President Truman's veto of this legislation, it flies in the face of the majority of the Democratic legislators, who voted to override the veto. No such drastic pledge, of course, has any chance of being fulfilled, but it may win for the ticket some of the waverers in union labor ranks. The entire platform is a vote-puller, but the decisive action on civil rights may produce such dissension in the ranks of the Democratic Party as to present the election to the Republicans, though the ultimate outcome may well be a new alignment in the party system in the United States based less on geography and more on ideology.

'Civil Rights' Plank Kills Party Unity

Atl. 7-16-48

PHILADELPHIA—The end of the always incompatible union between Northern cities and the South which has been the Democratic Party became an irretrievable certainty when President Truman's so-called civil rights program was written into the Democratic national platform.

The only comparable incident within memory was the defeat by a half-vote margin—442 to 442½, approximately—in the Democratic convention of 1924 of a resolution aimed against racial and religious bigotry and condemning the Ku Klux Klan by name. That was the preliminary for the deadlock for two weeks and more than 100 ballots between Gov. Al Smith, backed by the Northern cities, and William G. McAdoo, supported by the South and portions of the rural North and West. John W. Davis, nominated in the end from sheer exhaustion, carried only 10 States of the solid South and Kentucky and Oklahoma. He lost Tennessee, the first time it had ever gone Republican.

The real pay-off on that 1924 battle, however, came in 1928 when the South took its revenge on Gov. Smith. He lost Tennessee, Virginia, North Carolina, Florida and Texas, and the only States he carried outside the South were Massachusetts and Rhode Island.

The unequivocal indorsement of his civil rights program conceivably may help President Truman in Northern States which poll large Negro and other racial-group votes. But there can be no doubt as to its disastrous effect on the Democratic chances in the South.

By popular vote Alabama Democrats denied their electoral votes to President Truman on account of his civil rights program and Mississippi, South Carolina, Arkansas and Virginia long had been maneuvering in the same direction.

Fully alive to this threat, the President's managers hand-picked a platform-drafting subcommittee with the single purpose of searching for a civil rights plank that would avert the North-South break. Helped along by the acceptance of Sen. Barkley for Vice President, it looked for awhile as if this effort at appeasement had succeeded. Though the fuzzy commitment of the Party to racial and religious equality contained in the committee draft was protested by the Southerners, they seemed in no mood to bolt about it.

But the old New Dealers saw in this situation an opportunity to offset a little the humiliations they had suffered on account of their abortive booms for Gen. Eisenhower and Supreme Court Justice Douglas.

Sparked by Mayor Hubert Humphrey of Minneapolis, the New Dealers offered a resolution spelling out the racial equality program in detail and commending President Truman by name for his support of it.

This provision was adopted, 651½ to 582½, after the convention had voted down, 925 to 309, a Southern proposal to reaffirm the Democratic Party's traditional position that "the power to regulate and control local affairs and act in the exercise of the police power" is reserved for the individual States.

The effect of this action on the States already threatening to bolt was indicated when Gov. Ben Laney of Arkansas withdrew his candidacy for President on the ground that he could not run on the Party platform.

And while indications at present are that Virginia, North Carolina and Tennessee will not bolt formally, the damage in them to President Truman on account of the civil rights plank may be even greater.

The prospect that Virginia, North Carolina and Tennessee will go Republican, regarded heretofore as no more than a distant possibility, approaches the realm of probability in the light of this Democratic national action.

It is known, for example, that the only reason Gov. Tuck and Sen. Byrd, leaders of the Virginia Democratic machine, are less inclined now to take their electoral votes away from President Truman than they were earlier, is the pressure they are receiving from all Democratic candidates for offices in their State. Democratic nominees for Congress and other offices in Virginia, North Carolina and Tennessee are frankly scared to death today for fear they will be carried down in a Truman-Barkley debacle.

Sharp Southern Opposition Heard On Civil Rights Plank

Tues. 7-13-48

PHILADELPHIA, July 13—(AP)—Sharp Southern opposition to a tentatively-approved civil rights plank today darkened hopes of Democratic party leaders of averting a bitter convention floor battle on this issue.

Dixie leaders let it be known that the plank, described as a "strong" statement on the race issue, was "entirely unsatisfactory to the South."

This opposition was expressed as an 18-member subcommittee prepared to lay its proposed version of the 1948 platform before the full 108-member platform committee. The big group must approve it before it can be laid before the convention.

Southern members of the full committee declared that unless

Rep. Emanuel Celler of New York, member of the platform group, said the platform drafters "snapped their fingers" at the state department and "gave them a shellacking" in the Palestine plank.

Mayor Hubert H. Humphrey of Minneapolis, telling reporters "I hope there will be no convention floor fight on the platform," added: "I don't think there will be."

Celler, too, was optimistic, saying the preliminary draft was born "in a spirit of compromise — give and take."

Humphrey and Celler led a "rump" meeting of "liberal" platform committee members who decided on Sunday to fight on the floor if they failed to obtain a strong civil rights plank.

What southerners will do is another matter. Some said a fight appears inevitable. The drafting committee, meeting behind closed doors, battled for three hours on the race plank alone, before it reached the compromise.

One committee member said the race declaration favors "full opportunity for all persons alike to live, changes are made to suit them, they will carry their fight to the full convention, probably tomorrow.

Omits Dixie Demand

Phrased only in general terms, the civil rights plank was reported to omit the far-reaching states' rights' declaration that angry Dixie delegates had demanded. 7-13-48

Some of the drafters voiced confidence that compromise will avert any floor right when the platform goes before the National convention tomorrow for ratification. Others, however, were not so sure.

One said the race plank was adopted despite White House pressure for "much more" on civil rights. President Truman was in frequent touch with the platform writers throughout their long toil. They put the last words to the semi- final document at 4 a. m. today.

The second preliminary draft was stamped "secret" just as was the first and somewhat different version proposed by a smaller committee 24 hours earlier. The Record

PLATFORM IDEAS SENT BY TRUMAN

The Times-Picayune

New Orleans, La.

'Gesture of Conciliation' Toward Dixie Hinted

Sun. 7-11-48

(The Associated Press)

Philadelphia, July 10.—A person close to President Truman said today the White House has suggested some Democratic platform language including what might be regarded as "a gesture of conciliation" toward the South.

A convention floor fight threatens over a civil rights plank.

The word that Mr. Truman has offered some ideas came after Sen. Myers, Penn., platform chairman, was asked directly at a news conference whether the president has forwarded platform proposals. He replied:

"I have had the cabinet send me memoranda—not planks. I am not sure whether this was cleared through the White House."

The exact nature of a presidential conciliation move, if such it turns out to be, was kept secret.

Floor Fight Possible

Democratic Chairman J. Howard McGrath conceded the possibility of a civil rights fight on the convention floor. Mayor Hubert H. Humphrey, Jr., Minneapolis, a platform committee member, threatened to raise such a battle unless the party's document of principles includes the basic points of Mr. Truman's civil rights program.

McGrath indicated a conciliation move. The Times-Picayune

He told reporters he hopes the platform adopts the 1944 civil rights plank that recognized that "racial and religious minorities have the right to live, develop and vote equally with all citizens and share the rights that are guaranteed by our constitution."

Moreover, McGrath said he would not be adverse to including in the platform a states' right plank proposed by Southerners, so long as it does not "nullify" the civil rights proposals.

If he gets a copy of the proposed platform in time, McGrath said, he probably will discuss it with Mr. Truman.

Mr. Truman's civil rights recommendations to Congress for anti-lynch, anti-poll tax, anti-discrimination—resulted in a Dixie rebellion within the party early this year. New Orleans, La.

Some Southerners voiced a willingness to compromise the sizzling civil rights controversy by repeating the general statement of the 1944 platform and then inserting a states' right plank opposing federal interference in state affairs.

Mayor Humphrey said there is a majority in the 18-member platform subcommittee for a strong civil rights plank. The 1944 plank is unsatisfactory, he said.

"But," he declared, "if we fail in the committee, we will take the fight to the convention floor. I don't want the party to hide behind the shadow of states' rights when we should be out fighting for human rights."

There were strong indications in some quarters, however, that an effort may be made to write the platform in such a way as to bring harmony in the South—with Mr. Truman as the 1948 party standard bearer. Sun.

'South Always Backbone'

William Ritchie, platform member from Nebraska, told reporters: 7-11-48

"The South has always been the backbone of the Democratic party, in electoral votes and contributions. Why should we insult our best friends? Of course the South should be taken into consideration in the platform. Their problems will be given consideration."

The race issue overshadowed all other considerations. Probably the second biggest headache for the platform writers is the labor plank.

Organized labor has called upon the party to stand for repeal of the Taft-Hartley labor act. President Truman vetoed the Taft-Hartley bill, but it was passed over his veto with a majority of Democrats in Congress voting with the Republicans.

Some committeemen said the labor plank, without calling for repeal, stands for "study and corrections of any inequities" in the Taft-Hartley measure. Some labor leaders declared the Republican platform "unacceptable" when it did not call for repeal. Sun.

Platform writers are preparing to blast the GOP for "wrecking" a trade pact designed to assure wheat farmers a big market abroad. They say this will be a big blow to the farmers in view of possible agricultural surpluses.

A tentatively-approved farm plank charges the Republican Congress with tossing away an assured annual overseas market for at least 185,000,000 bushels of the bread grain during the next five years. 7-11-48

OUTRIGHT O.K. ON CIVIL RIGHTS PLAN DEMANDED

Negro Groups Indorse Truman Program

Philadelphia, July 8 (AP)-Outright indorsement of President Truman's civil rights program was demanded at Democratic platform hearings today.

More than a score of Negro organizations called for a plank embodying Mr. Truman's program, including anti-lynch, anti-poll tax, and fair employment (FEPC) legislation. One organization, the National Negro council, asked the platform writers to indorse an immediate call of the 80th congress into special session to enact civil rights legislation.

CIO Rips Platform

Before flare-up of the race issue which has split the Democratic party, the Congress of Industrial Organizations called for adoption of a "Roosevelt platform" and denounced the Republican platform as "one of deceit."

James B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer, also asked for civil rights, demanded repeal of the Taft-Hartley act and extension of New Deal social laws. Responding to a platform committee member's question, Carey stated: "There is nothing in the Republican platform that attracts the interest of labor."

Walter White, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, submitted a statement on behalf of 21 Negro organizations, declaring:

"The day of reckoning has come when the Democratic party must decide whether it is going to permit bigots to dictate its philosophy and policy or whether the party can rise to the heights of Americanism which alone can justify its continued existence."

An organization identifying itself as the civil rights congress demanded that the convention refuse to seat delegates "who are elected by poll tax vote or who are members or supporters of the Ku Klux Klan." Daily Tribune

Dixie Members Silent

Dixie members of the platform committee in a switch of strategy decided to remain silent at least for the time being while the civil rights witnesses presented their statements. Fri. 7-9-48

Sen. Hoey (D., N.C.), a committee member, told reporters that southerners would not question the witnesses of the race issue, saying, "We will let them go ahead and make their statements as no good can be accomplished by stirring up the issue. Chicago, Ill.

White told the platform writers that the 1944 Democratic platform general statement on civil rights would not be satisfactory in 1948.

"Forces of reaction and bigotry," he said, "are demanding that this convention evade this issue of human rights and express no stronger sentiment for civil rights than the platform plank adopted by the 1944 Democratic national convention."

Dr. Channing H. Tobias, a member of President Truman's civil rights commission and also speaking for the 21 Negro organizations, quoted the late Wendell L. Willkie as saying that the Constitution nowhere makes provision for first and second class citizens.

Negroes, he said, are responsible to their government as are any other citizens.

"There is no such thing as black taxes or white taxes," he told the committee, "or is there such a thing as blue taxes, except as people get blue when they must pay taxes." 7-9-48

Tobias said that segregation in the military services now is an uppermost issue since a new draft has been ordered, and he asked, "Are Negroes expected to look on with indifference when they are singled out as are no other citizens in the service of their country?"

White's statement reminded the Democratic party that Negroes hold the balance of voting power in many congressional districts and in some northern states. He said: 7-9-48

"The Negro vote in 12 of these states with a total of 228 electoral college votes exceeds the margin necessary to alter the states' votes in the electoral college.

"These states are Ohio, Indiana, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Michigan, Missouri, Delaware, Maryland, West Virginia, and Kentucky."

PHILADELPHIA — (ANP) — Text of the revised plank on civil rights as amended on the floor of the convention reads:

"The Democratic party is responsible for the great civil rights gains made in recent years in eliminating unfair and illegal discrimination based on race, creed or color.

"The Democratic party commits itself to continuing its efforts to eradicate all racial, religious and economic discrimination.

"We again state our belief that racial and religious minorities must have the right to live, the right to work, the right to vote, the full and equal protection of the laws, on a basis of equality with all citizens as guaranteed by the constitution.

"We highly commend President Harry Truman for his courageous stand on the issue of civil rights.

"We call upon the Congress to support our President in guaranteeing these basic and fundamental rights: 1. Southerners Shoved Into Line by Threat Of Tidelands Slap

(34)

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

Philadelphia, July 13.—Administration leaders fought desperately tonight to hold the Democratic Party together on a liberalized 4500-word platform vigorously opposed by the South and not quite acceptable to the party's left wing.

Early tonight both factions were blowing off steam in the first full meeting of 108-member Democratic resolutions committee.

The platform row, packing the last bit of fight in this convention, appeared likely to go to the floor tomorrow in any event.

The best leaders can hope for is a "token" debate in the open, with the talk held down to an hour, and no platform changes at the end.

Wed. 7-14-48

To avoid a minority report, that could split the party even wider than it is, the Administration last night and early today frankly entered into a number of trades with the two extreme party wings.

Civil rights and Israel planks were tightened to placate the liberals. Threats of a strong Federal tidelands plank were used as a club to shoo Texas and other Southern rebels back into line.

After three all-night subcommittee sessions in 72 hours, the full Democratic resolutions committee met in the heavily guarded Rose Garden room on the roof of the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel at 3 p. m., with no quitting hour set.

By dinner time the group had approved a plank for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act and adopted strengthening changes in the Israel plank. Then escape valves were thrown wide open for the civil rights blowoff.

A stiffened civil rights stand, adding the "right to work" on a basis of equality with all citizens to an extension of the party's 1944 civil rights stand. That is one way of declaring for FEPC.

An Israel plank, providing full as against de facto recognition of the new Jewish state, and lifting of the Palestine arms embargo. This was further strengthene', despite State Department objections, by a pledge to work for modification of equal protection of the laws, on a basis of equality with all citizens as guaranteed by the Constitution."

The plank further called on Congress to exercise its full authority under the Constitution "to assure and protect these rights."

Mayor Hubert Humphrey of Minneapolis led the fight to further strengthen the plank. He was instructed by the Minnesota delegation today to demand inclusion of this additional language:

"To secure these rights we pledge ourselves to support Federal action to guarantee to all Americans:

1. Personal safety from the brutal crime of lynching and mob violence.

2. Equal opportunity in employment.

3. Full and free political participation.

4. Equal treatment in the armed forces.

Significantly, however, both factions hedged all over the lot when the talk got around to a minority report.

7-14-48

As the last round opened in the resolutions committee the civil rights plank read as follows:

"The Democratic Party is responsible for the great civil rights gains made in recent years in eliminating unfair and illegal discrimination based on race, creed or color.

"The Democratic Party commits itself to continuing its efforts to eradicate all racial, religious and economic discrimination.

Full Equalty Demanded

"We again state our belief that racial and religious minorities must have the right to live, the right to work, the right to vote, the full and any United Nations resolution aimed at limting embargo revision.

A minimum wage of "at least" 75 cents an hour.

A foreign policy projection of the Truman Doctrine and the Marshall Plan, and noncrippling extension of reciprocal trade agreements.

Civilian, nonpartisan control of atomic energy.

Comprehensive public housing legislation, including public housing and slum clearance.

Nondiscriminatory entry of more European refugees.

Federal aid to education.

Southerners Roll Up Sleeves

Licked, 10 to 4, on a subcommittee State's rights showdown, and unable to block addition of somewhat more specific civil rights language, Southerners entered the full committee with their sleeves rolled for a fight.

Liberal wingers expressed equal dissatisfaction with the plank, announced a fight to make it stronger.

Dixie To Continue Battle on Floor Of Convention Today

Wed. 7-14-48

By MAX HALL

PHILADELPHIA, July 14—(Wednesday) —(AP)— The Democratic Platform Committee early today approved a party platform without any declaration of states' rights, and Southern delegates promptly said they will fight to change it in the Convention later today.

Sen. Francis J. Myers, of Pennsylvania, the Committee Chairman, told reporters several minority reports have been filed on civil rights and states' rights. One is by former Rep. Biemiller, of Wisconsin, who doesn't think the civil rights plank is strong enough.

Cecil Sims and Mrs. Albert Hill, both of Nashville, Tenn., filed one of the minority reports on states' rights and told reporters "we will definitely take the matter to the Convention floor."

Dan Moody, former Governor of Texas, who filed another minority report on the same subject, refused to say whether he would wage a floor debate.

Wed

The Democratic platform pledges the Party to "chart our future course as we chartered our course under the leadership of Franklin D. Roosevelt and Harry S. Truman."

7-14-48

It calls for:

Civil Rights—The Party commits itself to "continuing its efforts to eradicate all racial, religious and economic discrimination." The Platform Committee rejected amendments proposing to spell out approval of President Truman's own or control the oil resources of the coastal tidelands.

The Party's Platform Committee voted down the various amendments supporting the idea that the States, rather than the Federal Government, should have authority over domestic affairs.

Wed

On the other hand, the Committee by an overwhelming thunder of "Noes" defeated a Northern attempt, by Mayor Hubert Humphrey, of Minneapolis, to have the platform pledge Federal action guaranteeing to all Americans:

(1) Safety from lynching, (2) equal job opportunity, (3) full political participation, and (4) equal treatment in the armed forces.

Some of those points were similar to President Truman's Civil Rights program of February, which started an historic howl from Dixie Democrats.

7-14-48

The Truman program called for Federal laws against lynching, poll taxes, and discrimination in hiring.

Negro Organizations Demand Civil Rights In Platform

Columbia S.C.

PHILADELPHIA, July 8—(AP)—The race issue, which has split the Democratic party, hit the party's platform writers like a thunderclap today. Thu. 7-8-48

More than a score of Negro organizations demanded a plank embodying President Truman's civil right sprogram, including Anti-Lynch, Anti-Poll Tax and Fair Employment (FEPC) legislation. One organization, the National Negro Council, asked the platform writers to endorse an immediate call of the 80th Congress into special session to enact civil rights legislation.

Walter White, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, submitted a statement on behalf of 21 Negro organizations, declaring.

Day Of Reckoning Here

"The day of reckoning has come when the Democratic party must decide whether it is going to permit bigots to dictate its philosophy and policy or whether the party can rise to the heights of Americanism which alone can justify its continued existence."

White's statement concluded:

"We, therefore, urge and insist that the platform of the 1948 Democratic convention endorse without equivocation the entire program of the President's committee on civil rights and especially those provisions to suppress lynching and mob violence, to ban the poll tax as a voting requirement, to afford equality of a job opportunity and to abolish discrimination and segregation in the armed services, education and transportation.

"Addition, we urge that the platform pledge the full weight of the Democratic party to the amendment of the Senate rules to envoke cloture by a majority vote in order that filibusters which have disgraced America far too long, may be stopped in the United States Senate." 7-8-48

An organization identifying itself as the civil rights Congress demanded that the convention refuse to seat delegates "who are elected by poll-tax vote or who are members or supporters of the Ku Klux Klan."

The Negro and civil rights organizations distributed copies of their statments to the press prior to their appearance before the platform committee.

Remain Silent

Dixie members of the platform committee in a switch of strategy decided to remain silent at least for the time being while the civil rights witnesses presented their statements.

Senator Hoey (D-N.C.), a committee member, told reporters that Southerners would not question the witnesses of the race issue, saying "we will let them go ahead and make their statements as no good can be accomplished by stirring up the issue."

White told the platform writers that the 1944 Democratic platform general statement on civil rights would not be satisfactory in 1948.

Doctor Channing H. Tobias, a member of President Truman's civil rights commission and also speaking for the 21 Negro organizations, said that segregation in the armed services is an uppermost issue since a new draft has been ordered. He asked "are Negros expected to look on with indifference when they are singled out, as are no other citizens, in the service of their country?"

Walter White's statement reminded the Democratic party that Negroes hold the balance of voting power in many Congressional districts and in some northern states. He said: Columbia S.C.

"The Negro vote in 12 of these states with a total of 228 electoral college votes exceeds the margin necessary to alter the state's votes in the electoral college.

"These states are Ohio, Indiana, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Michigan, Missouri, Delaware, Maryland, West Virginia and Kentucky."

He said that in northern and border states this year there is a potential of 3,000,000 Negro votes and that increasing Negro votes in the South ultimately will mean "a replacement of the Congressional representation by men and women more representative of all the people of the South."

The Democratic party, with Dixie crying loud in protest, was split apart when Mr. Truman submitted his civil rights program to Congress earlier this year.

Even as the civil rights backers clamored for attentión, the CIO, too, was demanding support in the party platform. 7-8-48

The labor organization came forward with a hard-pounding demand for a "Roosevelt platform." CIO secretary James B. Carey, a little man with a mop of curly hair, urged in his deep voice that the Democrats peldge:

Negroes as members of local clubs and the state party solely because of race and color and from denying Brown the right to full and complete participation in the party, from requiring Negro voter to present a general election registration certificates as a prerequisite to voting in the Aug. 10th primary and from requiring Negro electors to take the voters oath now required.

Brown also seeks judgment for $5,000. 7-8-48

By UNITED PRESS

Brown was one of the Negroes who was purged from Beaufort county party enrolment books last week under a state rule forbidding Negroes joining the party.

Judge Waring set the hearing for 10 a. m. July 16 here. Baskin, chairmen of counties where Negroes cannot enroll, and other party leaders were ordered to appear.

Brown's suit, which asked for $5,000 damages, asked that a permanent injunction be issued restraining the South Carolina Democratic party "forever" from refusing Negroes "effective exercise of their right to vote."

The plaintiff asked for full and complete participation in the Democratic party of the state, without regard for creed or color. And he asked the outlawing of present rules requiring Negroes to show general election registration certificates and take on oath supporting racial segregation before they can vote in primaries.

Attorneys for Brown termed the banning of Negroes from party membership violation of the United States constitution.

"Unless redress is obtained from this court," the suit said, "the defendants, while acting in concert, will continue to deprive plaintiffs and others . . . of the effective exercise of their right to vote."

CIVIL RIGHTS AT PHILADELPHIA

The eighteen-member subcommittee now preparing the first draft of the Democratic platform at Philadelphia plans to hear arguments today on the question of what to do about a plank on civil rights. Mayor Humphrey of Minneapolis leads a group that would like a strong and unequivocal declaration. This, however, seems likely to meet with opposition from the South. A suggested compromise is that the party merely reaffirm its 1944 position on this subject.

The 1944 platform led off with a good, vigorous statement:

> We believe that racial and religious minorities have the right to live, develop and vote equally with all citizens and share the rights that are guaranteed by our Constitution.

Thu. 7-8-48

No one could ask for more. But to this first sentence was added a second one, which declared: "Congress should exert its full constitutional powers to protect those rights." While this second sentence doubtless seemed to many voters in 1944 to promise prompt Congressional action to achieve the purposes above stated, there was a catch in it, and the catch lay in the phrase "full constitutional powers." For whenever the President or an appropriate committee of the House or Senate proposed the enactment of an anti-poll-tax bill, or an anti-lynching bill, or a fair-employment bill, it was at once contended by Southern opponents of such measures that anything of this kind would go beyond the "full constitutional powers" of Congress and that the party, therefore, had not pledged itself to such a course of action.

It remains to be seen whether the Democratic party can now resolve its internal disagreements on this question. But certainly, in the light of Congressional history since 1944, a mere reiteration of the 1944 plank on civil rights would represent precisely the same kind of straddle to which the Republican party (because of its own internal disagreements on the tariff question) resorted in its plank on reciprocal trade agreements.

SHARP FLOOR TESTS DUE ON PLATFORM

'Rump' Meeting of Northern Bloc Demands a Full Rights Plank Despite South's Stand

By C. P. TRUSSELL
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PHILADELPHIA, July 11—The first and secret draft of the 1948 Democratic party platform neared completion late tonight, but even before its final plank was written it was headed toward assault by both Northern liberals and Southern conservatives. Both of these camps charted plans and strategy for carrying their battles to the convention floor. 7-12-48

In the face of this situation the preliminary drafting body of seven picked members sought for harmany to start the document on its road through two other platform groups and, at last, through the convention. It was known that President Truman, as prospective nominee, wanted a display of unity in the drafting of the party's pledges. It appeared that he would not get it except, perhaps, in purely surface display.

"Rump" moments sparng up, one for insistence upon a "liberal" platform that would throw more salt in Southern Democratic wounds; another to resist and force a convention voting showdown. All hope of sending the platform through without floor battles appeared to have disappeared.

Drastic Tactics Reported

The platform became the last stand of the South. Drastic tactics were reportedly under way. A proposed compromise on the civil-rights question through a repeating of the 1944 platform plank on this issue faded into battle plans, it was said.

In the eyes of Southern Democrats, the 1944 plank, written in such general terms as to create demands for specifications, became the "foundation," because of its wide generalizations.. These were regarded as an aid to the Truman civil-rights program which set off the South's revolt. The Times

To prevent adoption of the 1944 plank, it was reported, Southerners were prepared to go to the extreme of attempting to shut off further Federal aid to states. N.Y.

If the platform submitted to the convention contained the 1944 clause, it was said, an amendment would be offered from the floor. This amendment would demand a pledge for preservation of states' rights to manage the states' internal affairs. The requirement would be so strict and rigid that Congress could construe it only as barring Federal intervention even with aid funds. Mon.

It was not, as this plan was explained, that such a program likely would be accepted by the convention. But, it was held, a floor contest on the states' rights issues probably would create so much fright among numerous states as to draw aid to the South in seeking a more moderate compromise. 7-12-48

Northerners Map Program

Northern Liberals, headed by Mayor Hubert H. Humphrey Jr., of Minneapolis, and Representative Emanuel Celler, of New York, adopted a similar tactic. Planning on the premise that a party platform was as open to amendment as was a legislative bill in Congress, they moved to carry their fight over civil rights and other planks to the amendment stage if they deemed it necessary.

This group demanded that at least the four "essentials" of the civil-rights program—anti-poll taxes, anti-lynching, nonsegregation of races in the armed forces, and a Fair Employment Practices Commission—be spelled out in the platform. Anything short of this, they said, meant a fight.

At the same time another group, outside the convention except as to members who were delegates.

served notice that it would move for a floor contest if the civil-rights plank did not satisfy. This group was Americans for Democratic Action, headed by Leon Henderso, former OPA administrator.

The convention group for which Mayor Humphrey and Mr. Celler were spokesmen expected little if any fault with the labor plank, which the seven-member drafting group completed today. It was reported in key quarters to call for outright repeal of the Taft-Hartley Law. 7-12-48

The liberals also expected no cause to revolt concerning the planks dealing with reductions of living costs, inflation curbs, housing and veterans' affairs. Man.

Israel Plank Is Drafted

These planks were said by Senator Francis J. Myers of Pennsylvania, draft group chairman, to have been completed without major contest. Also, he said, the plank concerning Israel had been drafted tentatively and was believed to be free from controversy.

Representative Celler, however, put this plank on the list of possibilities for challenge by the liberal group.

The platform workers were doing their choosing of words and phrases with an apparently clear understanding of President Truman's views on the various paramount issues confronting them. These views had been given personably to Senator Myers by Clark Clifford, the President's counsel, at a conference at the Drake Hotel here shortly before the drafting group resumed today after having worked until 2:30 o'clock this morning. Man.

Mr. Clifford and Senator Myers went over the White House "platform" for more than an hour. Much of the discussion concerned the civil-rights program, and, it was understood, the President was represented as being convinced that he could not run on a weak civil-rights plank. There was no indication, in reports concerning this meeting, however, that the White House had pressed for a specific pltform presentation of the President's entire civil-rights program, point by point. 7-12-48

It appeared, regardless, that demand for a specific presentation of the Truman program would be made by the convention liberal group directly, or by Americans for Democratic Action through delegates in its camp.

Demand for Taft Act Ban

The Times

The A. D. A. claimed to have one hundred twenty-two convention delegates from twenty-three states in its ranks. These delegates, the A. D. A. said, were prepared to wage floor fights if the platform taken before the convention were not "satisfactory" as to these factors: New York N.Y.

An A. D. A. call for a platform statement covering the whole civil-rights program.

Demand for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Law. A pledge for substantial amendment of that law would not be viewed as "satisfactory." Man.

Strong aid to Israel, including financial aid and lifting of the the arms embargo. 7-12-48

Endorsements of extension of the Tennessee Valley Authority and plans for similar authorities in the Missouri and Columbia River valleys.

Senator Meyers, as a careful spokesman for the drafting group, told reporters late today that the platform "will follow generally the New Deal policies" and would be "much more specific on many issues" than was the recently-approved Republican party platform. But he would give no details as to any plank, except to disclose that the one containing the biggest controversy, civil rights, had been shunted aside to become the final drafting effort.

"Rump" Movements Assailed

The Times

Senator Myers showed sharp disapproval as he learned of the organization of "rump" movements within his own drafting body.

"My voting record in Congress is just as liberal as Celler's," he snapped. "There's no need for 'rump' movements." N.Y.

Senator Myers said the first drafting committee of seven members hoped to complete their work "some time during the night," and that the tentative draft would be typed up for presentation as early as possible to the eighten-member committee, also headed by him, from which the smaller group was drawn. Man. 7-12-48

He expressed hope that the eighteen-member committee could complete revisions and approve the draft tomorrow, and forward the document to the full platform committee tomorrow night.

Regularity Vital in South

Fear of Consequences Seen Barring a 'Bolt' By Many Delegations Despite 'Rights' Action

PHILADELPHIA, July 13 — There was early this morning one sentence in the "civil rights" plank in the Democratic platform which, if it stands unmodified in the darft adopted by the Convention, will definitely repudiate the position of most of the Southern states delegates as assumed by their representatives in Congress. The sentence calls on Congress for legislative action in this field, and the contention of the South and many constitutional authorities elsewhere is that such legislation is specifically reserved to the states.

Therefore, though the sentence may be accompanied in the final draft by a reassertion of "states' rights," and an acknowledgment that there are "constitutional limits" to what laws Congress may pass, its effect is that Congress may legislate further in the civil rights area. Since the South denies this, its delegations will be brought to the brink of decision (a) whether to walk out of the convention or (b) whether to remain, oppose the plank, be defeated and stay regular.

As written originally by the subcommittee and phrased by the Administration this sentence was: "We again call on Congress to exercise full authority to the limits of its Constitutional powers to protect these "civil rights." No modifying sentences can change the basic implication in this that Congress, as the President told it on Feb. 2, 1948, constitutionally can and should pass his ten-item civil rights program.

Therefore, walkouts by two or three Southern delegations are confidently expected. But the delegations of Florida, Georgia, Virginia, Texas, North Carolina, Louisiana and Tennessee are as confidently expected to remain in the convention, whatever the final form of the civil rights plank may be. The explanation of this is that, faced with the dread alternative of a bolt, the leaders of the Democratic organizations in these states do not venture to choose it.

Whit Lash of "Regularity"

Even the "half bolt," which was sponsored by Alabama Democrats at the primaries and by Virginia Democrats in the Legislature, is frightening most of its Southern proponents. This is the device whereby, after a state delegation walks out of the convention to avoid participation in the choice of the nominees (which morally binds the party in that state to support them), an independent party ticket is nominated in the state and the electors cast their votes for it instead of for the nominees of the national convention.

Alabama's future Democratic electors are legally pledged to do this. And there are prospects ranging from possible to certain that those of Mississippi, South Carolina and Arkansas will follow suit. But the whip of "regularity" has been lashing self-inflicted blows on the other Southern delegations ever since they arrived here.

Its bitter lash was turned on the Mississippi delegation today in the credentials committee. But by a narrow vote it was decided that no convention rule would justify excluding this group, chosen with complete legality, because it has openly announced it will walk out. If the committee had denied the Mississippi credentials on this ground, or if the convention shall deny them, the influence of the "regularity" argument would lose its force in Southern delegations now accepting it, and in the north and west also. For if a delegation can be rejected on any ground without the existence of a rule to other than improper credentials, authorize such action, then the whip of regularity would lose its lash.

Truman Not Swinging Whip

President Truman is not swinging the whip. It is not his to swing. It comes from long tradition and experience of party politicians, especially in the South where a bolt for generations has carried the stigma of a moral offense, punishable and most often punished by exile from future political position and influence. Questions of principles as to platform and nominee, such as definitely trouble the Southern Democrats this year, generally succumb to the tradition of being "regular."

In the night-long caucus of the Texas delegation that was especially obvious. Overwhelmingly these delegates oppose the President's civil rights program and the legal concept that Congress has any constitutional right to deal with it. They do not want Mr. Truman nominated. They want to give proof of this by voting for some other Democrat on the first ballot. But, above all, the Texans here want to be certain that Democrats at home, many of them ambitious for offices now held by members of the delegation, shall have no basis for the charge that in anything done here was the slightest acceptance of the right to bolt.

This is why the Texans battled over whether a vote on the first ballot for Gov. Ben Laney of Arkansas would be an encouragement of bolting because the Governor announced to them that, while he would not support a Republican, he would not vote for Mr. Truman. Even those who urged a token vote for Governor Laney declined to admit what he said means actually that he will not support the ticket of the National Convention.

To onlookers, thinking of the Texas of romantic and heroic story, it did not seem that these quibbling men and women came from the Lone Star state at all. So much does Democratic party regularity mean in the South, as the ultimate action on the platform, and the degree of southern acceptance, if the call for Congressional or other Federal actionis not excised will make abundantly clear.

States' Rights, Too

But Bitter Battle Seen As Humphrey Issues Call For Direct Pledge

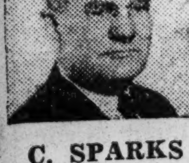
PHILADELPHIA— (AP) — Dixie Democrats marched into Philadelphia Wednesday demanding—as one possible price for recapture of party unity—a hands-off platform policy on Federal civil rights laws and a resounding party plank for states rights.

The race issue plopped before the Democratic platform writers shortly after they convened—five days ahead of the party convention—to begin the task of uniting warring factions on a single statement of party principles.

Chauncey Sparks, former Alabama governor, quickly threw out a hint that if the platform writers "are smart" they may bring some Southerners back into the fold.

Charles E. Shepperd, of Florida, another platform committee member, told reporters: "We want a states rights plank in no uncertain terms—with as little interference of the Federal Government into the internal affairs of the states, as possible."

Two other Dixie members of the platform writing group—Senator Clyde A. Hoey, of North Carolina, and former Governor Dan Moody, of Texas — had different ideas whether the South would accept the general language of the 1944 platform on the race issue.



C. SPARKS

Hoey said he thought so. Moody said he thought not. Sparks said he wanted to doctor that 1944 plank some.

Mon. 7-8-48

But it developed quickly that the Southerners will not have everything their own way—not, at least, without a fight.

Mayor Hubert H. Humphrey, of Minneapolis, a platform committee member, told reporters he is ready to battle for a direct pledge in the platform for anti-lynch, anti-poll tax and Federal fair employment practices legislation. He said 50 prominent Democrats are supporting such a plank.

With loud wails from the South, the Democratic Party split wide open early this year when President Truman proposed such legislation to Congress.

To Be Consulted

U. S. Senator Francis J. Myers of Pennsylvania, chairman of the platform committee, told reporters Mr. Truman undoubtedly will be consulted on the platform before it is presented to the convention. Myers did not venture to say what, if any, influence the President would have in framing the platform.

The 1944 Democratic platform did not mention civil rights legislation. It simply said:

"We believe that racial and religious minorities have the right to live, develop and vote equally with all citizens and share the rights that are guaranteed by our constitution. Congress should exert its full constitutional powers to protect those rights."

Sparks said he is ready to scrap or an amendment to strike out "Congress should exert its full constitutional powers to protect those rights," and insert instead language reiterating "the basic democratic principle of states rights and local self government."

"That's the only thing that will mollify the South," the Alabaman declared, "if these boys (platform writers) are smart, they will do what the South says and they may get some of them back."

The race issue is expected to sizzle in the platform committee today when representatives of Negro groups come forward to present their arguments for a strong civil rights plank. The actual showdown will come when the platform writers meet Saturday behind closed doors to do the actual drafting of the party document of principles.

The civil rights issue first hit the committee Wednesday when Helen Hall, representing the National Federation of Settlements, told the group: "We urge that the recommendations of the President's civil rights commission be made a prime charge on unfinished business not only in the Congress, but in the party convention."

While the race squabble overshadowed all else, the committee heard a score of witnesses proposing various planks. And Mayor Humphrey, of Minneapolis, told his platform writing colleagues to avoid "the willy-nilly double talk" of the Republican platform and do something strong and positive to solve what he termed two of the nation's biggest problems—high living costs and housing.

Democrats Warned By Negroes on Bias

New York Star Thurs. 7-8-48

By ALEXANDER H. UHL
STAR Convention Bureau

PHILADELPHIA, July 7—Nothing less than President Truman's ten-point civil rights program will satisfy representatives of Negro groups now gathering in Philadelphia to appear before the Democratic platform committee, the STAR was informed tonight.

Talk of the possibility of a compromise plank designed to placate Southern Democrats on the most controversial platform issue before the convention, which will open formally on Monday, brought strong denials from liberal members of the committee.

They pointed to the fact that of the 19 members of the drafting committee appointed by Sen. J. Howard McGrath of Rhode Island, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, only five are Southerners.

Celler on Committee

The percentage of liberal Democrats is high, numbering such men as former Gov. Maurice Tobin of Massachusetts, Mayor Hubert H. Humphrey, Jr., of Minneapolis; Rep. Mike Mansfield of Montana; Rep. Emmanuel Celler of New York, and Sen. Theodore F. Green of Rhode Island.

Hearings on the civil rights plank will open tomorrow.

Three days of hearings in preparation for writing of the 1948 Democratic platform opened at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel this morning under the chairmanship of Sen. Francis J. Myers of Pennsylvania.

The Democratic procedure is far different from that of the Republican resolutions committee which met in the same room only three weeks ago. The Republicans had more than 100 members on their committee and split into numerous subcommittees. The Democrats with their smaller committee are meeting as a unit. In addition, there has been far more play of arguments back and forth between witnesses and committee members than among the Republicans.

Domestic Stress

From the line of questioning today, it was clear that the Democratic committee was determined to bring in a platform that would stress domestic issues heavily, particularly the hight cost of living, lack of housing and social legislation. In each case questioning of witnesses by committee members revealed Democratic strategy as being directed against the failure of the Republican-controlled 80th Congress to deal adequately with these questions.

For instance, the witness for the National Association of Manufacturers, Morris Sayre of New York, got a long going-over by committee members who were sharply critical of the program presented by the NAM.

Both Mayor Humphrey and Rep. Celler told Sayre that it was all right to criticize "waste" in government, remarking that everyone was against sin, but wanted to know specifically where he would cut federal expenditures. Together with Chairman Myers and former Governor Tobin, they demanded to know what the NAM and American businessmen were doing about inflation.

Cites GOP Silence

"Here is the problem of inflation, the most important one facing the American people today," Sen. Myers said, "and the Republican platform doesn't even mention it."

Celler, in answer to Sayre's contention that wages had come up as much as prices, read statistics showing that during the past few years the cost of living had gone up 36 per cent, wages 11 per cent and profits 90 per cent.

Sayre insisted that profits were not unduly high and that the way to fight inflation was to cut the cost of government and taxes to increase production.

Brig. Gen. John Thomas Taylor, representing the American Legion, advocated universal military training and was sharply critical of congressional failure to keep up American security measures as he felt that they should be kept up.

Sees Progressive Result

Rep. Celler, at the end of today's hearings, told the Star that he was greatly pleased by the serious and liberal spirit in which the committee had got down to work.

"I feel," he predicted, "that a first-class progressive platform will come out of the committee and that it will be centered on human and social rights and needs."

There were, however, indications that all would not be too smooth sailing, particularly on the civil rights question, which has split the party wide open. Former Gov. Chauncey Sparks of Alabama, who is on the committee, said today that President Truman's only hope of regaining Southern support was to build the 1948 platform on a basis of "states' rights."

"That's the only thing that will mollify the South at all," he said, "and if these boys up here are wise, they'll give the South something."

CIVIL RIGHTS ISSUE SNAGS PLATFORM

July 13-48

Southern Democrats Lay Down Gauge of Battle—Move Is On to Block Floor Fight

New York Times

By C. P. TRUSSELL
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PHILADELPHIA, July 12—The special eighteen-member committee set up to approve the first draft of the 1948 Democratic party platform found itself locked in new conflict over civil rights and labor problems tonight.

It had received from a seven-member group drawn from its own force a complete platform, composed after two days and nights of almost continuous labors. Reaction immediately brought the document under assault on counts principally as follows:

The Civil Rights Plank was denounced by Southern Democrats as being unacceptable. It was declared by Northern Democrats to be too weak, so weak, in fact that a cue for battle was given. The Labor Plank called for outright repeal of the Taft-Hartley law.

The Civil Rights Plank read as follows:

"The Democratic party and the Democratic administrations are solely responsible for the great gains in recent years made in the continuing effort to reduce and eliminate unfair and illegal discrimination based on race, creed or color.

"We have implemented our often-expressed belief that racial and religious minorities had the right to live, develop and vote equally with all citizens and to share the rights guaranteed by the Constitution.

"We again call on Congress to exercise full authority to the limits of its Constitutional powers to protect these rights."

This was a virtual rewriting of the compromised 1944 platform plank. While this had been accepted by Southern Democrats then, it was not put in that category as the South opened its drive for less. Recent controversy had put a new light on it. It had been pronounced by high-ranking Civil Rights proponents as "the foundation" on which President Truman had built his legislative program that set off the 1948 Southern revolt.

The "strong" states' rights clause, which Southerners had sought as an antidote to any Civil Rights plank was lacking in the draft under contest tonight. Instead, the states' rights guarantees were viewed as being only implied through the references to Congressional powers under the Constitution.

Northern liberals, on the other hand, had demanded that at least four of the most controversial points of President Truman's program be set out specifically in the platform. They included an outlawing of poll taxes in Federal elections, Federal anti-lynching legislation, a fair employment practices commission, and non-segregation of the races in the armed forces.

Floor Fight Threatened

Both sides talked again of taking the fight to the convention floor. There was afoot, however, a move within the liberal camp to head off any floor fight over the platform, unless the Southerners started one. It was being argued back stage that if the Southerners started such a fight, they could be voted down promptly and the platform could be rushed through to convention approval.

There remained, however, some belligerent liberals who insisted that the Civil Rights plank be made "stronger" and "put the issues on the line." The Republicans, they pointed out, had gone much further, had set out items of the President's program, though with different words and names, and yet the Democratic plank was implying that Republicans had done nothing in efforts for Civil Rights gains.

The plank on labor, with its declaration for repeal of the Taft-Hartley law caused great surprise and, at points concern, over wide convention areas. While it was recalled that President Truman vetoed the Taft-Hartley legislation in June of 1947, it was recalled also that Congress overrode that veto with the aid of 106 Democratic members of the House and twenty Democratic Senators.

Virtually all of the House Democrats are running for re-election. The seats of ten of the twenty Democratic Senators who helped override the President's veto are in contest in the November elections. Seven of the ten are seeking re-election. Only one of the new Democratic nominees, Clinton Anderson, former Secretary of Agriculture, of New Mexico, has declared for repeal of the labor law. In Texas, all of the several prospective Democratic nominees oppose repeal. In North Carolina, former Gov. J. Melville Broughton, the nominee has not made his position clear. His defeated opponent, Senator William B. Umstead, was fought bitterly by labor for supporting the Taft-Hartley Act.

Senators from South

New York, N.Y.

The seven Senators standing for reelection are all from the South. McClellan of Arkansas, Russell of Georgia, Ellender of Louisiana, Eastland of Mississippi, Maybank of South Carolina, Stewart of Tennessee and Robertson of Virginia.

In the Senate test of the veto, the Democrats were almost evenly divided. As the twenty voted to override, twenty-two voted to sustain the President's action.

In the House a majority of the Democrats, who must stand for reelection every two years or leave that body, voted to override the President. Only 71 of 177 Democrats participating in the veto vote took the side of the White House.

Another controversy within the platform-drafting group focused on the plank covering pledges concerning the new State of Israel. It was being fought in some quarters on two grounds. One was that demand was made for de jure recogniation of the new state at once. The plank proposed that a permanent government be established first.

At another point a promise of unilateral action for lifting of the embargo was sought. The plank would await United Nations action.

The Israel plank reads as follows:

"1. President Truman by granting immediate recognition to Israel, led the world in extending friendliness and welcome to a people who have long sought and justly deserved freedom and independence.

"2. We look forward to extending full and prompt recognition to the permanent government of Israel as soon as it is established.

"3—We affirm our pride, too, that the United States, under the leadership of President Truman, played a leading role in adopting the resolution of Nov. 29, 1947 by the United Nations General Assembly for the creation of a Jewish state.

New York Times

"4—We approve the claims of the State of Israel to the boundaries set forth in the United Nations resolution of Nov. 29 and consider that modification thereof should be made only if fully acceptable to the State of Israel.

"5—We look forward to the admission of the State of Israel to the United Nations and its full particiption in the international community of nations.

"6—We pledge appropriate aid to the State of Israel in developing its economy and resources.

"7—We recognize the right of the State of Israel to secure in the United States and elsewhere the arms and equipment necessary to defend itself, subject only to the decision of the United Nations. Subject thereto, we favor the lifting of the arms embargo to accord to the Satte of Israel the right to defend itself.

New York, N.Y.

"8—We continue to support within the framework of the United Nations the internationalization of Jerusalem and the protection of the Holy places of Palestine.

New York Times

The special eighteen-member group prepared to work through the night, if necessary, to obtain approval of the whole platform, as is was drafted originally or as revised, for presentation to the 108-member Convention Platform Committee tomorrow. Then it will be up to the parent body to accept, revise or reject. The 108-member body is the one which will make the final recommendations to the convention.

Fight Promised On Racial Issue

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, July 7.—Dixie Democrats marched into Philadelphia today demanding—as one possible price for recapture of party unity—a hands-off platform policy on federal civil-rights laws and a resounding party plank for States' rights.

The racial issue was dropped before the Democratic platform writers shortly after they convened—five days ahead of the party convention—to begin the task of uniting warring factions on a single statement of party principles.

Democratic Dilemma In '48 Recalls '60 Platform Battle

Tues. 7-6-48

BY MAX HALL

WASHINGTON, July 5—(AP)—The Democratic Party moved today into what promises to be one of the most hectic periods of its battle-scarred history.

This week a new fight, the battle of the 1948 platform, starts at Philadelphia. A resolutions committee begins work on the document Wednesday, five days before the national convention opens.

At the center of the platform fight will be the question of civil rights. Angry disagreement over that problem is one of the reasons for the current fast-moving drive to draft Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower as the party's candidate.

So it's an important fight and it shows every sign of being a fierce one.

The preliminary uproar over the platform's civil rights plank has been so furious that students of American history can't help thinking of the battle of the 1860 platform. Then, as now, most of the fury came from the South.

1860 Disastrous

The 1860 scrap was the Democrats' most disastrous one. The issue: Extension of slavery into new U. S. soil. Before it ended, the party had broken apart with a historic smash. This opened the way for the election of the first Republican president, Abraham Lincoln.

The 1860 convention met in Charleston, S. C. In that dark and ominous year the nation was divided into several points of view on slavery.

Northern abolitionists wanted to wipe it out wherever it existed.

Abraham Lincoln, an Illinois Republican, disagreed. He wanted only to keep slavery from spreading into new states and territories.

Stephen A. Douglas, an Illinois Democrat, took another view: Leave it up to the people in each new territory whether they got slavery or not.

But Southern Democrats demanded that slavery be permitted in all new areas. At Charleston, a majority of the resolutions committee brought forth a platform containing that view.

Birmingham Herald

Savage Debate Held

However, a savage debate was held on the convention floor—just as a convention debate over civil rights may be held at Philadelphia next week—and the majority report was beaten.

Instead, the convention went along with Douglas and adopted a platform which avoided any specific declaration on slavery.

This action caused the delegates from seven Southern states to walk out, and the convention adjourned in confusion.

(Some of the Southern delegates have threatened to walk out of the Philadelphia convention, too, but no such exodus as that of 1860 seems likely.)

The 1860 Democrats met again at Baltimore. Five more Southern states walked out. The delegations that remained nominated Douglas for president.

The delegation that bolted held their own convention at Richmond and nominated John C. Breckenridge, of Kentucky.

This party crack-up handed the brand-new Republican Party the election on a platter after 60 years of almost unbroken Democratic rule.

Today there is no slavery issue and the Civil War of 1861-1865 is rumbling far back in the cool caverns of history.

But the civil rights fight is like the slavery issue in that it takes place in the emotional arena of race relations.

7-6-48

What's it all about?

Civil Rights Urged

President Truman sent a message to Congress last Feb. 2, urging "modern, comprehensive civil rights laws." He said, "We must correct the remaining imperfections in our practice of democracy."

Many Southern public men raised objections to that program. In fact, they raised the roof.

They accused the president of seeking only to please Northern Negro voters. They said such laws are unconstitutional, and violate the principle of states' rights.

Now they want to keep a civil rights program out of the 1948 platform. Many of them, wanting to keep Mr. Truman out of the White House, are helping push the fast-moving Eisenhower bandwagon.

What did Mr. Truman propose, that caused all the fuss? Here is the 10-point civil rights program he offered to Congress:

1. Create a permanent commission on civil rights, a joint congressional committee on civil rights, and a civil rights division in the Justice Department.
2. Strengthen the present laws which are designed to safeguard people's constitutional rights.
3. Enact a specific federal law against lynching.
4. Protect more adequately the right to vote; for example, pass a federal law saying people shall not be deprived of the vote in federal elections merely because they haven't paid poll taxes.
5. Enact a fair employment practice law, prohibiting discrimination by employers and unions on account of race, color, religion or national origin.
6. Prohibit racial segregation on interstate transportation facilities.
7. Give the District of Columbia home rule and the right to vote.
8. Statehood for Hawaii and Alaska; more self-government for island possessions.
9. Equalize the opportunities for various groups of residents to become naturalized citizens.
10. Settle evacuation claims of Japanese-Americans.

Dixie Democrats Are Called Bigots

Southerner Predicts Compromise On Racial Issue In Platform

Fri. 7-9-48

From Wire Dispatches.

Philadelphia, July 8.—Southern Democrats held their fire today as a Negro leader called them "bigots" and demanded that President Truman's civil-rights program be written into the 1948 Democratic platform.

The Southerners generally kept quiet. But one of them predicted that a compromise will be reached in the battle over racial issues which has started a small war within the Democratic Party.

Confident of Agreement.

U. S. Senator Clyde R. Hoey of North Carolina told a reporter:

"I am confident that we can reach an agreement on civil rights that will be satisfactory to President Truman and probably satisfactory to the South. We do not, however, expect to satisfy the extreme elements of either end."

Another Southerner, Senator Sparkman of Alabama, said a strong civil-rights plank in the party's platform might provoke a walkout of Southern delegates to next week's Democratic National Convention.

The party platform writers hoped, however, to avert a walkout.

Walter White, New York, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, told the Democratic platform-drafting committee:

"The Democratic Party has been too much dominated by those who have attained and held power through disfranchisement, lynching, and racial discrimination. The day of reckoning has come when the Democratic Party must decide whether it is going to permit bigots to dictate its philosophy. . ."

7-9-48

Predicts Switch By Negroes.

Guy R. Brewer of the National Partisan Committee for Civil Rights Legislation told the platform builders that "the Negro people will switch to a third party" if the Democrats "pussyfoot" on the civil-rights issue as he said the Republicans did.

The C.I.O. also urged that the Truman program be adopted—including laws to ban poll taxes, lynching, and racial discrimination in hiring. This is the program the Southern Democrat leaders don't like.

The C.I.O. asked the Democrats to adopt a "Roosevelt platform." And the C.I.O. spokesman, Secretary - Treasurer James B. Carey, rapped the 1948 Republican platform as "one of deceit, designed to fool the people." He said there is nothing in the G.O.P. platform that attracts the interest of labor.

Asks Repeal of Taft Law.

Joseph A. Beirne, president of the Communications Workers of America (independent), also asked for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Law and proposed a lot of other planks. But unlike the C.I.O. he said nothing about lynching, poll taxes, and fair-employment practices.

Dr. Channing H. Tobias, a Negro religious leader from New York, appeared with White. They said they spoke for 21 national Negro organizations with 6,000,000 members.

The handful of Southerners on the committee said not a word. Senator Hoey told reporters today, "There is no use stirring up the issue. You can't convert a witness anyhow."

Dr. Tobias Quotes Willkie.

That decision doesn't mean there won't be a fight over the civil-rights plank. It merely means that the fight may not be exposed to the public gaze.

Courier-Journal

The drafting committee of 19 members will end its hearing tomorrow. It will spend Saturday and maybe Sunday writing a document.

Then, probably Monday, this document will go before the full resolutions committee. Tuesday the document will be offered to the convention. Whether there is an open struggle in the convention depends on what sort of compromises are reached in the committee sessions.

Dr. Tobias began his testimony by quoting a Republican, the late Wendell Willkie. The quotation:

"The Constitution of the United States nowhere makes provision for first- and second-class citizens."

Louisville, Ky.

White Attacks 1944 Plank.

The witness said the whole civil-rights issue is simple:

"Either Negro Americans are citizens of the United States or they are not. If they are, they are entitled to all the rights of citizenship. If they are not, it is only fair that the Government publish to the entire world that we have two classes of citizens."

And White said certain elements of the Democratic Party—"forces of reaction and bigotry"—are demanding that the convention adopt a civil-rights plank no stronger than the 1944 plank. White said the 1944 plank was an "evasion" of the issue and is "wholly unsatisfactory."

White said he wanted to remind the Democratic Party that there is not only a "potential" of 3,000,000 Negro votes in Northern and border states this year but also "every likelihood of an additional million Negro voters in the Southern states."

A number of other organizations urged a strong civil-rights pledge.

Philadelphia, July 14.—"Humphrey was here!"

This succinct announcement, printed in black letters on white stickers, put in its appearance at the National Democratic Convention last Sunday.

It was plastered on the sides of hotel lobbies and on elevators and lamp posts.

Today it was plastered on the convention itself.

The civil rights planks of the party platform have stuck all over them the blunt declaration, "Humphrey was here."

The 37-year-old mayor of Minneapolis, Hubert H. Humphrey, jr., left his indelible mark on this gathering. It is a mark that makes him, overnight, one of the coming leaders of his party. He definitely is "on his way."

Due more to him than to any other one man the Democratic platform carries the resounding plank that commits the party to support the President in working for "(1) the right of full and equal political participation, (2) the right to equal opportunity of employment, (3) the right of security of person, (4) and the right of equal treatment in the service and defense of our Nation."

Humphrey worked for that plank from the time he got here. He got half of his draft in the platform reported by the majority of the resolutions committee. Then, on Tuesday night, the Minnesota delegation instructed him to fight for the full plank with its four principles. Humphrey made his fight in committee and lost. Then he carried it to the floor. He made a ringing speech for it. That speech touched off a resounding demonstration. Thu. 7-15-48

Philadelphia, July 14 —The Democratic convention today called for suffrage for the people of the District.

The call was sounded when the convention adopted the hotly contested 1948 platform of the Democratic Party including this section:

"We favor the extension of the right of suffrage to the people of the District of Columbia."

The same plank was carried four years ago in the Democratic Party platform.

Republicans last month wrote into their 1948 platform a plank saying "we favor self-government for the residents of the Nation's Capital."

There was no floor fight today over the District plank. The plank was backed unanimously by the 12-member District delegation, and was sponsored in the platform drafting by Brig. Gen. Albert L. Cox, and Mrs. Ernest K. Lindley, District delegates.

Their work was warmly applauded by their colleagues by a formal resolution of appreciation adopted in a morning caucus of the District delegation.

Services of John Watttawa as chairman, and Mrs. Kathleen Louchheim as secretary were also applauded by similar resolutions of thanks.

Platform Draft Said To Oppose Labor Law

Courier-Journal, Louisville, Ky.

Tues. 7-13-48

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, July 12.—A first draft of the 1948 Democratic platform today was reported to pledge repeal of the Taft-Hartley Law. It also was said to contain a racial plank that doesn't promise any specific civil-rights laws.

Labor-union people at the Democratic convention were pleased at the widespread reports of the Taft-Hartley repeal pledge.

Neither Southerners nor Northerners seemed pleased with the civil-rights plank, which was said to be about as general as the plank of four years ago.

Chauncey Sparks, former Alabama Governor, was one of the first to comment on the reported civil-rights plank. "It don't suit," he declared.

All platform language so far is subject to many changes before the campaign document is complete. But word got around that the first draft, besides dealing with the labor law and civil rights, included:

1. Support for sending United States arms to Israel, "subject only to the decision of the United Nations."
2. An anti-inflation program which blames the Republicans for high prices.
3. A foreign-policy plank that reaffirms the European Recovery Program. 7-13-48
4. Federal aid to education.
5. A long-range housing program, including federally financed housing.

Convention delegates waited anxiously to see whether the racial issue would be aired in public.

That question teetered in the balance as a committee of 18 took over the job of writing the party platform after a committee of seven had completed the tentative draft.

The committee of 18, in turn, will hand the task to the full platform committee of 108 delegates, probably tomorrow. When the committee of 108 gets through, it will hand its finished product to the whole convention for approval. 7-13-48

Peacemakers of the party worked hard to get a north-south agreement on the civil-rights plank in order to make a show of a solid front.

1944 Plank Was General.

The document prepared by the committee of seven was as closely guarded as a D-Day war secret. Also, it was so tentative that the civil-rights plank could change three times—on three different levels—before the platform became final.

Despite the secrecy, word got around that version No. 1 contained a civil-rights plank very much like the one in the 1944 platform.

The 1944 plank was pretty general and might be acceptable to many Southern leaders, though not to some Northerners who are demanding that the party promise federal laws against lynching, poll taxes, and racial discrimination in jobs.

That document said:

"We believe that racial and religious minorities have the right to live, develop, and vote equally with all citizens and share the rights that are guaranteed by our Constitution. Congress should exert its full constitutional powers to protect those rights."

States'-Rights Plank Out?

There was also a report that version No. 1 did not contain a states'-rights plank sought by Southern delegates. Such an omission would irk the Southerners and please those who believe the Federal Government should expand its authority.

A convention delegate who declined to be quoted by name told a reporter he understood the committee of seven had worded the civil-rights plank this way:

"The Democratic Party and the Democratic Administration are solely responsible for the great gains in recent years made in the continuing effort to reduce and eliminate unfair and illegal discrimination based on race or creed or color.

"We have implemented our often-expressed belief that racial and religious minorities have the right to live, develop, and vote equally with all citizens, and to share the rights guaranteed by the Constitution. 7-13-48

"We again call on Congress to exert its full authority to the limits of those constitutional powers to protect those rights."

Delegates like Mayor Hubert Humphrey of Minneapolis, Representative Emmanuel Celler of New York, and ex-Governor Maurice Tobin of Massachusetts want a stronger plank than that.

They are fighting for a plank resembling President Truman's 10-point civil-rights program which he sent to Congress February 2.

If a floor debate takes place, it may be started by the Northern group or by the Southerners, depending on the way the civil-rights plank reads when it goes before the convention.

Perhaps the key to the situation is Truman himself.

It is his program that is the center of the fight. If he should throw his weight behind a compromise plan, he might be able to avert a floor debate.

The Republican Party adopted a civil-rights plank in June which says "we favor" a prompt law to end lynching, the abolition of poll taxes as a requisite to voting, and the enactment of "such federal legislation as may be necessary" to maintain the right of equal opportunity to work.

The G.O.P. plank says also, "We are opposed to the idea of racial segregation in the armed services."

Negroes Warn Democrats

C.I.O. News

Here is part of a statement read to the Democratic Platform Committee by Walter White, executive secretary, Nat'l Association for Advancement of Colored People. The statement was made in the name of the Continuation Committee of 21 Negro Organizations:

342

We appear today on behalf of 21 national Negro organizations with a combined membership of 6,084,000. Representatives of these organizations have unanimously adopted a "Declaration of Negro Voters." 7-13-48

We come before the Platform Committee with few illusions. We know, as does everyone, that the Democratic party is torn by schisms. The chief factor creating that division is civil rights.

Certain elements of the party have for years maintained themselves in power by denial of human rights and the violation of every guaranty of the Constitution. These forces of bigotry are demanding that this convention evade this basic issue and express no stronger sentiment for civil rights then the 1944 platform plank.

C.I.O. News

We wish to say that the 1944 evasion will be wholly unsatisfactory in 1948. Human events, not only within Continental U.S. but throughout the world, have moved measurably forward.

7-13-48

Lynching, disfranchisement, inequality of educational and economic opportunity, racial segregation in the armed services, transportation and other fields not only embitter those discriminated against but also constitute a strain upon the honor of America throughout the world.

C.I.O. News

The day of reckoning has come when the party must decide whether it is going to permit bigots to dictate its philosophy or whether the party can rise to the heights of Americanism which alone can justify its continued existence. 7-13-48

The party must move forward or perish. The fate not only of the party itself but possibly that of America depends upon you.

We, therefore, respectfully but firmly insist that the Democratic Platform Committee can include nothing less than the full recommendations of the President's Committee on Civil Rights.

TAFT ACT REPEAL URGED

34

Rise in Wage Floor to 75c an Hour Is Asked—Unsettled Points Bring Night Session

By C. P. TRUSSELL

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PHILADELPHIA, July 13—Sustaining the surprise recommendations of its platform-drafting subgroups, the 108-member resolutions committee of the Democratic National Convention called upon its party today to pledge itself to outright repeal of the Taft-Hartley labor law and to a rise of the legal minimum wage from 40 cents to at least 75 cents an hour.

The resolutions body was passing on a complete 1948 platform which had been submitted by a special eighteen-member subcommittee, which, in turn, had passed on a draft proposed by a seven-member group selected from its numbers. As the parent body plowed through the fourteen-page proposed draft, it was reported to have made many changes, some of them material.

A complete, revised platform was expected to be made ready for delivery to, and action by the convention tomorrow.

Inflation Curb Pledged

Wed. 7-14-48

With many issues, some of high controversial content, lying ahead, the committee late tonight had given what appeared to be final approval to a foreign-relations plank giving firm and unconditional support to the Truman Doctrine and the Marshall Plan.

The platform pledged the party to "curb the Republican inflation," to enact comprehensive housing legislation, reduce taxes "whenever it is possible to do so without unbalancing the nation's economy," with concentration of benefits on low-income groups.

Approval of the labor plank was given by the 108-member committee without concerted protest, even from the South, which has supported the labor-relations measure of 1947 and fought the legal increase in the wage floor. It was taken also in the light of the fact that when President Truman vetoed the Taft-Hartley bill thirteen months ago, 126 of 219 Democrats in Congress who participated in the test of the White House disapproval voted to override it and put the law on the books.

As the platform body worked into the night to complete its recommendations of promises and declarations for the 1948 campaign, it also overrode State Department suggestions regarding pledges to the new state of Israel. Lifting of the embargo on sending arms to Israel was demanded.

Further, it withheld from platform controversy, for the time being at least, the issue of state or Federal Government authority over rich tidelands off coastal and Gulf States.

The civil rights issue, the most explosive facing the platform body, was once again under hot contest behind closed doors, with the platform having been made "the last stand" of the South in its revolt against President Truman.

Liberals of the North and West, however, appeared to be in the saddle. In the first subcommittee test, the South had obtained only by implication, spokesmen held, a states' rights clause which might offset the civil-rights drive. In the second subcommittee test, the states' rights clause disappeared and the civil rights plank was altered to demand specific Federal action (principally Congressional) on such issues as poll taxes, lynching, employment practices where racial questions were involved, and segregation within the armed forces.

As civil rights went to the full resolutions body for final recommendation, a stronger plank was put up for approval.

South Gets Tidelands Silence

At a late hour tonight, with the battle still joined in committee, the South appeared to have won only one point and lost several on civil rights, states' rights and labor fronts. Its gain was through negation. Agreement was reached that there would be no tidelands plank in the platform.

The tidelands issue concerns submerged areas off coastal states. Many have valuable oil and other deposits which have been leased by these states to private enterprise for royalties and other revenues. The United States Supreme Court has ruled that the Federal Government has prevailing authority over such lands.

There has been much fighting in Congress on the issue. President Truman has vetoed one bill designed to "return" jurisdiction to the states. More bills are scheduled for the Eighty-first Congress.

Before the convention, Harold L. Ickes, former Secretary of the Interior, proposed that under Federal lease, funds could be built up for aid to education, or other similar purposes, in all states. This promised fiery controversy in the present convention. The South made state jurisdiction one of its chief issues on which to make its "last stand."

It still was possible, if not probable, that the issue would go to floor contest, despite the lack of committee recommendations. There was threatened, too, a floor showdown on another proposal which the platform drafters ignored, a Federal sweepstakes drawing. Its sponsor, former Lieut. Gov. Francis E. Kelly of Massachusetts, a convention delegate, said he would offer his plan as an amendment to the platform.

How much fighting there would be on the convention floor, if any, was a guess. Predictions came from liberal quarters that there would be none. This conclusion was drawn from the victories they seem to have won in the earlier stages of the contest in camera.

"Ugly" Quarreling Reported

Late tonight, however, the quarreling within the committee room in the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel over civil rights was described by delegates emerging temporarily as "ugly."

Before the large group was a proposed plank which followed the pattern sought by Americans for Democratic Action, a liberal organization headed by Leon Henderson, former price administrator. Sponsoring it in committee was Mayor Hubert H. Humphrey Jr. of Minneapolis, national vice chairman of ADA.

Seeking to spell out Democratic party pledges on civil rights, it focused on four principal points of the civil rights program of President Truman which had led to the Southern revolt against him. These points have been identified generally as calling for Federal action to do these things:

Enact legislation to outlaw poll taxes as a condition for voting in Federal elections.

Establish a permanent Fair Employment Practices Commission.

Punish by Federal law those participating in lynchings.

Abolish racial segregation in the armed forces.

What the ADA Would Write

The Humphrey-ADA amendment set the platform issue out as follows:

"The Democratic party is responsible for the great civil-rights gains made in recent years in eliminating unfair and illegal discrimination based on race, creed or color.

"The Democratic party commits itself to continuing its efforts to eradicate all racial, religious [illegible] economic discrimination.

"We again state our belief that racial and religious minorities must have the right to live, the right to work, the right to vote, the full and equal protection of the laws, on a basis of equality with all citizens as guaranteed by the Constitution.

"To secure these rights, we pledge ourselves to support Federal action to guarantee to all Americans:

"1. Personal safety from the brutal crime of lynching and mob violence.

"2. Equal opportunity in employment.

"3. Full and free political participation.

"4. Equal treatment in the armed forces."

21 Negro Groups, CIO Sound Call For Civil Rights Plant; Laborite Says GOP Of Little Interest To Unionists

BY MAX HALL

PHILADELPHIA, July 8—(AP)—Outright endorsement of President Truman's civil rights program was demanded at Democratic platform hearings today.

More than a score of Negro organizations called for a plank embodying Mr. Truman's program, including anti-lynch, anti-poll tax and fair employment (FEPC) legislation.

The News

One organizaiton, the National Negro Council, asked the platform writes to endorse an immediate call of the 80th Congress into special session to enact civil rights legislation.

Birmingham, Ala.

Before flareup of the race issue which has rifted the Democratic Party, the Congress of Industrial Organizations (CIO) called for adoption of a "Roosevelt platform" and denounced the Republican platform as "one of deceit."

Thurs.

James B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer, also asked for civil rights, demanded repeal of the Taft-Hartley act and extension of "New Deal" social laws. Responding to a platform committee member's question, Carey stated:

"There is nothing in the Republican platform that attracts the interest of labor.'

Walter White, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, submitted a statement on behalf of 21 Negro organizations, declaring:

"The day of reckoning has come when the Democratic Party must decide whether it is going to permit bigots to dictate its philosophy and policy or whether the party can rise to the heights of Americanism which alone can justify its continued existence."

White's statement concluded:

'We, therefore, urge and insist that the platform of the 1948 Democraitc convention endorse without equivocation the entire program of the President's Committee on Civil Rights and especially those provisions to suppress lynching and mob violence, to ban the poll tax as a voting requirement, to afford equality of job opportunity and to abolish discrimination and segregation in the armed services, education and transportation.

"In addition, we urge that the platform pledge the full weight of the Democratic Party to the amendment of the Senate rules to envoke cloture by a majority vote in order that filibusters which have disgraced America far too long, may be stopped in the U. S. Senate."

AN ORGANIZATION IDENTIFYING itself as the Civil Rights Congress demanded that the convention refuse to seat delegates "who are elected by poll-tax vote or who are members or supporters of the Ku Klux Klan."

The News

Southern members indicate they will submit these witnesses to vigorous cross examination.

Walter White's statement reminded the Democratic Party that Negroes hold the balance of voting power in many congressional districts and in some Northern states. He said:

Thurs. 7-8-48

"The Negro vote in 12 of these states with a total of 228 Electoral College votes exceeds the margin necessary to alter the states' votes in the Electoral College.

"These states are Ohio, Indiana New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania. Illinois. Michigan. Missouri Delaware, Maryland, West Virginia and Kentucky."

BULLETIN

Philadelphia, July 7 (AP)—The race issue was dumped into laps of Democratic platform writers today. Helen Hall speaking for the National Federation of Settlements, told the platform committee: "We urge that the recommendations of the President's civil rights commission be made a prime charge on unfinished business not only in the congress but in the party convention."

PHILADELPHIA, July 7 (AP)—The American Farm Bureau federation asked the Democratic party today to pledge a new governmental attack on the problem of rising prices.

Opening hearings on the 1948 Democratic platform, H. E. Slusher, a member of the board of the farm organization, proposed specifically that congress set up a national monetary commission to find ways of stabilizing prices.

"A democracy of free enterprise cannot flourish and may not even survive continuing fluctuation of the general price level," said Slusher. He is president of the farm bureau in President Truman's home state of Missouri.

Hope To Win Votes

Thus the farm leader brought up an issue with which Democrats hope to win votes in November. Mr. Truman and other Democratic leaders have blamed the Republican congress for swelling prices since war time controls were dropped. Daily Tribune

The Democratic platform drafters got off to a quiet, friendly start. But beneath it was an air of expectancy. Sharp and perhaps bitter battles appeared to be shaping up over civil rights and labor planks. Thurs.

Sen. Myers of Pennsylvania, chairman of the 18 member committee, told newsmen Mr. Truman undoubtedly will be consulted on the document before it is presented to the party's convention next week. 7-8-48

Want To Avoid Fight

"I think he should be consulted before the platform is presented formally to the convention," Myers added.

Myers said the platform writers "quite naturally would like to avoid a convention floor fight on the platform. We are aiming at unanimous approval without compromising on issues."

Another early witness—Morris Sayre, representing the National Association of Manufacturers—touched upon the international situation. He urged a plank pledging American co-operation with other peoples to maintain "peace and human freedom."

On domestic issues, Sayre objected to peace time government controls, either direct or indirect, over "wages, prices, production, distribution, or consumption." Daily Tribune

Revision Of Tax Laws

He also urged overhauling of tax laws to increase volume of investment funds. He said money is needed to spur greater industrial production. Chicago, Ill.

The fireworks on civil rights and labor were set for tomorrow and Friday. Tomorrow's schedule calls for a parade of witnesses on the question of whether the the party should commit itself to President Truman's civil rights program—to which southern Democrats object violently—or strike a compromise. Thurs.,

Set for Friday was an airing of views of labor leaders on the Taft-Hartley labor act. They have demanded its repeal. 7-8-48

The Bogey from Star Fri. 7-9-48

Perry
New York, N.Y.

The Democratic Party has nothing whatever to lose by writing into its 1948 platform the stoutest civil rights plank its scribes can phrase. It can spell out anti-poll tax, anti-lynching, fair employment safeguards at no risk. It couldn't even claim "courage" for saying these things, which are right. The Southerners aren't going over to Dewey and Warren for anything the platform says.

The party's draftsmen would need to be white-feathered indeed to be much impressed, much less intimidated, by the medicine show the Ben Laneys and Fielding Wrights have been staging. This spectacle borrows directly from the old Ku Klux tricks of gulping whole buckets of water at a time. The trick is worn out. The pig-bladders under the night shirts were punctured in 1936, '40 and '44.

FDR Led the Way

Roosevelt was for the civil rights before Harry Truman was "born." The people of the South (not the Wrights and Laneys) loved him and do still. The Ku Klux marched against him lonely and in vain. It ought not to be difficult for the party leaders at Philadelphia to comprehend that the problem, as far as the South is concerned, is not the platform, but the man. Star New York, N.Y.

It is exactly a problem of offering a candidate for the presidency whose qualities hold promise of over-reaching the very politicians who are crying loudest against the Truman program of civil rights. Roosevelt was cherished for those qualities. His triumphs over the political bourbons were the people's triumphs. The South is conscious of many arrearages in its claims upon the "American standard of living" and long ago despaired of coming forward through the ineffective representation of its prejudice-ridden legislators in the state capitals and in Washington. That is why its hopes are fixed upon a strong friend in the White House; that is why—and not because of any egalitarian pronouncements he has made—it has no heart for Harry Truman in 1948.

Fear of Reaction
Star

The Laneys and the Fieldings have done their best to make the name of Truman a hissing in the Southern States. They have not succeeded. The Southern people are far fairer in their judgment. They grant the President all that he is due for trying in the right road: they simply see in him no leadership, either as candidate or as president, capable of restarting the progress of government from which they gained such an awareness of advancing well-being after 1933. New York, N.Y.

The South will support Truman if it has to; that is it will not go against him. But his insistence upon the nomination lies like lead upon the outlook of a people who have more reason than those of any other section to dread a long day of reaction in the national government. These are the people who for the past two generations, under a peculiar political system that disfranchises the masses, have had little experience of anything but reactionary governments at home. Fri. 7-9-48

No matter what platform the Democratic party writes at Philadelphia, Mr. Truman would be unable to rouse the enthusiasm of the masses of the South. The Southern people would stand up and shout and fight, on the other hand, for a strong candidate—a Douglas or another—no matter how strong or weak the platform the convention puts together.

In this circumstance, there is every reason why the platform should be stout. The party has nothing to lose by naming the civil liberties toward the southern exposure, and perhaps everything to gain in the other directions. It could go down with Truman or any other on such a platform and hope to rise again ere long upon its principles. But if it goes down bowing to the Southern bogey in its platform, it will have sacrificed its self-respect to no purpose and earned a sentence to oblivion on sheer grounds of moral cowardice.

"The Democratic Party commits itself to continuing its efforts to eradicate all racial, religious and economic discrimination.

"We again state our belief that racial and religious minorities must have the right to live, the right to work, the right to vote. the full and equal protection of the laws, on a basis of equality with all citizens as guaranteed by the Constitution.

'44 PLANK IS FAVORED

Party Leaders Hope To Calm Southerners—Committee Will Act Today

The Commercial Appeal

By FREDERIC TUTTLE
International News Service Writer

PHILADELPHIA, July 10.—Democratic platform drafters deferred tackling the dynamite-packed civil rights issue Saturday in the face of threats by no-compromise anti-Jim Crow forces to carry their fight to the convention floor.

Mayor Hubert Humphrey of Minneapolis warned that the civil rights plank "will be right down the line" with President Truman's no-discrimination program or "we will fight it out before the entire conclave."

Southerners Make Demands

Humphrey, a committeeman, made his statement as antiTruman Southerners were insisting on a separate states rights declaration as the price of approving a compromise civil rights plank and not bolting the convention.

Despite Humphrey's threat, signs multiplied that the civil rights plank would be similar to the 1944 declaration indorsing the principles of anti-racial discrimination, but avoiding mention of legislation to bring these about.

Democratic National Chairman J. Howard McGrath insisted the 1944 plank is "sufficient" backing for the President's program, and said it would "reduce floor trouble to a minimum."

The chairman said he would not "resist" a states rights plank if it "does not nullify the force and effect of the civil rights plank."

Issue Comes Up Today

Senator Myers (Penn.), chairman of the Drafting Committee and of a select five-member group drawing up a tentative platform, said the civil rights problem probably would be tackled last, "sometime tomorrow."

But veteran politicians said even a states rights declaration may fail to appease some of the die-hard Southern "rebels," who split violently with President Truman months ago over his anti-discrimination program.

Charles E. Shepperd, Florida member of Myers' platform drafting group, declared:

"Most, if not all, of the Southern delegates would be content to accept the 1944 plank and civil rights if accompanied by a strong plank on the fundamental doctrine of states rights."

The Press on Democratic Rights' Plank

Afro-American
Baltimore, Md.
Sat. 7-17-48

By the NNPA News Service

The New York Herald Tribune sees the fight over civil rights and states' rights in the three-day Democratic national convention in Philadelphia last week as having far-reaching repercussions in the Democratic party.

Commenting editorially last Friday, under the caption "Civil Rights vs. State Rights," the Herald Tribune said:

"The present intro-party fight will have consequences which may be far-reaching for the Democrats, both in the campaign and afterwards. Meanwhile, there stands in the platform, achieved against great odds, forthright and heartening a declaration as any American could wish for.

"He would be a partisan indeed who took pleasure in the anguish and internal confusion which the civil rights plank must cost the Democrats, without being capable of genuine satisfaction in its reaffirmation of principles."

Tribune Charges Hypocrisy

The Chicago Tribune of last Friday saw the civil rights debate in the Democratic national convention as lacking candor, charging both southern and northern Democrats with hypocrisy.

The Southerners talk of States' rights, the Tribune said editorially under the caption, "Civil Rights," was "to conceal their real purpose, which is to prevent the Federal government from using whatever authority it has to better the conditions of colored people." Northern Democrats, the Tribune charged, were motivated by a desire to win state and local elections in November. The editorial said:

"Any one who really wants to do something to establish the civil rights of the Southern colored citizens will find the formula spelled out in the 14th Amendment. A state which denied or in any way abridges the right of citizens to vote can have its representation in Congress, and therefore its voice in the electoral college, reduced in proportion to the number of citizens so deprived. 'The Congress shall have power to enforce by appropriate legislation the provisions of this article,' the Amendment concludes.

"Action along these lines never could be criticized as unreasonable, unjust or unconstitutional."

No Stronger Than GOP

The Cleveland Pain Dealer of last Thursday, discussing "Platform Differences," said:

"The Democratic plank on civil rights even with the strengthening suppplied on the convention floor, was no stronger than, if actually it was as strong, as the Republican plank. The latter was at least specific in its opposition 'to the idea of segregation in the armed forces of the United States and in its advocacy of abolition of the poll tax. The Democratic delegates at least recognized Mr. Truman's program. The civil rights plank of both parties call for, in glittering generalities, equality of opportunity to earn a living."

The Newark Evening News of last Thursday, discussing Mr. Truman as a fighting candidate, took a different view of the civil rights plank.

Afro-American

Glad South Failed

After pointing out that the Southern States, which refused to vote for him, was attempting to warn all further Democratic candidates for President not to venture to deal with Southern treatment, social or political, of colored people, the Newark Evening News said:

Baltimore, md.

"The attempt to warn off Mr. Truman failed, and it is well that it failed. The civil rights plank, as adopted, is sweeping, denouncing, as it does, all interference with the right to vote, all forms of violence and all forms of discrimination, either in private business or in the armed services of the United States."

The Brooklyn Eagle of last Thursday, under the caption "Courageous Civil Rights Plank Marks Democratic Platform," saw the controversy as "a fight to the bitter end on a delicate principle" and praised President Truman for precipitating the fight by promulgation of his civil rights program. The Eagle said:

Sat. 7-24-48

Platform Commands Respect

"This triumph of a great principle changes the character of the Philadelphia convention even though it may not improve its prospects of victory in November. It gives to the candidacy of President Truman the benefits of a platform which commands respect for the moral courage it reflects and which also deals adequately with most of the dominant domestic and foreign issues."

The Baltimore Sun of last Thursday saw the convention debate over states' rights and civil rights as "a grateful surprise." Terming the action of the convention in rejecting the states' rights proposals and strengthening the innocuous civil rights plank, reported by the Resolutions Committee, as noteworthy, the Sun said:

"What this may mean in terms of the future of the Democratic party, which has relied for so long on a solid South, will not be apparent immediately. That question aside, the fact remains that the debate and the vote were extradordinary. For a few hours the traditional hullabaloo, the brassiness, the vulgarity, the cynicism and the syntheitc enthusiasm which we associate with a national convention, gave ground to real debate on a real issue."

Branded As Amateurish

The Philadelphia Inquirer of last Thursday branded the Democratic platform as "an amateurish attempt at a catch-all device to lure votes," and accused the Resolutions Committee of seeking to compromise "even with bigots and Ku Kluxers of the South, by means of a statement on civil rights that would have talked sweetly of equality for all men but actually done nothing about it."

The Inquirer added that "Not because of anything the leaders did, but in spite of them, the Democratic platform possesses at least the merit of a plank committing the party to support of Mr. Truman's program against lynching, poll taxes and segregation and in favor of equal employment opportunities for minority groups."

Civil Rights Backers Urge Strong Plank In Demo Platform

Daily Worker
New York, N.Y.
Fri. 7-9-48

By Walter Lowenfels

PHILADELPHIA, July 8.—Despite a blunt warning from one witness that straddling on civil rights would send voters "in unprecedented numbers" to the third party, the Democratic national convention's platform committee appeared today to be heading for a "compromise" that would ditch civil rights to appease Southern Democrats.

Sen. Francis Myers, Platform Committee chairman, and himself a civil rights supporter, indicated one possible solution might be to dump the controversial issue into President Truman's lap. He told reporters that the President will have the final say on the 1948 Democratic platform, including the civil rights plank before it is submitted to next week's convention.

Some observers thought this might pave the way to a "compromise" plank that would evade specific commitments, with a statement from Truman reiterating his civil rights program.

Throughout the day, the 19 members of the Platform Committee sat in silence, and there was practically no questioning of witnesses. Senator Clyde Hoey of North Carolina indicated to reporters that there had been an agreement not to have witnesses questioned during the open hearing but to hear the testimony and then settle the matter in closed committee sessions."

"What's the use of riling witnesses?" he said to reporters as he flattened his wing collar and patted his cutaway during a recess. "You cannot convert a witness."

However, a parade of witnesses appeared before the committee demanding action.

WARNS COMMITTEE

Guy Brewer, speaking for the National Non-Partisan Committee, which sponsored last month's Civil Rights protest march to Washington, told the committee:

Daily Worker

"I warn you that if you pussyfoot as the Republican Party platform does, my people will cry a plague on both your houses and flock in unprecedented numbers to the new third party." Brewer identified himself as a former New York State Democratic Committeeman and former Tammany Hall leader.

New York, N.Y.

The Civil Rights Congress asked immediate action by the convention itself in refusing to seat poll-tax delegates elected by poll tax votes or who support the KKK.

The CRC called on the administration to use its full police power to allow Negroes to vote in the South. The CRC also demanded immediate withdrawal of all injunction proceedings now pending against unions; revocation of the President's "loyalty" order; immediate dissolution of the House Un-American Committee and investigation and indictment of its members who have conspired to violate the Constitution. It also joined most of the other groups in urging repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act.

CAREY SPEAKS

James Carey, international secretary - treasurer, presented the whole CIO program, and urged the committee to adopt "Roosevelt platform" he quoted President Truman's veto message on the Taft-Hartley Law, and castigated the 80th Congress and the Republicans unlike most other witnesses had no criticism of the Democratic Party or its leadership.

Daily Worker

Along with support to the other Civil Rights planks, the American Civil Liberties Union opposed "any measure to outlaw the Communist Party and its allies" or drive it underground, or any special anti-Communist discrimination by law.

Fri. 7-9-48
New York, N.Y.

Walter White, NAACP executive secretary, said: "We come before the platform committee with few illusions." White, who spoke in behalf of 21 national Negro organizations with a combined membership of over six millions, said they knew the Democratic Party was torn by the civil rights issue, but that any evasion, such as the 1944 platform, will be "wholly unsatisfactory."

White, along with most other witnesses, demanded that the platform specifically endorse by name FEPC, anti-poll tax, anti-lynch legislation, abolition of Jimcrow in the armed forces, and the rest of the President's Civil Rights program.

The New York Labor Committee for Wallace and Taylor yesterday wired James B. Carey, secretary of the CIO, that the "FDR platform" which he asked the Democratic Party platform committee to draw up has been "ditched, stymied and double-crossed" by the both major parties.

The wire said, "measures you urge for inclusion in the FDR platform for the Democratic Party have all been ditched, stymied and double-crossed by the Democratic and Republican parties. Urge you announce publicly that the CIO will condemn all parties which are not unequivocally commited for Taft-Hartley repeal, for price control, for civil rights, and will endorse whichever of the three parties take a straightforward position on these questions."

Another reason advanced was that members of Congress, strongly represented on the full platform-approving group, also had to run on the 1948 platform. It would make the civil rights plank "cumbersome," this member suggested, if the President's program were set out in detail. New York, N.Y.

What was wanted, this informant added, was a platform combining wide coverage with brevity. Besides, it was argued that as the civil rights plank continued to be a prime point of platform contest, the country knew where President Truman stood on every point in his civil rights program, and he would be running, apparently, on his detailed record on this issue.

On the other hand, it was emphasized, others running on the Democratic ticket could make their interpretations of an over-all civil rights plank as they read it in general terms. 7-10-48

Generalizations in Hope of a Compromise Are Expected on the Disputed Issues

By C. P. TRUSSELL

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PHILADELPHIA, July 9—Prospective planks for the 1948 Democratic platform were put behind closed doors tonight. When finally completed and polished, it was indicated, they would include strong, resolute pledges and also material intraparty compromise.

The clarion pronouncements and promises, according to backstage signs and reactions, would come on issues on which the party is united. Where sharp party divisions persist, particularly on civil rights, brevity and generalization appeared to be in view.

Greatest strength as to purpose and promise was expected concerning such issues as foreign policy and appropriations to implement them strongly, reciprocal trade and inflation curbs, with recommendation for enactment of stand-by price controls, accompanied by authorizations for rationing and allocation of short supplies. 7-10-48

Similar pronouncements were looked for in the fields of housing, educational aid, flood control, reclamation, public power, antimonopoly, natural resources development and aid to veterans.

Will Accuse Congress

It also was indicated that to give added power to their words on these subjects, the Democratic platform drafters would accuse the Republican-dominated Congress of having failed in all of these fields.

In the matter of civil rights, it was predicted by one platform drafter that the plank would generalize, purposely, on several counts. One, as he cited it, was that President Truman's ten-point civil rights program had enraged Southern Democrats to breaking into open revolt, and that there was still hope of compromise with

Fight on Civil Rights Breaks Into the Open At Session of Democratic Platform Group

PHILADELPHIA, July 9 (AP)—The fight over civil rights within the Democratic party finally exploded into the open tonight when a Southerner, Aubrey Williams, told Democratic leaders they would not lose Southern voters by supporting President Truman's civil rights program. 7-10-48

Southern members of the Democratic platform drafting committee had remained calm and silent while Northern Negroes demanded that the party platform contain the President's proposals for laws against lynching, poll taxes and discrimination in employment.

But when Mr. Williams, who is from Montgomery, Ala., and former National Youth Administrator, said that it was mainly Southern Democratic leaders who opposed the Truman program—and not the people — the fireworks broke loose.

Former Alabama Governor Chauncey Sparks snapped that Mr. Williams represented nobody but himself and should not carry any weight.

Charles E. Shepperd, Florida state legislator from St. Augustine, declared heatedly:

"We do not propose to tolerate any further interference in states' rights in the South. We and the Negro understand each other. We don't want any Federal bayonets forcing him down our throats."

Mr. Williams, who now publishes The Southern Farmer and is president of the Alabama Farmer's Union, said the white people "brutalize every decent instinct of mankind" when they keep the Negro in an inferior position.

Mr. Sparks shot back:

"When you use the word brutalize I think you are going a little too far."

Mr. Sparks later asked Mr. Williams: The Times

"Don't you represent about 1 per cent of the intelligent citizens of Alabama?" New York, N.Y.

Mr. Williams meditated and said he thought about 25 per cent of Alabama voters would be in support of these civil rights guarantees. Sat. 7-10-48

Mr. Sparks then asked Mr. Williams if members of the United States Senate did not charge him with being "more or less of a Communist" when he was nominated as Rural Electrification Administrator.

Mr. Williams said: "Oh, yes, but I am more hated by the Communists than you are."

Mr. Sparks said Alabama Negroes had been treated fairly and properly and are content to be by themselves with their own churche and other institutions.

Mr. Williams said he was against any kind of racial segregation and "a man is a man to me regardless of the color of his skin."

He leaned forward and told Mr. Sparks: "You know perfectly well if a Negro tries to register in Montgomery his chances are about one-tenth of that of a white man. A Negro told me he stood in line in Mobile for two weeks. Let's don't pretend."

Mr. Sparks insisted that the relationship between whites and Negroes was "friendly."

Mr. Williams replied: "There is great tension." 7-10-48

Mr. Shepperd, jumping into the argument, made a speech saying Florida could settle its own affairs without Federal laws. He said to Mr. Williams: "Tom Dewey put a fair employment practice act into effect in New York, so you ought to be for him."

Democratic Platformers Go Into High

Philadelphia, July 9.—The Democratic resolutions committee tonight closed platform hearings, and named a five-man subcommittee to shape the planks to fit the Truman record.

The drafting job, which for three days has torn the larger 18-man group, was simplified by developments removing the last remaining doubt that Truman will be the nominee.

In the light of that certainty, even the tangle over civil rights began to clear up.

Like Stand in 1944

With the President's strong stand for civil rights undisputed, the group may now proceed to draw a plank along the general lines of the 1944 stand which failed to detail specific measures.

A key member of the group pointed out that Mr. Truman already has interpreted the 1944 plank as embracing every point in the report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights. His own position isn't subject to successful challenge, this informant argued.

Aubrey Williams Turns Up

Sat.

There was a civil rights explosion at the hearing late in the day when Aubrey Williams, former National Youth administrator and now publishing a farm paper at Montgomery, Ala., told the committee the party would not lose Southern voters by supporting Mr. Truman's proposals. 7-10-48

Former Gov. Chauncey Sparks retorted that Williams represented "about 1 per cent of the intelligent citizens of Alabama." Williams insisted 25 per cent of the State's voters would favor the civil rights guarantees. The Post

When Williams declared white people "brutalize every decent instnict" when they keep the Negro in an inferior position, Sparks declared the witness was going "a little too far." Washington, D.C.

The former Governor said "Tom Dewey put a fair employment practice law into effect in New York so you ought to be for him."

Last day questioning of witnesses pointed up a decision to hit vigorously at the record of the Republican-controlled Eightieth Congress — again following the pitch set by the President on his coast-to-coast tour. Sat.

One of the last witnesses was AFL President William Green. Prodded by Senator Scott Lucas of Illinois and former Senator Hugh Mitchell of Washington, Green said he is keeping a "score card" on the records of members and added: 7-10-48

"I could be arrested for what I think of the last Congress."

The select group which will spell out the first draft of the platform, and clear it with the White House, will be headed by Resolutions Chairman Francis J. Myers (Pa.).

Other members were not immediately announced, but it was learned that Solicitor General Philip S. Perlman (Md.) and former Gov. Dan Moody of Texas will fill two of the key posts.

Moody, who with three other Dixie members of the larger resolutions group has opposed anything stronger than the 1944 Civil Rights declaration, will be the South's lone representative on the small drafting unit.

348

Closed door sessions will continue over the weekend before the platform's formal unveiling in the full committee early next week.

Heard By Committee

Before winding up the testimony, the committee heard:

1. Harold L. Ickes, former Secretary of Interior, demand a clear party stand backing up the decision of the Supreme Court that the Federal Government has paramount interest in the oil-rich coastal tidelands claimed by adjacent States. Ickes proposed that royalties from tideland oil wells be paid into a Federal aid to education fund, "for the good of all the States." Sat.

2. Judge Louis E. Levinthal, of the American Zionist Emergency Council, urge a plank for repeal of the Palestine arms embargo, saying that now fighting has been resumed, the new state of Israel can defend itself "only if the embargo on arms is modified." Leon Henderson, representing Americans for Democratic Action, also called for repeal of the arms embargo, and asked in addition that the Arabs be declared the aggressors in the Holy Land conflict. 7-10-48

3. Bernice B. Heffner, acting president of the American Federation of Government Employes, called for an immediate increase in the base pay of all Federal workers to meet rising costs and optional Civil Service retirement on full annuity regardless of age after 30 years of service.

Mrs. Heffner supplemented a Government worker plea by AFL President Green.

Federal Employe Planks

Green urged these Federal employe planks among others:

Revision of 1923 Classification Act salary schedules and elimination of ceiling in pay and overtime. The Post

Appropriation for all Federal agencies commensurate with their work load to insure security on the job of employes doing satisfactory work. Washington, D.C.

Greater participation in personnel matters by employes and employe organizations, with union representation on wage boards.

But Green chiefly plugged for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, another issue that has the resolutions committee tied in knots. A majority of the Democrats in both houses voted to override the President's veto of the labor law.

The AFL leader predicted that if Republicans are returned to control of both Houses in November "we will get a worse Taft-Hartley act than we have now."

In recommending the Government take over all tidelands and set up oil reserves to support educational institutions, Ickes tangled with former Governor Moody of Texas. The Post

Moody maintained the State of Texas did a better job of operating oil lands than the Federal Government. Washington, D.C.

Ickes, however, charged there has been "reckless waste" of tideland oil both in Texas and California. He said that unless Federal rights are maintained "these rich gifts will go to the oil companies." Sat. 7-11-48

Solicitor General Perlman, Senator Theodore F. Green of Rhode Island, Representative Michael J. Kirwan of Ohio and Representative Emmanuel Celler of New York sided with Ickes.

Tidelands Oil

Green attacked the Republican platform declaration for restoration of tidelands oil to the States as a "special interest plank." He said all 48 States would benefit under Ickes' plan. The five-man subcommittee was known to be considering such a plank as an offset to the lukewarm GOP stand on Federal aid to education.

The former Cabinet officer, who resigned in a row with Truman, said one oil man told him there is more oil off both coasts than on the whole continent. 7-10-48

Ickes said he would go beyond the 3-mile limit to drill for it, assign the proceeds first to the schools and any excess could be used for Social Security, Indian welfare and road-building costs.

The Hotheads Don't Make Sense

Atlanta, Ga.

Wed. 3-3-48

Harry S. Truman probably is, they say, a gone gosling.

He is gone, not so much because of the Southern revolt, but because in addition to the revolt there is a growing dissatisfaction with the administration.

A Vandenberg-Stassen ticket, for example, would show tremendous strength in the South, approaching that of 1928 when Herbert Hoover cracked the South because of prohibition and the religious issue of that campaign.

There is a growing feeling that the Democratic administration is disorganized and uncertain. Many persons have lost faith in it. There is the feeling, too, which seems to come out of the radios and out of the statements from the administration, that even its speakers lack confidence. They seem to be using only the shopworn old Roosevelt formulae, forgetting that Roosevelt always had new ones for each national problem.

So it adds up to a substantial Democratic Party defeat insofar as the national ticket is concerned.

Suicide But the hysterical desire of some of the Southern politicians to commit party suicide; to be like a Samson shorn of his power, pulling the party house down about them, remains an unattractive spectacle. The Constitution

The Republicans allowed it to happen to their party in the time of the Bull Moose campaign. The party never really has recovered from it. Its leadership ever since has been most inflexible and unaware of the nation's temper. Atlanta, Ga.

As for the Democrats, they are repeating word for word, phrase for phrase, the statements of 1860 when they really did revolt. They held their own convention, breaking with the Northern wing. They effectively destroyed the party on the basis of the race issue and went on to allow themselves to be badgered into war. It is well to keep in mind that through all that dark and hysterical period it was the hotheads who cried them on to revolt and secession. In every State the leaders, such as Georgia's Alexander Stephens, tried to hold out for conciliation and the maintenance of the union.

The hotheads today are crying on revolt and secession. Wed 3-3-48

The party will do well to ignore them. There is another course.

Nomination There is no need for the party to tear down its house with revolt. The Constitution

If it does not want to vote for Mr. Truman it can make the fight in the convention to nominate someone else. Those who wish may bolt the party now and work to establish a second party.

Others have observed that in 1860 there were four tickets, as there will be this year if the Southern Democrats go ahead with their plan to commit suicide. There were the two Democratic conventions and two sets of nominees and also Constitutional Union ticket, much like Wallace's ticket today. Abraham Lincoln, with a minority of votes, won. Atlanta, Ga.

Had not the hotheads been so insistent on defending the institution of slavery, a compromise and liquidation over a long period could have been had. Wed 3-3-48

Now the hotheads are at it again—and with as little sense.

Electoral Votes There are 531 votes in the electoral college. A majority, 266 votes, is necessary to elect a President.

The Deep South has a minimum of 127 electoral votes. There is no good reason now to believe that a Southern ticket would carry Tennessee, Virginia or even Florida and Texas. There is almost no chance to get help from the non-deep South States of Kentucky, Maryland, Missouri and Oklahoma.

So while all this talk of withholding the electors is interesting and a great boon to the cock-tail party conversations, it doesn't add up to much sense. The Constitution

Certainly, however, uninstructed delegates do make very good sense indeed. They are the sinews of a convention fight.

The place for the Democratic Party to fight is in the convention at Philadelphia. The place for those who want to leave the party is in the Republican Party. Atlanta, Ga.

If the Southern suicide squad has its way, the electoral college plan will be abolished by the time 1952 comes around and a popular vote plan installed. That would drastically reduce Southern influence, not now too strong. Wed. 3-3-48

If we listen to the hotheads again we will lose—and not just the election.

Re-Emphasizing the Tw

The Constitution Atlanta, Ga.

Fri. 1-23-48

Gov. Fielding Wright's suggestion that the South secede from the Democratic Party if national leaders persist in objectionable legislative aims no doubt has struck a responsive chord in the hearts of a great many Southerners. 34D

Referring specifically to Democratic proposals for a national Fair Employment Practices Commission and anti-lynching, anti-poll tax and anti-segregation legislation, Mississippi's Governor declared such measures would wreck the South and its institutions.

The South, he declared, no longer will tolerate being the target for laws "which would not only destroy our way of life, but which, if enacted, would eventually destroy the United States. I would regret to see the day come when Mississippi or the South should break with the Democratic Party in a national election, but vital principles and eternal truths transcend party lines, and the day is now at hand when determined action must be taken." The Constitution

Those are strong words for a Southern politician to utter. That they are sincere, and that a great deal of truth is contained in them, cannot be denied. Atlanta, Ga.

It is not surprising, however, that Acting Gov. Thompson, Reps. Davis and Preston and others immediately decried Gov. Wright's suggestion. For in Georgia, as in the rest of the South, the connotation of "bolter" long has meant the kiss of death for political aspirants. Fri, 1-23-48

Truthfully, the South, through blind prejudice and willingness to vote for anything or any candidate with a Democratic label attached, has worked itself into its present unenviable position. We are, so to speak, a set-up for the Democratic Party. And we still offer no hope for the Republicans, despite the beginning of a trend which ultimately may lead to the two-party system here. 1-23-48

The Constitution long has recognized the dilemma facing the South. Our own Democratic Party, sure of the South's vote, lays national stress on issues which are contrary to the good of our region. The Republicans, having nothing to lose, vie equally for the fringe vote. The South is left astraddle of a predicament that is, to a large extent, of its own making.

Being a champion of the Democratic Party, The Constitution does not advocate wholesale withdrawal from that party. But we would like to see a considerable number of Southerners and Southern political leaders cast their allegiance elsewhere. There being no acceptable third party, so the Republican, would be the logical choice. The Constitution

Republicans, of course, advocate the very measures Gov. Wright and Southerners generally despise. But if the South could swing its weight more equally between the two parties it then would be in position to exercise a sort of veto power on those proposals. Until that time comes, this region can expect to continue being the scapegoat of both parties. Fri. 1-23-48

Atlanta, Ga.

Half-Way Measures

Why should the South vote Republican when the Republican party is every whit as bad or worse on this civil rights issue, from the Southern viewpoint, as the Truman Democrats? Wouldn't it be jumping from the frying pan into the fire? The Record

These are the questions that the politicians are asking in reply to arguments that the South needs to abandon its one party system. They supply the excuse for the abortive revolt idea of trying to set up a Southern splinter party, instead of two parties. 34D

And they are questions that must be faced. And if they are faced realistically by Southerners today's revolt of the Southern Democrats can be converted into a real revolution, a revolution that will set the South free and restore its voice in national affairs. Columbia, S.C.

For the answer to these questions is that the one paty system in the South is the explanation of why neither party pays any attention to the South. Mon. 3-1-48

The South, of course, is talking now as if it meant business. It is going ahead to get its house in order—some states, such as Virginia, will have to amend their voting laws—so as to be able to bolt the Democratic ticket.

Still, however, nobody pays the South any attention. Both parties are going ahead with their plans to put through the anti-poll tax bill in the Senate and the anti-lynching bill in the House.

The South is a voice crying in the political wilderness, where no one may hear it. And the only answer is the echo of laughter from the various minority groups which are enjoying the sight presented by the impotently quirming Bourbons and the begging white supremacists. And there is some irony in it all.

There is no mystery about the low esteem in which the South is held now by both parties. It derives from the fact that the South has been in the bag so long and from the further fact that the South even yet isn't willing to talk about setting up a two-party system.

Both the Democrats and the Republicans expect to find the South still voting Democratic in November. So nobody pays any attention to Southern protests.

After all this isn't the first time the South has protested, and loudly. Southern politicians, for example, were loud in their complaints of much of President Roosevelt's New Deal. But every election day Southern Democrats trooped to the polls to pile up records for a second, third and fourth term. The Record

One fact stands. The South will be the section without influence in both parties and in the country until it makes up its mind to set up in the South two parties, one Democratic and one Republican, either one of which may win a governorship, a Senate seat or a congressional election.

For not until then will the South get out of the bag. All this talk of independent electors and splinter parties is nonsense. It commits the Southerners to the Democratic party or nothing and it guarantees to the Democratic party that the Southern Democrats, even if they walk out this year, will be back by the next election.

If the South hasn't men with courage enough to take the full step to freedom and set up a two-party political system in the Southern states, if it hasn't leaders who have sense enough to lead then it had better abandon both its fight and its squealing and get ready to take the licking that will be coming to it. For it cannot have a real voice in either party until it has a foothold in both parties. Columbia, S.C.

No half-way measures will suffice. A half-free people is a people still enslaved to pride and prejudice. Mon. 3-1-48

It's Old Southern Custom— This Revolt Against Party

The Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.

Sat 2-7-48

By DICK WEIL

Monroe Morniug World Staff Writer

(Written for The Associated Press)

Dixie Democrats are indulging in an old Southern custom in their revolt against President Truman's anti-discrimination policies —but it's one of the most widespread and peculiarly sectional rebellions since the War Between the States.

Southern leadership has frequently joined up with insurgent elements in other regions to alter the party policy or setup. Open opposition to the party itself, however, has usually been limited to one or two states.

A strong clue to the possible strategy of the present "secessionsts" might be found in the bargain to make Rutherford Hayes president in 1876 over Democrat Samuel Tilden.

Both parties claimed the electoral votes of South Carolina, Louisiana and Florida. The result of the election depended upon the result of the dispute over these. The Advertiser

A commission of five senators, five representatives and five Supreme Court justices was named to pass upon the conflicting claims. After months of wrangling the three states in question suddenly ceased protesting and allowed the commission to certify the vote for Hayes.

It was later learned that the Republicans had made a bargain to withdraw federal troops from the South and to grant a general amnesty for supporters of the Confederacy. Montgomery, Ala.

South Turns Away

The South turned away from its own party and wrung concessions from its opponents—a procedure not far different from that being proposed by Mississippi leaders today. Sat.

With Union troops away, the Southern states proceeded to restore the ante-bellum political order, ousting the Reconstructionists and forming a seldom-shaken solid bloc. 2-7-48

Texas and Mississippi separately attempted revolts in 1944 —even while President Roosevelt was alive, with his personality holding the diverse elements of the party together.

The Democratic convention in Texas instructed its delegates to the national convention to demand an end to the policies now being called "anti-Southern." As an alternative, the convention specified its presidential electors wolud be free to vote for any Democrat other than the national nominee. 34d

Roosevelt supporters, however, gained control at a later state convention and ordered a new electoral slate drawn up.

Mississippi also instructed its convention delegates to oppose "anti-Southern planks in the Democratic platform, and released its electors from obligation to vote for the party candidate. The Advertiser

Bailey Rallied Them

But the late Gov. Thomas Bailey, a staunch Roosevelt supporter, called the Legislature to make a new electoral slate. Names of these "loyal" electors were placed on a special ticket which most voters cast into the ballot box. Montgomery, Ala.

Those 1944 revolts failed to affect President Roosevelt's status —but, coupled with other protests from Southern leaders, they were instrumental in having Henry Wallace discarded as vice-presidential nomine in favor of Senator Harry Truman.

Now the revolt is against Truman. Sat. 2-7-48

In 1928 Southern Democrats turned in great numbers against their traditional party—and Republican Herbert Hoover received the electoral votes of Texas, Florida, Virginia and North Carolina.

That was mostly a result of feeling against the religion of the Democratic nominee, Al Smith. The South gained no concessions from the Republicans.

Southerners joined with remnants of the western Populists in 1912 to rescue the nomination of Woodrow Wilson, and break "the grip of the eastern overlords of Wall Street and Tammany Hall." Southerners were prominent in Wilson's cabinet.

Sixteen years earlier the South and West had rebelled against the reigning party leadership from the northeast and north central states. That was when they obtained the nomination of William Jennings Bryan, the young orator and "free silver" advocate, in place of Grover Cleveland.

But the ensuing victory of William McKinley over Bryan made the revolt futile. Sat 2-7-48

A recent charge by Alabama Gov. James Folsom that President Truman is "hog-tied" by eastern "capitalists" bears a strong resemblance to the complaint by Ken Tillman of South Carolina in 1896: Montgomery Ala

"We denounce the Cleveland administration as undemocratic and tyrannical. . . . a plutocratic despotism is sought to be established." The Advertiser

Russell Hurls 'Gestapo' Charge At President

The News Birmingham, Ala. 34d Fri. 2-6-48

Demo Feud Reaches New Heights, Split Called Most Serious

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6—(AP)—The bitter Democratic feud over civil [illegible]ghts hit a new pitch today. Sen. [illegible]ll (D., Ga.) contended that [illegible]ent Truman is planning an [illegible]stapo" to break down race [illegible]gregation in the South.

Russell told a reporter the South's revolt against the president's call for new measures to knock down racial barriers "is more serious than any I have seen in my lifetime."

This is true, the Georgian said, because Southern Democrats have interpreted the president's demand for an end to Jim Crow laws on trains and buses as the opening wedge in a fight to halt all race segregation.

That could mean, he said, Negroes and whites would attend the same schools, swim in the same pools, eat together and, eventually, intermarry.

* * *

"THE PRESIDENT has made the flat declaration that he considers segregation to be discrimination and violation of civil rights," Russell declared. "He wants to set up a commission and hire a lot of lawyers to fight segregation wherever it exists. The News

"He has ordered the Federal Bureau of Investigation to work with the Department of Justice civil rights division and says it is giving specialized training to its agents. This is nothing more or less than an FBI Gestapo to break down race segregation in the South."

Russell's charge highlighted these other developments: Birmingham

1. Chairman Taft (R., Ohio) called the Senate Republican Policy Committee together to pick a spot on the legislative schedule for an expected battle with filibustering Southerners over one or more civil rights measures. Ala.

2. Sen. Ball (R., Minn.) predicted that Congress will pass no anti-job discrimination bill with enforcement provisions. Ball voted "no" when the Senate labor committee approved such a measure yesterday, seven to five.

3. Reports spread that Gov. Fielding L. Wright, of Mississippi, would move at a Tallahassee, Fla., meeting of Southern governors today to have them issue a call for an "independent" Democratic convention to split away from Mr. Truman. Fri. 2-6-48

4. A Democratic official said the party's national committee will "sit tight" to see what happens before it charts its course.

TAFT, WHO VOTED in committee against a bill to set up a Fair Employment Practice Commission with enforcement power, told reporters it will be up to the GOP policy group and the conference of all Republican senators to decide when it or any similar measures should be brought up.

The Ohioan, a GOP presidential candidate, said he opposed the committee-approved FEPC bill because he believes it would be better to set up a commission which would seek to end job disorimination by voluntary means. The News

The committee bill is sponsored by Sen. Ives (R., N. Y.), who is supporting Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, of New York, for the nomination. Patterned after a New York law, the measure would require that voluntary means be exhausted before legal penalties were used.

Although Republicans generally support such measures, GOP members split on this one, as did their Democratic colleagues. Fri 2-6-48

Ball and Sen. Donnell (R., Mo.) joined Taft in voting "no." Sens. Hill, of Alabama, and Ellender, of Louisiana, represented the Democratic opposition. Birmingham Ala

Southerners in House Plan New 'Revolt' on Civil Rights

Democrats Will Meet Today to Organize for Joining Governors in Fight on Major Points in the Truman Program

~~New York~~, N.Y.

By C. P. TRUSSELL

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 19—Southern Democratic members of the House were planning a new "revolt" move today to follow tonight's Jefferson-Jackson Day dinners. They will gather in closed session tomorrow to organize for cooperation with the Southern Governors' Conference in resisting President Truman's civil rights program. Fri. 2-20-48

Already drafted for consideration was a resolution through which the revolt would continue not only against the legislative measures which the President recommended but against the inclusion of planks to back them up in the Democratic platform for the 1948 Presidential race.

It was predicted that a committee of six would be named to cooperate with the special committee of the Southern Governors' Conference, due to arrive in Washington on Monday. This group is to meet with Senator J. Howard McGrath, Democratic National Chairman, to emphasize the Southern attitude toward the program. They will not see the President, as he will have departed on his Caribbean cruise.

While the President submitted a ten-point program, it was indicated that the fight would focus almost wholly on the following four proposals:

A Federal anti-lynching law.

A Federal anti-poll tax law.

A permanent Federal ban on discrimination in employment because of race, creed, color or national origin.

Establishment in the Department of Justice of a special division for enforcement of all civil rights laws.

The committee from the Governors' Conference requested the cooperation that is to be organized tomorrow. It was predicted that members of the delegations from at least a dozen Southern states would attend. However, there were signs that perhaps only a few delegations would "sign up" solidly when the resolution was presented. There also were numerous members in their home districts, attending and speaking at their own Jefferson-Jackson Day dinners.

This resolution, as composed in advance, would seek to pledge the signers on three actions in resistance to the civil rights program, as follows:

"That we will resist to the finish the enactment of any such legislation. Times

"That the chairman of this conference be and is hereby directed to appoint a committee of six to cooperate with the committee from the Conference of Southern Governors. New York N.Y.

"That the leaders and all who are interested in the success of the Democratic party be urged and respectfully, but firmly, cautioned against putting into its platform that which would assuredly jeopardize its success in the South, where it has been nourished and sustained throughout its existence."

Calls Breakaway Unlikely

Special to The New York Times.

ATHENS, Ga., Feb. 19—Hodding Carter, Mississippi editor, said today a general breakaway of Southern states from the Democratic fold in protest against President Truman's civil rights program was unlikely. He predicted, however, that Mississippi and probably South Carolina would send uninstructed electors to the Electoral College. Fri 2-20-48

Mr. Carter was a speaker at the annual Georgia Press Institute. He is the editor of The Greenville Delta Democrat-Times.

Despite their vigorous protests, Mr. Carter said, there is every likelihood that all other traditionally Democratic states would go down the line with the party.

Pierre J. Huss, correspondent of International News Service, told the editors' gathering that Russia was being misinformed by its own diplomats, "because the aim of its diplomats is to please Stalin with 'news' that will cheer him."

"Hitler, when he was in power, was misinformed in the same way as to potential strength and fighting power of the United States," Mr. Huss asserted.

If Stalin should die, Mr. Huss said, "either the world will be in for a bloodbath as the Politbureau seeks to hold power by plunging into immediate war or there is going to be a bloodbath in the Kremlin and possibly throughout the Soviet Union."

WASHINGTON, Feb. 4—The former Confederate States of the South, eleven in number, have 127 electoral votes, and a national issue that would impel any one of them to withhold its electors from the Democratic national ticket would mark the same trend in them all. The five border states, with 52 electoral votes, still have sufficient kinship with the Old South to be affected by its turning away from the Democratic party.

This makes a total of 179 electoral votes, and if any considerable number of these are not given to Democratic candidates for President and Vice President only a Democratic landslide in the rest of the country could avert their certain defeat. The Times

Moreover, several of the former Confederate States have demonstrated that when certain emotional issues arise the Northern Democrats cannot count on them, and the border states are famous for their tendency to shift political allegiances. In 1928 dry sentiment and religious and anti-Tammany prejudices put five Southern states—Florida, North Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia—and five border states—Kentucky, Maryland, Missouri, Oklahoma and West Virginia—into the Republican electoral column. New York, N.Y.

It is an emotional issue now, centering on the racial problem in the South and on the border, which has aroused numerous Democratic officeholders in the states of the old Confederacy to threaten a repetition of what happened in 1928 and for a time was attempted in 1944. President Truman wants Congress to pass certain measures in the name of "civil liberty," including a Federal Fair Employment Practices Act and laws to invalidate state poll-taxes and various forms of segregation of the races. He also wants the Federal Government to take from the states enforcement authority against lynching, and on social and legal grounds there is strong Southern and border sentiment against every proposal. 254

The Dangers and Safeguards

But the base of the protests is emotional; the emotion is generated by the difficult race problem; and when that set of facts exists in this particular area of the United States political consequences can appear which could easily pry several states away from their Democratic moorings. The normal election prospect of 1948 is for a close contest between the major parties in which neither could withstand the loss of even one large state within its traditionally loyal territory.

This is the adverse side of the shield for Mr. Truman and the managing Democratic politicians. But there are several consoling considerations, as follows: The Times

1. A shift of voters from one party to another is easy and practicable anywhere. The Southern voters, however, as the single instance of 1928 shows, have required an unusual combination of prejudices to induce them to vote the Republican national ticket. Henry A. Wallace favors even stronger measures for racial equality than Mr. Truman. And lavish Federal bounties, originating with the New Deal but happily accepted and retained by the anti-New Deal Democratic politicians of the South, have tied their constituents tightly to the Democratic executive power. New York, N.Y.

2. Established by custom if not wholly by law is the obligation of nominees for electors on a party ticket to cast their ballots for the candidates of that party if it carries a state (i. e., if the ticket on which the names of the electoral nominees appear is successful). The statute of 1887 permits a state, at any time within six days before its electoral votes are registered, to settle any dispute that may arise over how its electors shall vote, making this settlement final. and untouchable by any court in any way. But there is reasonable doubt that this Supreme Court would uphold the law; hence successful nominees for elector in any state, including the South and the border, are very likely to continue to vote for the national candidates of their party. Thurs 2-5-48

Hazards of Third Tickets

3. If, therefore, any state or group of states, traditionally Democratic, wishes to withhold its electoral votes from the national candidates of that party, a method must be devised to put up an independent Democratic ticket in each state, headed by Democrats other than the candidates of the national convention. This ticket would have to win the popular vote in November over the regular Democratic and the Republican sets of electors to permit the electoral vote of the state to be cast for its independent candidates.

The chances for the success of such a ticket would be damaged in each state if its Democratic organization had participated in the regular national convention of the party by sending delegates there. That would give basis for the charge of "bolting," much feared by politicians and often effective with the people. And a "revolt" would be deep-rooted indeed if the regular organization of a state refrained from sending delegates to the national convention. The Times 2-5-48

The current Southern protest may prove to have such roots, though an uprising for similar causes in 1944 soon demonstrated it did not. If so, there will be independent Democratic tickets in several states, and Mr. Truman will surely be defeated, with the further possibility that the next President will be elected by the House of Representatives. But the scheme failed in Texas in 1944, and much more must happen in 1948 before the contrary prospect begins to appear. New York

Some Dixie Members Of Civil Rights Fight In Congress Fearful

Claim Southerners Appears To Have Lost GOP Support Needed To Let Proposed Senate Test

News Age Herald Birmingham Ala. Sun. 2-22-48

Live; Drive Against Program Starts Tomorrow

BY JACK BELL

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20—(AP)—A secret Senate poll has convinced some Southern Democratic leaders they have almost no hope of blocking approval of civil rights legislation in this session of Congress.

A veteran Dixie senator who helped count noses told a reporter the Southerners now appear to have lost the Republican support they need to prevent adoption of a gag rule on Senate debate.

He said President Truman's demand for anti-lynch, anti-poll tax and anti-segregation laws has been accepted as a political challenge by the GOP members. As a result, he said few, if any, Republicans will vote to limit debate.

* * *

THIS PROSPECT AROSE as some 50 Democratic House members from the states of the old Confederacy broadened their drive against the Truman civil rights program.

They and five Southern governors will slam down their criticism of the program Monday before Sen. J. Howard McGrath, of Rhode Island, Democratic national chairman. Govs. Laney, of Arkansas; Jester, of Texas; Tuck, of Virginia; Thurmond, of South Carolina, and Cherry, of North Carolina, were heading for the capital.

The only promise McGrath has given is that he will pass their protests along to Mr. Truman.

Southerners have found the Senate, rather than the House, their main line of defense in fighting similar race-relations legislation in past sessions. That is because of a difference in rules of the two bodies. The general practice of unlimited debate in the Senate has enabled them to talk the bills to death.

But there is a chink in that defense—the cloture rule. Cloture is a device by which two-thirds of those voting can limit each senator to a single, one-hour speech on a bill and all amendments.

The Southerners were said to be able to tally at this time only 25 sure votes—eight short of the strength needed if all 96 senators voted—to ward off the cloture rule.

Traditionally the Southerners have been able to avoid adoption of the gag rule because of Republican help. News Age Herald

Meanwhile, a committee of 12 House members was established to keep up the fight against the president's entire civil rights program.

Rep. Colmer (D., Miss.), the chairman, said the committee has three purposes:

1. To plan strategy in case one or more of these "vicious and unconstitutional" bills come to the floor.
2. To cooperate with the governors.
3. To serve note on party leaders inclusion of the president's proposals in the 1948 Democratic platform would "definitely jeopardize the party's success" in the South.

Rep. Harris, of Arkansas, will serve as secretary of the new committee. Other members are Hobbs, of Alabama; Sikes, of Florida; Cox, of Georgia; Gregory, of Kentucky; Larcade, of Louisiana; Clark, of North Carolina; Richards, of South Carolina; Murray, of Tennessee; Gossett, of Texas, and Howard W. Smith, of Virginia.

The Republican majority in Congress was represented as determined to get at least one civil rights law passed this session. Their previous inclination has been to try the anti-lynching issue first. Birmingham Ala

Sen. Taft, of Ohio, chairman of the Republican policy committee, told a reporter his group will talk the matter over soon. He said it will be up to the conference of all Republican senators to decide which bill to try first.

State Demo Chieftain Flays Civil Rights Bill

MOBILE, Ala., Feb. 21—(AP)—Gessner T. McCorvey, chairman of Alabama's State Democratic Executive Committee, said Saturday that unless the National Democratic Party "changes its attitude of hostility, I hardly see how we Southerners can continue following the party's leadership."

"You can rest assured we are making plans to combat this situation, and the National Democratic Party will either have to give a different sort of recognition to the South or we are going to have to part company," he said.

"I don't see how any Southerner could with self-respect follow the leadership of any party which undertakes to write into its platform the absolutely unworkable, impossible, and I might say unthinkable, theories advanced by President Truman in his message to Congress on civil rights," McCorvey declared. 342 Sun. 2-22-48

The veteran political leader made the statement in a letter commending The Mobile Register, a daily newspaper, for an editorial it carried Saturday entitled, "South Gets No Credit From Truman for Traditional Democratic Loyalty."

Change Is Coming After Presidential Election, He Says, Hoffman Plan Scorn

Fri. 2-27-48

BY JACK BELL

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27—(AP)—A shakeup in the embattled Democratic Party after the presidential election was predicted today by Sen. George (D., Ga.).

Without passing on President Truman's chances in November, George said he believes Southern opponents of Mr. Truman's civil rights program are going to have a great deal to say about the future complexion of their party.

As he spoke Dixie Democrats fought a delaying action in Congress against enactment of the civil rights plan. But in the Southern states themselves, the drive to bar Mr. Truman's name on the official ballot gained momentum.

"I think that as a result of this 1948 campaign we will have a chance to reorganize the Democratic Party on a basis of sound economic and good government principles," the Georgia senator told a reporter.

* * *

"I MYSELF WOULD BE QUITE content to become a member of a minority party, so long as that party is based on sound principles."

He said he was "not interested" in any move to make him a "favorite son" candidate for the presidential nomination. The News

George's statement was taken as an indication of how a number of the Southern lawmakers in Congress look upon their fight with the present leadership of the Democratic Party. Birmingham, Ala.

Several of them said they don't care if Mr. Truman is beaten by a Republican in November. Many are looking to 1952 for a division of political sentiment along what they describe as conservative and liberal lines. Fri. 2-27-48

But none of them thought much of a proposal by Rep. Hoffman (R., Mich.) that the Republicans put up a candidate whose opposition to Mr. Truman's anti-lynching, anti-poll tax, anti-job discrimination and anti-Jim Crow proposals would make him acceptable to the South.

"Brazen and contemptible," were the words Democratic National Chairman J. Howard McGrath used to assail Hoffman's proposal.

* * *

"THE REPUBLICAN PARTY once pillaged the prostrate South," he said. "I do not think that today the Republican Party will find a strong and healthy South selling itself back into the hands of the party which ravished it." The News

McGrath meanwhile set up an "executive committee" which he said would "implement the operation" of the national convention. Only two representatives from the so-called solid South were among the 16 members. Birmingham, Ala.

Meanwhile GOP leaders prepared to push ahead with legislation they confidently hope will make the Dixie members so thoroughly angry that they will not relent later and return to the national Democratic ranks in November.

ALTHOUGH HOUSE ACTION was delayed on the anti-lynching bill until next week, the Senate prepared to take up another measure equally opposed by the Southerners. 2-27-48

Sen. Brooks (R., Ill.) predicted a Senate rules subcommittee would approve today a House-approved bill to ban poll taxes which are now collected in seven Southern states.

Meanwhile, the Southerners went ahead with their plans to turn up independent—or anti-Truman—electors in may states. The News

Sen. Maybank (D., S. C.) said the South Carolina State Democratic Committee will meet Monday and probably will follow the lead of Virginia. Birmingham, Ala.

GOV. WILLIAM TUCK asked the Virginia Legislature to take the name of the presidential and vice presidential candidates off the state ballot in November. The idea would be to free electors to support any one they choose. Fri. 2-27-48

The Southern Revolt Strikes a Low Level

The Courier-Journal 342

Thurs. 3-5-48

THE Bourbons of Southern politics, who wouldn't be caught dead with HENRY WALLACE, are to be found strangely by his side in at least one furious intent. Without counting the cost, they would defeat HARRY S. TRUMAN. Louisville, Ky.

It is true they are more single-minded than the members of the former Vice President's "Gideon's Army," whose motives are so mixed as to raise many a doubtful question. On their part, the Solid Southerners talk of punishing President TRUMAN for his proposals to end racial discrimination in voting, travel, employment and personal security. There is no other issue.

It is a hot but not a holy outburst. The common denominator of the Southern protest is pretty low. Senator JAMES O. EASTLAND of Mississippi, the State in which the fire seems to have been set, ~~has put it~~ in words of indignity for WALTER WHITE, secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. In one revealing moment the old treasured legalisms are laid aside. There is no mention of constitutionality or States' Rights, though the more squeamish and pious may be expected to bear down on those shibboleths later. The Senator puts the matter in terms of historical prejudice. He says "Nigger!" Thurs 2-5-48

The word isn't blurted out in a moment of passion. Senator EASTLAND turns to reporters and insists that they make no mistake about his epithet or his intent to use it. By that deliberation the country is told all about the motives of opposition for the President's program to strengthen civil rights. Thus is explained the threats by Governor FIELDING WRIGHT in Mississippi, Senator MAYBANK in South Carolina, by many another chorusing politico, to bolt the party, the old sanctum sanctorum of white supremacy, if Mr. TRUMAN doesn't pipe down on all this talk of freedom and "equal justice under law."

To give a proper rumble to this "fee-fi-fo-fum," they are heard talking (though a bit anonymously, it is true) about trotting out the slick trick that was devised in Texas in 1944. This is the arrangement by which Presidential electors would be hand-picked with definite instructions to vote against Mr. TRUMAN in the Electoral College. The Texas plot was to make the electors, picked by a controlled party convention, vote against ROOSEVELT, even though the people of the State overwhelmingly favored him. The 1948 version of this fraud is to pick the electors by State legislatures. It amounts to an equal subversion of the people's will and intent.

It won't work, of course. But the mere fact that it is proposed, however impetuously, shows that there are politicians with hides impervious to such thrusts in the name of democracy as that which unseated the Texas Regulars and repudiated an essentially evil design. The Courier-Journal

And the thing which will strike the average American elsewhere as almost unbelievable is that all this uproar and plotting has been stirred by proposals which essentially represent the American idea. With perhaps objections as to details, more people are likely to endorse the program proposed by President TRUMAN than otherwise. Thurs. 3-5-48

The opposition may suggest that Mr. TRUMAN is playing politics. But the record shows that he has always voted for these ideas. The record also shows that the Republicans at Chicago in 1944 wrote a good program, even to the definite promise of action—and yet, although in numerical control of Congress for nearly two years since, and actually in control for a third year, they have let their promises slide. Who, one wonders, has been playing the politics? And what are the insurgent Southerners about, except the vengeance of cutting off their noses to spite their faces? Or is it that they feel the Republican Party, whose success they would make certain, could be depended on to keep letting promises stand for action? Louisville, Ky.

The Political Coloration Of the Southern Revolt

The Courier-Journal
Louisville, Ky. Tues 3-2-48

IT IS hard to imagine a "Southern revolt" with sound and fury so great, with promise of damage to the Democratic Party so dire, in any other than an election year. In other words, the thing is chock-ful of politics.

This, of course, is natural. Politics is the means of getting things done, and an approaching election provides the arena in which to play the game. And there is room for more than suspicion that a lot of the uproar is for Southern home consumption. Many of the loudest shouters are running for office this year. Stout and thunderous outcries in behalf of white supremacy are still among the most potent of local vote-catchers in the old Confederacy.

Two items which turned up over the week end have a bearing on this point. One is the report from North Carolina by JOHN POPHAM, writing for The New York Times and THE COURIER-JOURNAL. In this it is related that practically alone of States in the Deep South, North Carolina is comparatively free of the feverish distemper. Only three of its 12 representatives in Congress were among the 74 Southerners who signed the ultimatum to President TRUMAN threatening to split the party if he sticks to his civil-rights program.

The Courier-Journal

You must take these observations along with the knowledge that the racial issue long ago fell into disuse in North Carolina. Twenty-eight years ago the Tarheel State abolished the poll tax as a qualification for voting. Its record of votes by both whites and Negroes is extraordinarily high in comparison with that of its neighbors.

Louisville, Ky.

In 1940, for example, it cast 822,000 votes in the Presidential election to 345,000 in Virginia, a poll-tax State just above it; to 97,000 in South Carolina, a poll-tax State on the south. Its reputed calmness in the present bitter struggle cannot but be linked with its balance on the subject. And to look at the matter from the other side, where demagogic use of the race issue is the custom, the screams for the President's head are most furious. You may get the idea that the gentlemen must let their constituents, as well as Mr. TRUMAN, know where they stand.

This brings us to the second item, which tells that GEORGE B. HAMILTON, Georgia State Treasurer, has resigned as finance director of the Democratic National Committee. Mr. HAMILTON holds an office which is filled by popular vote. Georgia is a State where the issue is hot, and where it burns in the race for Governor which is now in progress, to be decided this summer. Local politicos cannot be inarticulate on the subject, and Mr. HAMILTON'S words of lofty indignation for National Chairman MCGRATH'S stand are certainly unmistakable.

All in all, the revolt is not a new thing. And if its language is old, its strategy and timing are even older, as old as politics. More purposes are being served than defense of constitutional theory. You might even say that Mr. TRUMAN'S temerity—or blunder, if you please—was in putting the boys on the spot, in this of all years.

Truman Woos

The Courier-Journal
Louisville, Ky.
Tues. 3-2-48

The President's civil-rights platform, which has enraged the South, is a bid for Northern colored support he needs

THE hot temper of Southern Democrats over the obvious effort of President Truman, through his Federal fair employment practices and other kindred proposals, to woo the Negro vote in the ten Northern States where it is large enough to affect the result, is easy to understand. It strikes at the deepest of their prejudices and constitutes a threat to the social order of their section, hard to contemplate calmly.

Tues. 3-2-48

This is a serious matter in the South, but what particularly enrages its representatives is the well-founded conviction that, politically, Mr. Truman is playing both ends against the middle and that this makes them appear the prize political boobs in history. For example, while the President makes these overtures to the Negroes in the hope of gaining their support in places where it is most needed, he well knows how offensive they are to the South, and is fully aware that the Southern States, whose electoral votes are vital to his election, have no alternative but to support him.

Roosevelt Had the Idea First

The Courier-Journal

This is indignantly regarded as taking unfair advantage of the loyal people of a great section. Certainly, it does make great saps of the Southern Democrats, leaders as well as rank and file. Nevertheless, their anger against the unfortunate Mr. Truman is not entirely reasonable. If the heated statesmen below the Mason and Dixon line will reflect calmly upon the recent political past, several things will become clear to them—first, that the above-mentioned gestures were forced upon Mr. Truman, not chosen by him; second, that he had little more choice in making them than they have in meeting them; third, that responsibility for the dependence of the Democratic party upon a combination of the Negro vote in the North and the labor bosses in the big cities is not Mr. Truman's, but wholly that of his predecessor, Mr. Roosevelt.

Louisville, Ky Tue. 3-2-48

It was Mr. Roosevelt who first made boobs of Southern Democrats, not Mr. Truman. The latter is merely following the Roosevelt lead. It was Mr. R., not Mr. T., who swung the Democratic party away from its historic position, transformed its character, baited and beguiled the traditionally Republican Negroes into becoming Democrats, formed a White House alliance with the C.I.O., opened the door to the radicals and drove millions of conservative Democrats out of the party. This was its nature when three years ago Mr. Truman became its titular head. Now, with Mr. Wallace diverting part of the labor vote, most of the radicals and some of the Negroes, it is clear that neither Mr. Truman nor any other Democrat possibly can win this year without holding the bulk of the Negroes in Massachusetts, New York, Maryland, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Michigan, who voted almost solidly in 1936, 1940 and 1944.

One only has to analyze the votes in these States in 1940 and 1944 to confirm these facts. Take, for example, the typical State of Maryland, where there are approximately 100,000 registered Negro voters. In the last election Mr. Roosevelt carried Maryland by 23,000. Conservative estimates by leaders of both parties agreed not less than 50,000 Negroes voted for him. Take New York—in 1944 Mr. Roosevelt carried it over Mr. Dewey by 317,000. Hardly anyone questions that more than that many Negroes voted for him. A similar case for Democratic dependence on the Negro votes can be made out in all the other States where they are enough to be a factor. There are at least nine of these.

In brief, this vote has become essential to Democratic success and the practical politicians in both parties know it. Considering these things, when the Negro leaders, spokesmen and press unite, as they have, behind a proposal such as the fair employment practices bill, Mr. Truman has to come through. As well as anyone, he knows the hell it will raise in the South, but he had no alternative. To fail meant that the Republicans would be able to stampede most of the Negroes "back home." And if they do that, concededly, the Democrats are sunk. There is nothing for Mr. Truman to do save continue the Roosevelt policy of making a boob of the Southern democracy.

Move to Stop a Stampede

The Courier-Journal
Louisville, Ky.
Tues. 3-2-48

He will not get away with it as well as Mr. Roosevelt, who as a double-dealer had a lot more on the ball. Mr. Truman will lose more votes in the South, where the loss will not hurt. He will not get as solid Negro support in the North as did Mr. Roosevelt, but he will prevent that "stampede." It was in 1936 that Chairman James A. Farley, with unlimited Federal patronage, the employment of scores of traveling Negro teachers, preachers and speakers, the enthusiastic co-operation of the late Harry Hopkins and his W.P.A., wholehearted support from Mr. and Mrs. Roosevelt, made a calculated drive to take away from the Republicans what had been their basic asset.

A practically complete success was achieved. It was regarded by those responsible as the cleverest political coup in the history of American politics. Even in the South (there then being no hint of the sort of legislation that now threatens) it was so regarded. However, at the time there were some who warned that this might not turn out as smart as it seemed. Looking at the situation as it now exists they appear to have been right.

Democrats End Hectic Week Amid Revolt, Wallace Victory

Advertiser
Montgomery, Ala.

By D. HAROLD OLIVER

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21.—(AP)—Southern Democrats converged on Washington this weekend waving a "White Supremacy" big stick.

They want no part of President Truman's civil rights program. They regard most of it "anti-Southern" and federal interference with Dixie "tradition."

This is only one worry for the Democratic party as it approaches the 1948 election preliminaries.

Henry A. Wallace's "new party" forces got a big lift out of their victory over the Democrats in a New York special House election. They capitalized on it immediately by stepping up organization for Wallace's presidential bid in states from Maryland to California.

President Truman avoided a direct clash with both the Southern and Wallace elements in his Jefferson - Jackson Day dinner speech. If this meant appeasement, as Republicans claimed, it failed to appease.

The Southerners went ahead with plans to send a five-man governors' committee here to talk things over Monday afternoon with Chairman J. Howard McGrath of the Democratic committee.

Sun. 2-22-48

McGrath made no advance promises to the Southern Conference committee. He did tell reporters, though, that he would pass on their arguments to the president.

The five governors, who have a 1:30 p.m., (Montgomery Time), appointment to see McGrath, Monday, are J. Strom Thurmond, South Carolina, chairman; Beauford Jester, Texas; Gregg Cherry, North Carolina; William Tuck, Virginia; and Ben Laney, Arkansas.

They were appointed recently in Florida to represent all Southern States.

Have Backing

Backing them in their complaints are Democratic congressmen from all 11 Southern States. They adopted a resolution Friday pledging "cooperation" with the governors opposing the president's program for anti-lynch, anti-poll tax, and anti-segregation legislation.

There have been no indications that the administration would back track on its civil rights proposals. The Southerners say they were made in an election year to corral Northern Negro votes.

Four moves are open to the Southerners. As outlined by them to date, they include:

1—Demand that a Southerner be selected as the Democratic vice - presidential candidate. Names suggested include Senators Byrd, of Virginia, and George, of Georgia, and James F. Byrnes, of South Carolina.

2—A fight against a "specific" civil rights plank in the national platform, and an accompanying drive to restore the two-thirds nominating rule at the national convention.

3—Withholding of funds from the campaign chest, such as those raised at Jefferson-Jackson dinners.

4—Naming of anti-Truman electors for the November ballot.

If President Truman is unhappy over the buffetings from within his party, he did not show it when he took off for a two-weeks' trip to Florida and the Caribbean area.

"Happy" He Says

He told reporters he was happy and unworried.

The night before he laid down the line of battle for the coming campaign. He saw it as a Democratic party fighting for "progressive liberalism" against "a bunch of reactionaries" thinking only of the "privileged few."

Chairman Carroll Reece, of the Republican national committee said this should have been "set to music under the title 'Old Henry, Won't You Please Come Back?'"

Wallace was cool to a speech by McGrath interpreted as a virtual bid to the former vice-president to return to the Democratic party. Wallace said he would consider such an invitation "if the Democratic party proves it's a peace party." He added that "there is no present indication that it is." Advertiser

Wallace supporters, meanwhile, were organizing in Maryland, Virginia, Alabama, California, Illinois, New Hampshire, and West Virginia. Montgomery, Ala

The former vice-president preceded the president to Florida by several days. He campaigned in Tampa and Miami. He said he saw "no comfort in sitting at home hugging the very fine principle of the Marshall Plan while the martial plans are carried out." He plans to stump Minnesota next week. Sun 2-22-48

Democratic leaders had feared that the Wallace victory in New York might give his Minnesota supporters an advantage in a meeting Thursday, of the Minnesota Democratic-Farmer Labor party central committee.

However, the Truman forces gained control and set up a steering committee for a June 12-13 state convention looking to control of Minnesota's 26 votes in the national convention.

New vice-presidential candidates suggested during the week:

Democrats: James A. Farley. He said it would be "presumptuous" for him to comment.

Republicans: Representative Frank B. Keefe, of Wisconsin. "Stranger things have happened," commented the five-term congressman.

Connor Issues Call To South: 'Act Now To Save Future'

BY FRED TAYLOR
News Staff Writer

JASPER, Ala., Feb. 20—Alabama and other Southern states must act forcefully now for their own protection or have the decision governing their future made by our enemies. Birmingham Ala

This was emphasized before a gathering of Jasper men and women last night by Birmingham Public Safety Commissioner Eugene (Bull) Connor, who urged that delegates be sent to the Democratic National Convention who will battle to uphold Southern traditions. Fri 2-20-48

"We are at the crossroads," Connor told the Jasper Business and Professional Women's Club. "We are faced with a great constitutional question. If we do not make a decision for our own protection, the decision which will govern us will be made by our enemies. Vote for delegates to the convention that you know will fight to protect the South against our enemies."

Commissioner Connor, candidate for one of the eight Democratic delegates-at-large to be elected in the May and June primaries, in a bristling speech before the Jasper gathering, lashed out at Henry (Big Yogi) Wallace and his followers.

"I'm for outlawing Communists," declared Connor, "and if I'm elected one of your delegates I shall work to include in our national Democratic platform a provision for doing just that. The way to deal with Communists is to put the exterminator to them."

THE PUBLIC SAFETY COMMISSIONER reiterated that the race question is one that should be left entirely to the various states, since circumstances in each may require different treatment.

"But in Alabama," he said, "segregation is absolutely necessary and must be maintained to avoid serious difficulties. Fri 2-20-48

"The people of Alabama recognize that we have a problem and are doing much to improve the Negro's status in life."

Connor pointed out that Birmingham recently voted a large bond issue for public schools, with one-half the funds earmarked for Negro schools. He said the people were told that one-half the money would be spent on Negro schools and that the voters approved the issue by a lopsided majority.

The police commissioner pictured Communists as "termites" seeking to destroy the framework of our democratic government. He asserted we have laws against entry into this country of alien anarchists, but "so far as the welfare of our country is concerned, the Communist agitator is just as bad as the anarchist."

"The Communist would overthrow the American form of government and establish in its place the Red, Communist government," declared Connor. "The Communist would pull down Old Glory and hoist their flag in its place over the White House and over the grave of our Unknown Soldier in Arlington. I hold to the belief that American jobs, American soil and American air should be closed to international agitators and gangsters whose intent is destroying what it has taken us 150 years to build.

"We should delouse our soil and air by putting the exterminator to these pests who would destroy America."

The commissioner pointed out Communists raise the cry that to outlaw them would be contrary to the freedoms provided by our democratic government.

"Try making a speech in Moscow and see how much freedom that Communist country allows," added Connor. "The Communist is opposed to freedom of speech, freedom of religion and every other kind of freedom. I'm sure that when our forefathers founded this government they never intended that freedom of speech should be extended to protect men and women working to destroy and overthrow the government."

* * *

WITH REGARD TO THE RACE question, Connor declared: "It is part of the Communist program to stir up strife between white and Negro people and keep it stirred up."

Connor recounted his experiences in the Legislature and as police commissioners. He emphasized the necessity for proper training of our youth and the "setting of proper examples for their guidance." He pointed to the work done by P.-T. A. and others which had reduced juvenile delinquency in Birmingham to the lowest percentage of any comparable size city.

South Speaks Its Mind On 'Civil Rights'

ATLANTA, Feb. 5—(AP)—Southern Democrats, all dressed up for a national party, still were feeling snubbed today and thinking about forming one of their own. [illegible]

In brief, many a Southerner was suffering from an acute case of hurt feelings because of President Truman's 10-point civil rights program.

This program was against segregation, the poll tax as a prerequisite to voting, and for an anti-lynch law and a permanent fair economics practices commission. All of these points are close to Southern hearts. Thurs 2-5-48

LIKE ALL PARTINGS or threats of partings, there were rebel yells of ingratitude, and outrage.

The Atlanta Journal observed in an editorial that the recommendations "would resemble the Moscow pattern far more than the American way of life . . . this headlong project would . . . put firebrands in the hands of demagogues."

Editor Ralph McGill, of The Atlanta Constitution wrote the program "gives to despicable organizations . . . a membership appeal."

McGill added, however, that "for the South secession is no answer."

Despite the cynical use of the program by both Northern Republicans and Democrats, he said "Henry Wallace makes both seem conservative." Then McGill added, "Forming a Southern party is futile and would further injure the Southern political position. . . . It must be fought out in Congress." The Times

AMIDST THE RUMBEINGS of discontent and the calls for formation of a Southern party to cry a plague on both your houses, there was another voice raised—that of a Southern Negro. Birmingham, Ala.

E. D. Nixon, president of the Alabama branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, commented that the South is demanding the right to "re-enslave its Negro citizens."

In a prepared statement, Nixon declared that "Southern reactionists oppose anti-lynch legislation because they want to continue to use lynching to crush the Negro physically, mentally and spiritually . . . They are anxious to maintain by every means possible, racial segregation in order to carry out the false idea and belief of white supremacy." Thurs 2-5-48

There was glee among Southern Republicans over the Democratic South's troubles.

Gov. Ben Laney of Arkansas said he would prefer to see a Republican in the White House to President Truman if the civil rights program is passed.

Gov. Laney also repeated his suggestion that a convention be called to nominate a Southern candidate for president.

Former Governor Ellis Arnall of Georgia, widely known as a spokesman for Southern liberals, said he would support President Truman as a "loyal Democrat." The present governor, N. E. Thompson, also has pledged his support to Truman.

ONE SENATOR in Washington who has asked that his name be withheld, said two days ago, the matter of a convention would be brought up at the meeting of the Southern Governors' conference in Tallahassee, Fla., Friday. Birmingham, Ala

But conference chairman, Gov. Millard Caldwell of Florida, said he didn't think it would; that the conference was going to discuss educational matters. Thurs 2-5-48

Even before President Truman's recommendations were made, Gov. Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi said he would hate to see a break with the national party, but something must be done to stop party support of "anti-Southern" legislation. The Times

After the governor spoke, a bill was introduced in the legislature permitting Mississippi Democrats to bolt the national party in an election. That bill is pending and has powerful support.

Disintegration of the Democratic Party

The Constitution Atlanta, Ga. Fri. 2-6-48

WASHINGTON—Another quadrennial rebellion of a noisy Southern wing of the Democratic Party—and again on the racial issue—is convincing proof of one fact of considerable significance for this 1948 election year.

The fact is that the once vigorous party Franklin D. Roosevelt created in 1932 and held together for four national elections finally has disintegrated to the point where it does not seem possible for it to win an election.

The infection in the Southern tail of the Democratic animal now has permeated the whole body so that it is a sick and weakly imitation of its former self. It seems to lack the virility to pull itself together for a tough fight.

The last Southern "revolt," that in 1944, was of a pattern with the current one. It began well ahead of the convention with fulminations and threats. At the convention it exhibited itself in raucous, rump sessions of Southern delegations at which bitter words were flung at the progressive and labor elements of the party concentrated in the big cities of the East and industrial Midwest. The unhealable schism was glaringly revaled.

After covering developments in the South that year and after watching the spectacle at the convention, this writer observed in a dispatch at that time that the Democratic Party had become such a creaky vehicle that it probably could hold together for only one more election—that of 1944—and then only because of the war and the dynamic leadership of Mr. Roosevelt.

That observation seems even sounder today.

The Constitution

There were dire threats in early 1944 that the South would bolt the party and put up a candidate of its own which, of course, did not come off. There are the same threats today. It is safe to forecast that nothing will come of them, either. That is because the people of the South will not support any such action. The professional Southern leaders know that, as they knew it in 1944. This is the usual 'revolt" manufactured at the top by self-annointed professional leaders for their own ends. Atlanta, Ga.

But, though nothing extraordinary will occur, the repetition of these "revolts" finally has revealed a fundamental weakness in the Democratic Party: its inability to perform because of its split personality. This will have influence with independent elements elsewhere in the country, which are always necessary to win an election, and weaken their confidence in the party.

This weakness exhibited itself as long ago as the second Roosevelt administration. Conservative Southerners in Congress then began to ally themselves in a coalition with Republicans to fight New Deal measures which, by that time, had directly affected powerful Southern vested interests upon which Southern conservatives were dependent. No domestic New Deal reforms were achieved after 1938 because of that coalition. During the war the party schism was submerged because the emphasis was away from domestic matters. Fri. 2-6-48

But the Southern conservative bloc—and it by no means included all Southern members then, nor does it today—resumed its coalition with Republicans after the war and President Truman has been unable to break the blockade. In vain, over and over, he has recommended leftover Roosevelt measures, only to have them pigeonholed. Southerners also have joined with Republicans to enact measures that he opposed.

It has now become clear that no matter how strong or how often Mr. Truman demands, he will get little or nothing. It is clear, likewise, that if he should be re-elected, the Southern group would continue to block him. The new "revolt" has finally driven that home. The Constitution

The only way for the Democratic Party to revive itself is to weed out the obstructive Southerners. That will be a slow and gradual process. There is activity to this end in the South. Many people are promoting it. Only in that way can the party regain confidence among enough voters elsewhere to win elections. Atlanta, Ga.

Light On The Revolt

Birmingham Ala. 34D

To the Editor of The News:

The more light there is thrown on the threatened Southern revolt the more good, valid reasons there seem to be that it will, in the long run, prove to be what in the vernacular is called "a flash in the pan."

It has been pointed out by an impartial publication, The Christian Science Monitor, "State of the Union" column, that "all this means that the opportunity and the ingredients of a serious Southern secession from the Roosevelt-Truman conservative-liberal coalition of the past 16 years are at hand. It does not mean that the Southern Democrats, when the stakes are finally down, actually will try to carry their resentment to revolt, cut themselves off from the power and prestige which come from their positions of party seniority in Washington, and expose themselves to the rigors of the two-party system." News

The first thing that occurred to me when the secession flareup took place was, "This is it!" This is exactly what I have hoped to see, a two-party system where there is plenty of room for two. As far as the one-party system is concerned, I am anything but impartial. I am "again it," and in the event that the party headed by H. A. Wallace survives after the two major party conventions are held, a fourth party composed of the dissident element within the Southern Democratic Party would prove to be a balance to the third by virtue of the fact that it naturally would be antithetic thereto. Sat. 2-21-4

To that extent the insurgents would render the entire nation a service—perhaps. In my estimation, this would prove to be "a break" for the South. From then on the Democratic Party of the South would cease to be the tail of the national Democratic Party kite. It could then become one of the kite's ribs, so to speak, and to be what it's supposed to be; that is, democratic! Birmingham, Ala.

All of which is problematical, of course, and besides the loss of "power, prestige, seniority," there's patronage too to take into consideration. The fourth party would have to start from scratch because these emoluments of office would all go to loyal Democrats. Outside of all this there are numerous matters of vital importance to all who put the national welfare, especially in times like these, ahead of party, and in many instances ahead of even personal interest. Right at present there's too much at stake, too much on a teeter, and too much liable to topple overboard for disgruntled interests to rock the boat, whether they be personal, political or otherwise.

Southern Thunder

BY FRED TAYLOR

Will Alabama and other Southern Democrats really kick over the party traces this time? Birmingham, Ala.

Seasoned political observers don't think they will. But they might do just that. Certainly the fact they are rearing back on their hind legs in protest against President Truman's "civil rights" program is having a very salutary effect on party bigwigs.

Southern Democrats finally are making it crystal clear they are tired of being pushed around. Many long ago became convinced that what the South is getting out of the Democratic Party is not worth the pushing around it has been getting.

Sun. 2-22-48

TAYLOR

HEARTENING—The revolt is a heartening thing. Sen. Lister Hill says Rhode Island's Sen. Harold McGrath, Democratic National Committee chairman, has become convinced (although possibly a little late) that Southern Democrats mean business.

Reports out of Washington at first indicated that President Truman and McGrath were amused at the loud squawks coming from below the Mason and Dixon Line. Their reasoning was—and still is—that Southern Democrats have no other place to go.. Maybe they've forgotten that several Southern states—more than actual vote counts showed—went Republican in 1928. It was generally talked that Alabama actually voted for Herbert Hoover against Al Smith in that election, but when vote counting was finished Democrats had won by a narrow margin. Religion and liquor questions, but mostly religion, brought about that political upheaval in the South.

* * *

DYNAMITE — Truman's "civil rights" program certainly is packed with as much political dynamite today, what with anti-segregation and other proposals made in the party's bid for the heavy Negro minority vote in population centers of the East and Middle West.

Some leaders feel that if the Republican Party had another name, Southern Democrats would turn their backs on McGrath & Co. and go to the GOP en masse.

Others are ready to forget the Republican name. They contend that it is time for the South to forget the War Between the States and assert its political independence.

Then the GOP would court instead of ignore the South and Democrats would give us tender care instead of step-child treatment. Birmingham Ala

MISSISSIPPI MEETING—Several Alabama Democratic leaders, including State Executive Committee Chairman Gessner T. McCorvey, Mobile, and Birmingham Public Safety Commissioner Eugene (Bull) Connor, have been invited to a Mississippi Democratic revolt meeting this Sunday.

Gov. Fielding L. Wright sent the following telegram to Commissioner Connor:

"Outstanding leaders of the democracy of the state of Mississippi will meet in executive session Sunday in the Heidelberg Hotel, Jackson We would be honored if you will attend and give us the benefit of your counsel."

Sun. 2-22-48

Connor was unable to attend the Mississippi meeting because of a previous engagement. But the public safety commissioner, who is campaigning for one of the eight Democratic delegates-at-large places from this state, fired a verbal blast in Jasper last week at Northern meddlers trying to break down Southern customs and traditions. He said Alabama and other Southern states must act forcefully now for their own protection or have the decision governing their future made by our enemies.

"LITTLE YOGI"—They're calling Gould Beech "Little Yogi" and Henry Wallace "Big Yogi." Both have taken on big assignments.

"Little Yogi" Beech, who calls up both Alabama's U. S. senators and gives them lengthy political lectures over the phone, just like that, seems to be feeling his oats.

Beech, aside from being Gov. Folsom's alter ego, edits the Southern Farmer and handles, among other things, the square dance phase of the new ABC Board's juke box program.

Beech not only has threatened Sen. John Sparkman, who comes up for renomination in the May 4 primary, with opposition, but has plans to bump off all nine of Alabama's congressmen.

James Free, The News' Washington correspondent, writes that Beech told Sparkman he (Beech) would run against him if no other opponent plunged into the race.

That would be a very interesting race, one Sparkman adherent feels. But this same Sparkman supporter doesn't feel the junior senator helped himself very much when he gave The Associated Press an apologetic statement about his telephone conversation with Beech.

My guess is Beech won't run against Sen. Sparkman. If he does, Sparkman should be an easy winner.

SWITCHES—Several weeks ago, George D. Patterson, Jr., Birmingham attorney, reportedly was all set to run for Congress.

Then Patterson, protege of University of Alabama's Dr. Roscoe Martin, was said to have changed his mind and decided to campaign for president of the Jefferson County Commission. This report lifted yebrows in political circles, since t was difficult for them to believe Patterson would abandon a law areer for a place on the commision.

But reports now have it that Patterson has switched his decision back to the congressional race and will run against Rep. Laurie Battle and former Rep.

Luther Patrick, both of whom have qualified as candidates.

George Huddleston, Jr., is still seriously considering entering this race. News. Age Herald

DINNER AT 6:30—Six of Jefferson County's eight legislators raised their eyebrows slightly Saturday.

What lifted them were invitations from Gov. Folsom to Reps. Wallace Gibson and Paul Meeks for them and their wives to dine with the chief executive at the governor's mansion at 6:30 p.m. Thursday.

Sen. Albert Boutwell and the other five representatives—Hugh Kaul, Henry Beatty, Larry Dumas, Jimmie Adams and Will Sadler—wonder what's cooking. Their curiosity has been aroused, even if the next mail also brings invitations to them.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 24.—(AP)—Southern Democratic leaders Tuesday carried their revolt against President Truman's leadership to the point of opposing his nomination for a full term in the White House.

Senator McClellan of Arkansas said Mr. Truman, by his civil rights stand, "has thrown away his chances" of being elected. McClellan said he would like to see Senator Byrd (D) Va., nominated for the presidency.

Senator Johnston (D) South Carolina, said he thought "the party will stand a better chance of success in the November election" with a candidate other than Mr. Truman—Secretary of State Marshall, for instance. The Advertiser

Byrd immediately asked that his name be kept out of any presidential nomination discussion. Marshall said flatly that he would not consider running for any office. Montgomery, Ala.

In the Republican camp, Rep. Bender of Ohio said the Southern protest against "outside interference" is "hollow." Wed 2-25-48

Bender, sponsor of a bill to outlaw the poll tax requirements for voting in federal elections, said "the rights of states are important" but "no state has the right to deny any American citizen the right to vote because of his race or because he is poor."

10 Million Can't Vote

He said 10,000,000 persons have no vote because of poll tax requirements. And he said he hopes the majority of Southerners, not just two or three or four per cent," will be able to vote in the near future. The Advertiser

Bender spoke at a dinner given for him by the National Committee to Abolish the Poll Tax. Removal of the poll tax requirements for voting is one of the Truman recommendations which Southern Democrats are resisting. Montgomery, Ala.

Tuesday's statements followed a meeting of seven Southern senators and two governors who are fighting the President's program of federal laws against various kinds of race and color discrimination. Wed 2-25-48

The governors and senators discussed a plan by which Democrats in each state would set up their own "official Democratic Party." It could cooperate with the national party organization if it chose, or could split away from it.

As one senator explained it, this would permit local officials to run on a Democratic ticket. The idea was to remove any stigma of a "bolt."

Representatives Hit Truman's Racial-Rights Program While Anti-Lynching Bill Is Pushed

WASHINGTON, Feb. 4 (UP)—Veiled threats of a Southern secession from the Democratic party kept the Democratic High Command jittery today and set house Republicans whooping for action on a Federal anti-lynching law.

While the Democratic leaders were trying to ignore the secession talk, House majority leaders were losing no time in cashing in on the split caused in their rivals' ranks by President Truman's call for a ten-point racial rights program. A House Judiciary subcommittee ended public hearings on an anti-lynching bill and pressed for a quick vote by the full commitee that would bring the measure to the floor next week.

The Republicans have enough votes to pass it in the House, but the bill almost certainly would be killed in the Senate. There the Southern Democrats always have been able to use their filibuster privilege to talk such a measure to death. The Times

Southern Democrats Bitter

New York, N.Y.

Representative Eugene Cox of Georgia, shouted from the House floor that President Truman's program "sounds like the platform of the Communist Party." Thurs 2-5-48

"The Harlem district of New York still is wielding more influence with the administration than the entire White South," he said.

Representative John Bell Williams of Mississippi, warned the party leaders not to "brush off" the secession threats of the southern wing.

"We're not going to stand idly by and watch the south mongrelized," he added. "The spring of 1948 is the best time to have a wholesale spring house-cleaning in the Democratic Party."

Representative W. J. Bryan Dorn of South Carolina sent a telegram to the Governor and legislature of his state urging them to take "whatever action is necessary to preserve the purposes of Southern democracy."

Mississippi's champion of "white supremacy," Representative John E. Rankin, made public a telegram he received from Walter Sillers, Speaker of the Mississippi House of Representatives. It denounced Mr. Truman's program as "damnable, communistic, unconstitutional, anti-American, anti-Southern legislation." The Times

Representative Sam Hobbs of Alabama spoke before the judiciary subcommittee after listening to a defense of the Anti-Lynching Bill by Walter White, secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Truman "Courageous"

New York, N.Y.

Mr. White said the President's proposals were "a courageous and clear blueprint" for civil rights. Recalling that the House had passed anti-lynching measures on three occasions only to have them die in the Senate, he urged the House members to keep on trying "again and again until the Senate catches up." Thurs 2-5-48

Mr. Hobbs assailed the bill as one which would only promote lynching. He said it was "a shame" that so many measures of this kind were introduced, fourteen in this session. He said most of them were sponsored for purely political reasons. He also asserted that the demand for a Federal anti-lynching law "grows out of an overweening desire to keep the South a conquered province." (348)

Negroes "get more than justice" in Southern courts because the judges and juries there "have an understanding of the Negro which is absent in other sections of the country," said Mr. Hobbs.

"We love our Negroes," he added.

Senator John H. Overton of Louisiana, warned that the Southerners might organize a Democratic party of their own if the President's recommendations were enacted. He suggested a conference of Southern Governors to decide a course of action.

Senator J. Howard McGrath of Rhode Island, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, met the rebellion with a statement reaffirming the party's support of Mr. Truman's program.

Arkansas To Withhold Funds

The Times New York

ATLANTA, Ga., Feb. 4 (UP)—Gov. Ben Laney of Arkansas said today that the money raised by the Jefferson-Jackson day dinner in Little Rock would be withheld from the National Democratic party to protest President Truman's program. After a conference with Arkansas democratic leaders he announced:

"We have decided to hold the Jefferson-Jackson dinner and then sit tight with the money until we see further developments." Thurs 2-5-48

At $15 a plate, the dinner is expected to raise $10,000.

An Arkansas National Committeeman, R. P. Robins, denounced President Truman and suggested that state seriously consider joining a "Dixie party." He favored James F. Byrnes or Senator Harry F. Byrd of Virginia as possible Dixie standard-bearers.

Late Hugh Dent Predicted Urgency Of Southern Party

The Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.
Fri 2-6-
(348)

By ATTICUS MULLIN

The late Hugh Dent, who served for many years as a congressman from the Second Alabama district, was a prophet even if he did not live to see his prophecies come true.

Many times Mr. Dent discussed with the writer the State of the Nation and, particularly the problems of the South. He always said that, eventually, the Democratic Party would get into the control of the big Northern and Western city machines that cared nothing for the South, and that the South would have to work out "something new" to survive with her traditions and historical social customs.

Several times Mr. Dent, who was a loyal Democrat and passionately fond of the Party and its accomplishments, said that—in the event the city machines of the North and West took charge of the Democratic Party—the only thing left for Southerners would be to form a Southern party of their own, enter candidates for President and Vice-President, and take a chance on throwing the final election into the House of Representatives where the South would have an excellent chance to win against the Republicans and the Northern Democrats. The Advertiser

Abhorred Bolting

Mr. Dent abhorred bolting. He did not believe in entering a game and quitting or sulking when the cards ran against him. He thought if a Southern Democratic Party ever organized, it should be organized before a national Democratic convention and not after it. In other words, he did not think bolting after the South entered a convention was either good sportsmanship or good ethics. Montgomery, Ala

During the latter years of his life I talked with Hugh D

early every day for a quarter an hour or more. It was always a source of great pleasure d information to me when I nsidered the views of Hugh ent. He was one of the frankt and finest men I ever knew d one of the soundest. He ophesied exactly the plight the uth would come to. And with s prophecy he always offered e remedy. Fri 2-6-48

Unlike most men and women in the South, Mr. Dent believed that it would have been better for both the North and South if the South had won the War Between the States. He always said that the two nations could have lived in amity and the South could have carried on her traditions and the North could have lived socially as it liked.

Three Nations

In fact, he hung to the belief that the diverse interests of the United States would have been better served if there had been three nations made from its territory. He thought one nation should have been composed of the central northern and Eastern states, another of the states west of the Mississippi River, but not including those Southern states west of the river, and the old South itself. The Advertiser

He told the writer many times that when the Democratic Party got into the control of the great Northern and Western polluted political machines, that the race problem would rear its ugly head. He said all the machine bosses in the cities wanted was to hold offices and that they would sacrifice the South to get votes. He said they had to cater to Negroes as well as every foreign element that became nationalized and that the ancient customs and traditions of the South meant nothing to them. Montgomery, Ala

If Mr. Dent were living today he could say to me, when he met me on the street, I told you so. And he could have said those words with truth. Fri 2-6-48

The Vested Interest

The Record Columbia, S.C.

The Southern Democrats are adopting a policy of too little, too late. Fri 3-5-48

"Drastic steps will be required to affect the situation in any way, but it is too late to talk about 'preventing' adoption of the anti-Southern measures," Peter Molyneaux's Southern Weekly of Dallas, Tex., points out. "Some of these bills are going to be enacted even before the Democratic national convention meets and most of them will be the law of the land, with President Truman's approval, before the November election.

"Moreover, it is too late to talk about 'saving' the Democratic party. The steps open to the South are more likely to destroy than to 'save' the Democratic party. As a matter of fact, the historic Democratic party already has been destroyed by the very gentlemen who are responsible for these bills, and there isn't a thing the South can do about it. It's just too late. . . .

"There's nothing especially new about these measures; all of them, in substance, have been before Congress at every session during the past five or six years or more. . . . President Truman didn't invent them. He inherited them, just as he inherited the rest of the program to 'implement' the so-called economic bill of rights. . . .

"It's pretty late in the day for Southern politicians to be discovering that the present leadership of the Democratic party have abandoned its historic principles. . . . Even if the so-called 'equal rights' program and not been brought forward by President Truman, Southern Democrats would have no business in the national Democratic party as at present constituted. . . . There isn't any chance that the national Democratic party will abandon the 'civil rights' program, even though it means the loss of the entire solid South. . . .

"The real trouble is that the South's politicians do not want to do anything that will tend to destroy or even impair the one-party system in their respective states. They are beneficiaries of that system, their places in the political scheme of things, their prestige, the value of their past records, their chances of future preferment—indeed, their whole careers—are tied up with that system. Fri. 3-5-48

"Therefore, if they find it impossible to remain in the national Democratic party any longer, they feel they must follow a course that will perpetuate the one-party system in their respective states. They have too much at stake to permit that system to be destroyed if they can prevent its destruction. That's why, if they must leave the Democratic party, they propose to put a Southern Democratic party in its place to dominate the politics and the government within each of the Southern states completely.

"Yet, nothing is more apparent to the impartial observer than that the one-party system is a scourge in the South and that a two-party system would do more to restore the South's influence in national affairs than anything else."

And there is sound sense in Molyneaux's phillipic, sound sense and good logic. The one-party system politicians of the South are the gentlemen who got the South into the present mess. They cannot lead themselves or anybody else out of it. They are proven misleaders.

The Record Columbia, S.C.

The people of the South have got to take over from the politicians, if anything good is to be accomplished. For the people of the South have no vested interest in the maintenance of the one-party system. Fri. 3-5-48

UNPLEDGED

Sun. 2-8-48

Editor, The Advertiser:

At this time there are many of our Southern leaders (because of a 10-point program President Truman presented to Congress), who are advocating that the Solid South bolt the Democratic Party. This in the opinion of many of our people would be a very unwise thing to do. It is impossible to clean house by merely moving out; we can do a much better job by remaining within the national party and taking stock of ourselves.

We should analyze our position in the national party, to what use we have made of this position and to what use we may be able to put this position. . . .

What would be gained if the Solid South should bolt the national party and nominate a presidential candidate of their own? Sure it would be a gesture of disapproval but to what avail? The Advertiser

However, in the selection of a candidate for presidnet at the national convention, we could, by careful selection of representatives to the convention, hold a commanding position which, if properly used, would gain much more consideration and benefits to the Southern states. But we can never do so as long as we send representation to the national convention whose vote for president has been cast before such representation has left home.

Our so-called political leaders in the South have for several administrations managed in such manner as to send pledged delegations to the national convention until the greatly heralded Solid South has become so solidly ineffective that we are today of little notice at our national convention. Montgomery

We have had so far, several gentlemen to announce their candidacy as delegates. . . . We believe that all but one or two of these gentlemen have pledged their support to Mr. Truman, rather than to the best interest of the people. Ala. Delegations pledged in such manner, are, should opportunity present itself, unable to represent the people to the best advantage.

We ask the gentlemen who have qualified as delegates to the national convention who really want to represent the people of Alabama and the South, to ask the people to send them to the convention pledged to no man, and to no special interest. The delegates from the states opposing the Solid South can then call a convention of their own and map a course of action which would be to the best advantage of their states. . . .

~~Anti-Truman~~ Revolt Spreads To Rank And File In South

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala

By GEORGE GALLUP
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion Ala

PRINCETON, N. J., March 6.—The anti-Truman revolt among Southern Democratic leaders shows signs of spreading to the rank and file of Southern Democratic voters. 3-7-48

Although the President still runs far in the lead ~~in popularity~~ as the 1948 candidate, his percentage in the latest Institute poll of the South has dropped considerably since late January. Balloting between Feb. 4 and Feb. 29 finds James F. Byrnes of South Carolina, ex-Secretary of State, and Senator Harry F. Byrd of Virginia coming up in popularity as possible 1948 Democratic candidates.

George Gallup

Judging by the survey it would appear that the anti-Truman revolt which was for several weeks pretty much confined to the "leader level" in the South has begun to penetrate down to the voter level. Whether it will continue far enough to constitute a serious threat to the Truman forces remains to be seen. 3-7-48

If the revolt does happen to develop into an all-out affair, one question that will inevitably arise is, who are the next most popular Democrats in the South so far as 1948 are concerned? Montgomery

The Institute's survey shows that next to Truman the most popular choice of Southern Democratic voters is George C. Marshall, Secretary of State, with Byrnes and Byrd next in order.

The following table shows how sentiment changed in the South between January and February. It was on Feb. 2 that President Truman announced his civil rights program which irritated some Southern leaders because of its recommendations for a federal anti-lynch law, for action against poll taxes, for a federal FEPC law and other civil rights measures. Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.

Southern Democratic Voters

	Jan.	Feb.
Truman	73%	60%
Marshall	12	12
Byrnes	5	10
Byrd	3	9
Others	4	5
No choice	3	4

The "others" include scattered votes for James A. Farley, Senator Claude Pepper of Florida, Secretary of Agriculture Clinton P. Anderson and Secretary of Defense James V. Forrestal.

The fact that Truman is less popular does not necessarily mean, however, that the Republicans have gained popularity in the South. While fewer Southerners may approve of Truman as he Democratic nominee, they still don't want to vote for Thomas E. Dewey, or Henry Wallace or any other non-Democratic standard-bearer. That is shown in "trial heat" races reported by the Institute in February. Sun. 3-7-48

They showed that in a three-cornered race between Truman, Dewey and Wallace, the South voted 75 per cent for Truman at the time of the survey, 19 per cent for Dewey, 1 per cent for Wallace and 5 per cent "no opinion." In races involving Truman against Stassen and Wallace, and Truman against Taft and Wallace, the outcome was similarly anti-Republican.

Montgomery, Ala.

Threats of Democratic revolt in the South have been made before. In 1944 there were stirrings against Franklin D. Roosevelt. A number of Southern leaders threatened then, too, to withhold electoral votes. However, the revolt came to little, except in Texas, where a new party, the Texas Regulars, opposed to Roosevelt, polled about 12 per cent of the vote in the November election. Sun. 3-7-48

Philadelphia Delegate Withdrawal Asked; Ellis In Race

The Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Sat. 2-14-48

By ATTICUS MULLIN

Brewer Dixon, long a Democratic state committeeman from Talladega, Friday night told The Advertiser, by long distance, that the "State committee should be called into session for the purpose of rescinding everything that has done toward sending delegates to the so-called Democratic convention." 2-14-48

He urged, rather, that "they be sent to a Southwide Democratic convention," and added:

"I am in thorough accord with Mississippi leaders. Alabama should assist Mississippi and join any other Southern state which will help us to nominate our own candidates for president and vice-president. The time for bluffing has passed and action—prompt action — is necessary. National Democratic leaders have repudiated the South."

Ellis To Run

Simultaneously, it was learned that former Lieut.-Gov. Handy Ellis, of Columbiana, would be a candidate for delegate-at-large to the Democratic national convention, and planned to file his formal announcement prior to the deadline, March 1. Ellis, who was in Montgomery Friday, for a conference with friends, said he was not ready to make a statement regarding his attitude toward the Democratic presidential nomination. 2-14-48

Party Authority

"Like all Southern Democrats who love the traditions of the South and want its customs preserved," said Ellis, "I am at sea as to what should be done. No one man can presume to tell the party in Alabama what it should do. The instructions must come from party authority. I intend to contact Chairman Gessner McCorvey over the long distance telephone and suggest to him that a meeting of the State Democratic Executive Committee be called. Things have changed since the committee met in January and all of us must await the decision of our party as to the course to be followed." 34d

To Oppose Folsom

The announcement of Mr. Ellis will occasion great interest in Alabama political circles. Just two years ago he was runner-up to Jim Folsom in the gubernatorial race. Now he is to oppose Folsom as a candidate for delegate-at-large, and it will be interesting to note whether Folsom's strength has waned, or whether the Ellis strength has grown since Gov. Folsom's antics have made Alabama the laughing stock of the nation.

The writer contacted Chairman McCorvey, of the State Democratic Committee, in Mobile Friday over long distance. Chairman McCorvey said he had received no direct requests to call the committee into session. As far as he knew, there would be no call before March 1, the deadline for candidates to qualify in the Democratic May primary. The Advertiser

Another Meeting?

The action of Mr. Ellis will bring to a head the matter of another meeting of the Alabama Democratic Executive Committee. The committee was not against Truman at its January session, because Truman had not then slapped the South in the face. The writer learns that there were a dozen or more members of the committee, even as early as the January committee meeting, who were incensed at the President.

Take A Walk

In the last few days the writer has not heard a single Democrat say he wanted Truman for president. As a matter of fact, outside of three or four office holders, I have not heard of a single Democrat who expressed his intention of voting for Truman if he were nominated. Few said they would vote the Republican ticket, but most said they would take a walk. Montgomery, Ala.

While in Selma the other day I learned that many Dallas County Democrats had made reservations to attend any Southwide Democratic convention which might be called at Jackson, Miss. Sat 2-14-48

State Committeeman Tom Abernathy, of Talladega, has announced that he would attend the meeting, that he thought all Southern Democrats should be represented, and that stern measures should be taken.

Those who shrug off the wrath of Southern Democrats, especially those in Alabama with whom I am familiar, might do well to study the situation more closely. I have never seen Alabama Democrats so rebellious or so ready to take desperate measures.

COUNTER-DRIVE OUTLINED

Southerners, After Interview, Says Present Leadership Deserts Party Principles

By CLAYTON KNOWLES
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23—Senator J. Howard McGrath, Democratic national chairman, politely but firmly rebuffed today Southern Governors who sought to get the party high command to backtrack on President Truman's civil rights program. The Times

He would not yield on a single point as they fired question after question at him in a conference of an hour and three-quarters.

The Governors departed grim-lipped and went across the street to their hotel to meet among themselves for two hours. Then they issued a statement in which they declared that the party leadership would soon "realize that the South is no longer 'in the bag.'"

"A vast majority of the Democrats of the South," said the governors, "are determined to restore the Democratic party to the principles of Jefferson and Jackson and will resort to whatever means are necessary to accomplish this end. New York, N.Y.

"The Democrats of the South are united in their opposition to the so-called civil rights program proposed by the President and effective action in the Southern states will be taken to prevent adoption of this program.

Leadership Accused

"We feel we are expressing the firm conviction of our people when we say that the present leadership of the Democratic party has deserted the principles of government upon which the Democratic party was founded. Tues 2-24-4

"As never before, the time has come for strong and effective action by the Southern states not only to save the Democratic party but to preserve the rights of the states to govern themselves and preserve American democracy."

Nowhere in the 400-word statement was there any reference to "bolting." On the contrary, emphasis seemed to be on working within the party to force a change in policy. 34d Demo

Gov. J. Strom Thurmand of South Carolina, chairman of the committee of the Conference of Southern Governors which saw Mr. McGrath, refused to elaborate on a declaration that the committee's report and recommendations would not be made public until approved by the conference itslf.

"Constru it as you wish," he told reporters. The Times

In the conference with Mr. McGrath the committee, which also included Govs. R. Gregg Cherry of North Carolina, Ben Laney of Arkansas and Beauford H. Jester of Texas, posed six questions, one of which was subdivided into four parts. New York, N.Y. 2-24-48

Questions by Governors

The committee, buttressed by the presence of Gov. William Preston Lane Jr. of Maryland, conference chairman, asked:

Whether Mr. McGrath denied that Federal legislation in civil rights matters was unconstitutional.

Whether he would oppose such measures. The Times

Whether he would oppose a "special Federal police agency" as proposed by the Justice Department. New York, N.Y.

Whether he would work for restoration of the two-thirds rule at national conventions.

Whether he would back a platform plank reaffirming states rights and opposing Federal action in the field of civil rights.

Whether he would work to have civil rights legislation killed in Congress. Tues. 2-24-48

The Governors obviously did not expect to get the answers they wanted and they did not get them. At the outset Senator McGrath plainly sought to be actful and diplomatic.

His answers, although in the negative, were conciliatory in tone. Stenographer's minutes of the closed meeting disclosed, however, that his answers gradually became more clipped. Toward the end they were: "No" and "I will not."

Statement by McGrath

At the conclusion of his answers, however, Mr. McGrath told the governors he regretted 't'he events that have brought us to this situation within our party."

"I nonetheless want you to know," he said "that, personally and speaking for the Democratic National Committee, we appreciate the loyalty our party has had from the Southern states through the years. The Times

"I don't take the attitude that they are with us anyway, so the hell with them. I just hope that somehow our deliberations, as time goes on and when we weigh specific proposals that come beforet Congress, we will have a happy reunion in the not too distant future. As time goes on I know it is bad for our morale and hurts the spirit of party workers in other states.

"I think the South has much to gain in playing along with the party and in fighting our battles out within the Congress."

Later Mr. McGrath told the press that the meeting had been conducted in "an atmosphree of friendliness and reasonableness" and that he hoped "the eventual result will be a better understanding that will be translated into party unit." New York, N.Y.

He said that no threats had been voiced at the meeting, that the Governors made no demands for a Southerner on the national ticket, that no consideration had been given to anything but the merits of the President's civil rights proposals. Tues 2-24-48

"Sounding Board" Avoided

He stated that he and the Southern committee had decided to keep the meeting closed, while releasing a transcript, to prevent the conference from "turning into a sounding board for speeches."

Governor Thurmond, opening the session with Mr. McGrath, told him that the Southern Committee had been charged with "making careful inquiry and investigation into the problems of the Southern States arising from the so-called 'civil rights' proposals recently made and their solution by joint and common action, and to report to the conference with our recommendations as to further action which may be taken in the premises." Tues 2-24-48

"We are convinced that the methods recommended (to effect the President's program) will irrevocably change our form of government and may well sound the death knell of local self-government through the sovereignty of the several states," Governor Thurmond asserted.

Senator McGrath noted, when asked if he could deny that anti-poll tax, anti-lynching, fair employment practice and anti-segregation laws would be unconstitutional, tat legislation implementing the President's program had not been introduced yet. He declared, however, that he believed it "constitutional for the Congress to deal with any or all of these subjects in varying degrees, varying as to the particular subject."

Stands on Message

Asked by Governor Laney what further laws weer "necessary to meet your wishes in the matter," Mr. McGrath replied: Tues

"I can only refer you to the President's message, which spells that out very specifically." 2-24-48

He recalled that the Supreme Court had ruled segregation in interstate travel unconstitutional and added that the President "has not gone beyond that." New York, N.Y.

Without equivocation, Mr. McGrath asserted that he would support a fair employment practices act "provided that I am convinced in the final form in which it comes to us for a vote that it does not go beyond Constitutional limitations."

He asserted that he was "not committed to the support of any program beyond that which the President has already recommended." The Times

Under continued questioning, Mr. McGrath made it plain that the President only asked abolition of segregation in interstate travel and did not propose action within individual state. He noted also that the President did not ask "mixing of the races in the public schools."

Unfortunate Issue

34d

Most Southerners, certainly most of what Editor Ralph McGill of the Atlanta Constitution calls "articulate" Southerners, would feel a little more comfortable about it all if the Southern politicians leading the present revolt against the Democratic party had had sense enough and the good taste to make their issue something else than civil rights. The Record Columbia, S.C.

No honest person can object to any reasonable proposal to afford every member of every race equal treatment before the law. No decent person can defend any proposal to deny anybody by law any of the civil rights. Thurs.

And these things, of course, are the law today even though they may be defeated in the administration of the law, always an imperfect instrument and sometimes deliberately so. 2-26-48

The great danger of the whole dispute and the passions it engenders is that injecting the question into politics—the white supremacy issue was a dying political issue in the South—may set back the efforts of Southerners to eliminate the discriminations of which the Negroes justly complain, may undo, as prohibition did, all the educational work for temperance in these matters.

And it is a very real and present danger. Even some level headed persons lose their heads when they think they see signs that their world is collapsing on them. Thurs 2-26-48

On state rights the South could hope to win allies. There are Northern Democrats and Republicans who believe in state rights, even when they do not support discrimination.

Riding Madly In All Directions

Atlanta, Ga.

Sun. 3-14-48

There still is a Southern political revolt But it still is riding off madly in all directions.

There are many substantial exhibits to this statement.

From Uvalde, Texas, John Nance Garner has said the two-thirds convention rule, which the South used to have, was useless. The power it gave was negative, he insists. The South, he says, "should stand up affirmatively," instead of trying to "stop something."

From Washington come reports:

South Carolina, as in 1850 and 1860, is ready to bolt the party. So is Mississippi. Even the phases of 1850 and 1860 are repeated.

Gov. Tuck's Virginia vehemence of a few weeks ago has watered down to where he is seeking a bill which will allow him to have uninstructed delegates, and a preferential primary.

Gov. Laney, of Arkansas, now wants to rebuild the party, not bolt it. The Constitution

Gov. Jester, of Texas, is of a like mind.

Gov. Caldwell, of Florida, has professed loyalty to Mr. Truman, come what may. Atlanta, Ga. Sun. 3-14-48

Issue Perhaps the most important statement was from Gov. Cherry of North Carolina, who said the civil rights issue was not important enough to get excited about and he was staying home to keep from having to listen to the "lectures" of the Governor from South Carolina.

And so it goes.

The revolt has no direction, no unified aim, and no real substance . . . although that might come later.

History The truth is history has caught up with the South and the Democratic Party.

And no man may escape history any more than he can death.

What we will get is a compromise.

I liked what Jack Garner said about our laws, namely:

"The best laws on our statute books have been put there by intelligent compromise—compromise not on fundamentals or basic principles, but compromise on details."

That's true. It will always have to be true so long as we have rival parties, different opinions, and a form of government which allows them. The Congress will compromise details of the present fight. Sun. 3-14-48

Confusion We confuse caste with civil rights. One may not justify caste, and efforts of many kinds are being made to break it down in many regions, with India supplying the most striking example. Caste may not be established by law. But, it exists within the framework of every race, including the Negro. It is done variously by religions, by customs, by economic forces, by varying intelligences, and by choice. But, a look at the world will demonstrate that history demands human rights. The problem of caste is another matter and one for personal decisions and moral principles, not law. 3-14-48

Party Few see there is not much resemblance between the Democratic Party of today and the one which dominated the nation from 1828 to 1861, with an alliance with the West and a working alliance with the growing industry of the North. The Democratic Party of that time dominated despite its numerical inferiority, because of the skill of its statesmen and its peculiar economic position. The West had to use the Mississippi River. It was before railroads. The North needed cotton.

The Democratic Party which grew up out of the ruins of the Confederacy, was a "New Departure" Party, joining with the Eastern industrial representatives to build up and also exploit a broken nation. The Constitution

There is very real truth in the statement that the Southern Democrats very often sound and act like good Republicans. 3-14-48

The Southern party IS different from the Northern wing.

Victories And, since the Civil War, it has helped elect only two Democratic Presidents. Only at the time of Cleveland and Wilson has the votes of the 11 Southern states been needed. Roosevelt would have won each time without them.

It is not a happy thing to say, but it is true.

It also is a fact that not since the Civil War has the Democratic Party won nationally save in an upsurge of the people—Cleveland, Wilson and Roosevelt.

The Democratic Party cannot become the conservative party.

The Republicans have already built a better mousetrap.

I believe all of our nation, and not just the Democratic Party has been caught up with by history and that slowly, not at all suddenly, there will appear a second party in the South. It would come quicker if the Republicans would change the party name.

But the revolt, which protests civil rights, is important save to do one thing—and that is to make more sure a Republican victory. So, it gets on its horse and rides off madly in all directions. The Governor of North Carolina is more nearly right than many of us believe. 3-14-48

The Courier Journal Louisville, Ky.

South Carolina's Governor J. Strom Thurmond is a 'natural' for the civil-rights quarrel

Sun. 2-29-48

34d

By SAM MOSS, Courier-Journal Staff Writer

DESTINY made South Carolina's J. Strom Thurmond spokesman for Southern governors in revolt against the civil-rights program of President Truman.

Thurmond's voice mingles with an inaudible chorus of ghost-voices. In him at 45 is symbolized, as nearly as can be in one man, the South's struggle to avoid "encirclement" of federal rule.

His South Carolina, more than any other State, has hoed its own row and defied federal authority at the drop of a hat. It alone bucked the nation in the days of President Andrew Jackson, when it threatened to stop collection of customs duties at Charleston. It was first to secede on the eve of the Civil War. From its mainland at Charleston were fired the first shots that put that war into four years of bloody reality. Probably in no other state is the memory of Negro rule after that war and the recollection of Union soldiers during the war so fresh.

A Historic Hole

The Courier-Journal

George Blaydes and Grover Schuler, two Jefferson County detectives on the staff of Commonwealth's Attorney Frank A. Ropke, caught a little of that feeling just recently when they went to Columbia, the state capital, to bring back a prisoner.

Pointed out to them was the hole made in the granite walls of the State House 83 years ago by a ball from one of General William T. Sherman's federal cannon. The hole is still a scar upon the State House, and it still represents a living scar on the hearts of many Carolinians. Sun. 2-29-48

In Thurmond's home town and home county, both called Edgefield, the feeling is perhaps stronger than in other parts of South Carolina. The memory of Negro rule is perhaps fresher there than anywhere else. In Edgefield County alone was there bloodshed in the closing days of Reconstruction. The revolt which recaptured the State Government for the white people in 1876 was led by an Edgefield native, Martin W. Gary, whose home is a shrine. The two Civil War Governors, Francis Pickens and Milledge Bonham, were both natives of Thurmond's home town. Louisville, Ky.

Edgefield Hero

And in Edgefield, as perhaps nowhere else in a state which has carried a chip on its shoulder, the devil-may-care spirit of fighting for an idea has been uppermost. From it, James Bonham went to seek his fortune in Texas. Cooped up in the Alamo, he rode out to seek help, found none, and fought his way back inside to die with the rest of his comrades.

Thurmond's county sits astride the two divisions of South Carolina—the Up Country and the Low Country. There, the English planters of the coast, seeking fresh cotton land, met, quarreled and married with the Scotch-Irish seeping down from the mountain regions. This produced a breed quick of temper and, in the old days, quick on the trigger.

In the cemetery where Thurmond's family is buried rests also Preston S. Brooks, the congressman who figured in one of the bitter incidents that led up to the Civil War. Angered by a speech made by Senator Charles Sumner of Massachusetts, Brooks sought out Sumner and caned him on the Senate floor.

Another Edgefield native was James H. Hammond, a United States Senator who coined the expression "Cotton is King."

Family Is Old

Sun. 2-29-48

Thurmond has had instilled into him the heady history of his state and times. Unlike many of the current leaders of the South, he comes from the old planter and professional class which has never yielded the rule of South Carolina. Occasionally, a cotton-mill hand may rise to high office, like former Governor and now United States Senator Olin D. Johnston; but by and large, South Carolina's reins have been held by its old families. Even "Pitchfork Ben" Tillman, another Edgefield native who won power as Governor and U. S. Senator on the twin blue chips of farm discontent in the 1890's and elimination of the Negro from any part in the State Government, was a Bourbon turned reformer.

Thurmond attended Clemson College, built on the home place of John C. Calhoun, the intellectual leader of state's rights and secession. Through his home county runs the railroad built by Robert Y. Hayne, the man who took on Daniel Webster in those epochal days of the State vs. the Union. Hayne, with his words, was defending the right of a State to remain a sort of country within a country; with his deeds, he was building the network of iron that made America an economic unit, with political oneness to follow inevitably.

The Governor's father, J. William Thurmond, long was political boss of much of Western South Carolina. The son inherited his father's political knowhow.

Became Judge

The Courier-Journal

Strom was superintendent of schools in his home county four years, and then studied law. Upon his father's death, he succeeded to a wide practice. He gave it up, however, to become a circuit judge, in South Carolina elected by the Legislature. It amounts to a $7,500-a-year job for life.

Thurmond's personal courage was shown one Sunday about eight years ago while he was at home between sessions of court. The sheriff, his deputy and a magistrate's constable had gone out about 10 miles from the County seat to arrest a brother and sister-in-law—members of a rather prominent family—on a murder charge. Word came back that the sheriff and deputy had been killed, the constable wounded. There was no "law" in the county at the moment except the judge. Louisville, Ky.

He drove up to the house, walked alone up the lane, and came out with the woman. The man was so badly wounded that an ambulance had to be sent in. 2-29-48

At the beginning of World War II, Thurmond gave up his assured job for life, joined the Army and wangled his way into combat, although past 40. He came back with a good record, a colonelcy and something to add to the Edgefield tradition. In South Carolina's free-for-all gubernatorial primary of 1946, he came out on top.

He was a bachelor when he entered the Executive Mansion. Last November, he married Miss Jean Crouch, 21, whom he had crowned "Miss South Carolina" at Charleston's famed Azalea Festival the spring before. Sun. 2-29-48

Thurmond isn't spectacular; but he's a determined fighter with a great deal of political knowhow. And how much the symbolism of his position stirs him, no one can say. But sometimes there must run through his head the words of Calhoun and Hayne, the rumble of the cannon at Sumter, the cries of terror as Sherman's men put the torch to barns, the clatter of hooves as Mart Gary led his red-shirted "redeemers" clattering down the roads, the angry rumble of Ben Tillman defying the nation and the twangy words of President Harry Truman uttering principles which to Thurmond's type of Southerner are political castor oil.

The Lost Cause

The Record

Columbia, S.C.

Wed. 2-4-48

The trouble with the Southern revolt against the Democratic party is that it is too late.

The Southern Democrats at best have only negative bargaining power. All of the electoral college votes of the Southern states combined would have affected only three national elections in the past 70 years. All other presidents, Democrat and Republican, would have been elected without the Southern vote.

Once, of course, the South had influence in the Democratic conventions. Under the two-thirds rule, which was established by that South Carolina President Andrew Jackson, the South had the power of veto over any presidential nominee. It mistakenly prevented the nomination of Al Smith in 1924 and then in 1932 joined in nominating Franklin D. Roosevelt who repaid the Southern delegates—he didn't need the Southern electoral votes for his election—by persuading them to acquiece in abolishing the two-thirds rule, so eliminating forever the influence the South had wielded since Jackson's day in the Democratic conventions.

Thereafter the Southern influence in the Democratic party rapidly declined. Southern members of Congress held priorities on most committees—the Souh had been Democratic when the rest of the country was not—but johnny-come-latelies like Senator Joseph F. Guffey of Pennsylvania vied with the President, himself, and his cabinet, in denouncing the South, economic problem No. 1, which could be ignored, as the 1932 platform was ignored.

And the Southern members of Congress took it, because they and their constituents wanted federal patronage, rejoicing at the crumbs from the master's table that turned out to be the Southern portion. It was the day of spend and spend and if the South didn't get as much as some of the other states, it did get something and everybody was more or less content, since everybody could be re-elected. The Record

Then Roosevelt, breaking the long tradition which had endured ever since George Washington, was elected for a third term and later a fourth term. The balance of power between the Democrats and Republicans in the Congress fell into the hands of the Southern members, many of whom joined the Republicans in defeating New Deal ideas, but got nothing for their apostasy. They didn't have the sense to organize and bargain then when they had something to sell.

Columbia, S.C.

Wed. 2-4-48

The Republicans last year won control of both House and Senate and the Southern vote is valueless to them, except for the purpose of overriding a presidential veto. Even on this, however, the Southern Democrats do not bargain. They simply tag along, some with the Republicans, some with the administration. It was so last year with the two tax bills and the Taft-Hartley labor bill. And they get nothing, not even a respectful hearing.

Now that the Southern influence is reduced for all practical purposes to the vanishing point there are signs of revolt everywhere. South Carolina, Mississippi, Alabama are all getting up on their hind legs and shouting their heads off. But nobody hears them. On the heels of all the Southern complaints and threats of the past two or three weeks comes a special message from the President to the Congress urging, among other things, the re-establishment of the F. E. P. C., a federal anti-lynching law, the abolition of the poll tax, an anti-discrimination law covering the election of state as well as federal officers, an end to "Jim Crow" segregation in interstate travel, establishment of a permanent civil rights commission—all measures aimed at Southern prejudicies and advocated in disregard of known Southern opposition. The Record

These measures may not be passed. They are suggested by a Democratic President and the Democrats do not control the Congress. The Republicans, although they advocate the same things, might hestitate to enact them now when Truman would get the credit and probably the Negro vote, at which both of them are aiming. It has always been the Republican idea to keep these issues alive to split the Democrats and the passage of them would simply eliminate them as issues. In this way they have been able to use them as vote catchers every election year, not with very much success in recent years, of course.

And too many of these schemes depend upon the national prohibition idea, the idea that you can legislate morals and customs, beliefs and prejudices—a comforting idea, if it were so, which it isn't. Columbia, S.C.

But the President's message is the final and the conclusive demonstration that the South has played its cards wrong, thrown away its aces, put too much dependance upon demogogues like the Bilbos and the Rankins and the rest.

Nor can the South retrieve its lost influence by any of the measures now being proposed. All of them are too little, too late. It takes more than that now and particularly it is necessary for the South to rid itself of the little politicians that control its destiny, the men who got us into this no man's land, and replace them with men of real statesmanship, men who can command respect in Congress and in the states, men who know enough to keep their mouths shut unless they have something to say, men with character and courage enough to make both concessions and progress, men of sincerity who will be listened to when they speak. Wed. 2-4-48

This is a stern prescription. But it will be followed or else—the deluge.

A BIT OF DIVERSION

To the Editor of The News-Age-Herald:

Birmingham, Ala.

In this department on Jan. 12 a coruscation in letter form, from Mr. C. I. Tubb, mildly intrigued me. As a quaint quizzer and dealer in drolleries, he is gifted. The News

One thing Mr. Tubb wanted to know was whether "all the principles of Thomas Jefferson, Grover Cleveland and Woodrow Wilson have been abandoned" by the party called Democratic. Knowing neither "all the principles" of the illustrious trio named, nor all that the Democrats of today do or do not stand for, the query stumps me. If the quizzer knows the answer, he comes awesomely close to knowing the unknowable. 1-18-48

If Mr. Tubb "has always voted the Democratic ticket because . . . the party has advocated states' rights and white supremacy," he is one of many thousands who also have voted the ticket—for no better reason. Sun.

When Mr. Tubb discovered that Democrats who "attempted to put over" certain "proposals" (anathema to him) are "crackpots," he demonstrated impressive skill as a burlesque psychiatrist. When he went further and found that the "proposals" (affecting poll tax, lynching and employment practices) "are clearly unconstitutional," he settled (?) a vexing question, thereby meriting the gratitude of our supreme judiciary. Birmingham, Ala.

Speaking of the "Freedom Train," Mr. Tubb made bold to affirm: "It is clearly evident that the purpose of the alleged 'Heritage Foundation' is to destroy the race segregation laws of the South." Thus, with face entirely composed, he qualified as a humorous commentator of no mean ability. Sun. 1-18-48

Mr. Tubb diverts me. May he find time to keep up the good work. W. C. KELLEY.

The News

The South is so completely a political colony of the Democratic Party that it never rates attention by the party bosses and, in turn, by the political writers. As the bosses brush off Dixie, so do the writers, and you can't blame them. After all, the bosses are the president and vice president makers.

This fact was eloquently underscored in an article by Jack Bell, The AP's political writer in Washington, the other day. It was a speculative story on President Truman's choice of a vice presidential nominee. Reporter Bell discussed a round dozen prospects and their possibility of getting the nod. He explained why each was under consideration and he took them by section. Sun. 1-18-48

But he's yet to mention a Southerner or the South! Birmingham, Ala.

Why? Well, he's just reporting, reporting what goes on in the minds of the party bosses. They simply aren't thinking of the South in terms of that section furnishing a candidate for the No. 2 job. It's not because the South doesn't have men of the ability and qualifications to be vice president. We have them. But there's no point, in the view of practical politicians, of putting a Southerner on the ticket. There's nothing to be gained. The South's going to vote Democratic anyway, and a candidate from a "doubtful" territory might swing that territory into the Democratic column. Sun. 1-18-48

Where the politicians are concerned, every section has a price tag. That is, every section except the South. Its tag is marked: "Already sold!"—Dothan Eagle.

William J. Primm Has Many Friends Now!

BY JAMES FREE
News and Age-Herald Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, Nov. 20—It is an odd quirk of politics that Alabama, the only state in which President Truman was not on the ballot in the Nov. 2 election, provided a man who did invaluable work in helping the Democratic Party salvage badly needed electoral votes elsewhere in the South.

Sun. 11-21-48

He is William J. Primm, Jr., formerly of Montgomery, Ala., who served without pay as a special assistant to Chairman J. Howard McGrath, of the Democratic National Committee. While Primm is the son-in-law of the late Sen. Josiah W. Bailey, of North Carolina, his major political experience prior to the 1948 campaign was as chairman of the National Committee of the Young Democratic Clubs of America from 1942 to 1947.

DEMOCRATS who accept with complacency today the fact that the Truman-Barkley ticket carried all the Southern states except the State's Rights strongholds of South Carolina, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana, may recall that immediately following the Democratic National Convention there was considerable doubt that Mr. Truman could pick up many electoral votes in Dixie.

B'ham, Ala.

At that convention, in an uprising against the civil rights plank that had been put into the party platform, the following states had cast all or most of their votes for Sen. Richard Russell, of Georgia, as their choice as presidential nominee: Arkansas, Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia. And North Carolina, the only state in the "Solid South" to back Truman at the convention, did so by a 19 to 13 margin.

McGRATH'S MAJOR assignment to Primm was to do all he could to patch up matters with the Southern states. In the political heat and Democratic Party lassitude of late July that was quite an assignment. It remained a tough, discouraging job until early in the morning of Nov. 3, when those astounding upset returns began to take shape.

As the slender, nervous Primm explains with a wry grin: "I got little aid and no comfort in my job until after Nov. 2, but now I seem to have a good many friends."

* * *

WHEREVER POSSIBLE Primm worked with regular Democratic party organizations in the various states. This could be done in North Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Tennessee, Kentucky and Arkansas, although there were some tough hurdles at times, particularly in Georgia, Florida and Kentucky.

In the four States' Rights states the regular party organization was taken over by Thurmond-Wright forces, and what cooperation there was with the National Committee had to be accomplished through especially set-up machinery. And divers means of circumventing the opposition of many regular party leaders had to be devised also in Virginia and Texas. In Virginia, for example, with the Byrd machine sitting on its hands, Primm worked with "loyal" Democrats in forming the "Truman-Barkley Straight Ticket Committees."

* * *

HIS ASSOCIATES at the National Committee give Primm major credit for teaming with ex-Govs. Ed Rivers and Ellis Arnall in snatching Georgia from the clutches of the States' Righters. The strategy was to convince Gov.-Elect Herman Talmadge that his long-range political future could be best served by siding with the national party rather than with the Thurmond-Wright elements which, up to early September, appeared to have the upper hand in Georgia. From the start the McGrath-Primm policy in dealing with the South was to appeal to national party loyalty and to make it clear that wanderers from the fold might expect to pay the political piper. In early September Primm called on Democratic national committeemen and committeewomen who were not supporting the Truman-Barkley ticket to resign from their posts. Although the National Committee is still to act upon this matter, it is evident that the McGrath-Primm view is that the "disloyal" committee members should be replaced.

PRIMM'S ACTIVITIES in behalf of the Truman-Barkley ticket naturally aroused some vigorous resentment in certain sections of the South. One Alabama newspaper charged editorially that he had "forgotten his birthright" as a Southerner. But such sentiments, fortunately, are in a relatively small minority.

Just as McGrath relied upon Primm in the recent campaign, so will he depend upon the Alabamian to assist in helping the Democratic National Committee reform its Southern ranks for the years ahead. The chairman has asked Primm to stay on as his assistant until the problem in Dixie is cleared up. Since that may take some little time, Primm is likely to remain an influential figure around committee headquarters.

HELPS SALVAGE SOUTH—William J. Primm, Jr. (above), formerly of Montgomery, did yeoman work as executive assistant to Democratic National Chairman Howard McGrath in helping win electoral votes for President Truman in the South. A native of Wilcox County, Primm was closely tied in with Bibb Graves forces during the late governor's second administration.

VOTE FOR DEMOCRATS NOT SOUTHERN 'MUST'

Commercial Appeal

Traditional Belief Does Not Stand Up This Year

G.O.P. GETTING SUPPORT

Memphis, Tenn.

The traditional belief that a prerequisite for being a real Southerner is to vote for the Democratic Party has been shattered by many true sons and daughters of the Old South who have announced their support of the Republican presidential nominees in Tuesday's election.

Mr. Carter

One of the most outstanding Southern writers, a Pulitzer Prize winner and author of international acclaim for his books and articles about the South, has announced his vote for Gov. Thomas Dewey and Gov. Earl Warren.

He Is Greenville Publisher

He is Hodding Carter, publisher of Greenville, Miss., and a highly respected political analyst.

"Gov. Dewey is by far the better qualified men for conducting our international affairs," Mr. Carter said.

Sun. 10-31-48

"The Democrats have grown stale in office and a change is needed.

"It is to be remembered that the Democrats have no monopoly on liberalism, and a fight on liberalism is likely to develop between the opposing ranks within the Republican Party.

Mr. Allen

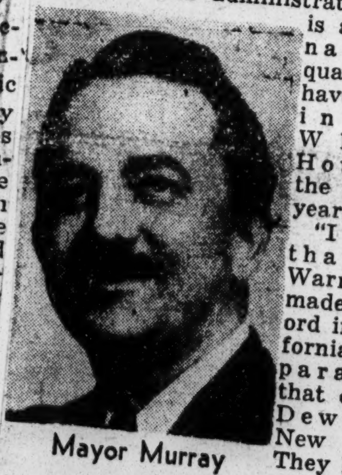
"If given a good candidate, such as Gov. Dewey, the South should keep the two-party system."

A prominent young Memphian and veteran of World War II is among the local supporters of the Republican nominee. He is J. Seddon Allen Jr., real estate agent associated with Joyner-Heard, with offices in the Commerce Title Building.

"I believe that we need a change of administration, and that a majority of voters are fed up with the New Deal," Mr. Allen said.

'A Wonderful Record"

"It is obvious that Gov. Dewey has made a wonderful record as an executive and administrator. That is a combination of qualities we have lacked in the White House for the past 16 years.



Mayor Murray

"I feel that Gov. Warren has made a record in California comparable to that of Mr. Dewey in New York. They have shown themselves able to choose advisors to assist in conducting domestic and international affairs of our Nation," Mr. Allen declared.

The two G.O.P. standard-bearers were indorsed yesterday by Mayor Robert Murray of Huntingdon, Tenn., home of Gordon Browning, Democratic nominee for governor.

"I am for Governor Dewey and Governor Warren because I think it's high time for a change in Washington. We need our two party system to protect our form of Government," Mayor Murray said.

"I feel that both the Republican candidates are capable men. They are liberal enough to handle the government in a modernistic way, but are conservative enough to halt waste and extravagence in spending the taxpayers money. I feel they will give us a dollar's worth of good government for every tax dollar they spend."

WHILE WE WAIT

Montgomery, Advertiser

It is not an act of unwisdom to await completion of the proceedings at the Dixie rump convention in Birmingham before seeking to make the final evaluation of the South's position.

Montgomery, Ala.

Ironically, it is not to our political leaders that we may look primarily for leadership in this time of strife which gives off explosions in the shape of mushrooms. For our Democratic office holders are vested interests in the matter; the Democratic Party is the vehicle of their power and they do not wish it stalled or dismantled.

That applies to senators, congressmen, governors and candidates for governor. They are unhappy and harassed men in the circumstance. They naturally and understandably cannot abide anything that threatens them with Republican opponents.

And so in this time we may largely disregard this gentry. They can be gotten into motion only with a carrot in the front and the stick in the rear.

Therefore, the expressions of newspapers have more than ordinary weight. Looking through some of those on our desk, we find that few see it in the same light. In many cases they are so bewildered that they are still talking about the past because they don't know what to say about the future.

With gratifying forthrightness, The Opelika Daily News is saying:

Sun. 7-18-48

Frankly, The Daily News doesn't know for sure just what course the South should take in the premises. It is possible, the entire civil rights program will be enacted into law before the November election. It all depends upon the attitude the Republicans take in the special session. If they follow the dictates of the GOP platform, they will fall into line behind Truman. Our only hope is the filibuster, but there is the cloture rule that can be invoked if the South's baiters are determined enough to go through with it.

Perhaps the party of our fathers will have to be rebuilt upon the wreckage. Whether the Birmingham meeting can accomplish much in this direction, we don't know; but if not, there can be other meetings.

In our opinion, a bolt to the GOP is not the answer. For 80 odd years the Republican Party has ignored the South in our appeals for a just proportion of the nation's attention. Also, it has been championing the so-called "civil rights" for nearly half a century. It was the GOP, we must not forget, that butchered our section with its plan of "reconstruction." The carpet-baggers were Republican missionaries.

It will perhaps surprise many Alabamians to know that in Alabama there is one newspaper, and a very good one, that is openly—instead of inferentially—for Truman. The Florence Times said yesterday of the Alabama walkout:

"The surprising thing is that the delegation was not thrown out."

Of the Dixie rump convention in Birmingham The Florence Times had scorn—"obsolete, broken down politicians."

To The Times, Truman is a man who "has grown great on the enemies he has made . . . Once more Harry S. Truman has demonstrated that one man with courage makes a majority, and the people, including those living under the rigged election machinery of Alabama, will find some way to support him."

The Birmingham News-Age Herald is warning Alabama that the Dixie doings can produce only hollow fulminations and no results. The two Birmingham papers want Alabama and the South to continue the resistance within the party of Truman. The papers say:

7-18-48

> It has been suggested that all the Southern electoral votes might be mobilized behind this ticket and that thus a decisive balance of power might be held. But many other Southern Democratic leaders and organizations have indicated that they will support the national Democratic ticket, despite their attitude toward Mr. Truman and the national platform. In this stand they are exemplifying their conception of the demands of reasonable party loyalty, democratic procedure and the practical considerations involved in the national political situation.
>
> They hold that their best hope of serving the convictions so widely held in the South respecting states' rights and the best approach to racial problems lies in continuing their fight within the party.
>
> They see no hope of such service in turning to the Republicans.
>
> They believe that a Southern fourth party would not have much, if any, chance of advancing Southern and national interests.
>
> Their position, in the opinion of this newspaper, is sound. That we believe, will be ever clearer after today's meeting of Southern dissidents in Birmingham.

The Columbia (S. C.) State is an old and famous Democratic organ of the Palmetto state. It sounds tired. It is wistful in its reflection that South Carolinians won't vote Republican. It says:

> Certainly South Carolina needs a real two-party system.
>
> But so far nothing has developed from the present Democratic confusion to point the way to its establishment.
>
> There is much talk about a Republican party that will really amount to something. But that is as far as the matter goes. Democrats, no matter how dissatisfied, simply aren't leaving the old party for the GOP—not outwardly, at least. And there will never be a strong Republican party in this state until a sufficient number of recognized Democrats lead the way.

The Raleigh News & Observer is the famous paper of the late Josephus Daniels and is now run by his son Jonathan, a distinguished author. It was, we seem to recall, the first paper to make a major outcry against Truman's Civil Disturbance formula last winter, but it is for Truman and speaks of his "great speech" before the Philadelphia convention. The News & Observer is happy about the whole thing:

> The Democratic Party has found, where it feared it lacked it, a leadership fully worthy of its liberal heritage. And once again, as always when good, courageous, sincere leadership emerges, that leader has found a Democratic Party worthy of his hopes, equal to his aims and ready to follow his fighting determinations for America and the world.

The Chattanooga Times, whose offshoot is The New York Times, sees it this way:

> The walkout of Alabama and Mississippi delegates to the Democratic Convention was a saddening spectacle to thinking Southerners deeply concerned with the best interests of our region and nation.

The Mobile Register is pleased to think of Alabama's vote going to some figure of the Birmingham assembly:

> . . . It will be faithful to historic practice for the Democrats of this state to cast their ballots in November for the Democratic elector candidates nominated in the recent state party primary. All of these candidates for presidential elector were nominated on anti-Truman platforms and are pledged to vote for some Democrat who does not hold the anti-Southern views paraded by Mr. Truman.

And finally there is The Washington Post, one of the half dozen most authoritative newspapers in the country:

> . . . The decisive action on civil rights may produce such dissension in the ranks of the Democratic Party as to present the election to the Republicans, though the ultimate outcome may well be a new alignment in the party system in the United States based less on geography and more on ideology.

Dixie Demos Urged To Kill Anti-Bias Plank

The Defender

Jan 1-24-48

MOBILE, ALA.--Adhering to Dixie's usual stand on the race question, Alabama Democratic Party leader Gessner T. McCorvey of Mobile, Saturday urged southern delegates to the Democratic national convention to "present a bold and united front" against any efforts to write an anti-segregation plank in the 1948 party platform.

In a letter calling a meeting of Alabama committeemen for Jan. 26 in Montgomery, McCorvey asserted that he anticipated a move to include in the party platform at the Philadelphia convention "some of the racial theories" advanced by President Truman's Committee on Civil Rights.

South Not 'In Bag,' Democrats Told

The Courier-Journal
Louisville, Ky.

Governors Fail to Get Promise Civil-Rights Bill Will Be Dropped

Tues 2-24-48

By the Associated Press.

Washington, Feb. 23.—Five Southern Governors declared tonight that the South, as a result of President Truman's civil-rights program, is no longer "in the bag" for the Democratic Party.

The Governors issued their statement after failing, in a face-to-face showdown, to get a promise from Democratic National Chairman J. Howard McGrath that he would seek to have the civil-rights proposals withdrawn.

They also asked McGrath—and he refused—to back restoration of the "two-thirds rule" which would give the South a veto in the choice of a presidential candidate by this year's Democratic National Convention.

Will Resist Proposals. 2-24-48

"The Southern states," the Governors said, "are aroused and the present leadership of the Democratic Party will soon realize that the South is no longer 'in the bag.'

"Each Southern state, under the framework of an over-all program, will work out the most effective means of resisting the proposals of the present leadership of the party, but resist them we will." The Courier Journal

The Governors, who came here amid threats that Southern Democrats will break with the national party over civil rights, got only two reassurances from the national chairman. He said he would not support any laws that interfere with matters which are the proper concern of the States. And he denied that Truman was striking at the South when he proposed the creation of a civil-rights division in the Justice Department. The President's primary intention was to curb "hoodlumism" in industrial disputes, McGrath added. Louisville, Ky.

McGrath Refuses.

South Carolina's Governor J. Strom Thurmond asked most of the questions in the 1½-hour closed session. In perhaps the most important of the questions, he asked if McGrath would use his influence "to have the highly controversial civil-rights legislation, which tends to divide our people, withdrawn from consideration by the Congress."

"No," McGrath replied.

The other "pay-off" question was whether the chairman would back a return to the rule whereby the selection of the party's candidates for President and Vice-President would require a two-thirds vote at the national convention. Tues 2-24-48

McGrath said he would not support this. He said it would be "a step backward" for the party, which since 1936 has required only a majority vote.

McGrath said he regretted "the events that have brought us to this situation within our party."

Appreciate Loyalty.

He said he and other members of the national committee "appreciate the great loyalty our party has had from the Southern states through the years."

"I don't take the attitude that they are with us anyway and so the 'L' with them," he said, adding: The Courier Journal

"I just hope that somehow in our deliberations as time goes on, and when we weigh specific proposals that come before Congress, we will have a happy reunion in the not too distant future.

"As time goes on I know it is bad for our morale and hurts the spirit of party workers in other states. Louisville, Ky.

"I think the South has much to gain in playing along with the party and in fighting our battles out for them in Congress."

Threats Voiced Anew.

Before the Southern party leaders met to draft a statement of their own, Governor R. Gregg Cherry of North Carolina told newsmen about the meeting with McGrath: Tues 2-24-48

"It wasn't as much of a secession as some folks thought it was going to be. There was just a lot of talk, talk, talk. McGrath handled himself pretty well."

By "secession," Cherry referred to threats—voiced anew today—that Southern Democrats will secede from the national party over the civil-rights question.

Cherry said the Governors who met McGrath "with blood in their eyes didn't get exactly what they were after."

Sent here as delegates of the Southern Governors Conference, the Chief Executives charged that Truman's program was "unconstitutional" and "may well sound the death knell of local self-government." Tues

They demended that McGrath strive to keep out of the 1948 Democratic platform the very proposals that the President has put before Congress—federal laws outlawing, among other things, the poll tax and separation of white persons and Negroes in interstate travel. 2-24-48

The governors did not mention the clamor for secession, but said they would recommend "further action" to the Governors conference and said McGrath's answers "will affect substantially our report and recommendation."

With Cherry and Thurmond were Governors Beauford H. Jester of Texas, Ben T. Laney of Arkansas, and W. Preston Lane, Jr., of Maryland.

Revolt In South Against Truman Begins To Hurt

President Continues To Hold Lead, With Gen. Marshall Second

BY GEORGE GALLUP
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

The anti-Truman revolt among Southern Democratic leaders shows signs of spreading to the rank and file of Southern Democratic voters.

Although the president still runs far in the lead in popularit as the 1948 candidate, his percentage in the latest Institute poll of the South has dropped considerably since late January. Balloting between Feb. 4 and Feb. 29 finds James F. Byrnes, of South Carolina, ex-secretary of state, and Sen. Harry F. Byrd, of Virginia, coming up in popularity as possible 1948 Democratic candidates.

Judging by the survey it would appear that the anti-Truman revolt which was for several weeks pretty much confined to the "leader level" in the South has begun to penetrate down to the voter level. Whether it will continue far enough to constitute a serious threat to the Truman forces remains to be seen.

If the revolt does happen to develop into an all-out affair, one question that will inevitably arise is, who are the next most popular Democrats in the South so far as 1948 are concerned?

* * *

Marshall Is Second

The News

THE INSTITUTE'S SURVEY shows that next to Truman the most popular choice of Southern Democratic voters is George C. Marshall, secretary of state, with Byrnes and Byrd next in order.

The following table shows how sentiment changed in the South between January and February. It was on Feb. 2 that President Truman announced his civil rights program which irritated some Southern leaders because of its recommendations for a federal anti-lynch law, for action against poll taxes, for a federal FEPC law and other civil rights measures.

SOUTHERN DEMOCRATIC VOTERS

Birmingham

	Jan.	Feb.
Truman	73%	60%
Marshall	12	12
Byrnes	5	10
Byrd	3	9
Others	4	5
No choice	3	4

The "others" include scattered votes for James A. Farley, Sen. Claude Pepper of Florida, Secretary of Agriculture Clinton P. Anderson and Secretary of Defense James V. Forrestal. Sun. 3-7-48

Republican Outlook

THE FACT that Truman is less popular does not necessarily mean, however, that the Republicans have gained popularity in the South. While fewer Southerners may approve of Truman as the Democratic nominee, they still don't want to vote for Thomas E. Dewey, or Henry Wallace or any other non-Democratic standard-bearer. That is shown in "trial heat" races reported by the Institute in February.

They showed that in a three-cornered race between Truman, Dewey and Wallace, the South voted 75 per cent for Truman at the time of the survey, 19 per cent for Dewey, 1 per cent for Wallace and 5 per cent "no opinion." In races involving Truman against Stassen and Wallace, and Truman against Taft and Wallace, the outcome was similarly anti-Republican. 3-7-48

Threats Not New

Sun.

THREATS of Democratic revolt in the South have been made before. In 1944 there were stirrings against Franklin D. Roosevelt. A number of Southern leaders threatened then, too, to withhold electoral votes. However, the revolt came to little, except in Texas, where a new party, the Texas Regulars, opposed to Roosevelt, polled about 12 per cent of the vote in the November election. 3-7-48

Commissioner Assails Montgomery Editor's Refusal To Sign

BY FRED TAYLOR
News Staff Writer

The Democratic delegates-at-large campaign in Alabama was further enlivened today as two of the 24 candidates struck out at each other sharply over President Truman's bitterly assailed "civil rights" proposals.

This followed a move by Birmingham Public Safety Commissioner Eugene (Bull) Connor to determine how many of the delegate candidates would sign a pledge to walk out of the Democratic National Convention at Philadelphia if a "civil rights" platform were adopted.

Pledging to walk out himself, Connor sent letters to the other 23 delegate-at-large candidates. He said he thought the "people of Alabama are entitled to know" how the candidates stand. Wed

Charles G. Dobbins, Montgomery weekly newspaper editor and at-large delegate aspirant, wired Connor that "I see no reason to deposit my vote in anybody's pocket."

Connor shot back that Dobbins' statement "fails to make clear just where he stands," adding that "you can't be for a thing and against it at the same time." 3-24-48

AT THE SAME TIME, Jerome Phillips, Birmingham lawyer and at-large delegate candidate, joined the growing list of public and party officer-seekers repudiating Truman. Birmingham Ala.

Dobbins, who also repudiated Truman as party presidential nominee, wired Connor that "I did not offer as a delegate from the state-at-large to the Democratic National Convention from any desire to destroy the Democratic Party, but from a desire to help in achieving that reason, unity and strength which will be necessary for a party victory in November over Republican reaction and Wallace confusion." The News

The editor of The Montgomery Examiner said he had publicly stated his opposition to Truman and to federal legislation aimed at the South, adding that "For my part, I have confidence that the people of Alabama are wise enough to elect 26 delegates who will loyally and ably represent their state in the convention."

Connor, firing back at Dobbins, said "If Mr. Dobbins is elected to the Philadelphia convention and can't spread enough of his 'reason, unity and strength' in the convention to prevent it from adopting the so-called 'civil rights' program of Mr. Hague, Mr. Kelly and Mr. Truman. what is he going to do then? I think the people of Alabama are entitled to know."

* * *

"AS FOR MYSELF," emphasized Connor, "I don't mind saying I will have no more of it and will walk out and join other Democrats in a return to a states' rights program.

"This is no time for fence-straddlers, parlor pinks and fellow travelers to slip into places where, if I'm not mistaken, it's going to take some forthright Democrats with a fair share of intestinal fortitude to stand up and do their duty. Certainly the time has come for us to put to rout the radicals and others who want to crush the South. I say again, let's put the exterminator to 'em." The News

In the race for presidental electors (11 to be elected), 22 of the 28 candidates have pledged themselves against Truman and not to support any candidate advocating the president's "civil rights" program. Birmingham, Ala.

Meantime, the question of whether presidential electors must support the Democratic nominee had been placed before the Alabama Supreme Court by Gov. Folsom. A 1945 legislative act provides that electors must vote for the nominee of the national convention of the party by which they are elected. Attorneys contend this statute is clearly unconstitutional. Wed.

If the high court upholds the act's validity, it would mean Alabama's presidential electors would be forced to support Mr. Truman, f he is the party's nominee.

Phillips, who originally proposed President Truman and Sen. Lister Hill as Democratic standard bearers in the presidential election, now favors Gen. Eisenhower for president and Hill for vice president. The attorney said Mr. Truman's "civil rights" proposals had caused him to withdraw his support of the president. 3-24-48

In the pledge which he asked candiates to sign, Mr. Connor set forth the following reasons for the proposed action:

1. The Democratic Party of Alabama always has advocated state control of such matters as segregation and the regulation of problems arising from segregation.

2. Any attempt which ignores the "long wisdom accumulated by both races in the South" by forcing adoption of FEPC laws, federal control of voting, "federal interference in the punishment of crime," is hostile to the "essential principles upon which our civilization and mode of life rests, and will be resisted by us."

3. The concept that the Democratic Party of the South is a "chattel" of the national Democratic organization and that it can be denied its most "fundamental needs" and yet deliver its votes to a candidate "whose policies are dictated by a desire to capture a bloc of votes in the slums of Northern cities," no longer is safe for Alabama. "We repudiate it."

HOUSE FOES CHART CIVIL RIGHTS FIGHT

Group of Southern Democrats Name 12 to Join Governors in Demand on McGrath

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21 (U.P.)—A twelve-member committee of Southern Democrats in the House opposed to President Truman's civil rights program was named today to meet with Senator J. Howard McGrath, Democratic national chairman, Monday. The committee, headed by Representative William Colmer of Mississippi, will join a delegation of five Southern Governors. Sun. 2-22-48

"It is my positive conviction that the boys from the South are in dead earnest and will fight to the finish this type of doctrine by its party leaders," Mr. Colmer said in a statement promising "no compromise."

Representative Oren Harris of Arkansas was named secretary of the committee. Other members are Representatives Sam Hobbs of Alabama, Robert L. F. Sikes of Florida, E. E. Cox of Georgia, Noble J. Gregory of Kentucky, Henry D. Larcade Jr. of Louisiana, J. Bayard Clark of North Carolina, James P. Richards of South Carolina, Tom Murray of Tennessee, Ed Gossett of Texas and Howard W. Smith of Virginia.

The group will tell Senator McGrath that withdrawal of the President's civil rights program is their price for support to their party in the forthcoming elections.

The House Southerners received strong support from Alabama's Senators, Lister Hill and John J. Sparkman. Both gave thinly veiled hints that they would filibuster against anti-lynch, anti-poll tax or anti-discrimination measures.

"As members of the group of which Senator Russell is chairman, we shall continue to speak, work and fight in the Senate to do everything in our power to prevent passage of these bills," they said.

Senator Richard B. Russell of Georgia, heads a group of Southern Senators who have filibustered against civil rights proposals in the past. Times

Meanwhile the Southern Conference for Human Welfare, through Clark Foreman, its president, said that asking Mr. Truman to "backtrack" on his civil rights program was asking him "to ditch the Democratic party." In telegrams to Southern Governors, he said the party was "already in danger of failure." New York, N.Y.

"It will certainly succumb if you Governors insist upon the denial of civil rights to that large part of our population which is colored," he asserted. "Thousands of members of the Southern Conference who live in your states oppose the announced purposes of your visit (to Washington). You cannot speak for them."

Sun. 2-22-48

Byrd Cautions House Group

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21 (AP)—Some advice was given today by Senator Harry F. Byrd of Virginia, to the House group. He told them to hold their fire but keep their powder dry.

The Virginian explained that he wanted the South to be sure where it was going before it broke any traditional political ties.

"We must make a calm, deliberate decision, on the basis of events as they happen, and then be prepared to go through with it to the end," he said.

South's Dems Perfect Plans For Filibuster

WASHINGTON

Dixie Democrats came up with the fresh hope today that they may be able to beat off first attempts to limit Senate debate on civil rights bills.

Their hope was built on the results of quiet lobbying for anti-gag rule votes among the Republicans and Western Democrats.

Even the most optimistic of the Southerners conceded, however, that at least one of the anti-lynching, anti-poll tax and anti-job discrimination proposals now pending is likely to be passed. They say they are afraid they can't hold the line againset repeated attempts to gag debate. 3-22-48

The anti-poll tax measure gets an airing before the Senate Rules Committee in two-day hearings beginning today. Sen. Kenneth McKellar (D., Tenn.) and Gov. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina will lead off the oposition witnesses.

The anti-lynching measure still is in the hands of a Judiciary Subcommitee headed by Sen. Homer Ferguson (R., Mich.). GOP members may bring it up first—either in April or May. Mon

That will be the signal for a filibuster by the Southerners. Republican leaders may let the talk run along a few days and then bring in a petition to put the cloture rule in effect. Under this rule, each Senator is limited to an hour's speech.

Rebel Yells From South Slacken

Sun. 2-22-48

WASHINGTON

Some 50 Representatives from 11 Southern States meeting in a "rump caucus" here have approved a resolution calling on the Democratic high command to abandon, or at least soft-pedal, President Truman's civil rights program.

The President, who called for party harmony in a Jefferson- Jackson Day speech Thursday night, was headed South for a two-week vacation when the Southern Democrate assembled.

342

Ignoring the fact that Truman made no mention of civil rights or the racial issue in his speech, the Southerners indorsed the stand taken Feb. 7 by the Southern Governors Conference which agreed to hold off any action on a party bolt for 40 days, pending a showdown conference with Democratic National Chairman J. Howard McGrath. Sun. 2-22-48

27 Days Remaining

This leaves 27 days for Southern Governor's and Representatives both to get satisfaction.

Rep. J. Bayard Clark (D., N. C.) said he drafted a large part of the resolution which "respectfully but firmly" cautioned the party not to write the Truman program into its platform. Clark said the language was "not as strong" as some of the Representatives would have liked, but "my chief interest was to keep the conference from going haywire and from doing anything harmful to the party."

Will Carry Dispute to Top

PM

Rep. William Colmer (D., Miss.), who sponsored the meeting, was elected chairman of the caucus. He planned to head a committee which would carry the dispute to McGrath. New York, N.Y.

The Southern group pledged itself to "oppose to the finish" the President's requests for Federal anti-lynch, anti-poll tax and other anti-discrimination laws, charging that the proposals would invade States' rights and set back efforts to relieve the race problem.

No Senators attended, but many of them, as well as House members, boycotted Thursday night's fund-raising in Washington and elsewhere. Sun. 2-22-48

The Advertiser

We, Democrats

EDITOR, The Advertiser: I am in substantial agreement with much that is set forth in your editorial of Tuesday, entitled "Four Horsemen." You are on strikingly solid ground in your belief that there is no pat or sovereign answer to the South's predicament.

Your assumption that there is a growing conviction to this effect among those who are thinking instead of snorting is, I believe, a little rosy. Indeed, it is my own observation that the thinking and the unthinking alike, fully realize the difficult position in which the people of the South now find themselves. But it is also my observation that they will not "string along" as they have done in so many previous national elections just for the sake of party victory.

But there is a bit of political history which you and all other editors whose comments I read seem to overlook. You observe the possibility that the G. O. P. in the next four years will probably have enacted its own civil disturbance program.

I agree with this observation but in the light of the political history of this country for a period of more than 40 years I am forced to the conclusion that the Democratic Party under the leadership of President Truman, aided and abetted by an overwhelmingly Democratic Supreme Court, has put the Republican Party on the spot. That is to say that the Democrats, not the Republicans, have forced the issue of so-called civil rights. Montgomery, Ala.

For a period of more than 50 years the Republican North has joined the Democratic South in refusing to surrender the right to free and unlimited debate in the United States Senate. This has been true at least since the defeat of the infamous Lodge force bill by the celebrated filibuster of 1896, led by Alabama's great old Senator John T. Morgan. If cloture is enforced in the Senate when the civil disturbance bills come up next, whom shall we hold responsible—the Republicans or the Northern Democrats led by President Truman? Historically and consistently it is true that the Republicans all along have advocated a program of civil rights repulsive to the traditional Southern character. Fri. 3-26-48

But when the issue has been between these rights and free and unlimited debate in the Senate, the Republicans—at least a sufficient number of them—have always refused to surrender the right to free and unlimited debate, which is the source and origin of the filibuster. You are right, of course: The South is in a predicament. But what Samson pulled the temple down upon our heads? Are considerations of loyalty to party or even of expediency to guide our course in such circumstances? I do not think so.

We Southern Democrats have just about treated the Republicans as if every one of them had leprosy. In your editorial "Four Horsemen" you touch, very lightly, on the thought that the Republican Party may be convinced that the South is available for courtship. Obviously, you are too masculine to think that this is leap year and too Southern to entertain the idea that we might do a little courting on our own.

Certainly, we in the South are now on the two horns of the traditional dilemma, with no choice between Republicans and Democrats, at least none so far as the civil disturbance is concerned.

My point here is that we err in thinking that our party affiliations and loyalties are all bound up in the single issue of "civil rights" and that we shall have no problems to settle in national elections of the years far ahead. It is, I believe, time that we begin thinking of a long time program of faith and action. Where that kind of thing will lead, I am not sure. But it will not necessarily lead to slavish adherence to a political party that is Democratic only in name.

We pledge our loyalty to the platform of the National Democratic Party before it has been adopted or promulgated and we pledge ourselves to support candidates for the office of president and vice-president before they have been nominated. This is political slavery. Perhaps it is too late to do anything during this year 1948, except by common consent. But there is a fairly simple way out for the elections of future years: Choose presidential electors after the national parties have met, devised their platforms and selected their candidates. 3-26-48

TIME AND PLACE

Editor, The Advertiser: The Advertiser

I think Mr. Massey Wilson, of Oakhill, Ala., is right when he advises the Democrats to stay in the Democratic Party.

I don't think there is anything wrong with the party. The trouble is in the man and not in the party.

I think the proper thing to do is for the Democrats of the South to elect some good Southern Democrats as delegates to go to the convention and let them nominate some good Democrats for president and vice-president. Montgomery, Ala.

Be sure and remember that two of the delegates we sent to the convention four years ago voted for Henry Wallace for vice-presidnet. We sure don't want to do that any more. The place to save ourselves is at the polls when we go to vote.

Plea For Democratic Unity

(34D) Sat. 3-13-48

Sen. Hill's radio address Thursday night was a powerful plea in behalf of Democratic unity.

He pointed out that President Truman's civil rights recommendations do not commit the party as a whole. He recalled that a plank on the subject acceptable to Southern Democrats was adopted by the party's national convention in 1944. He expressed the belief that differences within the party can be resolved again at the 1948 convention.

Birm'ham, Ala.

In any event, the senator maintained, there is no least reassurance on this score in turning to the Republicans or in making any move that will assure a Republican victory. The Alabamian reminded his hearers that only a few days ago the Republican national chairman, Carroll Reese, said: "Its (the Republican Party's) members in Congress have given almost unanimous support to anti-poll tax and anti-lynching bills, and to proposals for the establishment of a Fair Employment Practices Commission. Though they have been prevented from enacting such laws nationally—because of Democratic opposition—Republicans have given concrete evidence of their sincerity by definite action in the field of state legislation."

* * *

Sen. Hill himself has consistently and forthrightly opposed federal action along the lines suggested by President Truman. Yet he is convinced that the views of the great majority of Southerners in this particular will be far better served by maintaining the unity of the party than by splitting it.

Birmingham News

If protesting Democrats go over to the Republicans simply because of the Truman proposals, they will increase the chances of enactment of such laws.

If such Southerners were to form a sectional party, the South's influence in the national government would unquestionably be greatly decreased.

Sen. Hill brought out very pointedly that representatives of the South have occupied high places in the government in recent years and have had wide influence. Can it be imagined that this would be so if the Republicans win in November?

Once again the senior senator from this state, a close, experienced student of world affairs, stressed the overshadowing importance of the issue of war and peace. If war comes, other matters will become very secondary. The unity and strength of the United States are a major hope for the establishment of peace. Sat. 3 13 48

But suppose this administration, whose foreign policy has such strong bi-partisan support, were repudiated by a great number of members of its own party. What would that mean to the prestige of our government in world councils in the precarious months before another president takes office?

What would it mean in terms of national unity and strength? "Only if America remains strong . . ." Sen. Hill said, "can we hope that Russia will change her course and be willing to come to agreement for the peace of the world."

NEW BIRTH

EDITOR, The Advertiser: My late father was a brave Confederate soldier. I am proud that his blood flows in my veins. I am glad to recall to memory the story how he helped redeem our beloved Southland from its control by carpetbaggers, radicals, and renegades. Democracy to this old hero, from whose loins I sprang, was as sacred as Holy Writ. That generation gave us men like Morgan, Pettus, Lamar, John Sharp Williams, Ben Hill and Alfred Colquit and, a host of others who were brave enough to speak their convictions in thunder tones when our Southern traditions were threatened by those in power in Washington.

They stood like the rock of Gibraltar. Their power permeated the inner councils of the National Democratic Party. They never trimmed the garment of truth or compromised their convictions for a mess of political pottage. These old heroes are sleeping amid the clay temples of their beloved South.

Montgomery, Ala.

I wonder what those old democratic warriors would say to the "hush, hush" boys who are afraid to meet the same issues raised by old Thad Stevens and his radical colleagues during the decade following the War Between the States. Would they concede that Harlem is a greater power with some of our party leaders than Southern Democrats. Thurs

Would they repudiate the Thad Stevens doctrine and fight like hell to preserve the South they redeemed? Would they let a small group put rings in their nose and make them swallow the mongrelized food now being served on a political platter? The answer is no, a thousand times no, they preferred death to dishonor.

May God give the South a new birth of freedom and brave souls to lead us out of the wilderness where we have worshiped strange gods and listened to those with the hands of Easau and the voice of Jacob. 3-12-48

Old Political Hatreds Caused the Southern Revolt

The Courier Louisville, Ky.

Southern Politicians Use the Civil Rights Issue As An Excuse to Avenge Themselves On Roosevelt

Thurs. 5-13-48

34D

By Tarleton Collier

JACKSON, Miss. — The band played "Dixie." A Huddle of men arose and sang "Deep In the Heart of Texas." It was pushing 90 degrees, with May still young. The magnolias and pomegranates were blooming on the Capitol lawn. There was a man whose identification badge said his name was Claghorn, though he turned out to be a radio technician with no partisan concern in the proceedings.

Everything fitted the pattern at the convention of States Rights Democrats assembled here to declare war on President Truman and his civil-rights laws. This was the South, upholding a tradition of fiery protest. Thurs 5-13-48

Some things about the convention, however, bore looking into. There was, for example, the incandescence of rage against the President. The fury displayed against him was enormous. Nobody could be as mad as that at Harry Truman. It simply isn't in the man to arouse a passion so moving and vengeful.

Gradually, as you watched, the details of the pattern began to identify themselves. Some took on a personal form, more than the songs and the scents were familiar. It dawned on you that here were also a lot of familiar faces, a courtly gentleman from South Carolina arose to second the nomination of a lady from Texas as secretary of the convention. His accents rang a bell in this reporters memory. It was State Senator Warren, who I had heard four years ago, almost to the day, in the classic State-house in Columbia.

THE South Carolina legislature had been assembled there for the tortuous process of preserving white supremacy by removing all references to primary elections from the State books, hoping thus to keep the primaries as informal affairs of private clubs. And thus, you see, the Negro might be kept from the polls in spite of the Supreme Court, hell and high water. Senator Warren, pouring out his wrath upon the Roosevelt Administration and all its works, talked eloquently upon that occasion of digging out of a trunk his father's old red shirt, the uniform of Wade Hampton's Redemption Army, and putting it on to fight anew against carpetbag domination, if need be.

The Courier-Journal

And yesterday here in Jackson, the Texas lady whom he extolled as a paragon among convention secretaries was Mrs. F. R. Carlton. She was one of the Texas Regulars of 1944, whom your correspondent had seen thwarted, in a stirring convention in Dallas, from binding the State's Presidential electors to vote against Roosevelt and Truman.

Then arose Horace T. Wilkinson of Birmingham, who was to be chairman of the States' Righters' committee on resolutions and who told an indecent joke about a lynching party. In the 1944 election he was expounding the doctrine of white supremacy almost fanatically up and down Alabama, opposing Lister Hill for the Senate and decrying the Roosevelts, man and wife, as enemies of the Southern way of life.

There were others—men from Florida who in 1944 had fanned the flames of race prejudice in a vain effort to defeat Claude Pepper for the Senate; men from Arkansas, who had toyed in that other Presidential year with the idea also of manipulating the State's vote in the electoral college to defeat Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Louisville, Ky

THE Mississippians also were trying it then. Their State convention in 1944 elected an uninstructed delegation to the Democratic national convention, then held in Chicago, with the idea of voting against Roosevelt's nomination and with the name of Senator Byrd on many lips as a likely candidate. The man who was then Governor, T. L. Bailey, rushed in to stop the coup. He called a special session of the legislature and arranged for ballotting on Presidential electors. A Roosevelt slate, whose names were on the "pink ballot," so-called because of the color of the special paper, won over the uninstructed slate.

Thurs 5-13-48

The present Governor of Mississippi, Fielding L. Wright, explained to me today that the people were not then read for the issue. Now, he says, they are. It may be said of him that he is one of the progenitors of the Southern revolt of 1948, and he was temporary chairman and host of Monday's convention of States' Righters.

The Courier-Journal

Now, he said, it has become a people's movement. "The arrangements for the convention were taken out of the hands of our politicians," he said. "The business men of Mississippi organized it. The people are behind it one hundred per cent. It takes time for these things to grow."

The point is that the Southern revolt is not a fresh flame. It has been smoldering a long time. In one sense, it revives an idea and almost identical words of 1860, when Jefferson Davis, another Mississippian, turned the State to secession and said in justification: "We have vainly endeavored to secure tranquility and obtain respect for the rights to which we are entitled."

Louisville Ky

In its more immediate form, however, the revolt has been simmering since 1936, and the end of the two-thirds rule for nominations in the Democratic convention. The rule had been regarded as a Southern prerogative, and instrument which gave the South, though numerically a minority, the power of veto over nominations. as it was used to thwart Al Smith in 1924. When it passed, Southern politicians awoke to see their old hold on the party slip away. Their chagrin grew when the Negro voters turned to the Democratic ticket that year. The Roosevelts, the New Deal, and all they represented, became thence the targets of the politically jealous Southern conservatives. Harry Truman has inherited this bitterness and resentment. His civil-rights message placed into the hands of the opposition—both the political and the business opposition which Governor Wright mentioned—an issue that the people can understand and be moved by. How far and to what effect they may be moved I shall try to discuss in another article.

BURN BUILDING TO KILL THE RATS?

Editor, The Advertiser: Advertiser

Your editorial on the revolt of Southern Democrats prompts these observations. I have been a Southern Democrat since 1888, part of the time in your State. My father was a Kentucky Democrat and seldom used the word "Republican" without a prefix! Montgomery, Ala

The tone of editorial comment is that the South is being ignored by the Democratic Party because it no longer needs the South. Sun. 1-29-48

Well, the Democratic Party needs the South, this year and every year. It has always needed the South and always will because the Democratic Party is the South. The South has always furnished the brains of the Democratic Party. And it was the unswerving loyalty of the South and its influence, if not electoral vote, which wrested the country from the damrepublicans after Hoover's fiasco.

And the South needs the Democratic Party, cannot prosper without it. Only under Democratic administration has the South made any industrial progress. Under the hated "New Deal" more industrial advance has been made than under all of the Republicon administrations since that party was founded and promptly taken over by Wall Street. I challenge anybody to name just one constructive or decent thing ever done by the Republican Party for the South, or any other part of the country except the gold-spangled East. All the Republicans have ever done for the South is to loot and plunder it from carpet-bag days until we kicked the scoundrels out in 1932.

I don't like for Congress to tamper with our cherished "Southern traditions," but I'm not going to burn the building to kill the rats! 1-29-48

As for me and my House, we shall continue with the Democrats. If we did otherwise, Dad wouldn't only turn over in his grave, he would come out and do something about it. And, besides, if it had to be a Republican or Henry Wallace, it would be Henry two to one!

Mrs. Lennard Thomas Predicts Solid South Will Remain Solid

She's Satisfied

Virginia Senate Adopts Anti-Truman Bill; Sent For Signature

WASHINGTON, March 12.—(AP)—The Democratic Party's high command decided Friday to fight its presidential campaign on two issues: "Peace and prices."

And from one Southerner came a prediction the Solid South would be in on the team play as usual, despite the civil rights quarrelings.

The Democratic National Executive Committee met Friday, agreed on the main issues, but disagreed on civil rights.

However, Mrs. Lennard Thomas of Montgomery, Ala., said she was "perfectly satisfied" with an answer President Truman gave her on the controversy and added:

Montgomery

"We're going to stand together and work for a Democratic victory." The Advertiser

Other political developments:

At Richmond, the Virginia Senate adopted an anti-Truman bill which would permit the Virginia Democratic Party to name its own candidate for president. President Truman, if nominated at Philadelphia, could appear on the ballot as the candidate of the "National Democratic Party" or some other name besides the "Democratic Party." The aim would be to withhold Virginia's electoral vote from Mr. Truman unless Southern demands win concessions.

Sat 3-13-48

Huddle Slated

Several Southern Governors came to Washington for another huddle on strategy against the civil rights program Mr. Truman set forth in his message to Congress. They will discuss their plans Saturday.

Mayor Curley of Boston withdrew and Rep. McCormack remained as a candidate for delegate to the national convention; and Tokyo aides of General MacArthur, a potential Republican condidate, were disclosed to have protested against broadcast in Japan of anti-MacArthur news.

Major development of the day was the meeting of the National Democratic Executive Committee. Frank McHale, Indiana committeeman, said no official action was taken because "the voice of the party is its convention."

The convention will be held in Philadelphia in July, but the executive committee's advance work is important.

"We are certain that the mass of the people will make any sacrifice for peace," McHale said. "The Republicans have missed the boat on the high cost of living issue. They are putting up a tax reduction as a panacea for all the ills of the world." The Advertiser

About Civil Rights

McHale said much of the discussion was about the civil rights program. This has split Democratic Party ranks.

The South has demanded that President Truman withdraw his anti-poll tax, anti-segregation, anti-lynching program or else. The "or else" was a threat to withhold the South's electoral votes from Mr. Truman.

Montgomery, Ala

The statement by Alabama's Democratic National Cimmitteewoman Friday that "we're going to stand together" followed a mild peace gesture from Mr. Truman. He told a news conference Thursday it was up to Congress to frame the details of any civil rights law. 3-13-48

Mrs. Thomas said she asked Mr. Truman at a White House luncheon Friday: "Can I go back and tell my people you are not going to tear up our social structure in the South and that you are everybody's president?" Sat.

She said he answered by pulling out a copy of the constitution and added to her:

"I do not take back one word I've said. I stand on the constitution of the United States. I'm everybody's president."

She said she found nothing in his message indicating that it is planned to force anti-segregation upon the South.

Southern Governors Delay Civil Rights Action 40 Days

The Times New York, N.Y.
Sun 2-8-48

By JOHN N. POPHAM

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES

WAKULLA SPRINGS, Fla., Feb. 7—The Governors of the South, meeting in extraordinary session, threw cold water today on proposals that they start a revolt against the Democratic party this fall and came up with unanimous approval of a plan for a forty-day "cooling-off" period.

Governor J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina presented the compromise plan which calls for the Southern Governors' conference to appoint a committee to study the controversial problems arising in the South from the ten-point civil rights program presented by President Truman to Congress last Tuesday and to report back to the conference in forty days with a recommended course of action.

In a smoke-filled room filled to capacity with reporters and photographers, the Governors, flanked by their educational and political consultants, spent one hour in oratory designed to jockey Governor Thurmond's resolution into a favorable position after a day in which meetings were closed to the press and several Governors issued statements through spokesmen.

In an atmosphere of tenseness the Governors listened to the submission of three resolutions and then refused to give even a seconding vote to the proposals of Governor Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi, who urged a Southern conference of "true Democrats" on March 1 to consider a party bolt and Governor James E. Folsom of Alabama, who suggested thrashing the matter out in debate on the floor of the Democratic National Convention in Philadelphia this year. The Times New York, N.Y.

The special session called for the sole purpose of further studying the problem of providing regional schools for higher education of whites and Negroes in the South, opened this morning with an unexpected development. Sun. 2-8-48

Governor Wright had said the night before that he would ask the conference to lead a revolt against the leadership of the Democratic party in the 1948 elections because the civil rights proposals were "inimical" to the welfare of the South. 34d.

Gov. William P. Lane Jr., of Maryland, who has been mentioned at times as a possible candidate for the Vice Presidency on the Democratic ticket this year, announced suddenly that the meeting would be a closed one and that representatives of the press would not be permitted to attend. (South)

Education Compact Discussed

At noon a luncheon adjournment was taken and it was announced that the conference had discussed at length the details of drafting a compact under which the Congress of the United States might approve any group of states in the country entering into agreement to provide regional educational facilities. The Times

There were reports that the closed meeting was aimed at keeping politics a secondary issue and Governor Lane said that the proposal of Governor Wright had not been brought before the meeting. New York, N.Y.

As the afternoon session got under way a spokesman for Governor Wright issued to the press a three-page typewritten statement in which the Governor deplored the ten-point civil rights program as "an absolute disregard for the party loyalty of the people of the South. Sun 2-8-48

Governor Wright's statement proposed that the Governors' conference serve notice on the leaders of the national Democratic party that they would no longer tolerate efforts to pass measures "regardless of the will of the South."

March 1 Meeting Proposed

If this feeling of the South is ignored, Governor Wright's statement said, then the Southern Governors' Conference should resolve to "call a southern conference of true Democrats to assemble in Jackson, Miss., on March 1, to form our plans that will enable us to use our electoral votes in a way that will best serve the South and the nation."

Earlier in the week Governor Wright had indicated his approval of a suggestion that the South withhold its electoral votes in the fall and throw the Presidential election into the House of Representatives. Sun

At 5 P. M. the conference meeting room was thrown open and newspaper representatives were informed that a press conference would be held. Meanwhile it had been reported that Governor Thurmond would soon release to the press the content of a proposed resolution. 2-8-48

Governor Lane announced that a draft of the regional school compact had been completed, that two schools for training white students had been suggested and that committees were expected to complete many details by tomorrow.

As Governor Lane finished his statement, Governor Thurmond, attended by his adviser, Walter Brown, of Spartansburg, S. C., read a three-page typewritten statement in which he put forth his "cooling off" plan of forty days' investigation. The preamble to the statement bitterly scored "national political leaders" for conduct designed to "outrage" and "insult" the people of the South.

Wright's Motion Fails

Governor Ben Laney of Arkansas seconded the motion of Governor Thurmond to adopt his resolution. The Times

Governor Wright then submitted his resolution as a substitute, but a call for a seconding motion brought no response. Next, Governor Folsom moved that the Southern states send "favorite son" delegations to the National Democratic Convention and debate on the floor the problems facing the South in the field of civil rights. There was no seconding vote for his proposal.

Governor Wright and Governor Folsom each spoke at length in support of his own resolution. Governor James Nance McCord of Tennessee urged all the members not to "wreck the Democratic party." New York, N.Y.

"I can remember," Governor McCord said, "when candidates in the South campaigned on platforms calling for repeal of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments. However, the South has prospered over the years and those amendments have not been repealed. We must stay Democrats and fight this thing out in our own party."

Gov. Willard F. Caldwell of Florida, a leader in the Governors' conference, said he would oppose any steps that led to the election of a Republican President.

Governor Thurmond's resolution was passed unanimously by a voice vote. Sun 2-8-48

Later, Governor Wright issued a statement in which he said he had not voted for Governor Thurmond's resolution in the voice vote. However, there were no dissenting votes recorded. Governor Wright said he felt that Governor Thurmond's proposal "confined further action to the Governors of the Southern states," while his own proposal would have permitted "all the true Democrats of the South in conference assembled to express themselves as to the best method of protecting our interests."

South Prefers Defeat At Polls to Truman

PM. New York, N.Y.
Sun. 2-29-48

By United Press

WASHINGTON

The Southern revolt against President Truman on civil rights has shaped up into a five-step program aimed to restore Southern dominance of the Democratic Party.

Many Dixie Democrats in Congress believe a party shakeup is essential to give the South a bigger voice in party affairs. They claim the South is entitled to the top position it enjoyed before the Democratic National Convention two-thirds nominating rule was abolished for the simple majority rule.

Some of them now are willing to lose this year's Presidential election to achieve their goal.

Party reorganization, after the November election, is the last step of the program on which the Southerners have embarked. It is a step-by-step program during which the signals could change at any time to take advantage of favorable winds. Sun. 2-29-48

Sen. Walter F. George (D., Ga.), said he believed it would be possible to "reorganize" the party after the 1948 elections on a basis of "sound principles and good government." He said he would not hesitate to become a member of a minority party rooted in "economy and good government" because such a party would not long remain in the minority.

George said he had written these views to many constituents who had asked whether he was available for a Presidential or Vice Presidential nomination. He said he did not "want to become involved in any contest for a place on the ticket."

Ahead of party reorganization, the Southern program contemplates:

¶ A united front in Congress against the anti-discrimination legislation which Truman requested and the Republican majority is pushing. Their best bet is a Senate filibuster.

¶ Revision of State election ma-said, was being assaulted by Serrell.

Brown was the other witness. He corroborated every word that Campbell uttered.

Counsel for the Pennsylvania State Council of the American Veterans Committee and the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People are seeking to re-open the case.

They are preparing for a grand jury investigation and are seeking justice for Mrs. Serrell who was held in jail here until her husband was buried, when charges against her were dropped on condition that she pay court costs.

Prosecuting Attorney John C. Skinner told PM's correspondent that it was "a clear case of resistance" and that so far as he was chinery as a step toward keeping Truman's name off the ballot.

¶ An attempt to defeat Truman for the Presidential nomination at the National convention in Philadelphia next July and keep a civil rights planks out of the party platform. (Sen. John L. McClellan (D., Ark.) has declared flatly that Truman can't win in November. Sen. Olin D. Johnston (D., S. C.) thinks the party should dump Truman and nominate "some other prominent figure such as Gen. George C. Marshall.") 2-29-48

¶ Withhold Southern electoral votes from Truman in an attempt to throw the selection of the next President into the House of Representatives.

Withholding the electoral votes could seriously damage Truman's chances in anything less than a Democratic landslide. But it would be only a gesture if the Republican candidate won without tapping the solid South.

"Dixiecrats" Forming Campaign Committee

LITTLE ROCK, May 27—(AP)—
Birmingham, Ala.

Three states—South Carolina, Mississippi and Alabama—have named their members on the campaign committee of the state right's Democratic organizations—the so-called "Dixiecrats."

Gov. Laney, of Arkansas, permanent chairman of the organization, announced today that Robert M. Figg, Charleston, and State Senator W. P. Baskin, Bishopville, had been named to represent South Carolina; Everett Truly, Fayette, and Dr. J. O. Emmerich, McComb, are Mississippi's representatives, and Robert T. Goodwin, Montgomery, and former Gov. Frank M. Dixon, Birmingham, Alabama's representatives. Thurs.

Laney said Arkansas' representatives have not yet been selected; that the West Virginia's state Democratic committee had authorized him to name that state's representatives and that Texas and Florida state committees had notified him that names of their representatives had been mailed. 5-27-48

So far, Georgia, North Carolina, Tennessee and Louisiana state Democratic committees have made no response, Laney said, adding he expected to hear from Georgia and North Carolina.

Election-conscious Republicans happily egged on the Southern Democratic "revolt" against President Truman yesterday as Sen. Harry F. Byrd (D., Va.) endorsed "without reservation" Gov. William M. Tuck's proposal to change the Virginia election laws to keep Truman's name off the ballot and block Henry Wallace's Third Party from the election in that state (See below).

Battling Southern Democrats temporarily checked full House Judiciary Committee approval of the Case anti-lynch bill, but GOP leaders left no doubt that they intended to push the bill to passage in time for a Senate vote before Congressional adjournment in June.

No Public Admission

Republican leaders refuse to ad- ublicly they hope to provoke a Senate Southern Democratic filibuster either on the anti-lynch bill or anti-poll tax bill.

Privately, House Republican attaches have no hesitancy in recognizing the political value of a Senate filibuster — dramatizing Southern hostility to Negro rights bills—next May, shortly before the National political conventions.

PM

Byrd's indorsement of Tuck's proposals to the Virginia legislature declared that the message "may well become historic."

New York, N.Y

The implication of Byrd's statement, and of Tuck's own message at Richmond, was that, if the Virginia General Assembly should pass the Tuck-proposed bill—thus allowing Virginia's Democratic Presidential electors to secede from the National Democratic Party — other Southern states "revolting" against President Truman's civil rights message would follow suit.

Will Withhold Majority Fri. 2-27-48

The objective of the Southerners would be to withhold their electoral college votes from President Truman, if he pushes the civil rights program, and thus deprive any Presidential candidate of an absolute majority.

Under such circumstances the Presidential election could be thrown into the House of Representatives next January, with each State having one vote.

The program is fully in accord with technical Constitutional requirements, but would violate a century-and-a-half-old tradition steadily strengthening the people's right to choose their President and Vice President directly.

Incidents in The Revolt

¶ Rep. Clare Hoffman (R., Mich.) speaking in the House, suggested a "deal" between Northern Republicans and Southern Democrats "for the good of the country," to get together, "agree on someone agreeable to both and elect him." Then together they could "kill this program of civil rights," Hoffman said, "and satisfy you folks from the South." 2-27-48

He later told reporters that by "someone agreeable," he meant a Presidential candidate opposed to "legislation which interferes with

Notes on the Donkey Serenade

Atlanta, Ga.

Wed. 5-19-48

I was not one of those who yearned toward Jackson, Miss., where the donkey serenade recently was led by those self-promotional Governors of Mississippi, South Carolina and Arkansas.

This was the meeting of disintegration and frustration.

At Tallahassee, Fla., for the initial "revolt," there were nine Governors to consider a protest against Harry Truman.

At Washington, D. C., two weeks later, the number had shrunk to six.

At Jackson there were but three Governors, those from South Carolina, Mississippi and Arkansas. The boys were down from nine to three.

The proceedings were so obviously financed for the benefit of some yet unrevealed objective, and so plainly in the hands of the crowd from Mississippi and South Carolina, that the Georgia people sensibly withdrew to tote their own skillet of opposition.

Wed. 5-19-48

Oil It was obvious at Tallahassee that the big oil interests were stirring the boys up. They put the tidelands oil controversy right up alongside pure womanhood and States' rights.

They did it again at Washington. And at Jackson there was the resolution in behalf of oil right alongside the resolution against Harry Truman. There was no Governor from Texas at Jackson, and no official group, but there was a group which sang "Deep in the Heart of Texas," in oily tenors.

Names A lot of names popped out of the news reports from Jackson.

One was that of State Sen. Warren, who four years ago was the leader of the anti-Roosevelt forces in South Carolina.

Another was Mrs. F. R. Carlton, of Texas. In 1944 she was one of those who led the organization in Texas which sought to make the Texas electors withhold their votes from Franklin D. Roosevelt . . . an effort which failed. She was at Jackson.

There at Jackson also was Horace Wilkinson, of Alabama. It was he who led the extremely bitter campaign against Sen. Lister Hill in 1944, denouncing the Roosevelts as enemies of the people.

There were others there—all familiar as the anti-Roosevelt crowd of 1940 and 1944—now hovering about this "revolt," hopeful of sabotaging the Democratic Party. One wonders where the money is coming from. The reports speak of expensive pamphlets and tracts—all paid for with someone's money.

The Constitution

Money Walter Silers, Speaker of the House of Representatives in Mississippi, is quoted as having said a war chest of $2,500,000 was available.

That's not kudzu!

Atlanta, Ga.

Wed. 5-19-48

He says there will be plenty of money to finance a convention —at Birmingham—if the Philadelphia convention nominates Mr. Truman. To that convention will be invited all Southern delegations.

I don't doubt the money is available and I don't doubt that the convention will be attempted—and it is easy to guess why Birmingham is the place selected . . . where the cash will be available.

Bolting But, whether the Democrats will be there I don't know. I doubt it. Fighting in the convention is one thing. Withholding the electoral votes is another. But bolting the party is something else.

Wed. 5-19-48

I somehow doubt that the boys will take a walk to Birmingham —not in any great numbers.

The old hates keep simmering. They have been boiling over since 1936 when the two-thirds rule was abolished. The Roosevelts, the New Deal, the inevitable decisions by the Supreme Court relative to citizenship rights—all these clashed with an old conservatism and began to make less sure the grip of the old politicians. It is no mere coincidence that the cry is loudest today from the poll tax States.

The Constitution

The revolt hasn't jelled yet. It can't do that for weeks to come.

Former Gov. Ellis Arnall's prediction that delegates pre-convention-pledged against the party's nominees will not be seated, is possible, but not very probable. The National Convention can't bolt the State parties any easier than the States can bolt the national party.

Atlanta, Ga.

The gathering at Birmingham, if there is one, will not be large. After all, even in politics, you can't buy everything with money.

Dixiecrats

Sun. 5-16-48

Dixiecrat: Southerner, white, normally stanchly Democratic, characterized in 1948 by strong opposition to President Harry S. Truman.

The Times

This definition hasn't yet appeared in any dictionary, but some variation on it may eventually. It was coined by the Charlotte (N. C.) News. It applies to Southern Democrats who don't like President Truman and his stand for civil rights for Negroes.

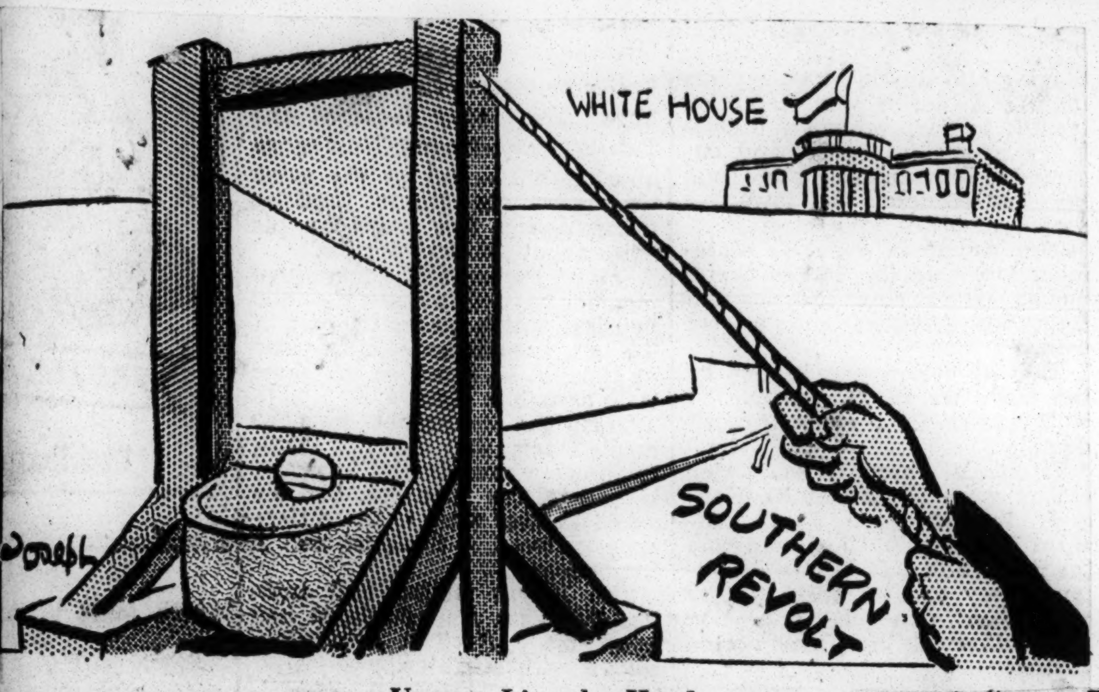
In Jackson, Miss., last Monday the more extreme Dixiecrats held a "States' Rights Conference." The city's main avenue was hung with Confederate flags. The host was Gov. Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi, who the day before advised Negroes that if they expected "equality" they should move to "some state other than Mississippi." The meeting was unofficial and the biggest "delegations" were from Mississippi, Alabama, South Carolina and Arkansas. For four hours the conferees heard Mr. Truman denounced for "selling the South down the river for a shirttail of Northern votes." Then they voted unanimously to hold a separate convention next July if the Democratic National Convention, beginning on July 12, fails to repudiate Mr. Truman and the civil rights issue.

New York, N.Y.

If the Dixiecrats' action and the continued coldness toward the President among industrial groups—disturbed Mr. Truman, he did not show it. At a dinner of Young Democrats in Washington on Friday he delivered one of his most aggressive political speeches in years. He spoke extemporaneously and informally—a technique his advisers regard as more effective than his somewhat stilted formal style. He said:

Sun.

"I want to say to you that for the next four years there will be a Democrat in the White House—and you're looking at him." 5-16-48



Uneasy Lies the Head

Southerners Quit Truman for Good

Dixie Dissenters Secede To Make Revolt a Formal Break

5-11-48

By TARLETON COLLIER
Staff Correspondent, The Courier-Journal.

Jackson, Miss., May 10.—Southerners from 10 states of the old Confederacy, in a convention here today, seceded from Harry S. Truman.

After 3 hours of defiant oratory in the old manner, the Southern revolt formally was organized by Democratic Party members who came here on invitation by party chairmen of Mississippi and Arkansas. The revolt left off as a loose but passionate hurly-burly. It became a campaign, with a high command, a general strategy, field tactics, and a set of objectives.

As stated in resolutions adopted to rebel yells, these objectives include:

1. To fight the nomination of President Truman.

The Courier-Journal

Oppose Civil-Rights Backers.

2. To work against "every candidate who fails or refuses to repudiate publicly the federal so-called civil-rights program."

3. To recommend that states choose as delegates to the national convention and as presidential electors only persons who will stand against Truman or any other champion of civil-rights legislation.

4. To start the fight in the Philadelphia convention with a warning of these intentions.

5. If the fight is lost there, to hold a meeting in Birmingham July 17 "for the purpose of taking all necessary and appropriate action." This might mean a Southern ticket and a full-fledged schism, as in 1860 with the bolt from Stephen A. Douglas.

Outright Fight Possible.

Louisville, Ky.

6. To create a campaign organization to see the fight through November. As speakers explained the idea, this would mean an outright campaign against Truman's election if he is the nominee. Tues 5-11-48

The field marshal of the campaign will be Ben Laney, Governor of Arkansas. Laney, stocky, grim-faced, and fiery, was permanent chairman of the convention and ran it swiftly on prearranged lines. The speakers had been selected, the resolutions written, the movers of motions spotted, in two days of preconvention caucuses—in the interests of coherence and dispatch, it was explained. All the approximately 1,000 delegates had to do was to shout, which they did with a will.

They leaped to their feet with the loudest and longest unanimous shout when J. Strom Thurmond, Governor of South Carolina, a vigorous keynoter, declared, "Harry Truman never has been elected President of the United States and never will be."

'We Are Going to Fight.'

The Courier-Journal

However, the applause for this declaration was pressed closely for volume by two other utterances by the South Carolinian. One recaptured the fire and definite point of the old secession conventions: Louisville, Ky.

"We are going to fight, come what may. We are going to preserve our civilization in the South. Not all the laws of Washington, or all the bayonets of the Army can force the Negro into our homes, our churches, or our schools, or into our places of amusement and recreation."

And the other, when Governor Thurmond was urging action to oppose any Democratic nominee who stood for the civil-rights program, "As the Governor of a sovereign state, I do not intend that the rights of my people shall be sacrificed on the block of blind party loyalty." Tues. 5-11-48

Began By Singing Dixie.

First and last it was a gathering of Southerners and States-righters. They began by singing "Dixie." They wound up with a catchy air, "Let's Send Harry Back to the Farm," of which a great deal doubtless will be heard before November. Its lyrics were composed by William Lowndes Daniel, Jr., secretary to Governor Thurmond. And, to judge by their effect on the convention, they do something to you.

Just before this only hilarious spot on the deadly serious program the delegates heard as the final speaker, young Congressman John Bell Williams of Mississippi. He invoked the spirit of Theodore G. Bilbo to guide the campaign to righteousness and loyalty to Southern ideals. The applause nearly raised the roof.

Nobody will be able to say that, as far as Southern Democratic politicians are concerned, this convention of "State-rights Democrats" was not representative and responsible.

Its central figures were the three Governors—Fielding Wright of Mississippi, who was temporary chairman; Laney, the permanent chairman, and Thurmond, the keynoter. Governor Beauford Jester of Texas couldn't come, but he sent an official delegation. Tues.

Heads of the other delegations were state party chairmen or national committeemen or delegates to the national convention or leaders in the Legislature. Thus represented, at least quasi officially, were Mississippi, Arkansas, South Carolina, Alabama, Florida, Texas, Tennessee, Georgia, Virginia, and North Carolina. 5-11-48

A standard bearing the designation, "Other States," reared over a thick cluster of delegates. Anybody who registered was qualified to attend, which meant to lift his voice in the unanimous voting and to cheer, if not to join in the oratory. One enthusiastic but unassigned delegate who hastened to second a motion brought about a moment of embarrassed silence.

(34d)

Only one state delegation failed to concur in the resolutions and the plan of action, although nothing was said of it on the floor. This was Georgia's, which came along under leadership of James S. Peters, the state party chairman. A statement afterward said the abstention was without prejudice and the suggestion was that the individual members felt like all the others. Georgia, however, has some unfinished political business of its own, with an election ahead in which Herman Talmadge is running against Governor M. E. Thompson, and there are some policy kinks to be ironed out.

Stop With Wilson.

But everybody was for States rights, the same as in antebellum days. Some of the same words were used in defense of that principle as were used then. Actually, there were ample quotations from the States-righters of the old days, some out of archives, more than a century old, some as recent as those of Franklin D. Roosevelt. The Courier-Journal

However, it could not escape notice that more than one speaker, lauding the "Jeffersonian, Jacksonian, and Wilsonian" principles, stopped there, proceeding no further along the chronology of Democratic saints.

Even the invocation of divine blessing was in the proper note. In his opening prayer an elderly clergyman, the Rev. Walter B. Capers, rector emeritus of St. Andrew's Episcopal Church of Jackson, touched on the point of the meeting. He prayed:

"We thank Thee for the Constitution, which guarantees to each State the right to govern itself in its locality. We ask Thee to cause our leaders in high places to recognize the baneful consequences of substituting bureaucracy for constitutional government." Louisville Ky.

Oil Raises Its Head.

In this note, revelations of a kindred philosophy were carried in the declarations which the convention approved. These delegates, it was plain, were the conservatives of Southern politics. The formal declaration of principles contained this: Tues

"The executive department of the Government is promoting the gradual but certain growth of a totalitarian state by domination and control of a politically minded Supreme Court. Thurs

"As examples of the threat to our form of Government, the executive department, with the aid of the Supreme Court, has asserted national dominion and control of submerged oil-bearing lands in California, schools in Oklahoma and Missouri, primary elections in Texas, South Carolina, and Louisiana, restrictive covenants in New York, the District of Columbia, and other jurisdictions, as well as religious instruction in Illinois. 5-11-48

"By asserting paramount federal rights in these instances, a totalitarian concept has been promulgated which threatens the integrity of the States and the basic rights of their citizens."

In the same vein the declaration also included, "The use of the veto power by the Chief Executive over tax legislation is a dangerous and almost unprecedented threat to the control by the people of the power of taxation." The Courier-Journal

There was also this word for rugged individualism, "We believe that the citizen should depend on his own efforts for existence and security rather than upon the Government."

At the beginning the convention, approving a prepared order of business, voted to refrain from discussing the merits of any prospective candidate for President. It was not getting out on a limb or taking a chance on dispute. Only the demerits of Truman, on which everybody seemed to agree loudly, was in order. Tues

The other speakers, presenting to those who know their Southern politics a cross section of the attendance, were Horace Wilkinson of Birmingham, who was chairman of the resolutions committee; Roane Waring, Jr., Memphis, former national commander of the American Legion; Gessner McCorvey, Alabama party chairman; and Palmer Bradley of Houston, representing Governor Jester. Louisville Ky.

It was over, speeches and all, and the convention recessed, in little more than 3 hours.

Southern Revolters Are Dubbed Dixiecrats

The Courier-Journal

Charlotte, N. C., May 10 (AP)—The Charlotte News had a word for them today—Dixiecrats. Tues.

Lacking an official name for that group of Democrats fighting against President Truman and his civil-rights program, Managing Editor Pete McKnight explained the paper had been struggling with such phrases as "States Rights Democrats," Dixie Democrats," "Southern Democrats," and longer titles. 5-11-48

"We decided to name them ourselves," he commented. "They ought to adopt it."

But enthusiasm for the well-financed Rebel yell ebbs after the initial fun rubs off

Louisville, Ky.

Fri. 5-14-48

By Tarleton Collier

JACKSON, MISS.—The sound and fury of the States Righters, who met here Monday to organize the Southern revolt, ebbed swiftly. In a matter of hours after the conference was recessed the delegates from afar had cleared out. As a matter of fact, the city auditorium, which was filled when the band struck up "Dixie," was more than half emptied before the oratory had run its course. This phenomenon may be explained in that the steering committee announced there would be no suspension of activities until the program was completed. It had come at dinner time—midday, that is—before the last whoops of approval for the announced project of sending Harry back to the farm, as the campaign song put it.

The contrast of quiet on the day after was all the more marked in view of the careful, prolonged and well-financed preparations. This undertaking to make the Southern revolt against President Truman and his civil-rights proposals into a full-fledged campaign has substantial support in funds. An advertising firm has a lush contract to promote it. The touch of business efficiency is there. It obviously isn't altogether a venture of politicians. It could be. With financing like that there will be plenty of hoopla and pressure. But the second day was also a good time to check up on these prospects. That there will be a fight for the Southern point of view at Philadelphia, with demand for a plank withdrawing the civil-rights program, goes without saying. But as for taking a walk to Birmingham and a strictly Southern nominating convention, it is hard to be as certain as Speaker Sillers

Louisville, Ky.

Fri. 5-14-48

THREE States may be counted on definitely. These are Mississippi, Arkansas and South Carolina, whose Governors were here running the show Monday. Some delegates from Alabama may join them, but other Alabama representatives have been elected on the platform of sticking it out with the party. However, Alabama already has spoken as to its electors, who are pledged to vote against Truman, so that nothing that happens at Philadelphia will probably matter to it. Birmingham may have been selected for the meeting in honor of Alabama's trail-blazing in this respect. Then there is Georgia, about which nobody may say, although the States Righters are counting on it to come along with them. Fri. 5-14-48

They have a ready explanation, which is probably true, about the withdrawal of Georgia's group from the meeting here. That doesn't mean a thing, they say. You couldn't call it a bolt for the bolters. The fact is that the Georgia delegation here was headed by the State party chairman, who is a Talmadge man. Young Herman Talmadge, now running for Governor, is playing 'em close to the vest. If his friends at Jackson had agreed to take part in the Birmingham meeting, his opponents would simply have been handed on velvet a campaign issue against him. They could shout "bolter" at him up and down Georgia.

The Courier-Journal

NOBODY really knows about Louisiana, either. That State had other fish to fry Monday, with the inauguration of a new governor, and another Long, at that. It had no official representation here, everybody being occupied at the Baton Rouge fiesta. It had, however, a number of unofficial "observers," among them being former Governor Sam Jones and Judge Robert F. Kennon who, having lost to Earl Long in the governor race, naturally would have felt out of place at the inaugural.

As for Tennessee, it was noteworthy that the State's delegation to the anti-Truman conference was with only one exception made up of Crump men from Memphis. The other camp of Tennessee politics, which is a little starry-eyed just now in the dream of beating Crump and his candidates in the August primary, would almost certainly not go along with Roane Waring and his Shelby County band.

Louisville, Ky.

AS FOR Texas and Florida, your guess is as good as ours, but ours is that they will not be counted in Birmingham. That leaves, of the old Confederacy, North Carolina and Virginia. Governor Tuck may have done all he is going to do about Virginia and its electoral vote. And even the States Righters are not counting on aid and encouragement from North Carolina, which has stood so far like a rock of regularity and moderation. On this point, your correspondent finds that he misrepresented the Tarheel State in his original report of the meeting here in saying that it was one of the States in the action. It wasn't so. Of around 1,000 visitors, only one or two had North Carolina on their identification badges, and these were representing themselves, without official standing. Fri.

You could blame the error on the heat and the hub-bub. Or you could blame it on the fact that at the time of scanning the list my eye was caught by a tract thrust in my hand by an eager gentleman. It was calculated to startle anybody. "White Men, Awaken!" it said on the cover. "Pro-Stalin politicians and alien-minded traitors in co-operation with blind sentimentalists are attempting to force Negro rule, Negro-white intermarriage, Negro invasion of white schools." 5-14-48

Next Week Important for the Democrats Also

Thurs.

4-29-48

By ARTHUR KROCK

WASHINGTON, April 28—While the Republicans are discovering that the prairie fire for Harold E. Stassen in the Midwest has burst out of the chimneys of rolling-mills in Pennsylvania, and are discussing how wide an area the conflagration will cover in Ohio, the Democrats are anxiously watching the progress of another political blaze. This has been kindled in Alabama against the nomination of President Truman. On May 4—the same date as the Ohio primary where Mr. Stassen and Senator Taft are contesting—its local intensity will be revealed, with some indication of how far and how destructively the blaze will spread in the South.

Alabama Democrats, in a wide-open primary, are to decide how many they will choose of the candidates for delegate to their national convention who now assert they will walk out if the platform and the nominee are not "satisfactory." They will also decide how many candidates for Presidential elector they will put on the party ticket who are pledged never to cast the vote of the state in the Electoral College for Mr. Truman. If a majority of such dissidents are selected, Southern Democratic legislators here believe the pattern will be repeated in South Carolina, Mississippi, Arkansas and Virginia. And, if this happens, they think there is an excellent prospect the President will not choose to run.

Senator Lister Hill of Alabama returned to Washington today with the statement that state opinion is forming against a proposed convention walkout by the Democratic delegation. He was not quoted on the anti-Truman pledge of the candidates for elector. But both he and his colleague, Senator Sparkman, have asserted that General Eisenhower is their choice for the Presidency, which means that they and the insurgent electoral candidates have the same objective.

A Report From Alabama

The Times

He may be correct in the limited statement he made. This correspondent has received from Alabama an account of the primary prospect that somewhat supports it where the convention delegates are concerned. But the author of the report sees indications that, if the President is nominated, the Alabama electors will cast their votes for somebody else.

The report follows:

1. The contest for delegates. There are 85 candidates for the 26 voting seats in the national convention to which the state is entitled. Of these, 31 have declared they will not walk out in any event; 29 will walk out if Mr. Truman is nominated or if his "civil rights" program is in the platform; and 25 are noncommittal. During the past ten days the trend has been against a walkout, and several candidates who made conditional pledges to bolt the convention have rescinded them. New York, N.Y.

This group includes the best vote-getters in the state, led by Senator Hill and former Governor Chauncey Sparks. There will be a run-off primary for numerous races in which the issue of a walkout will be more clearly drawn; in this one, personalities are dominant. The net outcome is "difficult to predict"; hence this informant wisely does not try to predict it. Thurs.

2. The contest for electors. There are 28 candidates for the 11 places. Of these, 21 are pledged not to cast their votes in the Electoral College for Mr. Truman, whichever ticket carries the state, and the remaining 7 are noncommittal. A number of these races will require a run-off primary for final decision. "But the chances seem good" that 11 electors will be named who will be publicly pledged never to vote for the President. 4-29-48

Some Details

"One need only recall," reports this authority, William M. Hinds of The Birmingham News, "that the bolt away from the party in Alabama is led by the same men—Horace Wilkinson and Hugh Locke—who led the 1928 fight against Al Smith, when Alabama came within 8,000 votes of going Republican." (North Carolina, Virginia, Tennessee, Texas and Florida did, and the normal Democratic majority in Alabama in national elections ranges from 150,000 to 200,000.)

"The behind-the-scenes politicians in this state," he continues, "see an opportunity to spank the national party for the pushing around they feel they have taken as part of the Solid South. They are * * * using the vote-getting appeal which the civil rights question has for the average Southern white voter. The Times

"Governor Folsom, who strongly opposes a walkout [of the convention delegates], has a slate of 'Jeffersonian Democrats' whom he favors for delegates-at-large. However, this slate includes three candidates who —— [he names a party leader] says are pledged to walk out. This slate, however, poses a test of the Governor's local strength rather than of the national party issue." New York, N.Y.

This description of a quarreling electorate, with a majority of aspirants for party and state office who stand publicly against a Democratic President and openly announce they will try to retire him in one way or another, sufficiently explains why the national Democratic leaders will keep their eyes on Alabama next week. The Republicans and perhaps the bulk of the American people will pay more attention to Ohio, watching for the effect of the sparks from the Midwest cornfields and the Pennsylvania foundries. But the Alabama Democrats could on the same day start a political revolution of equal consequence. Thurs. 4-29-48

South Stays 'Solid' To Block GOP Win

The Constitution

Atlanta, Ga. Mon. 2-9-48

WAKULLA SPRINGS, Fla., Feb. 8—"The Democrats know they have us and the Republicans know they can't have us."

Thus succintly Big Jim Folsom summed up:

1. The South's eternal dilemma, and

2. The reason all the sound and fury, threats and ultimatums emanating from the Southern Governors' Conference here the past two days will come to naught.

It is well on to a century now since outraged Southern Democrats bolted the Party and placed their own candidate in the field, handing the presidency to a then little-known Republican named Lincoln. But the basic situation remains the same. The South is powerless effectively to dissent to national Democratic policies without materially enhancing GOP victory chances. And the Republican party, despite the reception accorded occasional enlightened emissaries such as Stassen, is still anathema to the average Southerner. Mon 2-9-48

That's why veteran observers found most of the imprecations hurled at Truman and the National Party here the past two days strangely familiar.

That's why more than one of the Southern Governors who voted for the watered-down resolution of condemnation finally adopted doubt seriously that the subsequent meeting provided for therein will ever be called.

Gov. Thurmond's compromise resolution, which began with an angry preamble and concluded with a strangely temperate slap on the wrist, "deploring all ill-considered proposals," meant merely that the South was once again going through the motions of threatening party revolt.

Indeed, it is hardly likely that even that action would have been taken but for the bitter insistence of one man, Mississippi's Fielding Wright. Mon. 2-9-48

Wright, a stocky, horn-rimmed individual, is strangely reminiscent in appearance and in action with Georgia's late Eugene Talmadge. But while he knows all the words, Wright lacks, as do so many of those who aspire to his following, the evangelical fervor and oratorical fire with which Gene won the ballots of the faithful and the grudging recognition of his critics.

Moreover, there was every indication that even Gov. Wright was waxing indignant more for home consumption than with any hope of bringing about a national party reversal of policy in the field of civil rights. Taciturn and reticent most of the time, he was voluble on his proposed revolt mostly in the presence of reporters from the Jackson and Memphis papers. Mon.

Most of the Governors, particularly those who remember the attempted rebellion in Texas four years ago and Eugene Talmadge's grass roots fiasco in Macon in 1935, echoed the familiar threats . . . but without enthusiasm. 2-9-48

And, in so far as the Southern Governors are concerned, if there is a rump convention in the South this year, it can very well be held in a phone booth.

49 Legislators Assert National Democrats Ignore Region—Mississippi Is Restive

342

COLUMBIA, S. C., Jan. 29 (AP)—Forty-nine South Carolina legislators declared today that the national Democratic party no longer represents the South and asked that the State's Democrats meet to reconsider their position in the national party.

The statements were made in a letter to W. P. Baskin, chairman of the State Democratic Executive Committee. The legislators pointed out that they were writing as individual Democrats, rather than as members of the South Carolina General Assembly which is now in session.

The letter said in part:

"The South's distaste for some acts of the national party has mounted until it now has reached the point that we should reconsider our position in the national party.

"We emphasize that this is not a suggestion for withdrawal from the national party. It is, however, a direct admonition that we take stock and review our position. . . ." Fri. 1-30-48

They pointed out the Fair Employment Practices Commission measure, the Anti-Poll Tax Bill and President Truman's civil rights report as "but a few of the measures which Southerners generally have found repugnant. * * *

"South Carolina is a part of the 'solid South' which unfailingly provides the national party with its core of strength and which is 'in the bag' at elections.

"The concessions are made, however, to the sections of the country not 'in the bag,' to those minority groups which so often are the outspoken advocates of the very things flagrantly repugnant to our views. The Times

"The Republican party, knowing this position of the South, has no reason to respect our views. In consequence, the South is completely ignored in party councils and in national policy-making as if they were not states of the Union. * * *" New York N.Y.

Mr. Baskin said he had not yet received the letter and would have no comment until he did.

Action Urged in Mississippi

The Times

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 29 (AP)—Senator James O. Eastland, Democrat, of Mississippi, said today that if Southern Democrats withhold from the Democratic party their electoral votes, "a Southern man will emerge as President of the United States."

He told the Mississippi Legislature it would work out this way:

The South, with 127 electoral votes, could throw them to a "distinguished Southerner." That would deprive the other parties of enough votes to "throw the election into the House of Representatives." New York, N.Y.

The United States Constitution provides that the top three candidates shall be considered by the House.. Fri. 1-30-48

Republicans of the South, he said, would take a Southern Democrat before they would take a Northern Republican.

In the election in the House, each state would have but one vote and, he predicted, "a Southern man would emerge as President of the United States.

Mr. Eastland spoke at the invitation of the Legislature after it had endorsed the inaugural address of Gov. Fielding L. Wright. Mr. Wright called on Southern Democrats to take action to force party leaders to stop sponsoring "anti-Southern legislation" and give Southerners a voice in shaping party policy.

The Democrats' Troubles

The Record

Democratic chieftains made some progress in healing "civil rights" bitterness during their closed-door sessions last week—but not too much. (South) (342)

This time some of the rebellion came not from the South, but from the North. Ed Flynn, boss of the Bronx and the man who had much to do with nominating Truman in 1944, declined to attend. After Truman, without consulting Democratic leaders, announced that he was a candidate, Flynn sent word that he was not coming to Washington "to play ring-around-a-rosie." 3-16-48

Ed Kelly, ex-mayor of Chicago and another stalwart who helped put Truman in office, also failed to show up. Columbia, S.C.

On the other hand, homespun ex-Gov. Bob Kerr of Oklahoma, keynoter of the last Democratic convention in 1944, this time keynoted the drive to restore harmony. Tues.

"If we want to win the election this year," reminded Kerr, "and I know that's uppermost in the minds of all Democrats, "we've got to work together as a united party. The Democratic party is big enough to have disagreements—even big disagreements like this one—and still present a united front."

Kerr spoke after Chairman Howard McGrath had argued, implored and coaxed that Democratic factions patch up their split over Truman's civil rights program.

"I'll admit that the President's message may not have been timed well and some may object to the manner in which it was presented to Congress," said McGrath, "but after all it is the mandate of the party. Civil rights was part of the 1944 party platform. All President Truman did was ask Congress to put into law something to which the Democratic party already is committed."

McGrath went on to point out that Truman's message was misunderstood by many people, especially that part relating to "segregation" of races in public carriers. All the President did, in effect, was to call attention to a Supreme Court ruling that Jim Crow laws were illegal on buses and other carriers in interstate transportation, the Democratic chairman emphasized.

Republicans Have Troubles, Too

McGrath got strong support from his fellow Rhode Island senator, Theodore Green, and from Indiana's bulky Frank McHale.

"This trouble in the party has been greatly exaggerated," declared the alert 81-year old senator from Rhode Island. "The Republicans have their difficulties too—over the question of choosing a nominee. I think that the strife within Republican ranks will become more and more bitter as the campaign wears on. The Record

"All this talk about Truman not being a strong candidate doesn't make sense," continued Green. "We can win with him if Democrats give him their united support. There was a feeling that Roosevelt would be defeated when he ran for a third term in 1940 and a fourth term in 1944. Columbia, S.C.

"Now, as then, we put too much stock in what the newspapers are saying. All the big papers in Rhode Island opposed Roosevelt, while 80 per cent of the Republican-controlled press in the rest of the nation was against him. He won overwhelmingly despite this editorial opposition. Harry Truman will do the same."

McHale belittled the "Wallace threat" to Democrat election chances. Tues. 3-16-48

"The people of Indiana are traditonally against third parties," said the committeeman from Indiana. "Teddy Roosevelt received only slightly more than 40,000 votes in Indiana when he ran as a Bull Mooser, and Father Coughlin's third party in 1936 was laughed at in my part of the country. That's why we're not worrying about Wallace and his Commie supporters."

Southern Ire Continues

However, Southern spokesmen asserted they were all the more incensed by the civil-rights message because Southern states were well on the way to eliminating the discriminations Truman singled out. Lynching is now practically nonexistent in the South. Some Southern states already had repealed the poll tax. Others, including Virginia, were preparing to do so.

In Alabama, Southern spokesmen said, colored workers were paid the same wage scale as whites in many industries. In North Carolina, white and colored teachers get the same salaries. 3-16-48

McGrath said he was well aware of these strides, therefore understood the criticism leveled at the administration's program. That criticism, however, he contended, should not be directed personally at the President, who was only carrying out party policy, laid down by Franklin Roosevelt.

Navy Woos Friends

The army and navy are supposed to be united now, but the navy has started imitating the army in a drive to win friends and influence taxpayers. The Record

Every few months a group of prominent educators, editors and industrialists are invited to attend a 10-day school and learn all about the navy. They are taken behind the scenes at a big naval base, given a front row seat to the navy in action, even awarded diplomas after the course is completed.

It's an indirect lobbying plan somewhat similar to the army's system of flying civilians to Fort Knox to view the trial military training school. This lobbying recently was censored severely by Congress

"These men will come from nearby Southern states and will pay all "their own expenses," explained Capt. A. Macondray, officer in charge of the project. Tues.

When pinned down, however, Macondray admitted that three men have been invited to fly all the way from Alaska in naval planes, and that several others are also traveling at government expense.

"But," insisted Captain Macondray, "they will have to pay for their own meals." 3-12-48

Alabama Plan

Gessner T. McCorvey, Alabama state Democratic chairman, suggests that the Southern delegates to the national Democratic convention walk out if the platform does not accord with their ideas and thereafter that the Southern Democratic electoral votes be given to some other Democrat of the South's choice Record

And this is, of course, the way to do it, if this be what the South wants to do. The South should not expect to participate in the selection of a candidate and the writing of a platform and then bolt without notice. Columbia, S.C.

"Even though our action resulted in the election of a Republican president, "McCorvey said, "it is my sincere belief that, by fighting for what we know is right, the Northern Democrats would in the future treat Southern traditions with less scorn than they apparently intend to show at Philadelphia." 3-2-48

But Mr. McCorvey may be over-optimistic. After four years of Republican control the Democrats in 1952 will be still after the minority votes and the party leaders will still consider the Southern Democrats in the bag, counting upon the Southern desire to get back at the federal feed trough to offset the memories of the civil rights fight. 3-2-48 Tue

There is only one way for the South to win its freedom. It must organize two parties in the South.

Lister Hill's Courage And Insight

The Advertiser

Birmingham Age-Herald

SENATOR LISTER HILL shows good judgment, insight and courage in his decision to run for delegate-at-large to the Democratic National Convention and to support President Truman. 34D

His judgment and insight are evidenced by his recognition that splitting of the party, because of the President's civil rights recommendations, would be disastrous. His courage is attested by his willingness to stand up for his convictions. The senior senator could have avoided this particular test. Wed 3-10-48

It is evident that in certain quarters his decision will arouse criticism and resentment. But Senator Hill sees clearly that, though he disagrees with Mr. Truman "on a number of subjects," including the civil rights issue, the interest of the party and of the country would not be served by repudiation of the President.

Montgomery, Ala.

ON FOREIGN policy, for instance, the senator points out that Mr. Truman "is so right that his foreign relations program, the Marshall Plan, now is a bipartisan program."

Many of the Democrats who are seeking to discredit Mr. Truman on the basis simply of his civil rights recommendations probably have not thought carefully of the effect on this country's world position of a defeat of the President. Important as are the issues raised by civil rights recommendations of Mr. Truman, they are by no means all the important matters facing the country—and the South, whose fate is indissolubly bound up with that of the whole nation.

Any decision in the national political campaign should be made on the basis of a comprehensive survey of all the matters at stake. Senator Hill has made his decision in that way. It is a sound and forthright position he has taken.

The Advertiser Wed. 3-10-48

A DEFECTION of the South from the Democratic Party almost certainly would mean a Republican victory. Let there be no failure to face that fact and all its implications. That remains the underlying issue facing Southern Democrats.

It is possible that by the time the national convention has ended, the civil rights issue will have receded pretty far into the background. That could happen if Congress failed to act affirmatively on the President's recommendations and if the convention itself spoke only in general terms. Montgomery, Ala.

Many Democrats will continue desirous of exerting what pressure they can to such ends, but it would be better if they did not get out too far on a limb. 3-10-48

That's What Governors Say After McGrath Flatly Rejects Pleas

Democratic Party Chief Refuses Bar 10-Point Civil Rights Program

34D

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23.—(AP)—Five Southern governors declared Monday night that the South, as a result of President Truman's civil rights program, is no longer "in the bag" for the Democratic Party.

The governors issued their statement after failing, in a face-to-face showdown, to get a promise from Democratic National Chairman J. Howard McGrath that he would seek to have the civil rights proposals withdrawn.

They also asked McGrath—and he refused—to back restoration of the "two-thirds rule" which would give the South a veto in the choice of a presidential candidate by this year's Democratic National Convention.

"The Southern states," the governors said, "are aroused and the present leadership of the Democratic Party will soon realize that the South is no longer 'in the bag.' The Advertiser

"Each Southern state, under the framework of an overall program, will work out the most effective means of resisting the proposals of the present leadership o fthe party, but resist them we will." Montgomery, Ala.

"The time has come," the governors said, "for strong and effective action by the Southern states not only to save the Democratic Party but to preserve the rights of the states to govern themselves and preserve American democracy. 2-24-48

Ask For Support

"In this fight we are not only expecting support from the Democrats of the South but support from Democrats everywhere who are opposed to a centralized government invading the rights of the people and the rights of the respective states."

The statement said the governors—a committee named by the Southern Governors Conference at Tallahassee, Fla., earlier this month—would make its report to the full conference at a time and place to be announced soon.

Their statement came as Senatore Morse (R), Oregon, declared that the Democratic Party is in "complete collapse and rout" as the result of a "great revolt" over civil rights. The Advertiser

Republicans, Morse said in a Senate speech, "can almost go fishing and still win that (the 1948) election." Tues

McGrath told the governors he hoped for "a happy reunion in the not too far distant future." He said the South "has much to gain in playing along with the (Democratic) Party." 2-24-48

The governors, who came here amid threats that Southern Democrats will break with the national party over Mr. Truman's civil rights proposals, got only two reassurances from the national chairman: Montgomery, Ala.

He finally won in 1944, defeating the Democratic incumbent D. Worth Clark in a campaign that Taylor made as dignified and orthdox as audiences would let him. But he still had to break out the banjo at times on audience demand.

Pepper Sees Solid South For Truman

The Advertiser

WASHINGTON, Feb. 10.—(AP) — Senator Pepper (D), Florida, predicted Tuesday that President Truman "will carry every state in the South," and cautioned fellow Southerners against breaking with the Democratic Party.

At the same time, Pepper told a reporter he does not agree with some of the "methods" recommended by President Truman in his civil rights program for aiding Negroes and other minority groups.

Pepper, who frequently has differed with other Southern lawmakers, questioned the wisdom of trying to end segregation of Negroes "over night" or giving any commission compulsive powers to end discrimination. Wed.

He said in an interview that the current "bitterness and speech-making" should blow over before the general election. 2-11-48

"There is no question about it," he said, "President Truman will carry every state in the South this year."

Revolt Move Not Only Southwide, He Says; Expected To Spread

34D

Almost Unanimous

He's Only Heard From One Person Against It; Senate Okehs Action

JACKSON, MISS., Feb. 10.—(AP)—Gov. Fielding L. Wright said Tuesday he is proceeding with plans to call a meeting of Southern Democrats to chastise party leaders for sponsoring "anti-Southern legislation."

And, he indicated, the movement may become more than Southwide. 2-11-48

Asked at a news conference if he was getting many communications from Southern states relative to his move, the governor said:

"It isn't limited to the South."

He told of communications he had received from persons in other states and said particularly he had already heard from persons in Ohio and on the West Coast who are in accord with his views.

Concerning Mississippi reaction to his move for party revolt, Wright said, "it is almost unanimous. I say 'almost unanimous' because I have heard from one person on the other side."

For the benefit of an out-of-state newsman the governor explained his views on racial relations in the South. 34D

Negroes in Mississippi, he said, do not want an FEPC.

He said "we could send them up there (in Washington) a petition signed by 95 per cent of the Negroes in Mississippi saying they do not want it. "But," he added, "it wouldn't do any good."

In my county, he said, "there are 65 per cent Negroes and 35 per cent whites. But when I started to practice law 35 years ago I tried many a case before a Negro whom the white people elected justice of the peace."

Negroes on Juries

In Issaquena County, he said, he seldom tried a case before a jury that did not have one, two or three Negroes on it. Wed

"And one time when I was trying a capital case," he recalled, "when the state tendered me the jury there were 11 Negroes and one white man on it." 2-11-48

He said Southerners are opposing what they consider "anti-Southern legislation" because "they simply will not work in the South and no one knows it better than we do." The Advertiser

WORKING behind the scenes for two weeks, a "steering committee" headed by Mississippi's William Colmer had been drafting anti-civil-rights resolutions and tearing them up again. Finally they settled upon a comparatively mild one, submitted by J. Bayard Clark of North Carolina. This was circulated among the delegations for signatures, paving the way for the final meeting. 34D 2-26-48

At this meeting the voice of Mississippi's rootin' tootin' John Rankin, as usual, was the loudest. He took off with a deafening roar, well seasoned with fire and brimstone.

"Next thing you know," Rankin bellows, "Congress will be flooded with niggers."

At first, Rankin opposed group action, repeatedly calling attention to his long personal fight for Southern principles. When he saw that a group resolution would be adopted in spite of him, he raised a howl for stronger language. 2-26-48

"Frankly, I think it isn't strong enough," he barked after Gossett read Clark's resolution which by then had been adopted by the steering committee.

In the end, only one slight change was made in Clark's resolution.

McCorvey Asserts Marshall Answer To Party Problems

The Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Thurs 4-1-48

He Believes Candidacy Would Draw Support Of Other Areas

By ATTICUS MULLIN

Gessner T. McCorvey, chairman of the Alabama Democratic Executive Committee and candidate for delegate at large to the Democratic National Convention in Philadelphia, is not only against President Truman and his civil rights program and every other Democrat who favors such a program but he is squarely behind Secretary of State George Marshall for President.

McCorvey, answering a query from The Advertiser, expresses his belief that if the newspapers of this country will let Marshall alone, there would be a good chance for him to accept the nomination. He also has a good word for General Eisenhower but says that General Eisenhower has repeatedly said he would not be a candidate for President. 4-1-48

Chairman McCorvey has mailed every candidate for delegate to the convention a copy of his reply to the Advertiser questions. He has also made his reply available to the various press services of Alabama. The Advertiser

Discussing the nomination of Marshall for the Democratic nomination for the Presidency, Chairman McCorvey says in part:

"I have reached the conclusion that General George C. Marshall is the best man for us to nominate under all the circumstances. Personally, I have always admired Senator Byrd of Virginia, and Senator George of Georgia, very much. They are both great, sound and constructive statesmen and men of splendid judgment, integrity and standing. However, since we have to deal with delegates from all 48 States of the Union, and voters from all of these States, rather than dealing only with Southern Democrats, I am of the opinion that it would be best for the Democratic party and best for the country, for the Democratic National Convention at Philadelphia to nominate for President General George C. Marshall. He is one of the great Americans of our era, and has the confidence of all classes of our people, and knows more about our international affairs than any other living American. Personally, I am willing to follow his leadership and stand by his judgment as to what we should do and when we should do it.

Acceptance Seen 4-1-48

"I believe that if the Democratic National Convention would nominate General George C. Marshall, he would accept the nomination, but there is one thing I sincerely hope our newspaper friends will do — refrain from interviewing General Marshall on the question of whether or not he would accept the Democratic nomination for President if it is tendered to him. Being a member of President Truman's Cabinet, an appointee of President Truman, and President Truman himself having announced that he is going to stay in the race for the Democratic nomination, it would be the most natural thing in the world for General Marshall to discourage or "throw cold water" on any suggestion that he be nominated. However, I very sincerely believe that if our newspaper friends will let General Marshall alone, let him go ahead with the great work he is now doing, in which he not only has the support of the Democrats but of nearly all thoughtful Republicans, then if the Democratic National Convention should nominate him, he would accept. Few men could afford to reject a call to duty of this kind, and especially a man occupying the position which General Marshall occupies in the hearts and minds of Americans at the time of such a crisis as now exists in world affairs. The Advertiser

Formidable Candidate

Montgomery, Ala.

"General Eisenhower would, of course, be a most formidable candidate for any political party, but he has absolutely refused to consider a nomination for President, and requested that his name not be further used in this connection. Under these circumstances no political party has any right to try to bring further pressure to bear on General Eisenhower to accept a nomination which he does not wish, and which he says he is unwilling to accept. Then, too, my personal preference would be for a man who was in closer touch with the problems of the people of the South. General Marshall's family were Virginians, he belonging to the same family as John Marshall, the greatest Chief Justice of all times. While his family moved into Southern Pennsylvania, yet, General Marshall was born only about 16 or 18 miles North of the Mason and Dixon Line. As a youth and young man he attended for four years the Virginia Military Institute at Lexington, and that University, famed in song and story, is steeped in all of the finest traditions of the old South. General Marshall was graduated with high honors from that splendid Southern Institution. Any man with such a background is bound to understand our problems. Furthermore, the Army has all along recognized the absolute necessity of having segregated troops. After considering all of the candidates whose names have been suggested as well as some who have not been suggested, I believe General Marshall is the outstanding man for us to nominate. Important Place

Montgomery, Ala.

"Alabama occupies a very important place at the National Convention, being first on the roll-call of States. If our Alabama delegation decides on General Marshall, I believe many other Southern States will join us, as most Southerners are groping around trying to find someone we can support. I hope the Democratic Party of Alabama will be able this year to again be associated with the National Democratic Party. Thurs I appreciate the strength of such a union. While we cannot go along with President Truman and the plans of the so-called National Association for the Advancement of the Colored People (NAACP), yet there are tens of thousands of real Democrats, yes millions, throughout New England, 4 the 1 North, 48 the Midwest and the West who believe as we do in the real fundamental principles of the Democratic Party and who firmly believe in States' Rights. These people abhor, as we do, the strong centralization of power in Washington and would like to see our Government brought back nearer home. I believe they will join us in backing General Marshall."

GEORGE C. MARSHALL

The Political Nature Of the Southern Revolt

The Courier-Journal Louisville, Ky.

ONE of the best bits of evidence on the nature and support of the Southern Revolt comes now to hand. 34d Mon. 3-22-48

Commentators are finding a kind of sensation in statements by Senator SPARKMAN of Alabama and Senator RUSSELL of Georgia, to the effect that President TRUMAN should step aside and let somebody else have the Democratic nomination. Both are Democratic stalwarts. They have stuck by the party line. Senator SPARKMAN particularly is reputed to be on the liberal side. Yet here they are, gagging at the President's civil-rights program, calling it a blunder and an insult.

But does anybody fail to see a connection between their utterances and the fact that both are candidates for re-nomination this year?

Senator SPARKMAN, being the progressive, makes the political brand of the so-called rebellion more plain than does his Georgia colleague. He lets loose his anti-TRUMAN blast suddenly and unexpectedly. On its face, this would seem to clinch the Southern case. However, it ought to be pointed out that only the day before, word had come that 21 of Alabama's 28 candidates for delegate to the Democratic national convention already were pledged to vote against the TRUMAN nomination. 3-22-48

Southern State organizations are cracking the whip. The chances for moderate debate of the issue, both as to the TRUMAN candidacy and as to civil rights in the abstract, are being reduced. The aspirant for office who fails to conform is bound to have opposition. He would be forced into an ugly fight in which all genuine issues—peace in the world and stability at home—would be subordinated to the one inflammatory local issue. In light of this obvious fact, both senators may be seen as nailing stout planks in their fences. The highest regularity, it seems, is the one that goes along harmoniously with the influential neighbors. The Courier-Journal

The more the Southern politicians talk, the worse they make out their case to be. Sure, said Senator RUSSELL, in the broadcast interview in which he declared his position, the Southerner approves of equal rights. But, he said, he "does not believe in enjoying them together." This would strike most listeners, we believe, as a confession that the fight is a thing of personal feeling and squeamishness. The lofty appeals in name of constitutionality and local self-government become so much window-dressing. It it not to be forgotten that Southern political organizations stuck to the white primary until two years ago, when the Supreme Court forced them to drop it. Most of them would go back to it tomorrow if they could. Louisville, Ky. Mon

History Repeats Itself In 'Southern Revolt'

34d

The Courier-Journal

AS THE suicidal emotions of Southern politicians are displayed, you may get a strange sense of having seen it all before. You have, of course, and it was in your high-school history book. The date was 1860. Louisville, Ky.

The parallel is uncanny. The words are the same ("Unconstitutionality," "Local Government" and "States' Rights"). The strategy as unfolded by Virginia's Governor TUCK is identical, the issues are pieces of the same cloth of racial custom. Where it was slavery, now it is civil rights that would embrace the colored with the white. Tues.

And what happened politically in consequence of those earlier attempts of Southerners to enforce their demands on their party and the country could well happen again. 3-2[illegible]-48

In Richmond, Va., Governor TUCK is proposing to leave HARRY S. TRUMAN's name off the ballot as the Democratic nominee for President. It was in Richmond, in 1860, that Southerners, balked in their demands by the majority of the party organization, held a convention of their own. It rejected the regular nomination of DOUGLAS and JOHNSON, and nominated BRECKENRIDGE and LANE. Today there is the interesting report by Radio Commentator LOWELL THOMAS of identifiable word that Senator HARRY BYRD of Virginia is agreeable to run as the Presidential candidate of the Southern wing.

Perhaps this means that Senator BYRD would agree to have his name submitted to the Electoral College if Governor TUCK's plan to have uncommitted electors prevails. At any rate, the effect would be to split the party into Southern and Northern wings, as in 1860.

But the parallel does not end here. In that other stormy political season, there was ABRAHAM LINCOLN as the Republican candidate and still another party, the Constitutional Union, whose candidates were BELL and EVERETT, which finds a comparison in the new-party, HENRY WALLACE-GLEN TAYLOR ticket of today. Louisville, Ky.

Thus the four tickets of 1860 could well be duplicated. The result would almost certainly be duplicated. That result was a divided vote which made LINCOLN President, though his popular vote was a considerable minority. From the figures, it becomes rather obvious that the Democrats together could have prevented a Republican victory. LINCOLN received 1,866,451 votes, to 2,815,617 for the combined opposition. This included 1,376,457 for DOUGLAS, the Northern Democrat, 849,781 for BRECKENRIDGE, the Southern Democrat, 588,879 for BELL, whose following comprised the disaffected remnants of the old Whigs that would otherwise (like today's Wallaceites) doubtless have never gone for LINCOLN. Their strength was in Virginia, Tennessee and Kentucky and their idea was the unrealistic one of ignoring the slavery issue entirely (Mr. WALLACE would ignore an equally pressing reality of today, a ravening Soviet). The Courier-Journal

Thus, the attempts of Southern Democrats to enforce their demands are not new. They were going on, rather more successfully than in 1860 and, it now appears, than in 1948, for a long time before 1860. At one time they actually forced the Democratic Party to betray its basic principle of strict construction of the Constitution, the idea being to force slavery on new States and territories. And this is why we wouldn't be surprised to hear that THOMAS JEFFERSON has been turning in his grave. It would be natural, with Southern politicians calling on his name to justify their revolt against the civil-rights program. JEFFERSON was always one for the Constitution and its rigid protections. On the score of fealty to his principles, the Southerners utter a fraud. They should recall that the Declaration of Independence is his handiwork, too. Fri. 2-27-48

The South and Secession

The Courier-Journal

William Pennington's attitude in regard to denying the South the right to her political views belies the gentleman's statement that the Civil War has been over for 83 years. I heartily agree that it would have been better had the South been permitted to secede, since her industrial and political interests are different from those of the North and she would not have been stripped of every resource and dominated by the North.

We must remember that the Negro problem in the South is momentous. The Negro, regardless of his ignorance and lack of any industrial qualifications, was set free without making any provisions for his future status. Louisville, Ky.

After the war the North repudiated all Southern obligations. This bankrupted the South. She was not able to provide schools for her own children, much less for the Negro. Fri 2-27-48

I say, let the South handle her own political problems and the future will take care of itself.

cession's Ugly Head Is Reared In Old Dixie

The Courier-Journal
Louisville, Ky.
Fri 1-23-48

SECESSION, after a fashion, rumbles again in Georgia and Mississippi. The Governor of the latter State is ready to pull out of the Democratic Party if its national leaders, as he alleges, keep on trying to wreck the South and the South's institutions. You know, of course, what he means as to white supremacy, poll taxes, voting by an elite and such. And at least in one Georgia locality, rural Johnson County, citizens are informed that they may vote in the Democratic primary only if their thoughts run in a prescribed pattern. That some details of the pattern stand opposed to Supreme Court judgments, the Constitution and the Federal statutes just goes to show that the rebellion, 1948 model, is on.

True, Mississippi's Governor FIELDING L. WRIGHT, was sounding off in course of an inaugural address, a conventional medium of political thunder. He was talking to his assembled constituents and was giving them what they expected and wanted to hear, nothing startling. But in some of the more perceptive minds he must have aroused at least the glimmer of a question. Fri. 1-23-48

Where, leaving the Democratic Party, would the Governor or his fellow Mississippians go? Not to the Republicans, who in the matters to which Mr. WRIGHT referred certainly offer no encouragement. Even some of his listeners must have found themselves thinking that the threats to the Southern way of life which he described are not matters of party policy at all. They are tokens of a growth of social intelligence, of advances in understanding of democracy, of moral progress. It is a pity that this truth has not been impressed upon the senior Senator from Governor WRIGHT's State, JAMES O. EASTLAND. The Senator is reported slandering the Supreme Court as being judicially dishonest, a charge which matches in tone and quality the day's output of rebellious Southern invective. The Courier-Journal

As to the aberration in Johnson County, Georgia, the shorter shrift you give to it, the better. The only comment it calls for is that one finds a sort of unbelievability in the sight of a man—a judge and, by assumption, a man possessed of a feeling for the law—who undertakes to attach conditions of thought to the right to vote in America. Fri. 1-23-48

Such a man is the chairman of the county's Democratic executive committee. To vote in the primary, by his rule, a Johnson Countian must vow to favor the white primary, to favor Georgia's county-unit system and racial segregation, to oppose Communism and the F.E.P.C. If the rule should stand—which, of course, it won't, as soon as a court gets at it—this country would have a start of everything it fears. Louisville, Ky.

HILL AND FOLSOM OPPOSE REVOLT

Advertiser, Montgomery Ala.

Senator Lister Hill has taken his ducks to a poor market. Sun. 3-14-48

As a candidate for delegate-at-large to the Democratic Convention, Senator Hill made a statewide broadcast from Washington Friday night. He repeated that he opposed bolting the party even in the face of Truman's nomination.

Hill asserted his abhorrence for the Truman Civil Disturbance program, but he makes the case that it would be folly for the South to forsake the Democratic Party despite Truman. Sun. 3-14-48

Hill said: "The Democratic Party in the past has resolved its differences in the Democratic National Convention. I believe that we can do so again."

The average man on the street is saying, "To hell with that, Senator!"

There is cold rage in Alabama about the man Harry Truman. The mood is slow-burning and as unquenchable as embers of charcoal. There is contempt for the man Harry Truman and there is loathing for his Civil Rights program.

Alabamians want to see the man Harry Truman sent to his doom. And there is also a widespread wish to see Truman share his doom with those who support him.

That is a fact of presentday politics. Something may happen to change it, but it is difficult to conceive it. The galls will remain galls no matter how deeply steeped in honey. Sun. 3-14-48

Advertiser, Montgomery Ala.

THEREFORE, we make the statement that the senior senator has taken his ducks to a poor market as a matter of practical politics. Sun. 3-14-48

Hill stated his case for remaining within the embrace of the Democratic Party, Truman notwithstanding, with practical, compelling reasons. The Advertiser does not necessarily agree with his conclusions, but it insists that he has presented a cogent brief.

But at this time it is difficult to perforate the general sense of indignation with reasons. Reason cannot, as matters stand, dispossess the will to vengeance. They want Truman's scalp and there are no kind feelings for those who seek to preserve it.

The tumult of the revolt is such that neither candidates for delegate nor voters have even surmounted the legal barriers to desertion. Every candidate who has qualified has taken an oath that he will support the party's nominee, no matter if it is Truman.

Every Alabamian who casts a vote in May will take an oath that, if Truman is nominated, he will vote for him in November. That's Alabama law. Put that oath to the rack and thumbscrew of yes-but reasoning as you will, it's still your undistorted oath.

3-14-48 Sun

THE ADVERTISER does not note that fact with satisfaction, but it upraises the fact as an unresolved and practical problem of revolt.

Nevertheless, it is possible that, as a result of Hill's loyalty stand, a tempest may boil up in his face. If not that, there is no question but that it will cause a formidable element to become his enemy and in another element it will activate a dormant enmity.

If this is true and is a perplexity of Senator Hill's, we sympathize with the senator in his perplexity because of Folsom, who is also a candidate for delegate to the convention. Sun.

Senator Hill wants to fight it out, as they say, in the Democratic Convention. Gov. Folsom also wants to fight it out in the convention.

Hill makes enemies all over this state by his loyalty statement. Folsom makes the same loyalty statement and—so far as we can see or hear — nobody holds it against him.

Hill said in his speech: "The . . . party in the past has resolved its differences in the Democratic National Convention. I believe we can do so again."

Folsom said the same thing in Washington yesterday: ". . . We could arrive at a program in the convention which all Democrats should be able to follow."

Advertiser, Montgomery Ala.

THEY are holding it against Hill. They are not holding it against Folsom.

This inconsistency is a symptom of the pitch and fever in Alabama.

The further and obvious fact is that on the part of many there is a disposition to take advantage of Hill's "Truman loyalty" because he is a potent liberal. With many it is a case of roaring "Truman lover!" and hissing "New Dealer" under their breath.

Senator John Sparkman is similarly circumstanced. 3-14-48 Sun

Truman Told To Choose Rayburn For Running Mate--or Quit Race

Thurs. 2-5-48 (34d) The Constitution Atlanta, Ga.

By FREDERIC TUTTLE.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 4—(INS) A prominent Democratic Senator paced the Southern revolt against the White House Wednesday with a demand that President Truman pick House Minority Leader Rayburn as his 1948 running mate or "get out of the race himself."

The challenge was hurled at Mr. Truman after six Senate Southerners held a political war council to plan reprisals against the President's anti-Jim Crow proposals. There were mounting demands that the South select its own presidential candidate.

Meanwhile, GOP National Chairman Reece hailed the Southern revolt against Mr. Truman as "evidence" that the Democratic Party was "really an aggregation of splinter parties." Reece said:

"With the Moscow wing of the Party already departed to the left, and with the racially-intolerant right wing now threatening to go off in the other direction, it looks like the Pendergast splinter will be all alone next November."

The Democratic Senator who unleashed the new attack on Mr. Truman is not a member of the Deep Southern bloc, and requested that his name be withheld. He did not participate in the earlier protest meeting. The Senator said:

"This is the closest thing to the civil war that we have had. The President could solve it either by picking Sam Rayburn as his running mate or getting out of the race himself."

At the special meeting, the Senators discussed a report by Sen. McClellan, Democrat, Arkansas, that his State might freeze Democratic Party funds raised at Jefferson-Jackson dinners this month. They heard proposals that Sen. Byrd, Democrat, Virginia, or Sen. George, of Georgia, "would be the ideal man to lead the South in 1948." The Constitution

Present at the hush-hush session were McClellan and Sens. Hill, Alabama; Russell, Georgia; Maybank, South Carolina; Eastland, Mississippi, and O'Daniel, Texas.

Sen. McFarland, Democrat, Arizona, who has been a consistent Administration supporter, also was present. Atlanta, Ga.

Across the Capitol, the House revolt by Southern Democrats against the President's request for Jefferson-Jackson funds. McClellan added, however:

"I think that is what they will do in Arkansas. It looks as though we are not wanted in the Democratic Party."

Eastland said, "freezing the funds wouldn't go far enough." The Mississipian said the South "must elect independent electors and protect itself." Thurs.

He explained that in this case it would be likely that neither Mr. Truman nor the GOP presidential nominee would get an Electoral College majority, with the result that the election would be thrown into the House of Representatives. Eastland added: 2-5-48

"If that happens, party lines would be crossed, and we would have a chance of sending a Southerner to the White House."

McClellan said the South never had been consulted by the President before the Chief Executive sent to Congress his civil-rights message, with its antilynching, anti-Jim Crow and permanent Fair Employment Practices Commission recommendations. The Constitution

The Arkansas Senator declared that Hill, the Democratic "whip" in the Senate, had gone to the White House on several occasions to see the President, each time on the Alabaman's own initiative.

In the South, a day of fast-breaking developments included:

1—The almost unanimous voice of Southern newspaper editors decrying Mr. Truman's support of anti-lynch laws, establishment of a Fair Employment Practice Commission, and legislation to abolish the poll tax and Jim Crowism.

2—Reports from Mississippi that Gov. Fielding L. Wright, who initiated the party revolt, is determined to press the battle for a change in Democratic policies regardless of what action is taken at the forthcoming Southern Governors' Conference. Atlanta, Ga.

3—Plans for a meeting of the Jasper County, S. C., Democratic Committee to consider "secession" from the Party, marking the first time that the segregation issue will be tested locally. Thurs 2-5-48

The States of South Carolina, where the first shot was fired to launch hostilities in the War Between the States, and Mississippi again became battle grounds in the present dispute.

Opposition to Gov. Wright's all-out attack on the Truman policies is expected from Georgia's Acting Gov. M. E. Thompson, and Gov. Millard Caldwell, of Florida.

When the Chief Executives convene at Tallahassee, Fla., Saturday, Wright is expected to have the co-operation of Gov. Ben Laney, of Arkansas, and probably that of Gov. James Folsom, of Alabama.

(34d) Demo

The Governors of the Carolinas and Tennessee have remained noncommittal, and may determine the result of Wright's efforts within the circle of Governors. Gov. Jimmie Davis, of Louisiana, announced Wednesday that "other business" would make it impossible for him to attend the weekend meeting which possibly will be the stormiest ever held by the State leaders.

(South)

The Mississippi Governor indicated, meanwhile, in Jackson he would carry the fight with the co operation of Southern voters.

Although Gov. Wright declined to enlarge on his plans to block the Democratic Party policies, State political observers were convinced Wednesday afternoon that the Magnolia State Executive would appeal directly to the people of the South.

The party break is not new in Mississippi politics, and Gov. Wright is getting strong support from party leaders over the State.

Among his supporters is House Speaker Walter Sillers' who sponsored an incipient break from the National Party in 1944. Gov. Thomas L. Bailey halted that one.

Others supporting the Governor are Billy Snyder, Clarksdale newspaper publisher and National Democratic Executive Committee member, who assisted in halting the revolt in 1944.

Snyder says: The Constitution

"In 1944 I thought the action ill-advised because we had not perfected any section-wide action, and could only bring down on our heads the wrath of the part.

"But now we have the backing of the South and are doing something we should have done 30 years ago." Atlanta, Ga.

In South Carolina, the State Legislature "unanimously," but unofficially, indorsed on open letter by 49 of their members who asked that the State's Democratic Party "reconsider" its position in relation to the National organization.

Aides of Alabama's Gov. Folsom said Wednesday afternoon he would go to the microphone again Friday. Folsom was unavailable for comment at Montgomery, but indications were that his "Dinner Table" radio chat would be a renewed attack on the Democratic leadership. Thurs 2-5-48

Folsom last week proclaimed himself as a candidate to succeed Mr. Truman. His "announcement" drew a rebuke from the White House, and apparently failed to enlist support even in the State.

Gov. Caldwell, of Florida, repeated that his support already was pledged for the renomination of the President. And Acting Gov. Thompson, of Georgia, appears "on the spot" politically as a result of an intra-state party feud.

Thompson's Georgia Democratic Executive Committee was recognized by the National Party despite the fact that its legality still is pending in the State Supreme Court. A lower court verdict at Augusta proclaimed that the State Committee selected by the Herman Talmadge forces was entitled to conduct the Georgia Democratic primary. The Constitution

The Georgia Supreme Court may uphold the Talmadge-appointed Committee, thereby making Thompson's delegates to the Philadelphia National Convention an unofficial group. Atlanta, Ga.

Commenting on the situation, Talmadge told International News Service Wednesday night:

"Just let Thompson do the explaining." Thurs 2-5-48

Political Speculations

The News Birmingham, Ala. Thurs 2-5-48

The political stew in which the South finds itself continues to boil. It is ever spreading over into other areas of the country, which, of course, is exactly what is desired by some Dixie leaders.

34d

Talk is developing that in order to pacify Southern feelings a Southern man might be nominated for the vice presidency on the Democratic ticket. That strategy has been tried. The loss of a number of Southern states to Hoover in 1928, when Al Smith was his opponent, stirred the Democrats to give Roosevelt a Texan running-mate, John N. Garner, in 1932. Also, the signs of a Southern revolt helped to bring about the choice of Truman, from the border state of Missouri, to run with Roosevelt in 1944.

Southern Democrats aroused by President Truman's civil rights statement as well as by other activities of Democrats nationally are not likely, however, to accept the sop of a vice presidential candidate as complete assuagement for their feelings. Their ire and their fears run deeper than that. Thurs 2-5-48

If there are any political bigwigs among the Democrats who believe that the party could adopt platform planks endorsing the FEPC and laws against lynching, the poll tax and segregation, and pacify all of the South's feelings by letting it name Truman's running-mate, they just don't know the South.

* * *

But a lot of what is being said is pure speculation. Present activities include the sending up of many trial balloons. Mr. Truman's statement might be included in that category. All sides are trying to sound out sentiment, and to develop it along lines of their choosing. The News

The basic problem can be put rather simply: Do the Democrats need more the votes from the South or the votes from doubtful Northern states? Will what they might lose in the South, if the party adopts nationally the principles set forth by Mr. Truman, offset losses elsewhere if the South has its way? Which side will talk loudest at the polls next November? Birmingham, Ala.

He would be a seer indeed who could answer that question now. But most of what is being said becomes clearer if it is placed against the background of the campaign. Principles are involved, it is true; but so also is political strategy. Thurs 2-5-48

Notable Lack Of Enthusiasm Awaits Demo Bolt Proposal

The News Birmingham, Ala. Sat. 2-7-48

WAKULLA SPRINGS, Fla., Feb. 7—(AP)—Southern governors with a notable lack of enthusiasm Saturday awaited a call from Mississippi's Gov. Fielding L. Wright to bolt the national Democratic Party.

The conference was called primarily to discuss ways and means of providing graduate level education for Negroes in the region, but quickly developed into a political forum. Sat. 2-7-48

Wright, angered by President Truman's stand on matters pertaining to racial segregation, the anti-lynch law and the Fair Economic Practices Commission, told Gov. M. E. Thompson of Georgia Friday night he would introduce a resolution calling for formation of an all-Southern party.

Thompson then showed Wright an advance copy of a sharply worded statement condemning a party bolt.

"Well," said Wright coldly, "I see you are against me."

"Yes," Thompson replied, "and we're going to beat you."

The Mississippi governor said he would introduce the resolution anyhow.

* * *

EVEN GOV. JAMES E. FOLSON of Alabama, a candidate for the presidential nomination, said, "I am a Democrat. We'll argue it out within the party. I'll always support the Democratic nominee."

Both Folsom and Thompson said they believed President Truman's civil rights recommendations "unwise." The News

Gov. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina and Gov. Beauford Jester of Texas declined comment on Wright's call for a Southern party, but intimates who accompanied them said they were cold to the idea.

Dixie Position

The Record

'A strange story without foundation.'

Columbia, S.C.

Sat 2-14-48

That is what White House Secretary Ross calls report that President Truman might modify his civil liberties program in deference to the South. It would indeed be strange to expect the President, after having announced the program, to back down on it and outrage a Negro vote that is said to hold the balance of power in 17 doubtful states and to be, by that token, able to name the next President. It would be equally strange for the President to believe talk of Southern revolt means anything. The South has always been in the bag. It is in the bag now, he is being told. Revolt talk now, as in 1944, is just a lot of noise signifying nothing when votes are counted.

The South can be made as precious to the President as the Northern Negro and those 17 states if party leaders are once persuaded the Southern electoral vote is actually uncertain enough to need cajolery and concession. There was a time when the Negro vote was of no importance, either. That was before 1932 when it had always gone Republican and was considered "in the bag" for that party. By proving itself not in the bag in 1932, it came to be a prize. Only when the South gives similar proof will it, too, be the prize its numbers alone, if nothing else, entitle it to be. That is why those Southerners who are coupling their denunciations of the President's program with expressions of undying loyalty to the President's party might as well say nothing if they can't say more. Sat. 2-14-48

It may never be necessary for these states to enable Republicans to name a President. But there are worse things than doing so once. It is true that the Republican party offers no more than the Democratic in the civil liberties matter, but neither did the Democratic party offer the Negro minority much until it won it. Once these Southern states prove themselves capable of being lost to the Democratic party, the Republican party will never again dare to leave us out of consideration, any more than the Democratic party will, on the race question and a host of other questions.

Among newspaper men there is no one better informed on the American electoral system or more qualified to analyze situations involving it than David Lawrence. In a recent column, Mr. Lawrence agreed with those of us who have been saying Henry Wallace's third party movement makes this a witching hour for the South to win national bargaining power.

Columbia, S.C.

If the South should send "Southern Democratic" electors to the electoral college, pledged only to their own caucus, there would be enough to throw the election into the House of Representatives. The vote there would be by states, giving the South still greater control and the Northern Democratic party still another chance to repent. The Southern minority, the country's most special in circumstance and worth, has in this a perfect substitute for loss of the two-thirds rule. It is a gift of the Founding Fathers.

The Record 2-14-48

But if anything more than the same old quadrennial noises is to come of Southern protests it must be understood that office-holders, would-be office-holders, and hangers-on to office-holders, have a vested interest in Democratic victory and in keeping their records blindly loyal. They cannot be expected to carry revolt to the point necessary to assure success, namely, of being willing to turn down the party in a given election. That is why the political leadership now has to come not from our political leaders but from others who have no such vested interest and whose Democracy is a thing of philosophy, not unquestioning regularity.

The Hour?

"Thou'dst have, great Glamis, that which cries,
'This must do if you have it!'"

The Record 2-11-48

DANVILLE, Va.—The simple truth in the noises of southern revolt is that they will get nowhere unless there exists in the South the courage to prove its basic Democratic loyalties by withholding its vote from the Democratic party. Unless these states, or one or two of them, are willing for once not to vote Democratic, the big talk is silly and signifies nothing. Southern politicians with a vested interest in Democratic victory may not be prepared to go beyond mere talk, but the people of the South should be. Wed 2-11-48

Let three southern states put themselves in a position now actually to withhold their vote next November, and the whole face of affairs for the South will have changed. All of a sudden we will have come to have bargaining power, to be doubtful and, by that token, enormously worth bidding for, the most prized minority in America.

What is it that gives the Negro minority today a power in presidential politics far in excess of its size and lets Walter White boast that the Negro controls 17 doubtful states and will name the next President? That minority had no such power up to 1932. The power came when the Negro, who had always voted Republican, gave his vote to the Democratic party. It was one of the most meaningful events in American history. It meant that the Negro minority, by becoming doubtful, had become the permanent object of cajoleries and concessions on the part of both parties. It meant that, at one stroke, the vote of the Negro was worth more than the vote of the South.

At one stroke now, the South could bring about something even more meaningful. It could seize the national balance of power. It could do so simply by giving evidence to the nation that it is capable of voting against the Democratic party. The Record 2-11-48

Columbia, S.C.

Ellis Arnall, Editorial Editor [illegible]shmore, of The Arkansas Gazette and others who are deploring or poohpoohing revolt talk, are ill-advised as to its length, breadth and depth this time. Since I wrote my column from Dallas, January 24th, suggesting a Southern conference on ways and means to seize the national balance of power for the South, I have been in all the southern states. In Danville, Petersburg, and Lynchburg, Virginia, as in Charleston and Columbia, as in Atlanta, and as in great Texas, revolt talk now is not like that of other years. There is no Franklin Roosevelt now to hold southerners and all others with his glitter. And there is no feeling in the South that it can be saved again as of old with the filibuster, for there is a Republican majority now and by cloture or long persistence, filibusters will fail this time.

There is, too, an increasing southern awareness, I think, of what an opportunity exists this time. The vote of the South is vital to the Democratic party this time. The party didn't need the South in 1944, or 1940, or 1936, or 1932. But it needs the South this time, and all of the South. It can't afford to lose a single state, Mississippi or any other.

This is the witching hour. Not merely for considerate treatment on the most delicate and difficult race problem with which any people anywhere ever had to deal, but for making itself politically worthwhile on all the great issues now and hereafter, the South must have a permanent new bargaining power. And not since the War Between the States has there been such an opportunity. It is worth the while not only of southerners concerned with the race question, but with those whose interest is in other and more national matters, too. It is worth the while of Senator Byrd and Senator George as well as of John Rankin, of Mississippi. The Record

It may be that with courage, timeliness and mutual action, the South can make effective a threat to leave the Democratic party now without having to leave it, even for one election. But the threat will not be made that unless the South really means what it says this time, is really prepared to refuse its vote to the Democratic party. 2-11-48

The heavens wouldn't fall if a few southern states turned against the Democratic party this time, by one or another of the methods discussed. Nine times out of ten for the next century the South would probably be Democratic again. But always and always there would remain that Awful Doubt, and that Wonderful Bargaining Power.

"We might even get agriculture balanced with industry if we would be willing to fail the Democratic party just one little time," said a prominent Birmingham leader the other day. "This isn't just a matter of the race question." Amen and amen! Columbia, S.C.

Rebel Democrats Need Candidate

The News Tues. 2-5-48

BY DREW PEARSON

WASHINGTON—During the first few months Harry Truman spent in the White House he kept insisting to friends that he did not want to run for a second term. One term was enough; he wanted to get back to his old love—being a senator from Missouri.

Mrs. Truman—who carries a great deal more weight with Harry than most people suspect—felt exactly the same way, possibly more so. 2-5-48

At that time, however, Truman's close friends and political leaders felt just the opposite. They were determined that he should run again, believed he was the only candidate with whom the Democrats would win. Tues

Now, however, the situation is somewhat reversed. Today the political leaders desperately don't want Truman to run, but are afraid he has the bit in his teeth and can't be persuaded to bow out. Birmingham, Ala.

Bob Hannegan, the man who two years ago repeatedly denied that Truman would not run again, and who was the first to propose his name publicly for reelection, is now privately sorry he ever made the suggestion.

Ed Flynn, of the Bronx, who helped nominate Truman at the 1944 Chicago convention, is also convinced that Truman's name on the ticket means certain defeat. Southern leaders, of course, are not even private about it. They want to junk Truman at any cost.

But although Truman two years ago would have been quite in the mood to bow out, today it may be different. After all, human nature is human nature, and Harry Truman is known to be a stubborn man. Sometimes when his friends, such as Tom Pendergast or Ed Pauley or Gen. Wallace Graham, are under fire, he has gone to extreme lengths to buck outraged public opinion. The News

So it may take not merely rebellion but careful planning to erase the name of Harry S. Truman from the Democratic ballot in Philadelphia come July. You can't beat somebody with nobody, and the first thing Democratic rebels need is an opposition candidate.

Note—To this end, Southern Democrats have made a sub rosa move in the direction of Sen. Barkley, of Kentucky. Tues. 2-5-48

And because of the one-party system, which eliminates local general election campaigns, the South has been a major contributor to the national campaign chest, despite its low per capita income. Texas, Florida, Arkansas and North Carolina were among the ten largest contributors in 1940 and 1944, their contributions being exceeded by only the state of New York and the District of Columbia. Says Southern Demos Can Do Better in Party

Daily Worker

N.Y.

348

Daily Worker Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, March 11.—Sen. Lister Hill (D-Ala), pleaded with Southern Democrats tonight to stay in the Democratic Party as the surest means of defeating the enactment of civil rights legislation.

Speaking on a hook-up of all Alabama radio stations, Hill said:

3-12-48

"The measures embodied in the President's message can be put into effect only if they be passed by both houses of Cnogress. In the House and the Senate, Southern representatives and Southern Senators through the years have prevented the passage of these measures. If the South should leave the Democratic Party we would but weaken the very arm with which we battle these measures in the House and Senate."

Gubernatorial Sanity

Columbia, S.C. Tues. 2-10-48 The Record

The Southern governors meeting at Wakulla Springs, Fla., to discuss the setting up of regional graduate schools for Negroes in the South, kept their heads when they came to act on the question of Southern secession.

Governor Wright of Mississippi, who had been one of the leaders of the secession movement, proposed that the governors call a meeting of "true Democrats" at Jackson, Miss., next month. Governor (Kissing Jim) Folsom of Alabama wanted the governors to go on record as favoring the instructing of Southern delegates to the Philadelphia Democratic convention for some "favorite son." The Record Tues. 2-10-48

These suggestions were rejected and instead the governors adopted a resolution proposed by Governor Thurmond of South Carolina, which expressed disapproval of the party's use of the civil rights and such like issues for political purposes but also deplored "all ill-considered proposals which have the effect of dividing our people at a time when national unity is vital to the establishment of peace in this troubled world." Columbia, S.C.

"We should approach the situation thus presented (by attempts to attract Negro votes in the crucial states) with dignity, self-respect and restraint," the Thurmond resolution declared. "We should refuse to be stampeded or to indulge in idle oratory. We must consider the matter calmly and deliberately to the end that by joint and common action and decision we may demand and obtain for our people the consideration and respect to which they are entitled."

It is a sound policy and the majority of the Southern governors should be congratulated for their wisdom and their restaint. By following this policy they may achieve something. By allowing themselves to be stampeded into secession from the Democratic party they would have abandoned the party, kept alive through most of its life by Southern votes, to the New Dealers of whom they complain. The Southern Revolt Against Truman Policy Worries the Democrats

The Courier-Journal Louisville, Ky. Sat 2-14-48

By JOSEPH and STEWART ALSOP

THE white supremacy Southerners in Congress are now talking among themselves about placing either Senator Walter F. George of Georgia, or Senator Harry F. Byrd of Virginia in nomination for the Presidency against Harry S. Truman. This underground discussion neatly balances the overt plan of the West Coast leftwingers to put forward Henry A. Wallace as a suitable Democratic nominee.

One thing is already clear. This year's Democratic convention is likely to resemble one of those awful children's parties at which large numbers of the dear little guests gang up to kick the stuffings out of the brave but tearful host. In his role as universal nursery maid to his party, the chairman of the Democratic National Committee, Senator J. Howard McGrath, is going to have a pretty ghastly time preventing public mayhem. And this will be true, even though the Southerners do not carry out their threat to support a candidate of their own.

Overt Southern support for a rival to Truman, even if limited to the convention, would almost certainly be going further than the Southerners desire. The Democrats have been in so long, that the Southern leaders have almost forgotten the hungry misery of dwellers in the political wilderness. But some faint recollection of this horrid state still lingers in their minds. They are still reluctant to destroy their party's chance at the election. This is what may be expected to nip the overt anti-Truman movement in the bud, although the plant may be expected to be watered with quantities of the same sort of Northern money that used to finance Gene Talmadge.

Hints of a Compromise

On the other hand, the strategy which the Southerners appear actually to be adopting will be almost as difficult for the White House to handle. As of today, it seems probable that the Southern states, including as a minimum South Carolina, North Carolina, Virginia, Georgia, Mississippi, Louisiana, Alabama and Tennessee, will send uncommitted delegations to Philadelphia. The uncommitted delegations will be used to wrest from the platform committee a weasel declaration on the civil and human rights issue. The Courier-Journal

In the past few days, there have been anxious negotiations between Southern leaders and White House representatives. The Southerners dropped hints that if the White House continued so scornful of the South, the more violent expedient of sending overt anti-Truman delegations to the convention would have to be resorted to. Sat. 2-14-48

The President may deny the intention of conciliation until he is black in the face. He may personally have no such intention. But his representatives respond to the hints of the Southern leaders, by hinting in return that the President would in the end approve a compromise on the platform's civil and human rights plank. The Southerners intimated that if such a compromise were forthcoming, they would then content themselves with holding a post-convention rally, as they did after the Wallace nomination in 1940. At this rally, they promised they would give free rein to their propensity for oratory, but would end by resolving that much as they detested Truman, they hated the Republicans even more. Louisville, Ky.

Southern Fat In the F.E.P.C. Fire

In Congress, this plan has found favor with many, even among the extreme white supremacy shouters like Senator Olin D. Johnston of South Carolina. Meanwhile, some Southern governors, like J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina and M. E. Thompson of Georgia, have also sent assurances of eventual support to the White House.

It is symptomatic of the state of the Democratic party that in these dubious circumstances, the White House political strategists are breathing audible sighs of relief. They are thankful for very little, these days. The arrangements outlined above are very little to be thankful for, because of two obvious drawbacks. The Courier Journal

In the first place, any weasel words in the civil and human rights platform plank will enrage and alienate precisely the groups in the North at whom the President's civil rights message was aimed. Yet if the weasel words are not spoken, the uncommitted Southern delegates will still be able to put forward their own man. In the second place, the present arrangements may be upset even before convention time, if the fair employment practices act becomes law at last. Louisville, Ky.

House passage of F.E.P.C. is a foregone conclusion. So is Senate passage if cloture can be applied. Application of cloture turns upon four or five Republican votes, including Senators Robert A. Taft, Harlan Bushfield, and Albert Hawkes. Taft, it is known, will vote to approve cloture, although opposed to the F.E.P.C. bill. Hawkes is in a hard re-election fight in New Jersey, and the other waverers will be not un-influenced by the fact that this is an election year. If F.E.P.C. passes, the Southern fat will really be in the fire. In the ensuing bitterness and recrimination, anything may happen, and quite probably will. Sat. 2-14-48

The Foundations Crumble

The Times Birmingham, Ala.

BY JOSEPH AND STEWART ALSOP

FOR THE FIRST TIME, practical Southern politicians are talking seriously about the end of the one-party system in the South. This is, of course, the result of the Southern rebellion against President Truman, and more particularly the rebellion's bi-product, the Virginia bill allowing the state's representatives in the electoral college to cast their ballots as they choose.

348 Demo

The resurrection of this antiquated constitutional device will allow Southerners to express both sides of their politically split personalities. They will be able to continue to vote as Democrats, yet to avoid assisting in the election of the Democratic Party's national candidates. Tues. 2-3-48

The trick is simple, and it is already appealing to conservative Southerners outside Virginia. South Carolina and Mississippi are definitely expected to pass bills of their own on the Virginia model. This holds out the pretty definite likelihood that Truman will lose the 28 electoral college votes represented by Virginia. The number is not great, compared to the 531 vote total of the electoral college. Yet it is quite enough to decide a close election. And it is also possible that other Southern states will follow the Virginia road.

Political Significance

The News Birmingham, Ala.

IN SHORT, THE DEVELOPMENT HAS VERY GREAT SIGNIFICANCE, both long and short range. The short-range significance lies, of course, in the effects on the coming election previously outlined. With Wallace in the race, with his Palestine policy haunting him like a cruel ghost, there is no doubt that Truman is done for if he loses anything in the South. Losses in the South are now quite probable. The foundations of Truman's strength have crumbled, and that is all there is to it. Tues. 2-3-48

* * *

FURTHERMORE, EVEN IF THE PRESENT MOVEMENT is headed off, and the Southern electoral votes are in the end all racked up for Truman, there are still other dangers to overcome. It has already been published that Sen. Harry F. Byrd, after first expressing distate, has now become inclined to let his name be presented as a presidential candidate. Besides Byrd, moreover, there is Sen. Walter F. George, who would command even wider Southern support. He is also giving signs of willingness to let himself be proposed to the Democratic convention.

* * *

Southern Strategy

The News

AS FAR AS THE CONVENTION is concerned, the Southern strategy will be to send uncommitteed delegations, and to fight initially for a weasel-worded civil rights plank. The president's political representatives were at first inclined to concede such a plank in order to pacify the Southern rebels. But Truman balked at swallowing every word he had said on the subject of civil rights. The Southern governors were turned away empty handed when they called on the chairman of the Democratic National Committee, Sen. J. Howard McGrath. Now, therefore, the Southerners are more likely to be driven to the second stage of their convention plan, which is to nominate George or Byrd or both as rivals to Truman. Birmingham, Ala. 2-3-48

Events are almost certain to intensify the South's itch to make trouble at the convention, and to go through, thereafter, with the Virginia scheme for depriving Truman of Southern electoral votes. The fair employment practices, anti-lynching and anti-poll tax bills will all shortly come up for Senate votes. They will pass if the Senate applies cloture to half filibusters. On the last test, on the FEPC, cloture was defeated in the Senate by a vote of only 39 to 33, with six Republicans, Sens. Bridges, Guerney, Millikin, Moore, White and Young voting against, and Hawkes and Bushfield paired against. Tues.

* * *

THIS YEAR, THE ELECTION and the temptation to make trouble for Truman are powerful persuaders to induce these anti-cloture Republican senators to change their votes. Enough switches are expected among them to pass at least the anti-poll tax, probably the FEPC, and possibly the anti-lynching bill. Passage of these three pieces of legislation will drive the Southern white supremacy shouters to extremes of every kind, both of oratory and of action. The News

As to the long-range significance of the Southern rebellion, that is also pretty obvious. The new violence of the white supremacy shouters has in it a note of fear. Industrialization, agricultural diversification and the mechanical cotton picker are, in fact, already threatening the old Southern order which produced the Georges and McKellars, Byrds and Overtons. In the House, especially, a sprinkling of progressive Southerners has already appeared. Tues.

The Virginia bill returning to the state's presidential electors the right of free choice which the constitution originally intended for them may simply hurt Truman at first. But it will also have the long-range effect of separating the forward looking and backward looking Southerners into two different political parties. This is really now almost inevitable at last.—© Birmingham, Ala. 2-3-48

Why Not The Whole Hog?

The Record Columbia, S.C.

Democratic leaders are more alarmed at Wallace's third party's strength than they are at the threat of a Southern secession.

And the Republican party has only an academic interest in the Southern revolt since it isn't even proposed in the South that the Southerners vote Republican. Tues. 2-24-48

So the Southerners find themselves ignored by both parties.

The Democratic party still clings to the civil rights program because it needs to get the Negro and the Jewish votes in the crucial states. And the Negroes and the Jews are among the large groups to which Mr. Wallace has been directing his campaign so far. His civil rights program and aggressive action in behalf of partition of Palestine are about the only policies available to Mr. Truman for use against Wallace, although there is reason to doubt that either of them will be effective.

And the protesting Democrats of the South—they are more nearly Republicans than they are Democrats by modern definitions—will never get anywhere until they make up their mind where they are going. And they haven't done that yet. At Greenwood they decided to remain in the Democratic party. In Dorchester and Jasper the Democrats adopted resolutions proposing a course to take the Southern Democrats out of the Democractic party, but nowhere. They want to form a Southern splinter party, which never could hope to win an election or elect a candidate. In Mississippi Governor Wright is leading a campaign to get rid of Truman as the Democratic nominee. Tues. 2-24-48

These things are every one of them ineffective and futile. There is a lot of talk about forcing the election of President into the House of Representatives where every state has only one vote. But all the Southern electoral college votes, scattered among a group of candidates or cast for a third-party candidate, would have had this result in but three instances in the past 70 years. In every other election the result would have been what it was.

If the protesting Southern Democrats want to make themselves effective they must make up their mind to vote Republican. This might put them on the winning side in the coming election. It might even win the Southerners enough Republican votes in the Senate now to prevent the enactment of a cloture rule. And it would give the South representation in both parties since those Southern Democrats who do not want to leave the Democratic party could remain in it, giving both parties an interest in the South and a reason to cultivate it. The Record

Nor is there anything radical in the proposal. The Southern Democrats by proposing to secede from the Democratic party are undertaking to vote half Republican. The sensible, honest course is to go the whole hog. Columbia, S.C.

The South is making a great hullabaloo about the Democratic party betraying it. It should kick itself in the pants. For it has betrayed itself by putting all of its eggs in one basket and then letting Harry Truman carry it. Tues. 2-24-48

There are plenty of reasons in logic against what is being proposed, but partisan politicians are not moved by logic. They are motivated by partisan political considerations. And the South being in the bag or even going off at a tangent in imitation of Henry Wallace is, by the rules, entitled to no consideration.

If the South is going to do anything it needs the courage to do it or quit talking.

SENATOR HILL AND MRS. THOMAS

The Advertiser

EDITOR, The Advertiser: I can't see how Lister Hill can be for Truman and against what he stands for. 3-17-48

The South is at a critical stage and we need men like Lister Hill on our side. He could do his country a great service if he would. I have always voted for him but I can't go along with this. Then, too, Mrs. Lennard Thomas goes to Washington, has a nice chat with President Truman and comes away satisfied! Satisfied, although the President just the same as told her that he still insisted on Congress putting its foot on our necks while he shakes hands with the Negro vote in the North. Mrs. Thomas being a lady, I cannot say anything except that I hoped for something different. The Southern wing of the Democratic Party fully expects the South to boil over now and then. Cool off and vote solid for Truman. I have been a Democrat all my life, Southern Democrat, I mean, but if we do that this time I don't think I can ever hold my nose tight enough to vote the Democratic ticket again. Montgomery, Ala.

I know of only one thing that will do like they think we will and that is a dog. You can beat him and kick him, starve him and abuse him and he will crawl to you and lick your hand. I don't believe the South will do that this time. Let's give them such a fight they will have more respect for us from now on. Wed.

The South and Secession

Atlanta, Ga. Wed. 3-3-48

WASHINGTON—The current "revolt" of the South over President Truman's civil rights program is featured by agitation and some preliminary plans for various forms of what might be called "political secession" from the Democratic Party and, indeed, from Yankee "meddlers," too.

A quip goes around here, said not altogether in jest:

"Why don't they just go ahead and secede?"

Which is, of course, unthinking. It takes no account of the many, many Southerners who are deeply resentful to the noisy bleating of their politicians and the slick schemes to "punish" the President.

This is manifest in the sour reaction among lots of people in Virginia to the "Fort Sumter shot" of Gov. William M. Tuck by his proposal to keep Mr. Truman's name off the ballot in Virginia and delegate a party convention to tell the electors, after the election, for whom it was the people had voted.

This high-handed trick now seems headed for delay in the Legislature, to which the Governor submitted it. Wed. 3-3-48

For another thing, the people of the South are fully aware that there are economic as well as political ties between the Southern States and the Federal Government. This of itself, when pondered seriously, provokes sober second thought.

"States' rights," as usual, is being dragged out again in this current engagement. Most people in the South know by now how outworn a shibboleth it is. They have seen how it is pulled out and dusted off by special interests in the South, political and economic, to halt progress as is also done elsewhere in the nation.

A howl would go up from the South if anybody here took some Southern politicians at their own angry word about States' rights and stopped all Federal measures and appropriations for the benefit of the South. Four years ago, during the previous Southern "revolt," there was much high sounding talk about States' rights at a regional meeting of Southeastern Governors at Atlanta.

It was deflated somewhat by Gov. Ellis Arnall of Georgia, who reminded his fellow Governors frankly that, while they yelled about States rights, they seemed ready and eager always to demand from Washington all sorts of Federal benefits for their people. Wed. 3-3-48

Which is proper. The people of the South for all the noise some of their politicians make are a part of the Union. And they get benefits from the Federal Treasury far out of proportion to the taxes they pay, with the bigger and more wealthy States making it up and complaining about it occasionally. But this is also on the very sound basis that people are people everywhere in the United States; and men and women and children in Georgia or Mississippi are as much entitled to help as those in Michigan or New York. The Constitution

The Federal Government has had to help the South in other ways. When Southern States neglected to pass laws of their own to protect factory workers and farm tenants, and to develop their natural resources, Congress finally stepped in with the wage-hour law, Federal financial assistance to farm tenants, TVA, and like measures.

People who have benefited from these things know how specious is the States' rights plea and how it was exploited for so long to keep anything from being done to break down the low-wage economy that was profitable to a few. Enactment of these laws also served to wake up local Southern leaders and, in many instances, they improved their own social and economic welfare statutes. Atlanta, Ga.

Just as the late President Roosevelt moved in to extend economic and social democracy to the people of the South, when the States themselves failed to take adequate measures, so President Truman has moved in to extend political democracy. The hopeful thing is that the President, by the very vigor with which he attacked, has stirred up a great debate which, of itself, will start thinking—and that is the beginning of wisdom. The South could do these things for itself, just as it could have done the others. Wed. 3-3-48

It is inevitable that they will be done.

Editor, The Advertiser:

My father was a Democrat, I have always been a Democrat. But I'll have to step over beside Mr. Bonner. I will never vote for Truman.

I voted for Al Smith but it stuck in my craw. I don't say I'll vote for a Republican, though I'd rather vote for an avowed enemy who was honest than a supposed friend who tries to stab me in the back.

The South has always gone "solid" for its own protection against the very things they are trying to force on us now. We of the South do not hate the Negro, we are his best friends. We spend untold dollars of white tax money for his schools and health, etc. The Advertiser

When a Negro wants help he goes to a white man and gets it. We can live in peace and harmony if the Northern meddlers will let us alone. I think it is time for the South to be solid for our own good instead of for a Democratic Party that ignores every custom and tradition we have and is trying to force things on us that will destroy us. Arnall Lays South's 'Mad' To Patronage

The Constitution, Atlanta, Ga.

Mon. 6-14-48

WASHINGTON, June 13—(AP)—Two Southern Democrats disagreed today about President Truman's chances of being nominated at the Democratic convention, but agreed that the South should continue to oppose Republicans.

Ellis G. Arnall, former Georgia Governor, said he doesn't put too much importance to the current Southern revolt against Mr. Truman's Civil Rights program and figures the President has enough convention delegates pledged to assure nomination.

Sen. Sparkman, Democrat, Alabama, countered that the revolt is "real" and that the South should try to get another candidate named by the convention.

The two debated on the University of Chicago Round Table.

Arnall and Sparkman agreed:

1. The South is mad not only about President Truman's civil-rights program but because the South to a large extent has been left out in distribution of Cabinet and other big Party positions for years. Mon. 6-14-48
2. The South should fight for all its rebellion is worth to get all it can from the Democratic Convention. The Constitution

REBELS FORECAST DEWEY VICTORY AS ANSWER ON CIVIL RIGHTS

The California Voice

Oakland, Calif.

Fri. 7-16-48

PHILADELPHIA, July 15—Rebel Southern Democrats, angered over the triumph of President Truman and his civil rights program, predicted today that Gov. Thomas E. Dewey would break the Solid South in November.

34d

The chairman of the Florida delegation, Frank D. Upchurch, Jr., even went so far as to say that Truman might not carry a single state in the entire country.

South

And a Louisiana delegate, Hugh Wilkinson, said the Democratic Party was wrecked, and headed for crushing defeat. In the reorganization to follow, he said, the South would get a proper voice in party affairs.

Other Southern leaders predicted the party was in for the worst licking since 1928. Fri. 7-16-48

Gove. Beauford Jester of Texas said: The only thing to keep the Republicans from carrying Texas, is they do not have a strong candidate in Dewey. But he acknowledged that Dewey might get more votes than any GOP candidate since Herbert Hoover carried the state 20 years ago.

Representatives of at least five Dixie delegations were headed for a states rights conference in Birmingham. There they will pick a states rights candidate for President for whom Southern electors can vote in the electoral college.

The Frustrated, Revolting South

The Black Dispatch

"The foxes have holes and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head."

Every time during the past week we have thought of the recalcitrant, reactionary unit in the Democratic party, seeking to oust President Truman from leadership because of his civil rights stand, this passage of scripture has rushed forward to command the scene.

34d

Stop and think a moment. With the Republican National Convention placing a civil rights plank in its platform and with Henry Wallace and his new party actually putting civil rights into action, so far as their meetings and speeches are concerned, and with President Truman also preaching civil rights and demanding passage of this type of legislation, where, or where do those Democrats who oppose civil rights propose to lay their political heads come November?

Of course the only reason why Southern Democrats are angry with President Truman is because he had the integrity to spell out in very understandable language what he is talking about when he speaks of civil rights. Civil rights had been mentionel in a general way in the Democratic platform four years ago, but there has always been a difference between responsibility in the abstract as contrasted with the concrete. Truman, in the mind of the South, was dumb enough to put his hand upon specific wrongs and announce that they will be righted.

Oklahoma City, Okla.

This perhaps accounts for the sudden attempt to drag General Eisenhower into the presidential picture. It could be that Eisenhower was making a bid for Dixie support when he recently made an announcement regarding a pro-jim crow army that sent Walter White sprawling in his tracks. There is no question but that Eisenhower made a right-about-face on the race issue and from the current turn of events he is courting presentation to the Democratic National Convention as the one man acceptable to the natives who live below the Mason and Dixon line, just outside the fringe of civilization.

But this dark horse the South seeks to foist upon the convention is a dark horse in many ways. Labor will want to know before it votes for him, his stand on the Taft-Hartley law and there will be other units of the population who will want to know his position on housing, education, health, rural problems and a score of world problems relating to war and peace. The Black Dispatch does not believe there will be a chance for the South to successfully introduce to the Democratic National Convention a horse as dark as Eisenhower, who has not announced his position on anything other than a jim crow army. Sat. 7-10-48

There are many citizens of this republic who see a clear and present danger in placing the nation in the hands of the military, and we believe the Democratic National Convention will go slow in selecting a general to head the ticket this fall. In fact the recent experience of General MacArthur in the Republican parley in the Quaker City should unfold in a very intimate way the current feeling towards the military.

The eleventh hour doubtful strategy of the revolting South resembles more an act of frustration than anything else. It looks as though the nomination of President Truman is conceded when attempt is made to foist upon the convention in a time like this, a man whose political, economic and social notions are so little understood. Looks as though the revolting South has no place to lay its head.

Favors State Action on Lynching, Fair Employment, Equal Opportunities, Anti-Poll Tax

The Black Dispatch

Oklahoma City, Okla.

(34d) (Dem) (South)

RICHMOND — (ANP) — Many southerners favor the objective that President Truman wants to achieve in his civil rights program, but "they do not favor the method he has proposed, of passing federal legislation and a lot of it, all in one lump." Sat.

This view was advanced by Virginius Dabney, white, editor of the Richmond Times-Dispatch, and Pulitzer prize winner for editorial writing in 1947, at a recent meeting of the American Society of Newspaper editors. The editor, who has consistently fought against the hate-mongers and fomenters of racial persecution in his region, was giving the south's views on civil rights.

Holding that the civil rights program was a "terrific dose" to be swallowed at one time, Dabney declared:

"We are for the elimination of lynching, but we agree with the Washington Post in feeling that a federal anti-lynching law is unnecessary because lynching has almost been wiped out without such a law. Legislation of that kind would be inflammatory and probably do more harm than good.

"Many of us want to get rid of the poll tax. There has been a lot of leadership in the southern press in favor of the elimination of the poll tax, but we want to get rid of it by state action—at least most of us do." 6-5-48

He said most southerners agreed that it would be "an unconstitutional thing" to try to revise the poll tax by federal legislation.

"We want to give fair employment to the colored people in the south," he asserted, "but we don't think that the FEPC is the way to do it. We think it will cause much turmoil and antagonism and even violence, if they begin under such legislation sending southern employers to jail for not employing colored applicants. Sat.

"We want to develop better opportunities for the colored citizens and we are trying to do that, but if this FEPC should be bushed over on us, we think the colore people will be the worst sufferers."

As for educational opportunities and voting privileges, he pointed out that southerners were willing to accord such equalization to Negroes and cited the example of a southern Virginia judge who ruled that every public school in Virginia must provide substantially equal facilities and equipment for colored schools as well as white—"something which has not been done, of course." He also cited the decision made by a South Carolina judge in ruling against the pripately-operated white primary.

He also said that North Carolina last year paid Negro school teachers "more, on the average, than its white teachers."

"The average salary of the colored teachers was $51 a year more than the white teachers throughout the state because they were better trained," Dabney asserted. The southern press does not object to that at all. Many southern newspapers openly say that the colored teachers should be paid exactly on the basis of merit and not on the basis of race prejudice. That North Carolina has achieved this is a very remarkable thing to me."

Reiterating that the Truman civil rights program "is harmful," he declared, "I am told that it Georgia Herman Talmadge's election as governor has almost been guaranteed by the Truman program. There was a chance of beating him until that was an nounced. But now it has raised such a turmoil and caused so much feeling and hostilitp toward the colored people that the Talmadge group is able to raise the race issue more acutely than ever before.

"The danger exists, and it is a very real danger, that Talmadge will be elected as a result, and we know what that means."

LET'S BE FACTUAL

To be more effective, we revolting Southerners must be more realistic in our outcries. Montgomery Ala

We must, for example, cease giving the North, East and West the idea that we believe the South owns the Democratic Party. The South does not own the party by a long shot. For example, Roosevelt would have been elected four times without one single electoral vote from the South.

We are entitled to a certain possessive attitude toward the party because, among other reasons, we have been the most constant element. When in past times other regions have goofed off to vote G.O.P., the South has stood fast. But we have been but the base of the victory pyramids, and never the entire pyramid.

A minor act of our unrealism has been the baying, braying and caterwauling about the Democratic Party's infestation with the big city machines such as those of Kelly and Hague. All about us in Alabama are reluctant Democrats who wail that Roosevelt was the creature of these machines. The inferential notion is that all big city machines are Democratic and that they are different from other machines.

The truth is, of course, there are big city machines and some are Democratic and some are Republican—and a big city political machine is a machine for all of that.

Nor are these machines that are so indiscriminately flailed by some of us all situated in the Sodom East and the Gomorrah North. Advertiser

The bayers and brayers, in their survey of the nefarious, o'erperch such shabby and vicious objects as the Crump machine of Memphis, Tenn., bordering Alabama.

It is true that Crump's machine represents the minimum in exposed, on-the-record thievery, but it has lately given off some suggestive odors. More, there never has, nor ever will be, a machine that functions except on the basis of dispensing special favor to him who votes right. What other fuel can a machine travel on?

We speak harshly and justly of the big city machine's solicitude for and use of the Negro vote. What of the thousands of Negro votes that old Cotton Candy-head Crump carries around in his vest pocket?

Pendergast's machine in Missouri undoubtedly represents the ultimate degree of putrefaction, but no more skunks have fled its stench than Philadelphia's.

For nearly a century Philadelphia has been ruled and despoiled by a Republican machine. An article in the current Collier's says: Fri 8-6-48

> The sickest city in the land is Philadelphia. It is suffering from the longest case on record—81 years—of the dread malady known as machine politics.
>
> . . . It has a self-sustaining political machine that would be the envy of old Tammany—and a freshly uncovered financial shortage estimated at $300,000 to $1,000,000 . . .
>
> In Philadelphia motorists in restricted parking zones pay off many of the cops with a quarter, or even use old parking tickets as camouflage tags on their cars . . . It is a city of petty crimes, small-time gamblers and 5 & 10 shakedowns, where too often a citizen's first protection is not the law, the courts or the police, but his ward leader.
>
> Philadelphia's political machine is simple enough. It is called Republican, but this is only a label. It has no political philosophy except to win elections with whatever promise, slogan or chicanery it believes will succeed . . .

All of which is to say, a machine is a machine and it is sophomoric and idle to seek to associate them exclusively with either Roosevelt or our present Civil Disturbance distresses.

We Southerners, with so many strikes on us to start with, have got to be sound and judicious in stating the South's case. We are not in position to speak of machines self-righteously with Crump just across the state line and when, as a matter of fact, the South, with the Long machine of Louisiana of the Deep South, gave to the nation its first dictatorship and its first police state

The South Must Understand---

Atlanta, Ga.

Fri 7-16-48

PHILADELPHIA—For a long time we had known that President Harry S. Truman was in the Convention Hall in Room 205 where an air-conditioned unit was at work. But when at last the weary, hot hours of convention were done; when Truman was nominated and Sen. Barkley, too, there was the drama of their appearance.

It was almost 3 o'clock in the morning.

An era had ended a few hours before. It is easy to say that phrase and sometimes it is said lightly, but this time there was little doubt about it. It was not so much that when the President did come there would be no one sitting in the rows of seats assigned to Mississippi. It was not that in the Alabama section half the seats were empty. Nor could one look out there and see the tired faces of the other Southern delegations and see that an era had ended.

But, it had.

Fri 7-16-48

Ultimatum

The high-pitched angry voices had died out. The anger and the bitterness had been revealed and ignored. The South had not been read out of the party, but told in unmistakable words that they could stay or go, as they pleased. It was hoped they would stay, but if they wanted to go then they could go.

The East and West had joined to do that. When Mississippi's delegation had walked out none had called "come back." Instead there was loud and derisive booing and laughter. So it had been for the half of Alabama's delegation departure. There was apparent nowhere any regret or desire to appease the South. I say this thus coldly and plainly so that the South may understand and know it.

Atlanta, Ga.

Change

What happened was that the industrial States of the nation, the big Eastern ones and those in the West, had taken over the Democratic Party and had begun to reshape it according to their own needs and desires. The Democratic Party of Wednesday morning was gone by Wednesday night.

But, on the surface, there was no sign of this as the big lights came on and the committee escorted the President of the United States and Sen. Alben Barkley, nominated to run with him, and their families to the platform.

For some unknown reason someone loosed a basket of pigeons. What the symbolism was none could explain. The poor, frightened, silly birds flew about the brilliantly lighted hall and dipped into the crowd where hands tried to catch them. It was a stupid thing to have done and for a time there the crowd was about to laugh itself into another mood.

Constitution

Greeting

It had been asked that there be no long demonstrations, because of the lateness of the hour. But there was a good, sincere greeting for the nominees, although it did not have in it any of the deep, confident bellow that used to greet Franklin Roosevelt.

You got the feeling of the new era as the President talked. Looking at the tired, weary faces in the crowd, one found it a little difficult to realize it was 3 o'clock in the morning and that a President was speaking, saying he was going to call back a Republican Congress and ask it to go to work on its own party platform of promises.

You felt, too, the fact that a new era was at hand as the President accented the platform which called for outright repeal of the Taft-Hartley law, and for legislation which ends for all times the theory of States' rights. Only the Supreme Court can determine how much of States' rights remains as it will test in the future laws which the Republicans will pass and which the Democrats will pass if they should, by some quirk of political fate, be retained in office.

Fri 7-16-48

Future

The Democratic Party of the future is going to be more unified than it ever was when it contained the conservative Southern leadership and policy, requiring some great personality to hold that force the big city masses together. It will be, within eight years or less, a unified party directed by the city masses of the East and those of the West. It is going to become an urban party and a party of the political left devoted to the policies such as this platform expresses. The thoughtful person will not fail to note what has happened in the rest of the world and will note that this follows the pattern.

All this will not happen at once, although much of it already has happened here in this steaming, bitter convention. The Democratic Party, the old jerry-built one of Southern conservatisms and big-city pressures, now is the party of the cities and of the industrial working masses. This may, eventually, be a good thing for the country to have a two-party system which is more clearly defined.

Out

But, for the time being, the South must not fail to know that when the new leaders of the party in the East and West had to decide between their policies and the South, they let the South go coldly and without hesitation. How much of the South will be with the Democratic Party of four or eight years from now no one may say. Some of it will. The South, too, has cities and it will be well for the South to keep that in mind as it seeks to evaluate its political future.

It is not a time now for hot words. They were said here in plenty. It is a time for evaluation.

SOUTHERNERS WARY OF BOLTING PARTY

The Times
New York, N.Y.
Sun. 5-16-48

But Possibility Remains That Many Will 'Go Fishing' in Election Day Protest

By JOHN N. POPHAM

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., May 15—A group of Southern Democrats openly hostile to President Truman and his civil-rights program took formal steps this week to threaten the national Administration with political reprisal.

Designating themselves the States' Rights Democrats, they assembled 1,000 delegates in Jackson, Miss., and voted unanimously to hold their own convention on July 17 in Birmingham, Ala., if the national convention on July 12 in Philadelphia failed to repudiate the civil-rights proposals or renominated President Truman.

Revolt Affected

After the storm of oratory had abated, political observers surveyed the regional scene and were virtually unanimous in agreeing that the recalcitrants had put themselves in the position of committing the cardinal sin in Dixie by setting up machinery for bolting the sacrosanct Democratic party. Sun. 5-16-48

As a result there was widespread shying away from the would-be bolters, and the much-heralded "revolt" in Southern ranks this Presidential election year was believed to have been affected considerably.

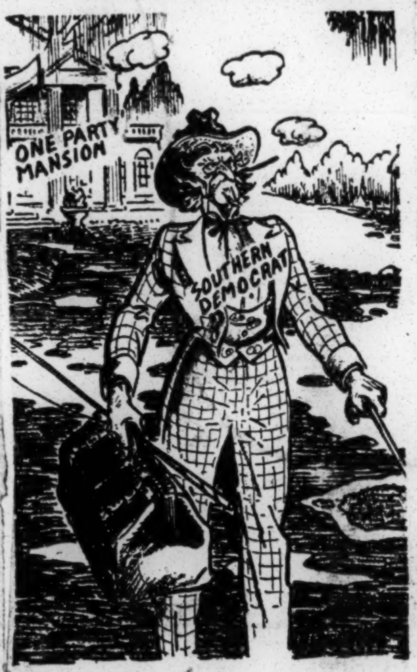
Truman's Unpopularity

However, those attending the Jackson meeting received strong proof that Mr. Truman at this time is extremely unpopular with the rank-and-file southern voter. As one Georgia delegate declared, "Mr. Truman has got to do some mighty sweet courting if he expects to win the South."

But politicians and observers, taking into account reports that seeped from the confidential sessions of the resolutions committee at Jackson, discounted to a degree some of the support that had been promised. 5-16-48

All stressed the importance of James S. Peters, chairman of the Georgia delegation and chairman of the state's Democratic executive committee, directing his group to act only as observers rather than approve any move that would bolt the party. The Times

"NO PLACE TO GO"



Alexander in The Philadelphia Evening Bulletin

When the resolutions were voted upon, newspaper men were unable to find any seated delegates from Virginia or North Carolina and it was felt that a genuine grass-roots impetus was lacking when only 150 spectators and half the delegates were present for the voting. New York, N.Y.

Little Political Weight

The consensus was that a rump convention in Birmingham would get serious representation from Mississippi and Alabama, and possibly South Carolina and Arkansas. Most political leaders felt that other states would ignore a separate party move and that any delegates from those states would have a difficult time proving they carried any political weight.

Nevertheless, most observers in the South were aware that the Jackson meeting emphasized the extent to which Mr. Truman has slipped in political favor in Dixie. They noted also the street-corner and hotel-lobby talk in favor of Republicans, naming Stassen and Vandenberg, although there was nothing to indicate that the Republican party, regionally or nationally had gained favor with the South. Sun. 5-16-48

Consequently, the current feeling is that a Southern reprisal in the form of a separate party is unlikely if the Jackson reaction is a solid indication, but no one is dismissing the possibility of a "revolt" in which anti-Truman Southerners would "go fishing" on election day, or even vote for a "personable" Republican.

The Democratic South

The Courier-Journal
Louisville, Ky.

Your editorial on the revolt of Southern Democrats prompts these observations. I have been a Southern Democrat since 1888. My father was a Kentucky Democrat and seldom used the word "Republican" without a prefix!

Most editorial comment is that the South is being ignored by the Democratic Party because it no longer needs the South. Well, the Democratic Party needs the South this year and every year. It has always needed the South and always will because the Democratic Party is the South. The South has always furnished the brains of the Democratic Party. It was the unswerving loyalty of the South and its influence, if not its electoral votes, which wrested the country from the damrepublicans after Hoover's fiasco.

And the South needs the Democratic Party. It cannot prosper without it. Only under Democratic administrations has the South made any industrial progress. Under the hated New Deal, more industrial advance has been made than under all the Republican administrations since that party was founded and promptly taken over by Wall Street. I challenge anybody to name one constructive thing ever done by the Republicans for the South, or any other part of the country, except the gold-spangled East. I am opposed to Congress' tampering with our cherished "Southern traditions," but I'm not going to burn the building to kill the rats. Sun.

Arlington, Texas. 4-25-48 HOPE WHEELER.

'Bolters' Or 'Observers'?

The News

Since may 4 it has been obvious that Alabama would send a split delegation to the National Democratic Convention in Philadelphia in July. Some of the delegates will be pledged to walk out of the convention if an objectionable civil rights plank is adopted and if President Truman is nominated, and some will have refused to give such a pledge. There will be no unanimity on the matter of a walkout, although all the delegation will stand opposed to President Truman and his civil rights program. Birmingham Ala.

This division has weakened the likelihood of a walkout, at least in a physical sense. Unless the entire delegation strode out of the convention, a walkout would not be effective. While it is desirable that a state's delegation act as a unit, that possibility is not likely now for Alabama. Tues.

Nor is it likely that any attempt will be made to enforce a unit rule upon the delegation. Each delegation sets up its own rules in that regard, but it is doubtful if the Alabama group, whoever composes it, will try to put over a unit rule, inasmuch as some of the delegates will have been elected on opposing platforms. 5-25-48

But will those delegates pledged to walk out do so under the circumstances they have described? There are indications that some of them may not. Possibly they will be able to satisfy the voters and their own consciences in some way without doing so.

* * *

What will constitute "taking a walk" under those circumstances? It is becoming increasingly vague what the "bolters" themselves mean by the phrase. Gov. Laney, of Arkansas, leader of the states' rights Jeffersonian Democrats, was quoted in Little Rock last week as declaring, "I've never said I'd take a walk, and I don't know anyone who has." The News

We don't know about Gov. Laney, but Alabama's Gessner P. McCorvey, chairman of the State Democratic Executive Committee and a candidate for delegate in the run-off one week hence, early in the first campaign sent out an official statement in which he declared that if "the Northern Democrats write a platform . . . offensive to the South, I think the Southern delegates to the convention should walk out of the convention." More recently Mr. McCorvey issued a statement in which he said that if the convention adopts such a platform "then the damage is done, and we gain nothing by wrangling over a candidate. . . . Our delegates will have to 'take a walk.'"

But "taking a walk" is coming to have different implications. It is now suggested that possibly the "walkout" delegates, in case the convention goes against them, will not leave their seats, and thus run the risk of the seats being filled by alternate delegates of different opinion, but will remain in the convention as "observers." This is hardly an effective or appealing idea. Birmingham, Ala.

* * *

It becomes even more important, it seems to us, that Alabama Democrats send to the convention as many delegates as possible who will participate in the proceedings, fighting for their convictions, to the very end. Tues. 5-25-48

Party Conciliation Doubted By Wright

The Advertiser
Montgomery, Ala.

JACKSON, MISS. —(AP)— Mississippi's Gov. Fielding L. Wright, leader of the states' rights Democratic movement, sees little chance of conciliation with the national party.

The Southern states' rights leaders, he told newsmen Wednesday would not be conciliated even if President Truman backed down on his civil rights program.

Commenting on a news report that Democratic Chairman J. Howard McGrath had predicted in Washington that there would be no occasion for a walkout at the National Democratic Convention in Philadelphia, Wright said:

"We plan to ask a positive stand by the national party for states' rights and nothing less than that will be satisfactory."

Regarding the possibility that McGrath's remarks hinted a compromise between the civil rights and the states rights supporters in the national party, Wright asserted: Thurs. 6-10-48

"The civil rights issue is incidental. We want a positive declaration placed in the party platform that will insure the rights of the states as provided by the constitution."

Gov. Wright clarioned the present states' rights movement in his inauguration address last January when he proposed that the south "break" with the leadership of the national party if it continued to sponsor such legislation as the civil rights program.

'Solid South' Could Crack, Chairmen Say

The Constitution
Atlanta, Ga.
Wed.

Democratic Chairmen from five Southern States didn't discuss personalities at their war conference here on socalled Civil Rights, but—

If the Democrats renominate President Truman and the Republicans should nominate someone like Sen. Vandenberg without such a civil rights program, the chairmen wouldn't be surprised to see the solid Democratic South switch over to the Republican Party.

The chairmen didn't talk about such an idea in their conference at all, they said. They didn't say exactly what plan they would follow in fighting Civil Rights candidates. But some of them "interpreted the feelings of their people" to prefer an anti-Civil Rights candidate regardless of party.

In their two-day conference at the Henry Grady Hotel which closed Tuesday, the chairmen said they found that the South stands firmly and squarely together and will not relent from its fight against the socalled Civil Rights program and its determination to preserve states' rights. 5-12-48

Part of their plans may be disclosed at the Jackson, Miss., meeting of Democratic leaders May 10.

The Cutting Of the Pattern

Atlanta, Ga.

Wed. 5-26-48

There is a tendency to regard the present embattled political position in which the South finds itself as new.

It is not. It has certain parallels with 1856-60. But even so, it is the historical position which, now and then, worsens. Now is one of those times.

It then becomes important to study how, and why, this came about. It is a study which already has filled many volumes and will fill more.

For a long time after the War of "Independence," the South developed about like the rest of the nation. It was living by planting and it used slave labor.

Decision But two factors intervened to halt this normal development. It generally is forgotten now, but the South had already begun to find slave labor unprofitable and was about to diversify its interests and would have substituted white labor for slave labor, as did New England and the East, where industry developed.

Wed. 5-26-48

These two factors were the sudden increase in textile production and machinery in Britain's industrial revolution, and the invention of the cotton gin. There were thousands of new spindles in British mills demanding cotton. The cotton gin made slave labor profitable, as it had not been when hand labor was necessary.

Doom This doomed the South to a colonial status of supplying a raw material. It encouraged the large planters to buy more land and slaves. It caused hundreds from New England to float down the rivers to the South and take up cotton land. It turned the multitude of small farmers, who owned few, if any, slaves, and who would have aided the diversity of industry, to growing cotton to supply the then inexhaustible demand.

Then was the die cast. Then did the Fates weave the fabric of the result at Appomattox.

Results Thus committed to cotton, and exclusively to cotton, the South sought to bolster that fact in Washington. The Democratic Party dominated the national politics.

Their politicians now faced a hopeless fight.

The South's interests were fixed. The interests of the rest of the nation were not.

The Constitution

The nation was moving westward. Those Southerners who sought to move west had to have large tracts of land and to transport slaves and the whole plantation economy. There were hundreds in competition with him who had only a carpetbag or a wagon loaded with a mattress and a few household goods. The South could not compete with the westward expansion.

Tides Therefore, the South's politicians sought to hold back the tide. The South wanted a large export trade and sale of cotton, and cheap imports. The expanding West and the urban communities of the East and the manufacturing centers of New England wanted high tariffs.

Atlanta, Ga.

The Southern representatives also sought to block Federal aid in further developing the West. Therefore, they voted against subsidies, grants and appropriations to build roads, canals, and to "open up" the West. They also fought against the establishment of "free States," because such free States would begin to outvote the slave States.

Wed. 5-26-48

So, by 1850 there were many voices rising in the East damning the South for impeding "progress."

Vulnerable This attack was not confined to attacking the South's economy. The South had a vulnerable spot. It mattered not that the slaves had been brought originally to all sections and that New England slave traders had brought them. Slavery was wrong.

The South soon found itself on the wrong side of a moral issue. It became more and more sensitive to the charge of wicked and cruel use of human beings.

5-26-48

Southern Indiana, Illinois and Missouri were pro-slavery. But even in other western States there was antagonism. Many were Southerners who had left to escape slave competition. Others were New Englanders who thought it wicked and bad competition.

Unity A maddening attitude of piousness, in which was considerable hypocrisy, did not remove the fact the South was on the wrong side of a moral question. But it did unite the South defensively.

The Constitution

It could not otherwise have been united. It was a divided region. Of the 8,000,000 white people in the South, only about 1,500,000 had any property interest whatsoever in the 3,500,000 slaves. Less than 20 percent owned slaves. There were wide variations in culture, education and property. There were few "mansions," but many log houses and "shotgun" plank houses.

The resentment which swelled against the South served to unite it spiritually and politically.

Atlanta, Ga.

Men everywhere worked at solving the problem. But in both the South and North men of good will could rarely be heard. The hotheads, hied on by the cynical and the men who saw great fortunes to be made in war, held the floor. For the first time in American political history, great sums were spent to corrupt the congressional elections of 1858.

Wed. 5-26-48

The Democrats lost heavily. In the South the party began to split away and to talk of holding a separate convention if the Northern wing would not agree to their demands.

South Carolina and Mississippi took the lead in forming a Southern Party. Wild clamor prevailed and the calmer voices demanding conservative thought and conciliation were silenced. Secession and war came on.

The pattern was cut for the years ahead.

"If you can keep your head when all about you are losing their's..."

Can we of the South who are winning a history-making victory all along the line against being blindly and stupidly in the bag for the national Democratic organization whether it happens to be befriending us or betraying us—keep our heads? Can we go on with it, consolidate it, advance it, and keep it clean? It is a question on which everything depends.

Mon

We have got to hold our course strong in the remaining primaries and state conventions We have got to be intelligent and unflinching at the national convention and through the dramatic campaign, the caucuses, the election and constitutional procedure afterwards. And always, without quarreling now among ourselves.

5-24-48

But more than this, or certainly as much, we have got to have it in mind and heart that this is no revolt of reactionaries, no maneuver of "Negro-haters," no sell-out to politicians, no device for dodging our responsibilities as Southerners, Americans, citizens of the world and people of the white race. We are asking to be let alone. We should wish to be let alone in virtue, not in sin. The states' rights we demand must not be the right of the strong prey on the weak, the bigoted to be deemed the wise and fair, the backward to hold the forward back.

We are part of a cause existing all over America, a move away from a federalism that has gone crazy, a move for local self-government. Our race problem puts us in the lead but does not make us a people alone in the move. This is something of dignity, something out of history, and for the long future. It takes origin from Thomas Jefferson—and George Washington—not Bilbo-ism and the hateful brands of Southern gile.

The Record

No matter how patiently and often you explain it to my friend Don Shoemaker, Editor of The Asheville, N. C., Citizen, he just doesn't get the idea of the southern electoral college revolt—and even says those who do are "insincere." He is sincere, I am sure, in his belief that the issue is the "basic and historic liberalism of the Democratic party" (with anti-revolt people representing the liberalism).

Mon. 5-24-48

"Many of the revolters see alike with the Republican leadership on issues apart from civil rights," he says. "If they are really sincere they will switch party allegiance and give some meaning to the two-party principle." He would have them switch, even though he points out that the Republicans are likely to be more outspoken than the Democrats for the federal force measures. But the South would seem lost and confused indeed, Don, if all it could think to do in such circumstances was merely to vote Republican.

Columbia, S.C.

As for the relative "liberalism" of the Southern stand, Don, a very great liberal would disagree with you. No one was more solicitous than Woodrow Wilson for "states' rights," at home and abroad. He called it sometimes "self-determinism" and meant that people could be governed best by themselves—at home.

The Record

No matter where or how the "southern revolt" ends up now, the historic and greatly useful thing is happening. For the first time the South is going to a Democratic convention not "in the bag." The declaration of independence is taking place, and having happened, will influence both Democratic and Republican parties henceforth for all time to come. From now on it will be known to both that the South must be considered, that the South is capable of withholding its vote. These free Southern electors could vote for John Doe—or Senator Claghorn—and the mere fact of their being free would nevertheless be history-making and benign.

5-24-48

As to where their vote may really go, that remains to be seen. It depends on what happens at both conventions, and afterwards. It depends on southern decisions and, perhaps, on concessions and overtures from outside. Chairman Gessner McCorvey, of the Alabama State Democratic Executive Committee, who will lead the free electors of that state, suggests that if the vote should be thrown into the House of Representatives and the southern electors had named Eisenhower, the House would choose the general, and that he would never refuse the Presidency on a silver tray from elected representatives of the people.

Some From Dixie Are Ready To Accept Truman But Mississippi May Bolt

By International News Service

ATLANTA, July 9.—The South's delegations to the Democratic Convention moved toward Philadelphia Friday in disagreement and with dim hope that the nomination of President Truman can be prevented.

Some of them, spearheaded by the determined Mississippi group, insist they will walk away from the party before supporting Mr. Truman.

Losing Battle Feared

Washington observers, meanwhile, predict that Mr. Truman will be nominated quickly, regardless of opposition from Dixie.

The Southerners indicated they would make a last-gasp effort to find a man they believe can unify the party before casting their lot with Mr. Truman. They will meet Saturday at Philadelphia with the group headed by James Roosevelt, eldest son of the late president, and again Sunday aftrenoon in a strictly Southern caucus.

Southerners also expected to take preconvention action in the construction of the party platform—at least to the extent of demanding that no plank favoring Federal labor practice legislation and other civil rights statutes be included.

It appeared that Gov. Fielding L. Wright will lead his Mississippi delegation out of Philadelphia ta a scheduled "rump" convention at Birmingham, July 17, if Mr. Truman wins the Democratic nomination as expected.

7-10-48

A compromise with national party leaders on the civil rights dispute may salvage some of the "states' rights" states for the party headed by Mr. Truman. Mississippians indicated they will carry out their "bolt." Alone if necessary.

Alabama May Walk

The Commercial Appeal

More than half of Alabama's delegation also is pledged to "take a walk" along with the Wright faction. And 11½ of Florida's 20 convention votes are pledged to Wright, indicating that a majority of the 'Gator State delegation may "bolt."

Washington, D.C.

Arkansas' group also is heavily involved in the states' rights movement and probably will attend the Birmingham meeting as will South Carolina's representatives.

Other Southern states—North Carolina, Texas, Louisiana, Tennessee, Virginia, and Georgia—indicated they would "string along with Truman" rather than walk out.

Angry Demos Call McGrath On Carpet On Civil Rights

The News
Birmingham, Ala.

BY JACK BELL

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23 — (AP) — The wallop behind the Dixie revolt appeared to hinge today on whether any of President Truman's civil rights program becomes law.

Angry Southern governors proclaimed their "fighting mood" as they waited to call Democratic National Chairman McGrath on the carpet at a mid-afternoon session with newsmen on hand to witness the fireworks.

But two Dixie senators who are active in fanning the flames told a reporter that if Congress does nothing about such things as anti-lynch, anti-poll tax and anti-discrimination bills, the insurrection may never amount to much. Mon

ON THE OTHER HAND, they agreed that if any of those things are written into law—and they look for that to happen—there will be "real trouble" for Mr. Truman in the South. 2-23-48

As an example, one of these senators said the Legislature in his state undoubtedly would vote to remove the name of both the president and his running mate from the ballot. The voters then would cast their ballots for presidential electors who could vote as they choose.

There are increasing signs that the Southerners fear they have been caught in a political cross fire from which they may not be able to escape.

A secret Senate poll has convinced some of them that their most effective weapon—the filibuster—may fail because of lack of Republican support.

The House usually passes one or more civil rights measures in each Congress. But the Southerners have always been able to talk them to death in the Senate. This is because it takes a two-thirds vote to stop a filibuster, and enough Republicans usually side with the Southerners to block the gag rule.

THEY GOT THE SUPPORT of seven Republicans on the last such test. That was on July 31, 1946, when an anti-poll tax bill was up for debate. The News

But several of the same Republicans have told the Southerners not to count on them this year. This makes it almost certain, one of the Dixie senators said, that some bill will be passed. 2-23-48

Hearings on an anti-lynching bill already have been held in the Senate. A similar measure is due to come before a House judiciary subcommittee on Wednesday.

Strangely enough, the Southerners don't blame the Republicans for trying to run the steamroller over them.

Instead, they contend that President Truman forced the issue by his demand for action. The Southerners reason that the Republicans must accept that challenge or lose the minority vote in the North both parties are angling for.

THE DIXIE GOVERNORS waiting to see McGrath came here under orders from the Southern Governors Conference to lay the South's complaint before party headquarters and demand an answer. The News

"We really mean business," Gov. J. Strom Thurmond, of South Carolina, told a reporter as the five-man delegation went into a huddle yesterday to plan the presentation of the Dixie case.

"We are in a fighting mood," he added when the meeting broke up several hours later

A series of questions to be shot at McGrath was drafted with the help of a group of lawyers.

Thus the meeting appeared likely to take on something of a courtroom air—with McGrath on the witness stand. Birmingham

McGrath showed no signs of giving in to the Southerners. Ala.

In a Jackson-Jefferson Day address at Providence, R. I., last night the national chairman declared that "the Democratic Party is on trial." Mon 2-23-48

Asking his listeners whether the party has "the forthrightness to stand up for human rights?" he added:

"UNLESS WE SUPPORT a policy that leads to a better way of life for all mankind, then we have no message at all in life."

On other matters political:

Sen. Taylor (D., Idaho) arranged a broadcast today to announce whether he will be Henry A. Wallace's third party running mate. Mon 2-23-48

Harold E. Stassen called upon Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, of New York, to join him in a series of radio discussions on the "vital issues of American nad Republican policy." Both are candidates for the GOP presidential nomination. There was no immediate comment from Dewey.

Is The Southern Revolt In Earnest?

The Advertiser
Montgomery, Ala.

By GALDSTONE WILLIAMS

Washington Correspondent, The Atlanta Constitution

THERE is no need to take any too seriously much of the talk of a Southern revolt against President Truman because of the civil rights program he recommended to Congress the other day.

Some of the hotter heads among Southern delegation members in Congress have talked about organizing a separate political convention for the purpose of having the South put up its own candidate for President. It would be aimed at taking electoral votes away from Mr. Truman and perhaps throwing the next presidential election into the hands of Congress. Tues 2-10-48

But most of the talk can be written off as political. It is designed more for home consumption, where many of the recommendations made by Mr. Truman are live issues.

None of this is to say that the Southern leaders in Congress are any the less sincere in their opposition to the President's civil rights program. Practically all of them are against it.

They look upon such measures as a Federal anti-lynch law, anti-poll tax laws and proposals for eliminating segregation of the races in interstate transportation as directed chiefly at the South. Hence they are against them for this reason alone, if there were no others.

MOST of the level heads in the group view the situation realistically. They realize that a certain amount of political expediency enters into what the President has done. The Advertiser

Some of the things to bear in mind in connection with it all is that (1) this is a national election year, and (2) the Republicans will be out to cultivate all the support they can get from minority groups which in recent years have been affiliated more with the Democratic Party.

The Negro vote is the dominant factor in the situation. In many of the border and pivotal States they constitute the balance of power. Tues 2-10-48

In the past it has been customary for both major parties to make a play for this vote by trotting out a lot of legislation in the civil rights category which has a special appeal to minority groups.

Typical examples are the anti-lynch law and proposals for wiping out poll taxes, which are more prevalent in the Southern States. Various minority groups have been demanding laws to this end for years. Montgomery, Ala.

The Republicans, having nothing to lose by antagonizing Southern opposition to such measures, have already committed themselves to a civil rights program of the same scope as recommended by the President. It was on the agenda for consideration at the last session of Congress, but no serious effort was made to write it into legislation.

As most observers see it, Mr. Truman feels compelled to circumvent the issue the Republicans wil try to raise by offering a civil rights program of his own. He is not expected to exert himself unduly in putting it through.

Most Southern congressmen realize all of this and consequently are not too much disturbed over the developments.

TO WHOM IT BELONGS

The Advertiser

Editor, The Advertiser:

. . . The Democratic party is not a physical thing that belongs to one group or another; it is rather a creed, an expression of a group that over a period of years has formulated certain ideas and courses of action. The party, therefore, belongs to those that more nearly follow its concepts as laid down by past actions. No single person or group of persons can make drastic changes in the Democratic Party's general policy without a majority of the party expressing their desire to make such changes. This means that those persons attempting such a change should be expelled from the party. Do not let us consider bolting our party but rather the expulsion of the undesirable and retention of the party by those that properly represent the members of the party.

The segregation question and the FEPC is not to be confined to the South. We must forget geographical borders and combine with those of similar thinking throughout the nation.

I suggest these forms of action be taken: Montgomery, Ala.

1. Invite the people that believe in government by the majority to strike out against those that would have government and privileged control by minority. Unite these people, to carry out a program of informing the delegates to the Democratic Convention to repudiate Harry Truman for not expressing the true spirit of the Democratic Party. Fri 3-26-48

2. Emphasize the Democratic Party's feeling for the common man. Show our feelings for all under-privileged and the desire of the Democratic Party to bring all up to a better way of living, but not on the basis of picking certain races . . .

CRITICAL OF CRISES

Editor, The Advertiser:

In your editorial in Saturday's paper, the caption of which is "Draft: Munich," I observed a mistake in the following sentence: "The President of the United States said a crises existed." I am referring to the word "Crises." which is the plural of the originally Greek word "Crisis" (the singular). Only the singular can follow the indefinite article "A," never the plural. Therefore it is not correct to say "a Crises" existed, correct is "A Crisis" existed. 3-22-48

Tut, tut. Considering the gravity of the critical circumstances, the plural of crisis is probably in order.—Ed.

Wrong Issue

Wed 3-10-48
Birmingham, Ala.

From The Hale County News (Moundville)

Alabama Democrats are trying to make a big issue of a local problem when they threaten to secede from the party because of "anti-South" legislation. Leaders are all upset because of the issue of "party loyalty and Southern tradition." The News

Personally, this newspaper has always believed in the right of the individual as a citizen of the United States, rather than as a citizen of the South. Though the South is certainly the most wonderful place in the world to live, we still remember that it is merely a part of the United States and not a highly sensitive section set off to itself, which must have separate national legislation to govern it. We are a strong believer in states' rights, and therefore feel that our state will be able to compete with any problem that comes up here. We see no reason why our executive committee should have to be packed with persons all of one belief, or why all the South should have to band together. Every person has a right to his own ideas, party or no party. The wrong issue is at stake. This is no "South and party issue," it is sectionalism as against nationalism. If there must be an issue, let it be the old one, Democrats against Republicans, in the old-time doctrine of states' rights against federalism. We do not believe in all this "anti-South" stuff. The sooner the solid South vote is over, the better for the whole nation.

MERRY-GO-ROUND

South May Boycott Party Pocketbook

The News
Birmingham

BY DREW PEARSON

WASHINGTON—One deep dent the Southern revolt will make in the Democratic Party next Fall will be in the pocketbook.

This was decided in a private meeting of Southern leaders held this week in the office of Arkansas Sen. John L. McClellan.

"We may have to take this civil-rights le islation if it's shoved down our throats," said McClellan, "but we don't have to pay the piper." Sun. 2-29-48

"Down through the years the South has been the backbone and the savior of the Democratic Party," continued McClellan. "Yet we get worse treatment from the Democratic leadership than we do from the Republicans." The News

Sens. John Sparkman and Lister Hill (Alabama) and Olin Johnston (South Carolina) agreed that party contributions from the South were bound to suffer. So did Govs. J. Strom Thurmond, of South Carolina, and Ben Laney, of Arkansas, who sat in on the meeting.

Sen. Sparkman, however, expressed hope that the party split could be patched up. "It would be a serious blow to the whole country if this split becomes permanent," he said. "I still believe we can avoid it; so let's wait and see what develops before we make any rash moves."

Note—Tipoff on the South's financial boycott of the Democratic National Committee was the recent action of Arkansas Democrats, who refused to turn in the proceeds of their Jackson Day dinner to the national treasury. As their protest against the civil rights message, South Carolina Democrats refused to hold a dinner.

Whither, Democrats?

The News

Where are Southern Democrats going? What kind of a political future are they writing for themselves? What future do they visualize for the nation, and for the world?

340

Let us consider well that we are not acting in a vacuum. What we are doing has repercussions in world events. Birmingham, Ala.

More Southern Democrats are going in for public utterances. Sen. Lister Hill has changed from his former support of President Truman for renomination. In that stand, and reversal, he has joined Sen. John Sparkman. The Jefferson County Democratic Executive Committee has withdrawn its pledge to support President Truman, made no longer ago than Jan. 29. Former Gov. Chauncey Sparks has joined the list of candidates for the state delegation to the national convention who oppose Truman.

What will all these Southern Democrats do if Mr. Truman should be renominated? What if their efforts to block his nomination fail? That still seems likely. Short of an overwhelming popular demand for some hero like Gen. Eisenhower, there is little other chance for a candidate who could hold Western and Northern Democrats in the present situation as well as can Mr. Truman. There have been many claims that the South could expect help from other sections on its fight against Mr. Truman, but it should be well noted that no names and figures have yet been given in connection with those claims.

Wed. 3-24-48

* * *

There is need for a lot of clear thinking in this matter. That need is increased by signs that in some measure the revolt is synthetic. One indication of that is provided by the size of the vote by which the Jefferson County Democratic Committee reversed its Jan. 29 pledge.

The authorized membership of the committee is 253. The action Monday was by a 46-to-7 vote. Of course the committee seldom has a full roster. Members die, or resign, and their places are not immediately filled. But the current membership is estimated at 225, and only 53, or 23.55 per cent, of them voted at Monday's meeting.

It is true that meetings of the committee are seldom well attended. The attendance Monday was above the average. Nevertheless, it seems strange that on a matter which involves so much and which has aroused so much interest more members did not attend. Several committee members present did not vote. Why, they did not say, but it is fair assumption that they and the absentees would hesitate to go along with the majority of the committee in the same proportion the vote showed. The anti-Truman group is more active and more vocal.

Birmingham, Ala.

It is not to be doubted, of course, that the vast majority of Southern Democrats disapprove of federal action on the civil rights issues that have been raised. But it is yet to be proved that most of them place those issues above all questions now before the people. Until there is clearer evidence of how the mass of people feel, it would be well for the "revolters" to consider carefully how far they should go.

The News

The near-hysteria that has gripped some minds is evident in the extreme terms of the resolution adopted by the Jefferson County Committee. The resolution implies that the Truman civil rights program would destroy every vestige of state's rights and plant a federal policeman on every corner. It charges the program with being "vindictive" and the work of an "acting" president. 3-24-48

Finally, are Alabama Democrats agitating this revolt stopping to think what they would do should the State Supreme Court, viewing not only the law but also the custom and the two-party system in the country, uphold the state law requiring electors to vote for the nominee of their party?

Democrats Silent But They Ponder Mississippi

Gov. Wright's 'Secession' Hint

342

WASHINGTON, Jan. 21—(AP)—Democrats pointed hopefully to fresh evidences of party unity today despite a harsh breach in their Southern precincts, while members of the Republican National Committee headed homeward confident that they can elect their presidential nominee.

The Democrats were cheered by the decision of A. F. Whitney, president of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, to go along with the campaign to keep President Truman in the White House.

They were somewhat depressed, however, although few of them would acknowledge it publicly, by a party "sucession" threat from Fielding L. Wright, taking office for a full term as governor of Mississippi. News

Wright declared in his inaugural address yesterday that the time has come for Southern Democrats to leave a party that insists upon pressing Congress to enact such "anti-Southern" legislation as a permanent fair employment practices commission, anti-lynching and would have no effect on the party's plans.

THESE EVIDENCES of democratic differences were matched by the Republicans, who ended a two-day meeting of their national committee by approving a $4,000,000 budget for their 1948 campaign expenditures. Birmingham

Sen. Wherry, of Nebraska, the assistant GOP leader, made it plain that all Republicans do not agree on pending issues, particularly the proposal of Sen. Flanders (Vt.) and Rep. Javits (N. Y.) to set up standby machinery for meat rationing.

Wherry departed from the prepared text of an address to the committee yesterday to assert that Flanders is "a hoarder waiting for rationing to come." Wed. 1-21-48

Although Wherry later told a reporter he was "only kidding," he added that he didn't care if Flanders took exception to the remark.

Flanders, who previously had criticized Sen. Taft (R., Ohio) for attacking President Truman's proposal for standby price-wage and rationing controls, said he didn't like Wherry's crack. The Vermont senator said the Republicans who anti-poll tax bills and similar proposals.

WHILE WRIGHT'S protest followed recent objections in the Senate by Sen. Eastland (D., Miss.) to what Eastland said was a campaign to pick Justice William O. Douglas for the vice presidential nomination, party leaders insisted they are not particularly worried.

One of these said the recalcitrant Democrats have no place else to go. He contended that Wright and Eastland both were speaking primarily for "local consumption" and forecast that these speeches heard it might not understand the circumstances.

These were, he said, that he bought a single beef to put in cold storage to feed the dozen meat eaters in his family, including his children and grandchildren. Wed. 1-21-48

THE DEMOCRATS publicly ignored both these Republican differences and their own woes in Mississippi. But they were happy to announce that Whitney and his railroad men are back in the fold after months of bitter discriminations since the dramatic moment when President Truman appeared before Congress in May, 1946, and asked for power to draft workers into the armed forces to prevent a threatened railroad strike. 1-21-48

Whitney, who promised undying opposition then to Mr. Truman but who more recently has had a change of heart, said at a news conference arranged by the Democratic National Committee that "we want to see the party win in 1948."

Birmingham, Ala.

ALTHOUGH THE RESULT of the Louisiana vote on a Democratic nominee for governor—and the nominee will be the next governor—still was in doubt, the Republicans continued to hold the center of the stage. News

The GOP National Committee's argument with Philadelphia hotel men who will house the party's June convention took a new turn with the announcemet of Walter Hallanan, convention arrangements chairman, that the party had been assured a 50 per cent reduction in proposed room rates.

Hallanan previously had reported that in addition to failing to provide assurances that the total number of rooms needed will be available, the hotels have upped their convention rates from 50 to 100 per cent.

Hallanan added that even with the promised cut the rates in many instances will be higher than those charged when nothing special is going on in Philadelphia. News

In approving the fund raising campaign, the committee set $3,000,000 as the goal for the presidential campaign and $1,000,000 for the senatorial and congressional battles. Birmingham, Ala.

Louisianian Warns Democrats Of Danger In Southern 'Revolt'

The News

Birmingham, Ala.

Thurs. 4-15-48

NEW ORLEANS, April 15—(AP)—Chairman W. H. Talbot, of the Louisiana State Democratic Executive Committee, has warned against a Southern Democratic "revolt," and said the states' rights issue should be worked out within the party.

"A revolt would only help the Republicans and the third party," he said in an interview.

Talbot said he believed President Truman would revise his stand on states' and civil rights if the party should adopt a platform opposing his views. Thurs.

* * *

"I AM AGAINST ANY 'revolt,'" Talbot said. 4-15-48

"This is something that should be worked out within the party. You can't get anywhere with a revolt. Why, you couldn't even get the names of your candidate on the ballot in a lot of states.

"This civil rights fight actually were haggling over a question: Should it be stricken from the record? 4-15-48

Goldsborough suggested that it be allowed to stand. He explained why by saying:

"It won't affect the case one way or another."

Recognized By Brewster

The Record
Columbia, S.C.
Mon. 3-8-48

Senator Brewster, Maine Republican, takes judicial note of the fact that the Southern critics of President Truman are arranging carefully to keep their Democratic party label, even though they may finally decide to deny the Democratic nominee their electoral votes.

And it is the Republican recognition of this fact that makes the Southern protest futile or worse makes it an encouragement to the Republicans to pass the civil rights bills.

"And write about it, goddess, and about it . . ."

Columbia, S.C.

Editor Peter Molyneaux, of The Southern Weekly, believes the answer for the South is the very simple one of going Republican. He says my comparison of what Negro minorities accomplished in the North with what the South might accomplish doesn't hold because the Negro switched parties and few Southern politicians are suggesting an actual switch. But it wasn't the switch that gave the Northern Negro such power. It was the indication the switch gave that the vote was capable of being won—or lost—by each party. It was the doubtfulness. That can be accomplished for the South now in more than one way. Mon. 3-8-48

The South could afford to be Democratic or to be Republican, but could it afford to be closely divided between the two? Mr. J. W. Cantrell of Kissimmee, Fla., has thought it all out, very penetratingly, I think, and is deeply persuaded it would be a mistake to have Republicans and Democrats so evenly divided that Negro minorities could be used for a balance of power here as in the pivotal states up North, "with Negroes swinging their balance of power in Alabama as they do in Illinois." He is convinced the South must keep itself as politically united as possible. He thinks there should be a Southern presidential convention before the two national conventions to treat with both on a "minimal Southern platform."

Ollin Horton, of Birmingham, expressed the same idea aptly in answer to the often argument that "the South has nowhere to go." For that very reason, he says, the South must not go anywhere. "What it should and, by all indications, will do is stay strictly at home with its enforced political independence and prepare to receive a couple of political visitors who soon will be looking for the only place they can go if they would amount to anything. You may be sure both these visitors will be going South."

From Jacksonville, Fla., Joseph M. Erskine writes: "If your analysis is properly pursued, it will be the greatest victory that has come to the South since our defeat in the Civil War." From Shreveport, Albert E. Bryson vows: "I am going to vote Republican, not because I like them but because I am a Democrat and it is the only way to . . . look for rebirth of the Democratic party." From Pensacola, Miss B. A. Murphy writes that "this country has enough on its hands without attempting something that can never be accomplished." From Bessemer, Ala., Donald Park says: "I am in near complete agreement with you about the race question —I was born in Indiana but have lived in Alabama most of my life and can see the problem in a little different light than most Northern people." John A. Dykers, of Jacksonville, Fla., agrees with the late Nicholas Murray Butler that the Republican party should change its name "so Southerners can vote for it." Mr. Dykers thinks it should be called the Conservative party and "if the current Democratic party were descriptively named, it would be called a Radical party—Liberal is too good a name for it."

But J. M. Dudley of Blacksburg, Va., warns that "great sections of the country are prepared to get the Negro fair treatment now" and if we "repeat the mistake of nearly a hundred years ago, the next exodus from the South might be that of the whites." Mon. 3-8-48

WASHINGTON, March 6.—(U.P.)—A high administration source said Saturday night he was hopeful that time and "cool tempers" will heal the rift between President Truman and leaders of the Southern Democratic revolt against the administration's civil rights program. 3-7-48

Thus far, this source said, no peace feelers have been put out either by the White House or the Dixie leaders. But he predicted that before Democrats meet July 12 for their presidential nominating convention at Philadelphia, both sides will act to restore party harmony. Advertiser

Mr. Truman, meanwhile, was expected to get the latest details about the Southern revolt early next week from Democratic National Chariman J. Howard McGrath. The White House said, however, that no date had been set. Montgomery, Ala

Dixie senators planned to carry on their fight against federal anti-lynching, anti-discrimination and anti-poll tax legislation by radio. 3-7-48 Sun.

"Looks Serious"

Senate Democratic Whip Scott L. Lucas conceded that the revolt of Southern Democrats "looks fairly serious." But he scoffed at claims that it had killed all chances of President Truman's being returned to the White House for a full term.

He said President Truman is likely "to be back on top" politically in the next 30 days. He said Mr. Truman's political stock had gone down before and bounced back.

Lucas, an Illinois Democrat, has been mentioned prominently in speculation on possible vice-presidential nominees.

He said he did not think Henry A. Wallace's independent candiacy would hurt the Democrats much in Illinois and other midwestern states. He said he does not think Wallace can qualify under Illinois law to get his name on the ballot in that state.

Other Developments

Other developments in the Democratic Party's troubles included: 3-7-48 Sun.

1. Some southerners admitted privately they are ready to write off the 1948 election and aim for a re-united party, with a stronger Southern accent, by 1952. This stand, it was understood, is based on a conviction that Henry A. Wallace's third party movement and the civil rights conflict have nation's annual shipments. The current export goal is 450,000,000 bushels. Advertiser

But if exports should start to slump, the agreement would keep them up to at least 185,000,000 bushels. This is well above the level of the 1930s, when exports averaged well under 100,000,000 bushels.

"This agreement is the biggest intergovernmental deal in history," Chairman Leslie A. Wheeler told the council which sweated out the pact in almost daily sessions since January 28.

"It involves the largest amount of goods—2,500,000,000 bushels of wheat — with a value of say $4,000,000,000. Montgomery, Ala

"It involves more countries and extends for a longer period of time than any similar arrangement." Montgomery, Ala

The "first multilateral agreement of its kind in history," as Wheeler called it, came after 14 years of effort. A full-dress conference in London last year failed. 3-7-48 Sun

Officials saw plenty of chance about killed off the 1948 chances of Mr. Truman anyway.

2. Robert D. Swezey, vice-president and general manager of the Mutual Broadcasting System, said his network would be "glad to consider" a request from 21 Southern senators for air time to reply to civil rights programs being carired by MBS. The senators took issue with the network's programs dramatizing President Truman's civil rights report.

3. Sen. Richard B. Russell (D), Georgia, said Southern senators are "not going to take any chance" on possible Republican moves to ram through portions of the civil rights program by "quickie" parliamentary maneuvers. Southerners, he said, have agreed to keep one of their number on the Senate floor at all sessions "just to keep an eye on things." Montgomery, Ala

The next major development in the intra-party Democratic row is expected one week hence when Southern governors meet here for a report from a committee which recently received "no" answers from McGrath on requests that the party officially repudiate the civil rights program.

Statement of Governors

The committee, however, feels that the following statement should be made at this time:

A vast majority of the Democrats of the South are determined to restore the Democratic party to the principles of Jefferson and Jackson and will resort to whatever means are necessary to accomplish this end. The Democrats of the South are united in their opposition to the so-called civil-rights program proposed by the President and effective action in the Southern states will be taken to prevent adoption of this program. Tue. 2-24-48

We feel we are expressing the firm conviction of our people when we say that the present leadership of the Democratic party has deserted the principles of government upon which the Democratic party was founded. As never before, the time has come for strong and effective action by the Southern states not only to save the Democratic party but to preserve the rights of the states to govern themselves and preserve American democracy.

In this fight we are not only expecting support from the Democrats of the South but support from Democrats everywhere who are opposed to a centralized government invading the rights of the people and the rights of the respective states. The Times

The Southern states are aroused and the present leadership of the Democratic party will soon realize that the South is no longer "in the bag." Each Southern state, under the framework of an over-all program, will work out the most effective means of resisting the proposals of the present leadership of the party, but resist them we will. New York, N.Y.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23—The Southern Governors Committee issued the following statement tonight after conferring with Senator J. Howard McGrath, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, on President Truman's civil rights program:

Following the Southern Governors' conference at Tallahassee setting up our committee, we began an inquiry to determine the most effective ways and means of securing concerted action on t hepart of the South in opposing the so-called civil-rights program. We have communicated with party leaders in the various Southern states. W have secured the viewpoints of the Democratic members of Congress from the South. W have surveyed the opinion of rank-and-file Democrats in every walk of life—the people who have furnished the votes which have made the South solid for the Democratic party.

Georgian Quits Party Job Over 'Rights' Issue

National Finance Director Writes McGrath South's Views Are Correct

The Courier Journal Fri. 2-27-48
Louisville, Ky.

From Wire Dispatches:

George B. Hamilton of Georgia, resigned yesterday as director of finance for the Democratic National Committee in protest against President Truman's civil-rights program. Fri. 2-27-

Hamilton, Georgia's State treasurer, announced his resignation, effective immediately, in a letter to Senator McGrath (D., R. I.), chairman of the committee.

"I cannot agree with the civil-rights program promulgated by the President and indorsed by you officially as chairman," Hamilton wrote.

Hamilton was appointed director of finance by the then national committee chairman, Robert E. Hannegan, in October, 1947. In his letter he said he arrived at the decision to resign because he believes the President's civil-rights program "will effectuate untold damage" to both the white and Negro races.

"I believe honestly and conscientiously that the Souhtern understanding and viewpoint is correct and will finally be the solution to racial problems," he wrote to McGrath.

National Democratic officials in Washington said Hamilton had not been active in the finance job for some time, since his temporary position with the committee was restricted by the Hatch Act. This act bars federal officeholders or officials of States from receiving federal-aid grants from soliciting funds for a national campaign. The Courier Journal

Meanwhile, Virginia Democrats withheld $13,000 in Jefferson-Jackson dinner receipts from the party's war chest. 2-27-48

And another $200 in dinner funds was lost by the National Democratic Committee when a Georgia county diverted its "take" to Governor M. E. Thompson's campaign for a new term as Chief Executive.

Virginians Hold Up Funds.

State Senator Garland Gray of Waverly, Va., cochairman of the big party dinner in his state, said the $13,000 raised was being held in Virginia temporarily in case the Southern wing breaks off from the party.

Senator Connally of Texas told North Carolina Democrats last night that Truman's program is a "lynching of the Constitution." Fri. 2-27-48

Speaking before a Jefferson-Jackson Day dinner in Raleigh, Connally said the proposals were in violation of the second article of the Constitution and of Democratic Party tradition.

"We shall resist it," the veteran lawmaker said. "We shall not take it lying down. We are not going to divest ourselves of these rights simply to catch a shirttail full of votes."

Raps F.E.P.C. Plan.

Regarding Truman's proposal for a fair-employment-practices commission, Connally said:

"There is another bill to dictate employment in private business to see if it is employing certain groups and classes—to send some inspector around to see that you run your business not as you think as it should according to local conditions, but as some little bureaucrat thinks you should run it."

Senator Stewart of Tennessee in a blast at Truman's program, said: The Courier Journal

"I glory in the courage of the citizens of Fayette County who, at a mass meeting, condemned the iniquitous civil-rights program ... demanded by the President. Louisville, Ky.

Says People Menaced.

"I will," Stewart said, "fight this communistic civil-rights program with all the vigor at my command. I know I stand on high ground because it threatens the welfare and safety of my people of Tennessee, the South, and the nation." Fri. 2-27-48

The Fayette County meeting Stewart referred to adopted a resolution demanding rejection of President Truman as a candidate for another term.

Republicans Kid Foes On 'Splinter' Party; Southern Mate Hinted

By D. HAROLD OLIVER

WASHINGTON, Feb. 4.—(AP)— Dixie's revolt against the administration's civil rights program raged Wednesday. But one Southern congressman called it just the party's "same old row."

Republicans, whose 1944 platform was more specific on the racial question than the Democrats, kidded the opposition for what was called their "Splinter Parties." And they got caught in the line of fire. Thurs 2-5-48

Southern Democrats took to the House floor for the second day to accuse both major parties of "bartering" for minority votes and forgetting what they called the unorganized majorities.

Some politicians began speculating whether President Truman might be led to choose a Southern running mate as a result of the uprising. However, Mr. Truman's own opinion of its seriousness is not known.

But off the floor, Rep. Trimble (D), Arkansas, called it "the same old row within the Democratic party which occurred every presidential election year since I can remember." The Advertiser

'Well To Boot Shins'

"It is well that we kick each other in the shins occasionally in a good old family row," Trimble told a reporter. "But I hope we confine it to shin kicking only." Montgomery, Ala.

Some of Trimble's Southern fellow legislators have advocated a Southern state convention to nominate their own Democratic candidate for the presidency.

Northern members of the party contend this would only assure a victory for the Republicans who are on record in their platform as favoring most of the things Mr. Truman advocated in his message. Thurs. 2-5-48

Reece Speaks Up

It was Chairman Carroll Reece of the Republican National Committee who issued a statement about "splinter parties." He said:

"The current revolt of Southern Democrats against Mr. Truman's civil rights program is additional evidence that the socalled Democratic party is really an aggregation of splinter parties with discordant and mutually antagonistic aims and purposes.

The Other Fringe

You have to feel positively sorry for the Democratic Party sometimes. It is like the old woman who lived in the shoe with so many children she didn't know what to do. The children just won't see eye to eye, and it's impossible to keep peace in the family. The children always are leaving home in a huff, or threatening to leave; and the old party is at its wit's end, and deserves sympathy.

Perry 1-22-48

First it's Henry Wallace and his human-rights liberals going off to set up housekeeping on a third-party lot, with plenty of room for expansion. . . . And then it is Gov. Fielding Wright of Mississippi talking bitterly of "secession" if the party doesn't forswear the very aims the Wallace splinter reproaches it with abandoning. . . . La! La! and the election coming on, and all. . . .

Coup de Grace By Fourth Party

PM New York, N.Y.

Gov. Wright's would be the fourth party, one supposes; and it will be interesting to see whether all the cries of "ingrate" and "disloyalty" that were hurled after Wallace by the regulars now will be redirected against the Mississippi Governor. For if the third party has "deeply impaired" the chances of the Democrats in 1948, the fourth party obviously would supply the coup de grace.

The quaintest part is that the spokesman of the splinter movement on the Right contemplates secession with the same regret and justifies secession with the same arguments, or reform-through-pain, that characterized the reasoning of the leaders of the Left, "Drastic though our methods may be," says Gov. Wright, "and as far-reaching as the results may prove, we are certain that the ultimate consequence will fully justify any temporary setback that may follow our action." The paragraph could have been lifted bodily from any of a dozen treatises of the PCA before Wallace took the plunge. Thurs 1-22-48

I do not mean to compare the Wallace break with the Wright threat too closely. There is as wide a difference between the overt act and the saucy word as between the principles of the Democratic extremes. Henry Wallace, hungering after the New Deal, actually has donned the sandals and taken the staff and set off on the roads of quest; the dust of his departure may be seen. But Gov. Wright, enlisted in a narrower cause, and speaking mainly to the galleries in his own state, has gone exactly nowhere. I think the Democratic high command will note the difference without squinting.

The South Still Went Democratic

PM New York, N.Y.

In other years, we've had the "Jeffersonians" in the South who couldn't stomach FDR and filled the balmy skies with summons to revolt. The GOP made much of it at first, and sent some money down; but when election came, it seemed the South was Democratic still—including Mississippi—though certainly FDR stood for the very things that have the present Mississippi Governor frothing at the nouth. Thurs 1-22-48

The Mississippians will not secede because the Supreme Court has ruled that Negro students must be furnished equal facilities; and there will be no splinter party in these parts—unless, of course, the Senate takes the poll tax off and lets the voteless three-fourths of the population speak a choice. In that case, I dare say, the Wallace candidacy would prosper; since thousands of the politically submerged aspire, like Wallace, for the verve of the New Deal to come again.

The Bourbon fringe of the Democratic Party will swish, but, lacking hardihood, will not make sacrifices to pull off; and I'd have more compassion for the party than I do if I believed its present management too dull to understand that, though its slip is showing on the Left, it has no valid call to worry on the Mississippi side.

THE FEAST

Editor, The Advertiser:

To say the least, things are in a state of flux in Alabama. With Big Jim a candidate for president and Pitt Tyson Maner as his campaign manager, plus a revolt against the Truman bid for radical support in the North.

We should have an old-fashioned state democratic convention at an early date that will separate the sheep from the goats and let the voters know how to cast their ballots in the coming statewide primary with wide open eyes unclouded by poo-pooing, hush-hushing, side-stepping and back-tracking. Montgomery, Ala.

The Truman doctrine as laid down in his civil rights message is an issue that cannot be dodged by any nimble-toed politician. Big Jim's candidacy is not an issue, it is a joke. Everybody knows this except Big Jim and his manager and ghost writer. Let old Alabama step in line with her sister Southern States and write a declaration of Southern democratic independence. Our State should have taken the lead, now we must follow the leadership furnished by other States who refuse to be traded down the creek for a mess of mongrelized political pottage. To do otherwise is to fiddle while Rome burns.

Tuck Issues Call

Wants Truman's Name Barred From Ballot; Long Undecided Yet

By BEM PRICE
Associated Press Staff Writer

Years of political allegiance to the National Democratic Party were flanking off like chipped paint in the South Thursday under the impact of President Truman's civil rights program.

Not since the bitter year of 1860 has the volcanic issue of states' rights, buried beneath that strata of debris left by the war between the states, boiled to the surface with such force.

And the single catalyst which caused the upheaval was president Truman's proposal for an end to segregation, an anti-lynch law and a permanent Fair Employment Practices Commission. The Advertiser

The issue prompted Governor William Tuck of Virginia—the commonwealth in which was founded the first English speaking colony in America—to call for a revolt against the Democratic Party and President Truman. Montgomery, Ala.

The Virginia General Assembly which governs the land of Washington, Jefferson, Lee and Stonewall Jackson, was asked by Tuck to bar Truman's name from the ballot in the election in November. Fri. 2-27-48

The action requested by Gov. Tuck would bar the names of presidential and vice presidential candidates from the ballot. The voter would signify only party preference which would be a vote for electors.

Aligned With Wright

These voters would be bound to the nominees of the national party only if the Democratic Party failed to instruct them otherwise. They could be instructed to support the Republican candidate.

Tuck thus aligned himself with Gov. Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi who has already called for a Southern revolt against the national party and proposed a similar plan for action in Mississippi.

In addition, Wright has sounded the call for a grass roots revolt against the national party in Jackson, Miss., the Democratic State Executive Committee announced a meeting for Monday to make plans for a nationwide convention of "true white Jeffersonian Democrats" seeking an end to Truman's leadership.

The chairman of the Mississippi committee, Judge Herbert Holmes, predicted that before November "the South will be solid again — solid against Truman."

34d Dems

In Arkansas, Gov. Ben Laney, a leader with Wright of the Southern revolt, also said the conversations he and three other Southern governors had with National Democratic Committee Chairman Howard McGrath in Washington last week, were "edited." 2-27-48

Denied By Redding

This was denied by the publicity man for the committee, Jack Redding. He said "the only editing we did was to put it into readable English because some of the sentences were left dangling." The Advertiser

The visit by Laney and the other governors to McGrath was a result of a conference of Southern governors who instructed a committee to call on McGrath and see if the President's proposals couldn't be soft-pedalled.

In Louisiana Gov.-Nominate Earl K. Long indicated he hadn't made up his mind about the fight. He said he hadn't "learned enoughabout the situation to give an intelligent answer."

Florida, however, made plans to go ahead with Jackson-Jefferson Day dinners despite threats of a boycott from some party members.

And while the politicians were having their say, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People quietly made public a letter from President Truman saying that the proposed legislation was worthless unless the people were educated to acceptance. Montgomery, Ala.

Even as the fury of the Southern revolt echoed through the halls of lawmakers and the offices of politicians, the Southern Regional Council planned a biracial meeting on civil rights in Atlanta. Fri. 2-27-48

The meeting was called to seek a tolerant and intelligent approach to the problem and was designed as a workshop for Southern newspapermen, educators, church and labor leaders.

And in Jacksonville, Fla., Circuit Court Judge Miles W. Lewis told a venire of jurymen that the President was willing to destroy the South "in order to get the negro vote in the North."

The jury applauded.

'Rights' Men Purge Is Goal Of Governors

The Constitution

WASHINGTON, March 13 — (UP)—The Southern Governors' Conference Saturday unanimously adopted a report repudiating President Truman and other Democratic leaders who espouse his civil rights program and pledging a "fight to the last ditch" to throw them out of office.

Seven Governors from Southern States took part in a meeting here which drove a further wedge between the rebellious Dixie Democrats and the Truman Administration. Atlanta, Ga.

All of them formally approved a committee report blasting the civil rights proposals and laying out a program of "concerted action" to deprive Mr. Truman of Southern electoral votes at the November election. Sun. 3-14-48

Acting Gov. M. E. Thompson, of Georgia, cast his vote for the report with the reservation that he could not speak for the party in his State.

Thompson added that "any recommendations to the national leadership should come from the officially recognized Party leaders in Georgia." He said the Georgia Supreme Court has held that Herman Talmadge is the titular head of the Party in Georgia.

Others were:

Govs. J. Strom Thurmond, of South Carolina; William Preston Lane, Jr., of Maryland; Ben Laney, of Arkansas; Beauford H. Jester, of Texas; James E. Folsom, of Alabama, and Fielding Wright, Jr., of Mississippi.

Lane, who is Chairman of the Conference, was presiding and did not vote. 34d Dems

He said that because of the political situation in Maryland he did not think it proper for him to vote in favor of such a resolution. He was recorded as not voting. 3-14-48

Thurmond, Laney, Jester and Gov. William Tuck, of Virginia, had drafted the committee report which was adopted by the full conference. Tuck, however, was not present at the conference meeting. The Constitution

The report said present leadership of the Democratic Party has "deserted the principles on which the Party was founded—the right of the people to govern themselves." Atlanta, Ga.

If Mr. Truman's proposals for anti-lynching, anti-discrimination and anti-poll tax legislation are adopted, the report said, it would be a "total departure" from the fundamental principles of American government.

That appeared to make it a clean break Mr. Truman said emphatically only Friday that he is not taking back a single word of what he said about Civil Rights.

Earlier Thompson took time out from the revolt against Mr. Truman to asail the Republican Party for pressing proposed Civil Rights legislation.

Thompson made it clear he would stick with the other Southern Governor in opposing the President's proposals, but he aimed the blame at Republicans rather than Mr. Truman. 3-14-48

"Traditionally the Republican Party has been the enemy of the South while the Democratic Party has been its friend," Thompson said. The Constitution

"Pending Civil Rights bills are similar to the forced bills passed by the Republicans during Reconstruction Days (and) are being forced to the front again by the Republican Party for political purposes. Atlanta, Ga.

Senator Declares Party Could Win With Eisenhower

The News

Birmingham, Ala.

Sat. 3-20-48

The Southern wing of Congress turned almost solidly against President Truman with the unexpected announcement yesterday by Alabama Sen. John Sparkman that he hopes the president will withdraw as a 1948 candidate.

34d

Sparkman went on to say he believes the party could unite behind Dwight D. Eisenhower, of Kansas, who Sparkman said is reported to be registered as a Democrat.

* * *

THE JUNIOR SENATOR'S stand, on the eve of his departure for Alabama to campaign for reelection, put a pointed question mark before the name of his close colleague, Sen. Lister Hill.

Hill recently came out as a can-ocratic National Convention, and said he would continue to support Harry S. Truman as head of the Democratic Party. 3-20-48

In a telephone interview with The News from Washington, Sparkman said there is considerable talk again in Washington about Eisenhower, this time by Democrats.

The Alabamian said he has not talked to the former Army chief of staff himself, but that several senators have done so and say it is possible Eisenhower might accept the nomination. Birmingham, Ala.

THE GENERAL, now president of Columbia University, could not properly speak out now while President Truman is an avowed candidate himself, Sparkman pointed out. The News

"However, if Truman should withdraw and if Secretary Marshall should ask Eisenhower to accept, I think it is a possibility," the senator said. "Of course, there are a lot of 'ifs' in that."

Sparkman said he is leaving Washington next Wednesday to fill a speaking engagement in Montgomery Thursday night and to attend the Alabama Education Association meeting in Birmingham next Friday. Sat. 3-20-48

SPARKMAN EMPHASIZED that his move was not a break with the Democratic Party but an attempt to save it.

Other political leaders in the North and East, he said, are increasingly complaining about the president but do not dare speak out.

The Alabamian came to his decision reluctantly and after long thought, he said. He wants the Democrats to see their plight realistically and to go to a "free and open convention."

By mentioning Eisenhower, Sparkman said he did not mean to exclude any other candidates the Democrats might consider, but wanted only that they be able to unite behind a standard bearer. Sat. 3-20-48

"We in the Democratic Party," he told, Washington reporters yesterday, "cannot restore harmony within the party with Mr. Truman as our presidential nominee." The News

Though he had once hoped the Democrats could smoothe over their civil rights troubles at the convention, Sparkman said there are increasing signs that Truman cannot unify the party and wage a strong campaign.

Birmingham, Ala.

HE POINTED OUT that already 21 out of 28 candidates for presidential electors in Alabama have pledged themselves not to back the president and that it looks as if Mississippi, South Carolina, Virginia and Arkansas will follow suit.

"If these states withhold their support," said Sparkman, "that would unquestionably mean that Mr. Truman would be defeated. The Democratic ticket cannot win without the Southern states."

The president's adamant stand on civil rights was described by the Alabama senator and his former supporter as perhaps Truman's "most tragic mistake."

Sparkman said he is certain that the president did not consult any Southern legislators or party leaders before sending up to Congress his civil rights message.

Truman also ignored the dissenting opinion of the only two Southerners on his civil rights commission, Sparkman said, and neglected to talk to the Democratic national chairman, Senator J. Howard McGrath.

Head of the speakers' bureau of the Democratic National Committee in 1946, Sparkman has made no statement in support of the president since the civil rights message was read to Congress February 2. Birmingham

Only a few days before, however the junior senator had replied to requests that he comment on Gov. James E. Folsom's candidacy as a "favorite son" for the presidency with the remark that he (Sparkman) had long been a supporter of President Truman. Ala.

BERATES SPARKMAN

Sen. John Sparkman was named "the champion pussyfooter" today by his opponent, Phillip J. Hamm, in a statement from Hamm's Redmont Hotel headquarters. Sat.

Said Gov. Folsom's close friend and confidante:

"It looks like Mr. Sparkman won't stay hitched. He is the champion pussyfooter. He was with Folsom and turned on him. He was with labor and turned on them. 3-20-48

"He was for all the people and he turned on them by voting with the monopolies. He was with Truman and is now trying to turn on him.

"What the people of Alabama really want to know is what to expect of Sparkman next. What does he really stand for?" The News

The strongest candidate against Sparkman, running for his first full Senate term, is Phillip Hamm, one of Gov. Folsom's closest advisers.

Southern 'Revolt'

It Pleases GOPers, But They Don't Like Demos' Bid For Negro Vote In North, East

BY FRED TAYLOR

Alabama Republicans are delighted over the revolt of Southern Democrats, because they figure this will just about cinch the election of a GOP president. And they have waited 15 long years to recapture the White House. The News, Birmingham, Ala.

TAYLOR

But there's one thing they don't like, although they are not bitter about it like Southern Democrats. They didn't like it in Franklin D. Roosevelt's campaigns. They didn't—and still don't like the strong Democratic bid for the Negro balance-of-power vote in a number of key states in the North and East.

Being practical politicians, as Mr. Roosevelt certainly was, they take the realistic view that this Negro vote could decide a close presidential election. 3-14-48 Sun

"RIGHTFULLY OURS"—One Alabama Republican wheelhorse contends the Negro vote is "rightfully ours" and should go to the GOP. He recalled political history from the time of the War Between the States up to the Roosevelt regime to bolster his contention.

His argument is that the Negro voters in the North owe their loyalty to the GOP, regardless of promises from this and other Democratic administrations.

He points out that the GOP handled the Negro vote with a firm hand and never attempted to force—certainly with no real intention of carrying them out—such legislative proposals as President Truman's "civil rights" program and other measures Southern Democrats oppose so vehemently.

MUCH PROMISING—The thought he conveys is that the Republicans promised the Negro much, but delivered him little. Thus, this problem never got out of hand while the GOP was in power.

He pointed ont that the Democrats have promised the Negro so much—and delivered on some of the promises—that the problem has become extremely difficult for both parties to deal with.

That is why, he says, the Republicans are in no position to make any overtures to Southern Democrats at this time on the "civil rights" issues. That is true, he adds, even though the GOP desperately wants to make inroads in the South and break the domination the Democratic Party so long has held over Southern states.

That is the real answer, he says, to the question so many Southerners have been asking Alabama Republican leaders in recent weeks:

Why doesn't the GOP now really try to win friends and influence voters in the Deep South?

Birmingham, Ala

SCORES REPUBLICANS — Sen. Lister Hill, in a speech broadcast to Alabamians last week, cited several reasons why he is supporting President Truman and seeking to prevent a disastrous split in the Democratic Party. 3-14-48 Birm.

Main reason he and Sen. John Sparkman want to iron out differences within the party and prevent a split is to keep from insuring a Republican victory next November. Hill, who entered Congress when Calvin Coolidge was president and served on through the Herbert Hoover administration said:

"I bear witness that the South received no consideration at the hands of the Republican Party. Tariff impositions, freight rate discriminations, unjust taxation, financial policies made heavier the South's burdens and riveted even tighter the chains that bound us in economic dependence to the North and to the East."

* * *

NO HELP FROM GOP—Hill made plain, just as did Alabama Republican leader, that the rebellious Southern Democrats can expect no help from the GOP on the "civil rights" proposals.

Even so, the Southern revolt is as hot as that familiar depot stove and seems to be getting hotter. Certainly, it is more dangerous to the Democratic Party than the 1928 revolt when six Southern states broke away from the Solid South and voted for Hoover over Al Smith.

That no help can be expected on the "civil rights" proposals is daily made more evident. The GOPers are hammering, for obvious political reasons, to enact this legislation.

And, as Hill cited in his speech, GOP Chairman Carroll Reese is boasting that Republicans are the original champions of such proposals. The senator quoted from one of Chairman Reece's statements as follows:

"The Republican Party's members in Congress have given almost unanimous support to anti-poll tax and anti-lynching bills, and to proposals for the establishment of a Fair Employment Practices Commission.

"Though they have been prevented from enacting such laws nationally, because of Democratic opposition, Republicans have given concrete evidence of their sincerity by definite action in the field of state legislation."

Then Mr. Reece boasted, Sen. Hill pointed out, that the FEPC laws in four states which now have them were passed by Republican Legislatures.

President Himself Makes Mild Gesture For Party Armistice

Fri. 3-12-48

BY JACK BELL

WASHINGTON, March 12—(AP)—Two Alabama senators pleaded today on the eve of a showdown meeting of Southern governors for party rebels to fight out the civil rights battle without quitting the Democratic fold.

348

But the harmony pleas of Sens. Hill and Sparkman—as well as a mild peace gesture by President Truman himself—seemed to fall mostly on deaf ears.

Mr. Truman told his news conference he won't send any bills to Capitol Hill to carry out his 10-point civil rights program which caused the Southern revolt.

It is up to Congress to write its own ticket, the president said. He would be glad to help, if asked. But he didn't talk as though he expected to be asked.

* * *

HIS IT'S-UP-TO-YOU attitude was looked upon as a reminder to Dixie Democrats that if any race equality laws are enacted, Mr. Truman alone shouldn't be blamed.

But most of the Southern Democrats continued to direct the blame his way anyhow.

They have made it plain they are after the president's political scalp—a situation that gave the party's executive committee something to think about as it got ready for a White House luncheon with the president.

The Southern governors, beginning to arrive for a conference tomorrow, seemed likely to hoist a no-surrender banner and chart a fresh attack on the anti-poll tax, anti-lynching, and anti-Jim Crow measures asked by the president.

They will get a report from four of their number on an "unsatisfactory" meeting with Democratic National Chairman J. Howard McGrath. Fri. 3-12-48

McGRATH SAID, among other things, that the party couldn't agree to withdraw the president's program.

Despite this attitude, Hill took the lead in urging Southerners to try for a compromise within the Democratic ranks.

"The Democratic Party in the past has resolved its differences in the Democratic National Convention," Hill told an Alabama radio audience last night. "I believe that we can do so again."

Hill spoke from Washington over an Alabama radio network.

(Station WTNB announced it would rebroadcast Sen. Hill's speech at 7:15 p.m. today.)

"The Democratic Party in the past has recognized that the South has its own peculiar, local problems which lie in the very depths of our Southern civilization," Hill said.

"The Democratic Party in the past has resolved its differences in the Democratic National Convention. I believe that we can do so again. . ." Fri. 3-12-48

The senator is a candidate for delegate-at-large from Alabama to the national convention. In all, 25 candidates, including Gov. James E. Folsom, have announced for the eight seats.

"You know my opposition to the measures proposed in the president's civil rights message," he continued.

"The president does not speak for the Democratic Party in the message."

Hill previously announced himself in favor of the renomination of President Truman.

"If the South should leave the Democratic Party," he said, "we would but weaken the very arm with which we battle these (civil rights) measures in the House and Senate. . . .

'What chance would there be for representatives and senators from the South to be once more the chairmen of the great and powerful committees of the two houses of Congress?" asked Sen. Hill.

* * *

"WHEN, IF EVER AGAIN, could we hope to see a Will Bankhead from Alabama as the speaker of the House of Representatives, or an Oscar W. Underwood as the leader of the U. S. Senate? When, if ever again, could the South hope to exercise that power, that influence, that authority in the direction of our government that has permitted her to play such a commanding role in our country's affairs? Fri. 3-12-48

"For the South to leave the Democratic Party is to yield the substance for the shadow, to surrender the strength and usefulness of the chain for the weakness of the link.

"We are told that if the South will leave the Democratic Party we can throw the election of the presidency into the House of Representatives. Even if such a thing were possible, we know a Republican House such as we have today would elect a Republican president. . . Fri. 3-12-48

"We know what happened to the Republican Party in 1912, split between the forces of Teddy Roosevelt and those of William Howard Taft. The Democratic Party won readily. . . . There is no reason why we should act to insure victory for the Republican Party."

He continued:

"Some who urge us to leave the Democratic Party are not real or sincere Democrats. They have not believed in the principles of Jefferson and Jackson, of Woodrow Wilson and Franklin Roosevelt. They have not approved the Democratic Party's program for the advancement of our people.

"The Democratic Party could not give the people TVA, REA, social security, farm prices, insured bank deposits and the other great measures without stepping on some toes.

"Some who have not believed in the party or its program have not had the forthrightness or the courage to openly oppose the party. They now size upon the disagreements and dissatisfactions of the hour and seek to encompass the defeat, if not the destruction, of the party by dividing it.' '

* * *

SPARKMAN BACKED UP Hill's plea for a compromise. "We should make every effort to iron out our differences within the party before we take any drastic steps," he told a reporter. "The South will be missing an opportunity if it doesn't take this chance to bargain with the party."

Still a third Alabamian, Mrs. Lennard Thomas, national committeewoman, also declared that "we must stand together as Democrats." Fri. 3-12-48

THE MAIN REASON, she said in an interview, is that "the Republican Party is just dying for us to bust up."

But, she added, a solid stand also will add weight to the Dixie contention that there are "other people we can nominate."

Sen. McClellan (D., Ark.), who has predicted Mr. Truman's defeat in November, said he, too, agrees with the idea of trying to iron out the differences in the party—up to a point.

"We will have a better chance of getting what we are after if we prepare for any eventuality," he told a reporter.

Sen. Maybank (D., S. C.) said failure of Congress to pass any civil rights bills might cool the revolt. But he said he thinks the Republicans can't afford any such failure. Fri. 3-12-48

GOP leaders may discuss the situation at a Senate policy committee meeting later today.

Prospective 'Civil-Rights' Bolters Might Do Well to Recall Tom Heflin

Courier-Journal

BIRMINGHAM, July 3.—Southern Democrats, who contemplate walking out of the Democratic national convention in Philadelphia should President Truman's "civil-rights" program be adopted, might do well to consider the case of J. Thomas Heflin, ex-senator from Alabama.

Heflin has been tabbed the original bolter of the Democratic Party. He helped defeat Alfred E. Smith, the Democratic nominee in 1928.

Sun. 7-4-

And what does Heflin say about walking out of the party?

"Political suicide!"

"Cotton Tom" Heflin, now 79 years old and only a shell of his former self when he went for 40 years without a political defeat, says the Democratic Executive Committee wrote finis to his political career after he refused to support Smith, a Roman Catholic, in the Houston, Tex., convention 20 years ago.

'Political Corpse'

The once fiery orator from LaFayette, Ala., said he opposed Smith singlehandedly and helped bring about his defeat in the subsequent election.

But just as the "man with the derby" was defeated overwhelmingly by Herbert Hoover, "Cotton Tom" Heflin became the man without a party. From then on, he was a political corpse.

After the 1928 convention, Heflin said, the State Democratic Executive Committee ruled that any candidate who bolted the party would not be allowed to run for office in the primary of 1930.

And Heflin at that time was an announced candidate for renomination to the U. S. Senate.

"Right behind the eightball," he flashed.

Not to be outdone, Heflin organized the "Jeffersonian Democrats," and, leading the ticket, opposed the late Senator John H. Bankhead, whose father, John H. Bankhead, Sr., had had a distiguished career in politics for years.

Lost By 50,000

Bankhead defeated Heflin by 50,000 votes, handing "Cotton Tom" his first setback in 40 years of officeholding.

To say that the same thing will happen to delegates, if any, who walk out at Philadelphia is not Heflin's philosophy, however, though he might well point to the case of Gessner T. McCorvey, Alabama chairman of the Democratic Executive Committee. McCorvey, a leader in the walkout movement, failed to be elected as a delegate-at-large to the convention.

Although other delegates who had expressed themselves in favor of the walkout were elected, McCorvey, who sparked the walkout campaign, was beaten by a candidate who opposed the walkout. And Senator Lister Hill, who led the opposition to the bolt, was head man in the race for delegate-at-large.

But Heflin did not have a civil-rights program, anathema to the South, to oppose in Houston. He just didn't see how he could "vote for a Roman Catholic for President," even though Smith was his party's choice.

After Smith received the nomination, Heflin launched a bitter campaign to have Smith defeated. Heflin conducted such a vigorous stumping tour against the Democratic nominee in the South that Smith lost several Southern states and carried Alabama, a Democratic stronghold, by a mere 7,000 votes.

Smith carried only seven states in the entire country.

Although an avowed supporter of the Ku Klux Klan, Heflin does not say that he would bolt the Democratic Party were he a delegate to the convention.

"Frankly, I haven't studied much about the civil-rights program," he observed.

But civil rights or not, the former senator thinks the South will always have a Klan or similar organization to "handle the situation."

"As long as we have rape cases, the Klan or some other group will be here . . . The white race will not stand for raping, white or colored," he fumed.

Although he maintains the State Democratic Executive Committee "assassinated" him, the ex-senator has no malice toward the party, and still holds a powerful aversion to Republicans, and also to Henry Wallace, whom Heflin tabbed "a bad man in worse company."

He admits, however, that he will not vote for Truman.

"Truman can't be elected," Heflin said. "I like the fellow all right, and had hoped he would be intelligent enough to listen to his advisers, but it seems he doesn't know much about the South."

Heflin believes General Eisenhower would be a good man and could be elected, but would not accept the nomination.

"I think Sam Rayburn or Alben Barkley would be about the best bets for the Democrats," he said.

Good For South

Editor Constitution: So much has been written lately about the "death" of the Democratic Party that I thought I would like to have my little say.

I am a Democrat only so long as its platform and leaders uphold the ideals on which the Party was founded, and I draw a definite line there. Now that they have thrown the South overboard to satisfy other interests in the East and West, I am a free lance voter and expect to vote for the best man be he Democrat or Republican.

Truman was certainly not picked as a running mate with FDR in 1944 for his ability to be a good Chief Executive, but he was picked because it was thought that he would do the least harm to the ticket. This reflected a weakness in the Democratic Party at that time. Truman, as President, has not been too wise in his selection of cabinet members and his proposals for checking inflation and other economic ills have carried no suggestions from him as to how this was to be done, other than go back to wartime controls which do not go over so big in peacetime.

A political party is no stronger than its Chief and with Truman as the Chief we might as well start all over again and maybe in about 20 years a new Democratic Party will come out of the growing South with a platform that appeals to the masses and not the special minority interest.

The breakup of the Democratic Party could be a God-send to the people of the South because now they can vote for whom they please and this should encourage a two-party system. When the time comes that the South is not taken for granted in its politics, it will be a new day for everyone in it.

Critic's View

Editor Constitution: Your editorial policy of reporting news in an opinionated and prejudiced manner is both disgusting and narrow-minded.

I refer to Editor McGill's front-page story in the July 15 issue of The Constitution which he headed "Georgians 'Protest'—'Crybabies' Quit."

I heard Mr. Bloch's speech to the convened Democrats. It was an appeal for recognition of Southern ideologies and for Party action accordingly. The speech, while it was admittedly excellent, also was colored with a rather plaintive appeal for a lost cause.

The action taken by the delegates from Arkansas, Mississippi and South Carolina was not only justifiable, but to my mind, admirable. This action was motivated by nothing other than supreme disgust and not, as McGill's reporting implied, running away in the face of overwhelming opposition. The thankless majority of the Democratic Party has repaid generations of devotion and solidity of the Southern Democrats by insisting on a so-called civil rights program, knowing well the repungnance we feel for such legislation. The South (Arkansas, Mississippi and South Carolina in particular) recognize this foul scheme for just what it is . . . a last-minute appeal to certain elements for the vote, with utter disregard for the misery and evil such a program most certainly would bring about, especially in the South.

McGill's false reporting plays directly into the hands of radicals who are delighted to note dissension within the South, cleavage of the party and general ill feeling fostered by such views. McGill's column showed remarkably poor sportsmanship and poorer taste.

Ashamed?

Editor Constitution: You ought to be ashamed of yourself trying to stick the civil rights down our throats. You are from Missouri and you have to be sighted. Well, I think if you get yourself a telescope you can sight Alabama. If Dewey or some Democrat don't cause too much static why don't you let Wallace and his Communism on your platform? It would be the same thing to the South as your civil rights.

CAN'T SEE IT

Editor, The Advertiser: The Advertiser

I can't see to my life how the South expects to better itself any by electing a Republican administration when they have promised to give us a dose of the same medicine the Democrats have. I can't see how cutting off our nose to spite our face will help any. . . . Choose ye this day whom you will serve, whether it be the Democrats that brought us out of the world's greatest depression into the greatest era of prosperity the world has ever known, or those that brought wreck and ruin to us. But for me and my house we will serve the Democrats.

The South Examines Its Politics

Atlanta, Ga

Tues 4-13-48

Thousands of Southerners today are examining their politics in the light of the "revolt."

Political writers are beginning to try to weigh how much of the revolt originates with the politicians themselves, and how much from the people.

It is interesting to note that from the beginning not even the Southern politicians were running in one pack.

There was the Governor of North Carolina, who refused in March to go to a greatly advertised protest meeting of Southern Governors in Washington because he didn't think the revolt "that serious," and, anyhow, he didn't want to have to listen to the Governor of South Carolina lecture. Only six Governors showed up for the meeting.

Gov. Jim McCord, of Tennessee, reminded the Southern Governors that he was old enough to remember when every Southern candidate announced he was out to repeal the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Amendments. He allowed things might work out.

Tenure There were some of the Congressmen from the South who belatedly clapped hands over their mouths and wondered why they talked so dad-blamed much. They suddenly remembered that it was the one-party system which gave any loyal Democrat a chance at long tenure in office. The archaic rules would lift him high in influence if he could just hold on to the votes. 4 - 13 - 48 Tues.

They recalled that if they revolted and joined a Southern party they would, even if elected, find themselves on the canals and draining committees and would be shifted to offices from which the brooms and mops recently had been removed.

There also were the wise-eyed ones who documented their yawns with the fact that it was the same old anti-TVA, anti-Roosevelt, anti-REA, and anti-social legislation crowd and newspapers which now had their hats off fanning the fires of this revolt—after failure in 1940 and 1944.

Electoral It was from Texas' Rep. Gossett there came the bill to reform the electoral college system. It long had been apparent to anyone interested enough to look it up that the electoral system didn't really give the South a powerful bloc of votes to offset the lack of popular votes. With only 127 electoral votes out of 531, the 11 States of the old Confederacy had never had enough to influence any election save that of Grover Cleveland and Woodrow Wilson. The Constitution

But that wasn't all. It had become plain that scheming politicians could take a minority group and by concentrating in relatively a few States turn the present system to uses which would be disastrous for the nation.

Rep. Gossett, of course, sees the courting of Negroes who hold the balance of power in the pivotal States with large totals of electoral votes. But more moderate citizens see it in a broader light. So long as States are counted by units, instead of by votes merged into a national total, there is very real potential danger of manipulation by un-American forces. Atlanta, Ga.

Votes There has been an increasing awareness of the fact that the absence of a second party in the South, and consequent failure of choice, kept from the polls great numbers of persons. In 1920, which was about as normal and as typical a year as this generation has seen, a bare 21 percent of the persons of voting age cast their ballots in the 11 Solid South States. In 11 other States, of approximately equal populations, about 64 percent of the eligible voters went to the polls. Tues,

Popular government in the South was not destroyed by this system, but obviously it was hurt. Defenders of the system, nevertheless, argued it was necessary to restrict the electorate numerically because of the threat from the masses of Negroes to the Southern traditions and customs. They pointed also to intra-State contests and intra-county choices. 4 - 13 - 48

The Republican Party must bear a share of the blame, and it is a not inconsequential share. Republicans for years carried out the "lily-white" policy of repudiating Negro suffrage. The Party has not wanted one in the South.

Examination As the South examines its political complexity, thousands find themselves ready to vote for a Republican, especially one of a Vandenberg quality.

Thousands more are ready to pitch in and work in a campaign to establish a second party. The Stassen victory in Wisconsin indicates that the GOP is not able to make of the Party what National Chairman Carrol Reece wants it to be. Constitution

Henry Wallace is attracting no great strength. There are evil, dangerous enemies of this country behind Henry Wallace and the people are becoming more aware of that fact every day.

Harry Truman has proved inept and obviously often has been badly advised and persuaded. Tues. 4 - 13 - 48

But slowly the people are coming to adding up what easement of their anger would be provided by a Republican Administration, and, more important, are seeking to evaluate the future of the South and the Democratic Party in the light of the present, with the political status quo gone with the wind of the Supreme Court white primary decision. Atlanta. Ga.

Should Democrats Emerge With Slight Victory in Election

By RALPH McGILL.

PHILADELPHIA, July 15—Southern leaders holding over here today for the meeting of the National Committee and also those getting out on late trains, are mapping continuation of the fight against the man nominated early Wednesday morning by the Democratic Convention.

They are aware of the fact that the South was badly defeated in this Convention. The further bitter truth of it is that there is no sympathy for the Southern position and the disposition on the part of the dominant wing is to let the South stew in its own juice.

But, the Southern leaders believe they have one effective weapon left. They plan to organize a block of electoral college votes to be withheld after the November election. They believe they can develop a block of between 60 and 70 such votes. If the election should prove to be a close Democratic victory, they could withhold them and defeat Truman or exact from him and the Party concessions that they want. 7-16-48

Only the thoughtless ones will be rushing off to Birmingham and the proposed rump convention there. Such a convention is meaningless and futile. In fact, such a convention will further damage the South. The South needs to know, to help its understanding, that the actions of the Mississippi delegation, those of Alabama and some of the wild and reckless utterances from Louisiana, did not help the South's cause. The pity of it was that Cecil Sims, the Tennessee delegate who stated the cause for the Volunteer State, could not have been the chief spokesman for the South. The position on State's Rights is not necessarily a demagogic one. It is an old plank in the Democratic Party. A great many persons sincerely believe in centralization of Federal power and fear the steady increase of it in the past several years. There is much to be said for it. And it can be said with dignity and honor.

But what we had here as the loudest voice of the South were the wild and reckless and usually ridiculous statements by the Mississippians and some from Alabama, South Carolina and Louisiana. They made no sense. The Convention crowds laughed at them. They were often so preposterous as to embarrass even their own members. They hurt the South.

Georgia did a fine job. Charlie Bloch cannot be too highly praised for the dignified and eloquent manner in which he handled the Georgia protest support of Senator Richard B. Russell. Chairman James Peters handled the delegation well and Georgia did not disgrace or hurt the South. It is to be hoped that Georgia will stay out of the Birmingham meeting. If the State does decide to participate in the group planning to withhold the electoral votes, that is a matter for the State to decide. There is no value in attending any of the self-promotional ventures by other States such as Arkansas and Mississippi staged here, only to crawl at the last moment after they had squeezed all publicity possible out of it.

If the Democrats should emerge with a slight victory withholding of electoral votes, however unethical it may be, would be effective. 7-16-48

What is important for the South to realize is that they really did have rammed down their throat the planks to which they objected. It was done deliberately and after due consideration by the Eastern, Western and Middle Western Party leaders who determined to their own satisfaction at least their only chance of victory lay in putting such a program into effect.

GLADSTONE WILLIAMS

The Revolt Is More Than Just Talk

Atlanta Constitution, Atlanta, Ga.

WASHINGTON—It is not generally known, but quiet steps are being taken within the party to implement the revolt against President Truman. By that it is meant that those who have been clamoring for the President to step aside and open the way for some other man to receive the Democratic nomination are not confining themselves to talking. More action is taking place beneath the surface than is apparent to the public.

The program being undertaken is to go out and line up as many State delegations against the President's nomination as it is possible to get. Leaders in the opposition to Mr. Truman are naturally going about this quietly, not wishing to stir up the situation any more than is necessary.

Mon - 4-5-48

What they hope to accomplish is to present the President with a fait accompli sometime before the national convention meets in July. If enough State delegations can be brought into line with the program, leaders in the group will then call on Mr. Truman and appraise him of the opposition within the party to his nomination.

In that way an opportunity would be given him to step down gracefully, without risking defeat at the convention. It is not contemplated at the moment that Mr. Truman would be confronted with any formal demands that he surrender all claims to the nomination.

Rather it is suggested that those behind the movement to have him replaced as the head of the ticket go over the situation with him frankly and honestly. He would be told of the feeling within the party that his chances of election seem hopeless, and an appeal would be made to him to stand aside in the hope of the Democrats being able to nominate someone with a chance to win.

Many of the President's friends believe that if the matter is handled in this way he will bow himself out of the picture. On the other hand, if the fight against him is carried too far in the open, it is expected that he would resist to the end.

Hence it is that the moves now in the making for throwing the nomination to some other man are being conducted quietly and beneath the surface.

It can be said that contacts have already been established between the Southern opponents of the President and the group of powerful bosses of the big city Democratic organizations, which see their forces crumbling because of the agitation raised by the Administration's reversal of policy on the Palestine question.

An effort is being made to have these big city machines join forces with the Southern revolters. If they do, it will mean the important delegations of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Illinois will be thrown into the anti-Truman bloc.

Mon - 4-5-48

It is known that some progress has been made in lining up the big city machines. The extent of it is being kept secret for obvious reasons. Backers of the movement may not be expected to reveal their hand until they have achieved the desired result. Even then the whole story may not be told until some time after the convention meets, since it would be desirable to save Mr. Truman's feelings as much as possible.

For another thing, the city bosses are reluctant to place themselves in the open in opposition to the President's nomination until the time comes to show their hands. The reason for this is that it might become necessary to fill a distrist attorney appointment, or some other Federal patronage, between now and the date of the convention.

It will be interesting to see how far the movement goes. Some of those on the inside of the situation say privately that they have every confidence in the success of what is being undertaken.

FLIGHT NO. 2

Editor, The Advertiser:

I just read Mr. McDonald's letter entitled "Damn Fool Bolting." The South is not bolting, Mr. Truman and his followers are the ones who are bolting the party. We are not going to do like a young bird, just open our mouths and swallow anything from a worm to a black widow spider. We are not telling our delegate who to vote for, we are telling him who not to vote for.

Back in the 1860's our fathers did eat sour grapes and set their teeth on edge. and it seems that Mr. Truman's political ambition has knocked the edge off his teeth, as I understand he is the grandson of a Southern soldier. Wed 3-31-48

We want the Negro to have everything that belongs to him. He has a right to own all the land he can pay for, a right to build his home, and, also a right to an education. All these good old Negroes should have a pension so they wouldn't have to eat husk for a living, and so far as I'm concerned he can vote, but let his qualification be based on his ability to discern between an inferior and superior race and not his ability to explain the Constitution.

Such Negroes would vote against the abolition of the jimcrow law. I have talked to several good old Negroes and they say "Let it stay like it is." It seems that Mr. Truman and his bunch are trying to tell us that we are so ignorant that it is necessary that they teach us a few things. If that is democracy I don't want it. Any Southern man that has any influence and will not fight it to a finish hasn't any more business in Southern politics than a hog has in a rich man's parlor. Wed. 3-31-48

If Mr. Truman is nominated I for one will vote for who I please in the general election if I vote at all. There was a lot of us flew the coop once and we are sprouting feathers for another flight hoping that we will not need them.

I know that I am too illiterate to write, that is one reason I appreciate Grandma's column. It gives us old fellows that didn't get any schooling a chance to pop off steam when our boilers get about ready to burst. I have been voting about 50 years and I haven't ever been stirred up like I am now. I realy don't think some of our people are taking this thing seriously enough. We need to take a firm stand now, it may save a lot of trouble later. I think we could use Mr. Heflin now. What do you think?

For a Doubtful South

The News

To the Editor of The News:

Some of the bigger boys of the Democratic South say they have no place to go. I would stay at home before I would support a party that doesn't respect me.

For years the Northern Democrats have used the Southerners only as a source of revenue, but they have always been able to pet the boys a little and everything would be hunkadory. They feel sure they can do it again. Surely now is the time to show them that we, too, have a way of doing things and don't intend to be a floor mat any longer.

Ever since the South has been voting a one-party ticket it has been grossly imposed upon. The people of the South have been denied many favors from the government. That's why two states in the North got more war plants built by the government than the entire South. The Republicans won't give us favors because they know we will go Democratic, and the Democrats won't for the same reason. Birmingham, Ala.

Let's stop it. The carpetbaggers ruined us once and we have let them drag us around long enough. Now is the time to make the South a doubtful South. 2-26-48

It's not a sin to vote for another ticket. I think it a shame to vote for the gang of brass-buttons and Wall Streeters we have up there now. I never knew a military government that didn't have war. We have the opportunity in November to vote for peace or war. Thu. 2-26-48

Democracy is getting to be a rather peculiar thing. This effort of a president to impose laws on people against their will and destroy customs long established—is that democracy? Isn't a custom that has worked for the good of all through many years good enough to be left alone? The South doesn't interfere with the North.

The South may be a little backward, but it isn't for any president or Northern group to straighten us out. C. D. WEAR.

Anderson Quits Post To Run For Senate; Truman Is 'Reluctant'

WASHINGTON, March 13.—(U.P.)—The Southern Governors Conference, Saturday, unanimously adopted a report repudiating President Truman and other Democratic leaders who espouse his civil rights program and pledging a "fight to the last ditch" to throw them out of office.

Seven governors from Southern States took part in a meeting here which drove a further wedge between the rebellious Dixie Democrats and the Truman administration.

The conference formally approved a committee report blasting the civil rights proposals and laying out a program of "concerted action" to deprive Mr. Truman of Southern electoral votes at the November election.

Gov. M. E. Thompson, of Georgia, cast his vote for the report with the reservation that he could not speak for the party in his state.

Others were:

Governors J. Strom Thurmond, of South Carolina; William Preston Lane, Jr., of Maryland; Ben Laney, of Arkansas; Beauford H. Jester, of Texas, James E. Folsom, of Alabama; and Fielding Wright, Jr., of Mississippi.

Lane, who is chairman of the conference, was presiding and did not vote.

Lane Doesn't Vote

He sai dthat because of the political situation in Maryland he did not think it proper for him to vote in favor of such a resolution. He was recorded as not voting.

Thurmond, Janey, Jester, had drafted the committee report which the full conference adopted. They were joined by Senator Harry F. Byrd (D), Virginia, who represented Gov. William M. Tuck, of Virginia. The fifth committeeman, Gov. Gregg Cherry, of South Carolina, did not attend.

The report said present leadership of the Democratic party has "deserted the principles on which the party was founded—the right of the people to govern themselves."

If Mr. Truman's proposals for anti-lynching, anti-discrimination and anti-poll tax legislation are adopted, the report said, it would be a "total departure" from the fundamental principals of American government.

Clean Break Now

That appeared to make it a clean break. Mr. Truman said emphatically only Friday, that he is not taking back a single word of what he has said about civil rights.

Meanwhile, Secretary of Agriculture Clinton P. Anderson announced that he will leave the cabinet "reluctantly" this Summer to run for the New Mexico Senate seat being vacated by Democratic Senator Carl Hatch.

Anderson revealed his decision at a news conference here. He said he will become a candidate for Senator in his home state and "if President Truman is willing, I will remain as secretary of agriculture until the Summer adjournment of Congress."

Congress is expected to adjourn in June. A White House spokesman said President Truman will accept Anderson's resignation but "with great reluctance." The spokesman said Mr. Truman is very glad Anderson will remain in the cabinet until adjournment of Congress.

No Idea Of Successor

Anderson told reporters he has "not the slightest idea" who will succeed him as secretary of agriculture.

342

The Southern governors' report proposed that Democratic conventions in Southern states put it clearly in the record that their electoral votes in the November election will not be cast for any person favoring the kind of civil rights legislation Mr. Truman wants.

Sun. 3-14-48

It suggested that Southern states defer choosing their electors until after the Democratic National Convention in July. Then, the report said, a caucus of Southern state electors could be held to take "concerted action if necessary."

A plan like that would give the Southern states a club over the convention and over Mr. Truman who will be a candidate for the Democratic nomination for president.

The report said that National Democratic Chairman J. Howard McGrath has "flatly refused" a request by the Southern governors that he use his influence to have Mr. Truman's proposed legislation withdrawn.

Conference Recesses

It said the conclusion is inescapable that enactment of that legislation would "bring about radical changes in the government of the United States . . . interfere with the functions of the states . . . and that the government would be controlled by a highly-centralized and concentrated power."

After approving the report, the conference of governors recessed subject to call of the chair. Jester, who made this motion, suggested that there might be a reason for further meetings of the conference.

Sun. 3-14-48

Folsom and Wright proposed, and the conference agreed, to word the report so as to pledge support of candidates who oppose civil rights legislation rather than opposition to those who favor it.

Folsom said "the way to win is to be for something."

Efforts by Jester and Thompson to soften the committee report failed. Thompson wanted to eliminate a clause referring to "recently-made" civil rights proposals. He said they dated back to reconstruction days and blamed them on the Republicans. He got no support.

Jester said he had hoped someone might persuade Mr. Truman to "combine civil rights and states' rights." He said the President "could take that position—whether he will I don't know."

Wright replied bluntly that "he's already taken his position."

A proposal by Folsom that each state send delegates to the national convention to vote for their "own choice for the presidency, preferably someone of favorite-son status," was brushed aside without action. Thurmond and Laney said they thought it unnecessary.

Centers His Appeal On Foreign Policy, Local Self-Rule

WETUMPKA, Ala., April 3—An appeal for the reversal of America's foreign policy and for the return to the principle of local self government was voiced here Saturday night by Gov. Folsom in a campaign speech as candidate for state-at-large delegate to the Democratic National Convention.

It was the third address of his first campaign day. The governor appeared somewhat tired and to an extent lacked the fire of his stump appearances when he was fighting the legislative self-starter amendment. The Strawberry Pickers serenaded the audience here and at Clanton and Prattville, where he spoke earlier.

At Prattville and at Wetumpka the branchheads hope chest was passed, but the first day's collection appeared to be light.

GOV. FOLSOM, IN FACT, did not ask for monetary contributions. He merely asked that those desiring to attend the Democratic National Convention write their names and addresses and drop them in a box. That was Gov. Folsom's cue for introducing his Senate floor leader, Sen. Lamberth, for Democratic national committeeman.

"If we are going to have war—and I don't think we are—we'll have to sacrifice our hopes. We cannot get out mail box roads, our schools, welfare and all the things uppermost in our minds.

4-4-48

"The federal government is taking today $600,000,000 out of Alabama. Out of every $6 it collects, $5 goes to Washington. Two of it is dumped overseas. And about one and one-half of your tax dollar is sent back for federal aid with strings attached.

"It is certain that if we have war, we can't have the things we want or the thing we work for, hope for and prayed for all these generations."

"The Southern governors are in close accord today. So are other Southern political leaders. Southerners are about to be in accord with leaders in the West and Midwest. I believe we will have a program that will enable us to nominate and elect a Democrat from one of these states," he added.

Gov. Folsom's audience at Clanton was by far the largest. At Prattville he spoke before a comfortably filled courtroom.

Problem for the Democratic Convention

The Atlanta Constitution - Atlanta, Ga.

WASHINGTON—By pledging themselves to send delegates to the coming party national convention "instructed" not to vote for the renomination of President Truman, the Governors of seven of the 11 Southern States have posed a serious problem for the Democratic National Convention meeting at Philadelphia next July.

If the pledge is carried out, the Convention may be called upon to decide whether it is proper to seat the delegates so instructed from the seven States.

Mon. 3-22-48

The pledge carries an implication that the Southern delegates will walk out of the Convention in the event of a Truman nomination. Since this is a foregone conclusion from the appearance of things today, it looks as though there will be a walkout or a lockout of Southern delegates, one way of another.

Administration forces in command of the Convention may take the view that if such a walkout is inevitable, it may be better for the sake of appearances of party harmony for the rebellious Southern delegations to be banned at the beginning, with their places given over to other delegates from the same States who would be willing to go along with the President.

In that way the Convention would at least be spared the turmoil and strife of a bitter fight over the President's nomination. With all of the fanfare and publicity that attends a national political conclave, Administration leaders would naturally want to avoid having a fight of the kind aired publicly at the time of the Convention.

As to the practicality of the plan, it need only be pointed out that every national political convention is a law unto itself. In honoring the credentials of delegates it is bound only by such restraints as the convention itself imposes.

In other words, whenever a contest is raised, it is within the power of the convention to seat or unseat any group of delegates that appears. It usually does not matter whether the credentials presented are in good order or bad. The determining factor more often is whether the delegates are in sympathy with the program of the dominant group in control of the convention.

That has been the history of most national party conventions in the past.

Hence it is that the President's friends, wishing to avoid a walkout of delegates from the seven Southern States, may encourage the organization of competing slates of delegates from these States. Slates favorable to the President's renomination would be encouraged to come to the Convention. They would be seated and the others barred.

A rumpus would be sure to follow, but it is doubtful that it would be any worse than the situation precipitated by the wholesale withdrawal of delegations hostile to Mr. Truman's candidacy.

The seven Southern States which, through their Governors, have subscribed to the plan for attacking the Truman candidacy in the National Convention, are Virginia, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas and Texas. Still others may yet become associated with the movement.

Mr. Truman is in an unhappy situation any way you look at it. The outlook for him at the present time is far from hopeful.

Southern Democrats Slate 5-Step Fight

Atlanta, Ga. Sat 2-28-48

By THE UNITED PRESS

The Southern revolt against President Truman's civil rights program has shaped up into a five-step plan aimed at restoring the South's dominance of the Democratic Party.

The Southern program contemplates:

1. A united front in Congress against anti-discrimination legislation.
2. Revision of State election machinery as a step toward keeping Mr. Truman's name off the ballot. There is no law against such a practice in Georgia, Arkansas, Alabama, Florida or South Carolina. Virginia's Gov. William Tuck has moved to allow his State the same privilege.
3. An attempt to defeat Mr. Truman for the Presidential nomination, and keep a civil-rights plank out of the Party platform.
4. Withold Southern electoral votes from Mr. Truman in an attempt to throw the selection of the next President into the House of Representatives.
5. Reorganizing the Party after the November election.

Developments on the Southerners' civil-rights battle front include the pledge Friday of an Alabama candidate for Democratic National Convention delegate to vote for Gov. Jim "Favorite Son" Folsom for Presidential nominee.

In Jackson, Miss., Gov. Fielding Wright disclosed that a conference of Southern Governors would be held March 13 in Washington, D. C.

An anti-poll tax bill three times "talked down" by Southern Democrats was on its fourth trip through Congress with a good chance of becoming law.

Sat 2-28-48

A Rules Subcommittee headed by Sen. Jenner, Republican, Indiana, approved the bill Wednesday, rejecting a demand by Sen. Stennis, Democrat, Mississippi, for public hearings in seven Southern States that require voters to pay a tax before casting their ballots.

The bill, already passed by the House, has the combined support of Republicans and Northern Democrats.

Atlanta, Ga

The poll-tax bill is the second civil-rights measure to win favorable action in two days. A House Judiciary Subcommittee Thursday approved a bill to make lynching a Federal offense.

While some Southern Democrats predicted—with privately expressed satisfaction — that President Truman could not be elected this Fall, Sen. George, Democrat, Georgia, said he looked for a thorough shakeup in the Democratic Party after the election, putting the Party on a basis of sound economic and good government principles."

Meanwhile, Rep. Cox and Rep. Preston, of Georgia, proposed that the Georgia Legislature meet in special session to deal with the civil-rights question.

Atlanta, Ga.

As the Southern revolt continued to fan toward a hotter pitch Sen. Pepper, Democrat, Florida, denounced the move to ban the name of Mr. Truman from State ballots. He termed the move a "brazen" attack on the freedom of choice of voters.

At Key West, Fla., President Truman, on an inspection-vacation tour of the Caribbean, had no comment to make on the storm his program for civil rights had stirred.

WHY DIXIE'S AG'IN TRUMAN

The Afro-American

Southern Democrats, who have been bitter against President Truman because of his civil rights program and have kicked up shinny against inclusion of a civil rights plank in the party's platform, are queer ducks.

They're like the fellow who cries "ouch" before pulling on a pair of new shoes.

Why are they squawking so loud? Let's take a look at the 10-point civil rights program which President Truman offered Congress and see just what it would provide. Here's what it would do: Baltimore, Md.

1. Create a permanent commission on civil rights, a joint congressional committee on civil rights, and a civil-rights division in the Justice Department.
2. Strengthen the present laws which are designed to safeguard people's constitutional rights.
3. Enact a specific Federal law against lynching.
4. Protect more adequately the right of vote; for example, pass a Federal law saying people shall not be deprived of the vote in Federal elections because they haven't paid poll taxes. Sat, 7-17-48
5. Enact a fair-employment practices law, prohibiting discrimination by employers and unions on account of race, color, religion, or national origin.
6. Prohibit racial segregation on interstate transportation facilities.
7. Give the District of Columbia home rule and the right to vote.
8. Give Statehood to Hawaii and Alaska; more self-government for island possessions.
9. Equalize the opportunities for various groups of residents to become naturalized citizens.
10. Settle evacuation claims of Japanese-Americans.

A careful examination of these points shows that they take nothing away from the South, which is the most rabid objector to the President's program.

They confer upon ALL people, including colored people, Jews, Chinese, Japanese and Indians, the right to vote, the right to work and the right to be free from intimidation by mobs.

Objection on the part of the Dixie rebel lies simply in the fact that he doesn't want you and minority groups to have the same civil rights which he himself enjoys. He wants these minorities to be second-rate citizens.

The next time you read about it in your newspaper or hear on your radio a crackpot arguing against civil rights, you will know that he wants something for himself that he doesn't want you to have. 7-17-48

The Plight of Southern Politics

A Review from The Dallas (Texas) Times-Herala

Southern Weekly

THE growing tendency of Northern politicians to cater to Northern minorities by lambasting thc South for not repealing segregation laws reached a climax when President Truman announced his so-called civil rights program. These books are among many that the controversy has evoked.

Mr. Molyneaux, Dallas publicist and editor of THE SOUTHERN WEEKLY, takes the position that the Democratic Party, which the South has supported for many decades, "no longer reflects the views of Southern Democrats" and has abandoned its traditional principles and now stands for a program that "denies some of the most fundamental of these principles." He contends that the South should begin voting Republican. He discounts the fact that the Republicans aslo favor the civil rights program. Sat. 7-3-48

The Dallas editor confines himself largely to the purely political aspects of the situation, and marshals his facts impressively. In the other book, Charles Wallace Collins, an Alabama attorney, goes more deeply into the background of racial conflict, reaching back to ancient times, but he also discusses the political angle and the States' rights question. Some of his arguments seem rather far-fetched, and some of his proposed solutions impracticable, yet all his chapters are thought-provoking.

Instead of suggesting that the South turn Republican, Mr. Collins expresses belief that both old parties are obsolete and that the nation should simply have a liberal and a conservative party. He agrees with Mr. Molyneaux that the South should not be defeatist in its attitude, but should devise a better means of exercising its influence on the national political scene.

Lighthouse and Informer

Where Can They Go?

Southern Democrats opposing president Truman merely because he recommended what Democrats themselves had adopted years ago, and who now threaten to leave the party if the civil rights are included partially in the 1948 party platform, would fare better to pause and think for a moment. Columbia, S.C. Sun. 6-20-48

If they leave voluntarily or are chucked out of the Democratic party, where can they go? Would they join up with Republicans who now refer to the civil rights items as "old stuff?" Would they join Henry Wallace's party? Or is it that they would build a new organizatoin around such race-riding elements as the Ku Klux Klan, et al?

Best bet is that once these cavorters come to their senses, they'll drop the revolt and come trudging back like a puppy whose tail is wet.

South Humiliated By Civil Rights Plank, Is

Opinion Of Editor

Thurs. 7-15-48

DOTHAN, Ala., July 15—(AP)—The Dothan Eagle in a front page editorial today "bolted" the Democratic Party and announced it would support the Dewey-Warren ticket of the Republican Party.

"We've had enough. Long the orphan of the Democratic Party, the South yesterday was made to suffer the crowning indignity. . . It was read out of the Democratic Party, the party of its fathers. . . . The party, which, on more than one occasion, has suckled at the breast of the South when sustenance could not be had elsewhere."

Declaring the South was humiliated when the Democratic convention "refused to temper the 1944 civil rights plank and then voted down the states rights plank offered as a compromise by Southern delegates," the editorial said "there is only one answer for the South. It must acknowledge, grudgingly though it be, that the Democratic Party as presently constituted is no haven nor friend. . Thurs.

"The only course remaining open is to support the Republican nominees, the nominees of a party which at least had the courage and the common sense to rebuff the advocates of South-baiting and South-baiting legislation.

"And though Democratic office-holders of Alabama will in the coming general election strive mightily to herd voters back into the Democratic Party with lusty rebel yells and mighty waving of the bloody shirt, this newspaper will not again be pilloried by Democrats of the stripe of Walter White and Harry Truman. 7-15-48

"This time, come hell or high water, we're supporting the Republicans—Govs. Dewey and Warren!"

South's Gravest Threat Seen by Sen. Russell

Fri. 7-16-48

WINDER, July 14—(AP)—Sen. Russell, Democrat, Georgia, predicted today the South would be kicked around some more in the special session of Congress called by President Truman.

The Junior Senator from Georgia said the South's defeat in the National Democratic Convention would be translated into a legislative program of unparalleled oppression.

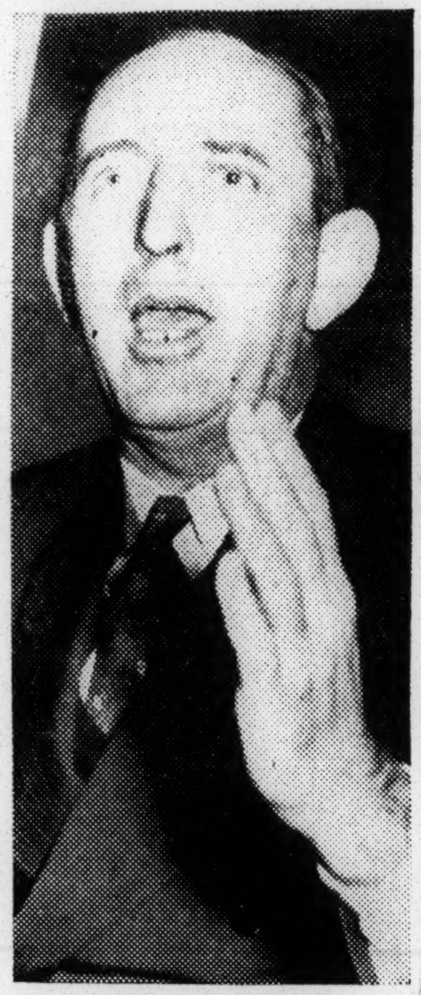
But despite his beliefs, Russell said, he still did not think the Birmingham Convention called for Saturday by Party bolters from Mississippi and Alabama "the best thing for the present party."

He stood on his earlier statement that he would refuse to permit his name to be offered in Birmingham as a possible presidential nominee.

Russell, who garnered 263 Convention votes for the presidential nomination, said he believed the civil rights proposals will be introduced in the special session and that gleeful Republican and nonbolting Democrats will "fight to see who can kick the South the hardest."

Asked if he thought the President's call to Congress would enhance the Democrats chances in November, Russell replied, "It's in the lap of the gods."

It is a desperate move by the President to rivet national attention on what he has picked as the national issues in the 1948 campaign. It could help him or it could boomerang. The South faces its gravest threat since Reconstruction days.



SEN. RUSSELL
Will Forego "Rump" Session

"The economic issues which President Truman will bring before Congress can cut both ways over the Nation. There may be a bi-partisan fight over them.

"But the misnamed civil rights program is a political issue which affects only the South. Both parties will seize on it avidly. It is much easier for politicians to handle than economic questions."

Sparks Is Appointed To Help Shape First Democratic Platform

Birmingham News
Birmingham, Ala.

Trio Other Southerners To Assist; Sparkman, Hill Hail Selections

BY JAMES FREE
News Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 15—Former Gov. Chauncey Sparks of Alabama Monday night was named by Sen. J. Howard McGrath, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, to membership on the preliminary drafting committee for the Democratic platform this year.

This committee will conduct hearings and make recommendations for the party's official stand on campaign issues, including the controversial matters of civil rights. The actual platform will be drawn up, however, at the national convention next month by the committee on resolutions and platform.

HOW SPARKS STANDS

Former Gov. Chauncey Sparks is committed against President Truman and his "civil rights" program. He likewise is strongly opposed to a walkout at the Democratic National Convention as the best method of combating the president and his proposals.

It was Sparks who directed much of the fire at the walkout group in the May 4 primary when he won a delegate-at-large place without a runoff. Jun. 6-15-48

There were three other Southerners appointed to the 17-member preliminary drafting group. They were Sen. Clyde R. Hoey of North Carolina, former Democratic State Chairman George D. Key of Oklahoma, and former Gov. Dan Moody of Texas.

In view of Alabama's emphatic anti-Truman stand and the fact that many of its elected delegates are pledged to walk out if any part of the civil rights program is incorporated in the platform, McGrath's appointment of Sparks was regarded as a positive gesture toward reconciliation. Persistent reports have indicated that party leaders will strive for adoption of a variation of the high-sounding but not too specific civil rights plank in the Democratic platform.

WHILE CHAIRMAN McGRATH could not publicly fail to go along with President Truman's civil rights platform, it is believed that, in the interests of party unity, he may well go along with a virtual repetition of the 1944 civil rights plank which was acceptable to Southern Democrats. 6-15-48

It is indicated also that strong efforts will be made to placate Southerners who have vigorously opposed Mr. Truman's civil rights program by seeking to include a firm state's rights plank in the platform.

Such a plank would tend, too, to please states like California which has been protesting that it would be a violation of states rights for the federal government to take over control of tidelands oil rights along its coastline.

The likelihood of Sparks being named to the preliminary drafting committee was pointed out by The News-Age-Herald's Washington Bureau in a story one week ago.

* * *

NEWS OF SPARKS' appointment brought exclamations of delight and satisfaction from Alabama's two senators. Sen. Lister Hill called the appointment "splendid," which is not surprising in view of the fact that Sen. McGrath unquestionably consulted with the senior senator from Alabama regarding Sparks' appointment.

Sen. John J. Sparkman said he was delighted.

"I don't know of anybody more level-headed than Chauncey Sparks," he declared. "He is experienced in convention ways and knows how to give Alabama and the South true representation."

"Despite the fact that 14 out of Alabama's 26 convention delegates-elect have indicated their willingness to walk out of the convention under certain conditions, it is still considered by observers here as very probable that Sen. Hill, who led the delegate-at-large ticket on an anti-walkout platform, will be elected chairman of the delegation.

* * *

IT IS POINTED OUT that only one or two "walk-out" delegates would have to swing over to the Hill "wait-and-see" position to assure a delegation majority for the senior senator as delegation chairman. Moreover, Handy Ellis, more commonly talked of as the "walk out" group choice as chairman, probably would be reluctant to challenge leadership of the delegation at this time.

Only recently Sen. Hill teamed with Sen. Sparkman in a prolonged, successful fight to obtain Senate confirmation of Mr. Ellis' brother, Frank Ellis, as U. S. marshal in the Middle District of Alabama.

There was no objection to Frank Ellis' confirmation by Democrats, but Republicans resisted in keeping with a general party policy of holding up all important federal appointments possible in order to save than for the Republican president that the GOP hopes to have in the White House in 1949. 6-15-48

Sen. Francee J. Myers, of Pennsylvania, who was named chairman of the preliminary committee, said that his group would begin hearings on July 7 to obtain the views of individuals and organizations on major issues.

Myers added: "We are planning to hear fully from a representative cross section of the Democratic Party. We are entering upon a highly important campaign in a critical year in history and we hope to explore every issue completely and carefully."

Rankin for '44 Civil Rights Plank

Miss.
[illegible] 6-22-48

WASHINGTON, June 22 (AP)—Rep. John Rankin (D., Miss.), a leader in the southern revolt against President Truman's civil rights program, today indicated that Dixie Democrats may agree to repeating the party's 1944 plank on that issue. New York, N.Y.

After a conference with the President, Rankin declared he was "not without hope that the Democratic Convention will reach a satisfactory agreement on the civil rights issue." He added: "It would be far less offensive to the people of the South than the plank on this subject inserted in the Republican platform of 1944, and which I understand is being inserted in its platform in Philadelphia now."

Revolt Efforts Doomed, Jackson Leaders Admit

The Constitution
Atlanta, Ga. June 6-18-48

By JOHN R. HENRY
International News Service Writer

Leaders of the South's so-called revolt against the Democratic Party admitted privately Wednesday night their efforts were doomed.

Authoritive sources at Jackson, Miss., informed International News Service the Steering Committee of States' Rights Democrats might seek a "face-saving compromise" with the National Party before the July 12 convention at Philadelphia.

Gov. Fielding L. Wright, of Mississippi, has been convinced, according to veteran Jackson observers, that no more than a corporal's guard would follow him in a Party bolt.

Disclosure that the Dixiecrat leaders are discouraged comes in contrast to their public announcement that a "rump" convention will be held.

Gov. Wright was an instigator of the States' Rights movement, but more recently Arkansas' Gov. Ben Laney ostensibly has been in command of the revolt forces.

Gov. Laney headed the Steering Committee meeting at Jackson Tuesday, and announced a caucus of States' Rights Democrats would be held before the Philadelphia Convention.

It is reported that Gov. Laney hopes to achieve the "face-saving compromise" in the caucus by persuading Democratic Chairman Howard McGrath to "soften" the Party's stand on civil rights.

The Dixiecrats, meanwhile, would cancel their Convention at Birmingham on July 17 provided the National Party altered its staunch stand in favor of civil rights law. June 6-18-48

The Birmingham Convention now is considered as more of a bargaining point than anything else. When the Laney Steering Committee gathered in Jackson, it almost was foregone that the Dixiecrats would have difficulty in finding an outstanding Southern leader at Birmingham to accept their nomination as a second Democratic candidate.

Qualified observers point out the Horace Wilkerson faction of Alabama Party members would oppose the candidacy of Sen. Lister Hill, if the latter would accept. Sen. Olin B. Johnston's followers in South Carolina reportedly are against the nomination of Gov. J. Strom Thurmond. And, in Georgia, friends of gubernatorial aspirant Herman Talmadge, who now guides the State Democratic manuevers, apparently refuse to nominate Sen. Walter George.

34d 1948 Democratic (The South)

Jim Farley Sees Southern Revolt Collapse

The Record

James A. Farley, who knows his politicians, North and South, is the author of a prediction that the Southern revolt over the President's civil rights program will be resolved in the Democratic national convention and that the South will be solidly Democratic in November, as usual.

In making this prediction the former national Democratic chairman—he was talking to reporters in Baltimore where he had gone to visit Loyola college—was going against the stream of most of the public pronouncements emanating from the South.

The Southern revolt this year, these pronouncements tell, is something more serious than Southern revolts before and it is better organized. There is the very real likelihood, Southern spokesmen are saying, that the Democratic party, if it renominates Truman, will lose some of the Southern states in the electoral college. Tues. 4-6-48

Mr. Farley's tendency to write off the Southern revolt as ineffective in the end may be the result of his realization that it is so far a politician-engineered revolt and has not yet taken hold in the grass roots, that it is still a controlled revolt and hasn't yet got out of hand, that it is a revolt going nowhere. Columbia, S.C.

Farley himself has had some experience with this type of Southern revolt. In 1940, when President Franklin D. Roosevelt broke the third-term tradition, Farley and John Nance Garner of Texas took the lead in the Democratic party in opposing a third term nomination. Both of them entered the preferential primaries in several of the states. In Wisconsin Garner got almost 30 per cent of the vote, although only three of the state's delegates. Farley obtained a number of the Massachusetts delegates. Tues.

On the first ballot Farley received 72.5 votes, of which 25 came from New York, 12.5 from Massachusetts, 15 from Alaska, the Canal one and Puerto Rico. Garner had 61, including all 46 from Texas. Senator Tydings had 9.5, all except one from his own state of Maryland. Secretary of State Cordell Hull received 5. Practically every Southern vote, except those from Texas and Virginia, went to Roosevelt. 4-6-48

When the 1944 convention was held, the no-third-term tradition had already been broken and the nation was in the midst of war. On the first ballot the anti-Roosevelt votes were only 7.5 per cent of the total, a little more than half the percentage Farley and Garner had been able to muster four years before. Senator Byrd received 89 of the 90 anti-Roosevelt votes cast, 98.5 per cent of these from the Southern states.

And Farley may be right. It is always possible for the revolt to be kept within bounds and the South returned safely to the bag, if the voters do not take things into their own hands, as they did in 1928 and vote Republican. The South cannot be free until it sets up in the South the two-party system. And the politicians are opposed to this. They would have to make a choice and it might not be the right choice.

ON SECOND THOUGHT

Editor, The Advertiser: The Advertiser

From reading your editorials I feel sure that you think of President Roosevelt as the founder of the Democratic Party and that you really don't understand what constitutes a Democrat. Montgomery, Ala.

President Roosevelt was the founder of this Liberal Socialist Radical theory of government that is causing so much trouble today. He himself called it a New Deal. There are quite a few of us who are anti-New Dealers and did not approve of his ideas and theories but hate him, NO. No sensible man will hate a man after he has passed away.

What we hate is the condition we and the world are now in due largely to his administration. Sat. 3-27-48

I don't think the real Democrat in the South is worrying much about what will happen at Philadelphia. We are leaving that for Truman, Hill, Wallace, Folsom and their following of Southern Liberals, Northern Radicals and Negroes to worry about. The more they fight the better we like it.

We expect to help the Northern Republicans to elect a president that at least believes in State Rights and has some respect for the white races.

If you believe in white supremacy, State Rights, local self government and the original Constitution of the United States, I am sure you will do likewise.

The Anti-Truman Revolt Is Largely Insincere, Thinks Frank Kent

The Courier-Journal
Louisville, Ky.

By FRANK R. KENT

IT IS an ironical fact that outside of the South, where there is a special reason, the current clamor within the Democratic Party against Mr. Truman comes not from the elements that logically might be expected to oppose his nomination but from those which by every rule of reason should support him. Sat. 4-3-48

Certainly he deeply distressed conservative and anti-New Deal Democrats when he vetoed the Taft-Hartley bill; when he came out strongly for the so-called "civil rights," including that Fair Employment Practices Act which has so enraged the South; when he delivered his State-of-the-Union message in which he went so far to the left on social and spending legislation; when he failed to give encouragement to the effort to reduce the size and cost of bureaucracy.

However it is difficult to see in any of this—or in anything else Mr. Truman has done—an excuse for the vicious and vociferous attempt to murder him now being made by the worshipful followers of the late Mr. Roosevelt. On the contrary, the course Mr. Truman has followed should have especially endeared him to these. For, without exception, every policy he has is a Roosevelt policy. Not one is original with him. Undoubtedly, most of them, such as the civil-rights proposals and his support of the C.I.O. bosses, are unsound economically, demagogic politically and doubtful constitutionally. None the less, they are Roosevelt policies and as such were enthusiastically advocated by the very New Deal politicians, columnists and commentators who today are trying to cut his throat, hypocritically alleging that he has "abandoned the Roosevelt policies."

Look At the Charges

This is so transparently false that one wonders at the effrontery of those who charge it. Actually, the only two things alleged by these screeching anti-Trumanites which can be even measurably sustained are (1) that he has failed to keep in his Administration certain notorious New Dealers, notably James M. Landis; (2) that he reversed himself on the Palestine issue. So far as the first is concerned, it is true Mr. Truman made no effort to retain a number of these self-advertised statesmen, but in most cases there were adequate reasons for not doing so. In the case of Mr. Landis, it was a kindness to him that Mr. Truman "took the rap" without publicly proclaiming them. As to the second, Mr. Truman's original advocacy of Palestine partition was politically inspired by a desire to hold the big New York Jewish vote upon which the machine politicians count so heavily. That was not an admirable action. But later, when he realized his mistake and was convinced by the State Department and the Secretary of Defense that the national security was imperiled, he reversed himself. And that was an admirable action—nonpolitical and courageous. Sat 4-3-48

Whatever Mr. Truman's deficiencies, it seems plain he is getting very shabby treatment from a group with a very poor case against him. Particularly mean is the yapping of the Roosevelt brothers, Franklin, Jr., and Elliott. The first, trading on his father's name, is ambitious to become Governor of New York. He always plays close to the machine bosses locally and the C.I.O. bosses nationally. The other is an unsavory specimen whose money-raising activities, promoted by his father, have done more to besmirch the latter's reputation than any other single thing. As for Mrs. Roosevelt, when she left for England she was "neutral." Recently some of her self-appointed spokesmen declare she will "stand by her sons," that she is a very great woman whom millions love and follow. Perhaps so, but there are others who regard her as a very dull, self-righteous and tiresome person, and who will certainly go in the opposite direction.

Ike Will Not Be Lured

It seems exceedingly unlikely that this drum-beating, anti-Truman drive will alter the conviction of General Eisenhower that a Presidential nomination is something he distinctly does not want—especially one from a party not his own and engineered by individuals whom he does not highly esteem. Clearly, the sort of "draft" now suggested is one in which he would have to connive. Few believe that after his unequivocal statement he could be induced to do anything remotely savoring of stultification. It is incredible that he would permit himself to be used by persons whose motives are so completely transparent and so wholly selfish. In brief, it is unlikely General Eisenhower can be played for a sap.

Of course, it is possible Mr. Truman may be frightened by the kind of publicity the people behind this drive are able to command. But those who know him best do not think so. One reason is that he is not the sort of man to be scared out of a fight just because the odds are against him. Another is that certainly he will lose more self-respect and go down in history as a more shoddy character if he quits under this kind of fire than if he stands up and takes his licking no matter how bad it may be. Hoover, Landon and William H. Taft all gained in public esteem through defeat.

Still another reason is that there may be a change of political scenery before next November. In 1946 Mr. Truman's prestige was so low that a demand was made that he resign. In six months he was running ahead in the popularity polls. This is not to say Mr. Truman can duplicate that performance. Things look worse for him now than they did then, But it is possible. In any event, under existing circumstances, his stupidity in allowing this gang to ditch him would be exactly equal to the stupidity of the Democratic Party in doing the ditching. Their fortunes are inseparably linked. In tearing down Mr. Truman all these snorting "liberals" can do is to make a bad situation worse.

Committeewoman Quits, To Fight Against 'Rights'

NATCHEZ, Miss., March 10—(AP)—Mrs. William Kendall resigned Monday night as Mississippi's national Democratic committeewoman. An official of the "Jeffersonian" Democrats said she would direct women's activities for that organization. Wed. 3-11-48

Mrs. Kendall did not mention President Truman's civil rights program in her resignation. She said she had served for 12 years and felt that was long enough.

W. W. Wright, chairman of the campaign committee of Democrats working against Mr. Truman's program, said the committee felt Mrs Kendall was well suited to carry on the work outlined by Gov. Fielding Wright. Wright touched off the anti-Truman insurrection in January, when he took issue with racial features of the civil rights proposals. Wed. 3-11-48

SOME CYNICISM

348

Editor, The Advertiser:

I have watched with some cynicism The Advertiser's stand on the "revolt" of the Southern Democrats over the civil rights program sponsored by the ill-fated Mr. Truman. Montgomery Advertiser

When the revolt was first spoken about by various members of the Southern Democratic Party The Advertiser welcomed it with (if not wide open arms) warm cordiality. About the same time that Senator Hill announced that he would support Mr. Truman for reelection I noticed that The Advertiser's sentiments concerning the "revolt" became downright frigid. Montgomery, Ala

The Advertiser seems to take the attitude that since some part of the program advocated by Mr. Truman will be enacted by the Republican Congress that the Southern Democrats should unite to try to preserve the Democratic Party.

Due to our proportional representation system the minority groups in this country have assumed political significance out of proportion to their size which means that if either party wishes to gain their support some sort of civil rights legislation must be enacted. If, to preserve the Democratic Party, it would be necessary for Southern Democrats to swallow their pride and meekly accept the civil rights legislation suggested by Mr. Truman, then the cost for preservation of the party is too great. Sun 3-28-48

I have watched with bated breath the "revolt" of Southern Democrats, hoping that some person of political significance would come up with the idea of using the Southern Democrats as the nucleus of a nationwide, truly conservative party which would be able to gain the support of every true conservative in the nation whether he is a Democrat or Republican. The Democratic Party is in chaos and the Republican Party for all its outward show of unity is torn by inner dissensions between conservatives, liberals and isolationists. Surely no more opportune moment could be found for forming a new party in this country on the ruins of the two old ones.

HILL FOR PRESIDENT

Editor, The Advertiser:

Recently I read in The Advertiser an article on Lister Hill's stand on the Democratic Party's controversy over the equal rights, etc., legislation sponsored by President Truman. As a native Montgomerian, allow me to express my admiration for Senator Hill, whom I have known since boyhood. The Advertiser

He is seeing far ahead of most of the Southern Democrats in realizing that the disruption of the party means its political death. Lister Hill is showing the fine courage and far-sightedness characteristic of him in still recognizing President Truman as the Democratic Party chief, but at the same time he will fight the equal rights bill just as hard as any other Southern Democrat will.

However, Senator Hill is not bound by any tradition or obligation to support President Truman for the nomination at the Democratic National Convention. If I am correct only two presidents who succeeded to the presidency from the vice-presidency have received the nomination of their party for the next full term and they were both Republicans, namely Teddy Roosevelt and Calvin Coolidge. Three others, Johnson, Tyler and Arthur and possibly another who was elevated to the presidency did not get the nomination again. Montgomery, Ala.

After all where would the Democrats find a better candidate for the presidency than Lister Hill himself? Wed.

Let's hear of the Alabama newspapers starting a boom for Senator Hill for president and give less publicity to a certain other State offical who is ballyhooing himself for the nomination. 3-17-48

Editor, The Advertiser: The Advertiser

I really feel sorry for some of the older men who, like myself, have voted the Democratic ticket always. It's hard to realize that the dear old party we once knew passed out of existence with the election of President Roosevelt.

You see many of us were reared to think that a Southern man who voted a Republican ticket should black his face and live with the Negroes, for then every Negro North and South was a Republican, at least at heart. Wed

The situation is reverse now: They are Roosevelt-Hill-Truman-Democrat-socialist-Communist or whatever they may be.

As strange as it seems the Republican Party has become the white man's party of the Nation and the hope of the white South, and the only bulwark against Socialism and Communism. 3-17-48

We are probably witnessing the dying struggles of the New Deal with all its deception and corruption. Also the breaking up of the Solid South. But there is one thing I'm sure we can depend on: There will be two parties in the South and it won't be the old Democratic Party. It's dead, like our Confederate ancestors.

Forest Home, Ala. R. C. RIVES.

Montgomery, Ala.

The "Democratic Party passed out of existence with the election of Roosevelt"? Alabama voted solidly for Roosevelt four times. But Roosevelt would have been elected all four times entirely without the Solid South. The South does not own the Democratic Party. During the Civil War, with the South abstaining, there were more Democrats in Congress than before the war.—Ed.

South Should Fight For Rights, John Nance Garner Declares

The Advertiser

Montgomery, Ala.

WASHINGTON, March 11.—(AP)—John Nance Garner says the South should stand up for its rights "instead of merely trying to stop something." Fri.

"I did not like the two-thirds rule for nominations in the Democratic party conventions," he says. "The power that rule gave the South was negative. The South should stand up for its rights affirmatively." 3-12-48

(This rule, which some Southern leaders again demand, enabled the South to block unwanted candidates.)

The former vice-president, 79, and in retirement, spoke out through a biographer; Bascom N. Timmons, writing in Collier's Magazine.

These are more of his comments, as quoted by Timmons:

"I see no reason why there should be a depression at any time in the near future."

"Washington always has to have its kitty. Somewhere between the taxpayer and the ultimate use to which his money is to be put Washington extracts roughly 15 per cent. That goes for what is called 'administration'." The Advertiser

"The presidential and vice-presidential nominees should be of like philosophy but the presidential nominee should not select his running mate." Montgomery, Ala

"The country knows better what to do for itself than Washington knows what to do for it. In Washington we tried everything in the economic cookbook, and eventually everything worked around to big spending. That was the only rabbit left in the hat."

"The best laws on our statute books have been put there by intelligent compromise — compromise not on fundamentals or basic principles but compromise on details." He said that was "one thing Franklin Roosevelt could not understand." Fri 3-12-48

Delta State Democrats Conduct Bolt Meeting; Rankin Lauds Move

348

JACKSON, MISS., Feb. 11.—(AP) — Mississippi legislators will focus attention Thursday on a statewide meeting here of Democrats called in protest against the national party.

They plan to sit with the delegates from their constituent congressional districts at the meeting.

Governor Fielding S. Wright hopes that as a result of the meeting Mississippi will take "militant leadership" in a break with the national party over its continued sponsorship of what he calls "anti-Southern" legislation. 2-12-48

The statewide meeting will precede a similar multi-state gathering to which he plans to invite Democrats particularly from the South. The meeting will be held in March.

His plans for both meetings have been endorsed by the legislature in resolutions.

But his proposal for a Southwide meeting, made at a Southern governors' conference last week, got no support from other chief executives. Thur

Negroes Assemble

President Truman's recent urging of legislation based on the recommendations of his civil rights committee prompted the governor to seek statewide and Southwide action against the national party. 2-12-48

On the eve of Thursday's meeting, approximately 100 Negroes assembled from many parts of the state endorsed President Truman's civil rights program.

They also asked Governor Wright to appoint an inter-racial committee to work toward equalization of opportunities for Negroes.

Percy Greene, Negro editor of a Jackson weekly newspaper, presided at the meeting. In a keynote address he said:

"The greatest question in the nation today is the Negro question. And I will say now that this nation will not remain one-half one thing and one-half another. We have all to stand together as one to achieve democracy." Montgomery, Ala.

The Negro meeting was called a week ago principally to discuss improving Negro schools. The call said that the governor and legislature would be petitioned to effect the improvements.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.—(AP)—Rep. Rankin (D), Mississippi, said Wednesday that the South now confronts its greatest danger since reconstruction days.

His view was expressed in a telegram to Governor Fielding Wright, of Mississippi.

Rankin said he cannot attend a meeting of Mississippi Democrats Thursday at Jackson, called to consider what should be done about President Truman's civil rights program. The Advertiser

"I have carried on this fight here against these un-American and anti-Southern policies for years," Rankin told the governor. "It has been at times a most discouraging battle, and I am glad to have the governor and the legislature of my state, join us in this battle to save our sacred institutions from destruction and to guarantee that the white man's civilization shall not perish from the earth."

The Dallas and Pickens County Democratic Executive Committees urged Wednesday selection of a Democratic presidential nominee who would uphold "the traditions of the South."

At Selma, the Dallas committee adopted a resolution specifically opposing President Truman's recent civil liberties recommendations. Thurs

It also urged Alabama delegates to the national convention to cast their votes for a nominee pledged against any platform including the civil liberties proposals of the president.

Copies of the resolution were sent to all Alabama members of Congress, Gov. James E. Folsom, and Gesser T. McCorvey, Mobile, chairman of the State Democratic committee. 2-12-48

South Carolina Democratic Party Misses The Boat

It appears that the Democratic party of South Carolina was determined to muff the opportunity presented to it by the East Dillon club's election of eight Negroes as delegates to the county convention. 34d

And it did. The Dillon convention, accepting the advice of the state party officials, ruled that the eight Negroes were ineligible for the reason that they were not enrolled members of the East Dillon club, which, of course, they were not.

As a result the party may face another suit to contest this exclusion—a suit that could have been avoided and should have been. Columbia, S.C.

It may be agreed that the party rules should have included some provision declaring that the enrolment books for the previous primary shall constitute the membership list for the reorganization of the precinct clubs. Otherwise the party, starting from scratch each general election year, has no guarantee that the Republicans or the Wallaceites or the Socialists will not invade one of the club meetings and take over. State Chairman W. P. Baskin was thinking right from a long-range point of view.

But there is no rule which now requires that a person attending the organization meetings and elected as a delegate to the county or state conventions be an enrolled voter in the previous primary. The rule will have to be written at the state convention. It should be. Thurs. 5-6-48

In the meanwhile the requirements for primary voting and for attendance upon the organization meetings of the clubs are identical. If Negroes can be permitted to vote in the Columbia municipal primary—and they were—despite the fact that they were not enrolled, they could have been permitted to attend the Dillon convention by election of the white members of the East Dillon club despite the fact that they were not enrolled for the last primary. After all there is a party rule that requires voters in the primary to be enrolled; and there is none that requires the delegates to the county convention to be enrolled voters in the previous primary.

It would have been nothing new for Negroes to attend a Democratic convention in South Carolina. It is even nothing new for Negroes to vote in the Democratic primary in South Carolina.

The Negro Democrats of South Carolina made no effort to attend the club meetings and they should be congratulated for their restraint. What the state executive committee feared when it set up the nonexistent rule that a person must be an enrolled voter to participate in the organization meetings of any club was the mass invasion of the club meetings by others than Democrats. It proved to be a groundless fear. Only eight Negroes showed up in the state and these were at the East Dillon club meeting, which accepted them and elected them delegates to the county convention.

This was, as The Record has said, a wise decision, demonstrating, had it been allowed to stand, that the Democratic party of South Carolina was now ready to accept the decision of the supreme court, as it must. It would have been the proof that there is now no discrimination because of race or color in or by the Democratic party of South Carolina. The Record

It could have been so easily done, at no risk. But instead the party moguls elected to play the role of John L. Lewis and to defy both the party rules and the court. And in so doing they made the Dillon county party, the innocent victims of a state decision, liable for an action for contempt of court. Columbia, S.C.

Now the Negro Democrats, abandoning their restraint, are talking about action in the courts to contest the exclusion of the eight Negro delegates. They should postpone any such plans. Their first idea was the sounder one. They should allow a little time for the South Carolina Democrats to adjust their thinking to the new day. The East Dillon club was ahead of the pack in South Carolina, but it wasn't too far ahead—if the politicians, who have a vested interest in the status quo, can be shunted aside. Thurs. 5-6-48

Mixture Of Courage And Tmidity Is Democratic Party

The South Carolina Democratic party at its state convention in Columbia distinguished itself for a curious admixture of both courage and timidity.

Facing up to the issue created by the national party's abandonment of the traditional Democratic idea of state rights—there was a tendency in the convention oratory to lay all of the blame for this fact upon Harry Truman although Truman is not primarily responsible and some South Carolina Democrats are due some blame since they joined Franklin D. Roosevelt in the combination of state rights' slaughter and surrender that was the New Deal—the convention sternly set itself against President Harry Truman and all those who think like him, decided to bolt the Democratic party should Truman or any other like-minded person be nominated and to name electors who if selected to represent the state will cast their votes for someone else than the Democratic nominee.

From the resounding keynote address by Senator George Warren of Hampton repudiating the Truman leadership of the party to the fiery speech by Governor J. Strom Thurmon in support of the resolution to serve notice upon the national Democratic party that South Carolina Democrats will not be in the bag for Truman or any other supporter of his misnamed civil rights program the delegates were practically unanimous in their determination to accept no compromise on the state rights or civil rights issue. Columbia, S.C.

"We will fight them here today," Senator Warren said, referring to the national party leadership. "We will fight them in the national convention. We will fight them in the general election and in the electoral college. . . . Fri. 5-21-48

"The questions at issue are not matters of bigotry or prejudice. Never in American history has constitutional government been in greater danger than it is today."

Former Representative Miller H. Millette of Clarendon county tried to put in a word of caution when the resolution to instruct the delegates against Truman was under consideration but Senator R. M. Kennedy of Kershaw would have nothing of the compromise idea. He recognized that to pass the resolution might result in the party's delegates not being seated at the Philadelphia convention, but if this was to be so then let it be; it would be notice to the South Carolina Democrats that the party was bolting from them.

"This is the honest method," he said, "and there is no step more wholesome for the South. We have no place in the Truman party. If we haven't the courage or brains enough to confront it, for God's sake let's stop talking about it."

And to this stern and unrelenting course the convention held. If the national Democratic party sticks to the Truman program—every person at the state convention expected it to do so—the South Carolina Democratic party will sever its connections with it and go off somewhere else. 5-21-48

The convention, however, somewhat inconsistently maintained contact with the national Democratic party by naming Governor J. Strom Thurmond as national committeeman and Mrs. Anne Agnew as national committee woman.

And facing the requirement of the federal courts that Negroes be permitted to vote in the Democratic primaries the party forgot Senator Warren's ringing phrase—"The questions at issue are not matters of bigotry or prejudice"—and allowed the Negroes only qualified participation in the primary. The Record

Any white person, 21 years of age who subscribed to the Democratic party principles and meets the residential requirements and is able to read and write and interpret the constitution of South Carolina, may enroll on the party club roll and may, if he takes the oath required of all voters, vote in the primary.

Negroes, however, must be qualified electors in order to vote and must therefore be capable of meeting the qualifications for registration and must even present their registration certificates. They are not to be permitted to enroll as Democrats and are not to be allowed to have any part in the formulation of party policy, to which, if they desire to vote, they must commit themselves. Apparently even they are to be denied the right to be candidates for the Democratic nomination. Columbia, S.C.

Senator W. Brantley Harvey of Beaufort, chairman of the rules committee, frankly told the convention that he anticipates further court action as the result of this attempt to maintain party control in the hands of the whites, exclusively, and to set up the Negro Democrats in a segregated group outside the party, proper.

He will, of course, get it almost immediately. The Negro leaders, who backed the original suit, have only to go to Judge J. Waites Waring and ask him to modify his order to cover the new discrimination and to make clear, as the language of his original decision did not, that he had meant that the Negroes had to be admitted to the party on the same basis as whites, which is, as everybody knows, what his decision actually meant. Fri. 5-21-48

Already the plans for such a new court action are being laid. These will, of course, succeed and probably before the primary can be held. Neither Judge Waring nor the circuit court of appeals nor the supreme court intended anything but that the right to vote in the primary as in the general election should be put on the basis of parity.

The attempt to set the Negroes apart in a segregationed party and at the same time to confer upon them a sort of second-rate franchise is doomed to failure. And those of the party members who can think logically know it.

There was only one proper course for the party to take. And that was to grant the right of participation in the primary to the Negroes on the same basis that it is granted to whites.

It would have been better and more courageous and magnanimous for the party to have done it this way, instead of seizing upon Judge Waring's use of the word "qualified elector" to honor the letter of his decision while violating the spirit of it.

Why Should Democratic Leaders Invite Damage Suits?

Before the club meetings were held, before the county conventions, before the state convention and since The Record has labored with logic in a vain, so far, attempt to bring the leaders of the Democratic (Politicians') party of South Carolina to adopt a sensible attitude in the face of the federal court decisions, granting Negro Democrats the right to participate in the Democratic primary.

By their recalcitrant policy, it has pointed out, they are defeating the purposes of the white Democrats in South Carolina. They are telling the Negroes of South Carolina that they cannot get what the federal courts declare they are entitled to unless they vote in such numbers as to take over control in the counties where the Negroes are in the majority. And they are trying to make the South Carolina Democratic party play the role of John L. Lewis in defying the spirit and, their claims to the contrary, the letter of the federal court decisions. Tues. 6-1-48

And there is a moral for them to be drawn from the experience of John L. Lewis, which, it did not seem to The Record, it was necessary to point out to men capable of reading. It is that pursuing such a course, even when you have the Shakespearean vocabulary and the eyebrows of Lewis, is fraught with danger. Columbia, S.C.

John L. Lewis and his Mine Workers' union paid considerable fines to learn the lesson that the power of the federal courts and the system of law and order in the United States is greater than that of any labor union, even the United Mine Workers. The federal courts are also more powerful than the Democratic party of South Carolina. The Record

If Judge J. Waites Waring decides that this new scheme of the Democratic party to avoid complying with the spirit of his decision amounts to contempt of court he can try those of the defendants in the Elmore case who have participated in the formation of this new policy for contempt of court. And contempt cases are not heard by a jury. They can result in fines or imprisonment. Columbia, S.C.

The party leaders are also ignoring the fact that the original Elmore case was a suit for damages. The Negro leaders, backing the action, sidetracked the damage action in order to concentrate on the real issue, the issue of Negro participation in the primaries. If they were allowed this the damages could be forgotten and a new start could be made. It was a generous gesture, which should have been met in the same spirit, as it was not. 6-1-48

In Georgia last week eight Negroes filed suit in federal court, asking damages of $55,000 of each of 11 defendants and $20,000 in attorneys' fees—a total of $625,000. Their complaint is directed at Superior Court Judge Earl Camp, State Representative Herschel and the members of the Laurens county board of registrars and the Laurens county commission, whom they charge with removing the names of 1,800 Laurens county Negroes from the registration rolls. Tues.

And similiar damage suits could be brought in South Carolina. The Democratic party leaders of South Carolina are inviting them. And they should not.

State Democratic Party Faces Momentuous Decision

The Democratic party of South Carolina, the leaders of which are planning to take it off nowhere if the Democrats nominate Harry Truman, as they probably will, meets today for its biennial convention.

Of all the conventions of the Democratic party ever held in South Carolina this convention will be the best-talked-over-before-it-is-put-on convention in the state's history.

The last executive committee, a hang-over from the previous convention of two years ago which curiously indorsed Harry Truman, has been working hard and late behind closed doors to lay the plans for the new convention. A rules sub-committee also a creature of the hang-over executive committee, has been busy working on plans to amend the party rules to adjust them to the federal court decisions, holding that Negroes, heretofore in recent years denied this right, may vote in the Democratic primary.

And banking upon these preparations for the convention Senator W. P. Baskin, who will be a candidate to succeed himself as state chairman, predicts a "very harmonious convention." Columbia, S.C.

"Now is no time for the Democrats of the state to get divided among themselves," he declares. Wed. 5-19-48

But this is simply whistling in the wind. There are plenty of controversial matters to come before the convention and if the opinions of the voters of South Carolina as contrasted with the opinions of the office-holders govern the convention the hang-over plans for the party, as so far revealed, will get a rather severe jolt.

There is, for example, a proposal to advance the date of the Democratic primaries and to shorten the enrolment period on the theory that somehow the Negroes will not enroll in this brief period and will not vote. Most of the Negroes of South Carolina, like most of the whites, would not vote under any circumstances. They are not interested in the franchise for one reason or another. There is no reason, therefore, for the Democratic party to lose its nerve and attempt any such cowardly device. It should go ahead as usual with the primaries and with enrolment, as the executive committee by a two-vote margin decided last night.

Under the federal court decisions there is only one logical course for the party to adopt. It is to admit Negroes to the party primaries and to the party membership. It is the one legal course and any attempt to evade it may result in the punishment of the party leaders for contempt of court. And if it doesn't result in this the Negroes of the state, viewing the attempt for what it is, will have a real reason to vote in substantial numbers. For they will have the demonstration that the Negroes of South Carolina cannot get the rights the courts say they are entitled to have without actually controlling the elections, where they can control them. This, of course, is exactly what the South Carolina politicians, who are in charge of the party machinery, do not want. But they are defeating their own purposes. And playing with fire.

Yet there is some talk about admitting Negroes to vote and not admitting them to party membership, that is admitting only those Negroes who are "qualified electors," those who have registered. How Negroes may be allowed to vote and not allowed to participate in party affairs when the qualifications for voting and for party membership are identical is something that hasn't been explained. Nor has anyone explained how one set of qualifications can be set up for Negroes and another for whites without violating the clear intent of the court decisions. If the general election qualifications are applied for Negroes they must be applied also for whites. The Record

The rank and file of the delegates to the state convention had better do some thinking for themselves and for the state and the Democratic party. They must do it if any thinking is to be done.

And the Democratic party of South Carolina desperately needs some real thinking, thinking that is divorced from the thinking of the politicians who believe they have a vested right in the jobs they hold and do not want this right disturbed.

It needs thinking that will honestly face up to the situation created by the court decisions, thinking that will with courage and in fairness and justice turn aside from all the schemes to get around the decisions—every such scheme will end up in failure or worse—and do what needs to be done now. Columbia, S.C.

Why should the Democratic party of South Carolina find itself forced to run around like a hound dog with a can tied to his tail seeking a way not to do what every member of the party, every party leader knows must be done—if not today, then tomorrow? Wed. 5-19-48

Democratic Party Paved The Way For Own Unseating

The Progressive Democratic party, organized by the Negro Democrats excluded from the white Democratic primary but not confined to Negroes, is confidently predicting that its 28 delegates to the national Democratic convention at Philadelphia will be seated. Columbia, S.C.

And it may turn out so, or a proportion of them may be seated. For the Progressive Democrats have some logic on their side. Wed. 6-2-48

They are the only South Carolina Democratic party, so far at least, that actually gives the Negro Democrats of South Carolina a voice in party affairs, allows them to participate in the choice of delegates to the national convention.

The regular Democratic party had its chance. It could have honestly and squarely faced the issue created by the federal court decisions and admitted Negroes to full membership, as many of the party members, their voices ignored by the politicians in charge, advised.

This course, eventually, will have to be followed and every one of the politicians—their eyes apparently on just one more election in which they can be returned to office—know this as well as anybody else.

Had this been done, as it ought to have been done, the Progressive Democratic party could have been disbanded. The one regular Democratic party could have represented both whites and Negroes.

It even appeared in the beginning as if this were to be the result. Negroes attended one of the club meetings, as the party were elected delegates to the Dillon county convention by the votes of the white majority at the club meeting.

And, if they had been seated at the convention, the party could have claimed that it represented in the state convention both whites and Negroes. This small group of Dillon Negro Democrats, it could have been explained, were the only Negroes who took the trouble to attend the club meetings.

But the party in violation of its own rules refused to seat the Negro delegates at Dillon and at the state convention it completed the job by declaring that the Negroes should not be eligible for membership and might therefore have no voice in the selection of the Democratic nominee for the presidency, the highest federal office. Wed.

At Philadelphia it will be caught in the trap of its own foolishness. The party leaders will try to make a great hullabaloo about how the regular white Democrats are being pushed aside to curry favor with the Negroes or to give representation to some other white Democratic group, admitting Negroes to full participation, such as is proposed to be organized in the state, favoring the nomination of Harry Truman. But the national Democratic credentials committee can reply simply that it cannot recognize the South Carolina Democratic (Politicians') party delegates simply because the party is not organized and set up on any legal basis, is, in fact, illegally constituted and therefore no party. 8-3-48

And what can the South Carolina Democratic (Politicians') party leaders say in reply?

Democratic (South Carolina)

Then Why Hold It?

The Democratic party of Columbia, limited, of course, to white Democrats, is undertaking to raise $8,000 for the expenses of the city primary campaign. The Record

So far the fund raising efforts have produced something like $300, according to latest announcements; the sum raised may have grown since this announcement was made, but there has been no public report of it, if it has. Jue. 2-17-48

If the Democrats of Columbia do not value the primary any more than this seems to indicate why have a primary? Why spend $8,000 for something that the voters do not think is worth more than $300, if that is what they value it at?

There is the general election, which is the real election, in which two city councilmen could be named this year, in which after all they will be named. Columbia S. C.

Laurens Suggests

Eugene S. Blease of Newberry, former chief justice of the supreme court of South Carolina, speaking at Laurens, declared his opposition to the development in South Carolina of the two-party system. Record Columbia S. C.

He is apparently in favor of the establishment in South Carolina and perhaps elsewhere in the South of a third, splinter "party of principle" to which persons subscribing to the "principles" of race segregation and the "customs and ways of life in South Carolina" could belong. Sat.

The creation of such a party, with the state still adhering to the one-party or no-party system, would reduce the influence of South Carolina in national affairs to something less than zero. We would be fair game for both parties. would be the party that could never win national election and it would be treated as such.

The Democrats of Laurens, who heard Mr. Blease, apparently did not go along with him. Instead they favored three measures, one of which—the Austrialian ballot for general elections—looks to the erection of two parties in South Carolina while one of the others apparently contemplates action within the party in opposing the renomination of Harry Truman. 3-13-48

The third Laurens suggestion is the proposal that the General Assembly of South Carolina, without waiting for a special session, "take immediate steps" to safeguard the primary by law with more definite qualifications for voting.

Every one of the three suggestions is sound and they were every one of them sound before President Truman sounded off on civil rights for vote-getting purposes. Sat.

S. C. Committee Spurns Demos 'Cool-Off' Period

Constitution, Atlanta, Ga.

Jue. 2-10-48

While other Southerners fussed and fumed over President Truman's proposed civil rights law, a county Democratic Executive Committee in South Carolina Thursday walked out of the party, spurning the 40-day "cooling-off" period provided in the Southern Governors' resolution.

At the same time, Democratic National Chairman Howard McGrath repudiated reports that he would center his speech on "Civil Rights" when he addresses the Jackson-Jefferson Day Dinner in Atlanta March 5. Constitution, Atlanta

Another development on the Civil Rights front found two Georgia Congressmen, Reps. Steve Pace, of Americus, and Sidney Camp, of Newnan, firing at the President's Civil Rights program in Washington. Ga.

Although the secession movement proposed for the South failed to materialize during the Southern Governors Conference at Tallahassee over the week-end, the Jasper County (Ridgeland), S. C., Democratic Executive Committee voted to secede Monday. It called a county convention for Feb. 23 to secede formally from the National Party, asserting that it "holds the South in slavery."

"If there are any free people left in the South, they ought to go into mourning for those 40 days," said County Chairman H. Klugh Purdy. "The 40-day ultimatum by which the Governors hope to wring concessions from the administration on the Civil Rights program is the same as slaves trying to wring concessions from their masters." 2-10-48

Chairman McGrath, in commenting on reports that he would hit Dixie's "sore spot" when he speaks in Atlanta, told The Constitution's Washington Bureau:

"I have accepted an invitation to address the dinner celebration arranged by Georgia Democratic leaders for March 5 and I expect to go. The subject of my talk has not been decided, but it will be in keeping with the friendly spirit of co-operation in which the invitation was extended.

Party national headquarter officials said McGrath could be relied upon to "exercise good manners and not pick a fight."

Rep. Camp characterized major points in the Civil Rights program as "a dangerous intrusion of private rights." He said the Truman proposal for establishment a Federal Fair Employment Practice Commission would absolutely demoralize industrial relations in Georgia and other Southern states.

"I deplored the fact that our Party has to come out and express itself on issues of this kind," Camp said. "The FEPC is one of the most dangerous intrusions of private rights ever conceived. Anti-lynching legislation has been introduced in Congress for forty years. It is the opinion that all thoughtful men of Congress that bills like this and the FEPC and anti-poll tax law are nconstitutional. Jue. 2-10-48

In a speech on the floor of the House, Rep. Pace charged that the President was placing political preferment above the welfare and loyalty of the the South. He said the hour is drawing near when the people of the section "must counsel among themselves upon a future course of action."

"We of the South had thought that our cherished traditions and the right of the people in each state to conduct its own affairs would be guarded and protected by the leaders of our own Party," Pace said. 'That our confidence was misplaced can no longer be questioned."

In Washington, another Southern Congressman, Rep. Harris, Democrat, Arkansas, asked President Truman to refrain from further insistence on enactment of the civil rights program, cautioning that ignoring of such a great segment of the Democratic Party (Southern Democrats) could well cause another revolt in many States.

Presidential Press Sec. Charles Ross, however, denied a prediction by one of Mr. Truman's Congressional advisers that the administration would retreat a little on the Civil Rights program. The source had predicted Mr. Truman would not insist upon legislation to end segregation on railroads and other interstate transportation. Sen. Eastland, Democrat, Mississippi, declared that if Southerners stand together they can deny the Democratic Presidential nomination to anyone who opposes their views on civil rights.

By withholding its electoral votes, the South can defeat in 1948 any Democratic candidate, Eastland told the Senate in a speech blasting the Truman proposals. Jue. 2-10-48

'United Against Rights,' Says S. C. Party Head

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9—(AP) State Democratic Chmn. W. P. Baskin, of South Carolina, said Monday night, "South Carolina Democrats are united to fight for the fundamental traditions of the South." Atlanta, Ga.

Baskin told a reporter he conferred Monday with Sens. Maybank and Johnston, South Carolina Democrats, about "what to do." He said he will talk things over Tuesday with other members of Congress from his State.

He said that before he left South Carolina he called a meeting of the State Democratic Executive Committee for Mar. 1 in Columbia "to determine the future course of the Party." 2-10-48

The Committee, with one representative from each of the 46 counties plus the National Democratic Committeewoman, Mrs. C. L. Wheeler, of Dillon, and the National Committeeman, Sen. Johnston, is the policy-making body of the Party between conventions," he commented.

"We will have a full and generous discussion," of recent events affecting our State and our State Democratic Party, including (1) the President's civil rights program, (2) the decision of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals at Baltimore, Md., allowing Negroes to vote in our State Primary." Constitution

He said the next State Convention is set for May 19 but the Executive Committee might decide to call one earlier. Plans for elections will be completed then, he said.

Florence Democrats Back Mr. Truman

Daily World Atlanta, Ga.

FLORENCE, S. C. — Florence County Progressive Democrats went on record as favoring the nomination of President Harry S. Truman and backing the civil rights program at a largely attended county convention in the Community Center of Creves street here Tuesday night. Sat.

County Chairman L. M. Green of Lake City who presided, said practically every precinct in the county was represented. The motion to back President Truman as party nominee in 1948 was made by the Rev. W. A. ohnson of Effingham.

Following a discussion of business, delegates to the State Progressive Democratic Convention on May 26 in the Columbia Township Auditorium were elected. 5-22-48

DISCUSS CIVIL RIGHTS

President Truman's Civil Rights program was discussed at length. It was brought out that his program "was one built on absolute Christian principles, and that there can be no government for the people, and by the people, unless the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of Man be fully recognized; that there can be no democracy, no universal peace, without God; that the Civil Rights program does not do away with States Rights, but gives to its citizens a States Rights program; that God will be pleased with in that it includes all races or groups, without regards to color."

POLITICAL ANCIENTS ON THE WAY OUT

Columbia, S.C.

To the Editor of The Record:

I cannot resist the impulse to write and congratulate you on your editorials of June 1 and June 2. In every one you wrote with dynamic courage. I especially enjoyed your exposure of the duplicity of Czar Jeffries, and I sincerely hope that when he carries his battle to the users of power directly he will be ignominiously defeated as he ought to be. Mon.

But the most provocative sentiment of your editorials is that of the recent action of the Democratic party in South Carolina, so aptly parenthetically called by you the "Politicians" party, and that organization's stand against the voting of Negroes. The action of the party is not only fraught with danger as you say in the light of the federal decisions, but fraught with dishonor in the minds of many democratic South Carolinians who prefer first to think of themselves as Americans and members of a great nation in which justice has a semblance of moral right. 6-7-48

The vital question is not segregation of the Negro; certainly as individuals we have the freedom to make that choice. The question is whether or not the Negro, by the volition of his fellow-southerner, will be allowed to participate in what Herbert Agar once called America's most explosive idea—equality. That means equality in the spirit of our law, equality at the bar of justice, equality in the democratic processes of government; he has now only equality in the spirit of the universe. If we had one man who would speak honestly as a candidate for any office on the issue, speak as you have written, that man could truly be called a statesman. I am firmly convinced that if tomorrow the pages of history accord to us of today any wisdom and courage in the things we do, it will be attributable to a few men like you and Mr. Beverly Herbert who will speak of the "common impulses of humanity" in solving our most difficult problem. Mon. 6-7-48

The action of Chairman Rice in calling the Democratic committee of Richland county into special session in conjunction with his letter to Senator Baskin in an effort to prevent an outright violation of the letter of the law is to be admired. If the erstwhile ancients continue to ask and demand by what authority such is done and win a victory on Robert's Rule of Order, let them take note that the people are getting sick of the politicians and the Politician's party, and the day is not distant when they will be forever unseated and South Carolina will take its place as an integrated 48th part of the United States of America. It Must Have Been Done Without Legal Advice

The more you study the new South Carolina plan for inviting action by the federal courts, as written into the party rules by the state Democratic convention last week, the more foolish and futile it appears.

It is described as complying with the letter of the opinion of Federal Judge Waring. It pretends to admit Negroes to the primary who may be "qualified electors," who are the class that Judge Waring said had to be admitted. But not one of these Negroes is to be allowed to vote unless he takes an oath subscribing to principles to which it may be assumed he does not agree and with the formulation of which he was allowed no voice. 5-24-48 Mon

The party leaders are trying to preserve the one party election system in South Carolina and at the same time set up the fiction that this one-party, even though it has embraced men of every type of thought and opinion, if not men of all races, can act also as one half of a non-existent two-party system. Columbia Record

The Democratic leaders should make up their mind what they want. If they want two parties in South Carolina then they should say so and eliminate from the party those persons who do not agree with the party declaration of principles—and there are some of the party leaders who do not subscribe to all of them—and allow these others to form their own party. And even under a two-party system the voters themselves would be allowed to make their own choice. They would not be disfranchised if they didn't want to subscribe to a hastily concocted declaration passed at a one-day party convention representing not the party members but the politicians.

But if they desire to maintain the Democratic party, so called, as the one-party in a one-party system then to comply with the order of Judge Waring they must admit Negroes to the primary when they have met the qualifications prescribed by the constitution without requiring them to take any oath of adherence to the party principles. The Record

And if they admit Negroes, how under the decision of Judge Waring which declares that there can be no discrimination on account of race or color, can they refuse to admit whites who may be registered voters, but not enrolled in the Democratic clubs, to vote in the primary? Columbia SC

Yet that is what the rules provide. A registered white voter, even though he be willing to take the oath prescribed by the party, cannot vote now as Negroes may vote. He must, in addition to meeting the registration requirements, also meet the enrolment requirements. This is discrimination against the whites. Mon

Such are the pitfalls that the party gets itself into when it tries to find a way to avoid the clear logic of the federal court decisions. It is well therefore that the convention did not adjourn, but only recessed. It will have to come back again to do what it should have done. 5-24-48

The Record cannot believe that the party had any legal advice in the course it is pursuing. Judge Waring in his first decision told the party that it was time for South Carolina to rejoin the union. The Record hesitates to think what he will say now when he is confronted with this new plan—if it is possible to call such muddled thinking a plan—but whatever it is it will be deserved.

Dillon Demonstrates Its High Wisdom

Eight Negroes attended the organization meeting of the East Dillon Democratic club and were elected as delegates from the club along with 34 whites to the county convention. Columbia S.C.

The motion to name all persons present as delegates to the county convention was made by Mrs. C .L. Wheeler, national committeewoman from South Carolina, and was carried with only four dissenting votes, A. D. Barnes, president of the club, said. Fri-4-30-48

But under instructions of W. P. Baskin state chairman, the attempt will be made to disqualify the eight Negroes when the convention meets. They were not, of course, enrolled voters heretofore and, Mr. Baskin holds, may not attend club meetings, not sit in the county convention.

President Barnes said that the East Dillon club will stand by its delegates and if they were challenged would insist that they be seated.

"They did not expect to be elected as delegates and made no such request," he said. "It was merely a generous gesture on the part of the people of East Dillon club who realize that the Negroes had a right to be where they were."

Actually it was more than this. It was wisdom of a high order, of which there is too little in South Carolina at any time and almost none in the protracted battle to keep ahead of the supreme court and to preserve the status quo for the benefit of the politicians. Fri 4-30-48

The Negro delegates ought to be seated in the Dillon convention and if the people of Dillon are allowed to make their own decision it may be assumed that they will be seated. There is no rule of the Democratic party that The Record knows of which requires a person attending the organization meeting to be an enrolled primary voter in the preceding primary, despite the statement of Mr. Baskin and his vague reference to Rule 4 which concerns special meetings of the clubs not the biennial reorganization meetings.

Rule 6 of the party rules sets forth the requirements for club membership:

"The qualification for membership in any any club of the party in this state . . . shall be as follows, viz.: The applicant for membership . . . shall be 18 years of age, or shall become so before the succeeding general election and be a white Democrat. He shall be a citizen of the United States and of this state, and shall be able to read or write, and interpret the constitution of this state. No person shall belong to any club . . . unless he has resided in the state two years and in the county six months prior to the succeeding general election and in the club district 60 days prior to the first primary . . . Fri Columbia Recor

And Rule 7(d) provides:

"No person shall be enrolled in any club or take part in any club meeting . . . or be elected a delegate to the county convention, except in the club district in which he resides." Columbia S.C.

The effect of the federal court decisions is to eliminate the word "white" in Rule 6. And with this word eliminated there is nothing to prevent the Negroes attending the Dillon convention. Fri 4-30-48

If the party rules had required, as State Chairman Baskin seems to think they do, that a person be an enrolled voter in the last primary before he may attend a club meeting the Negroes would have had much less difficulty in proving the continuity of the present Democratic party and the Democratic party, established by state law, which preceded it. This Mr. Baskin has argued was not so. He cannot now blow hot and cold at the same time.

And there is no doubt that under the federal court decisions, even if the primary be abolished, as the Charleston News and Courier proposes, that Negroes are entitled to attend the club meetings and to be elected delegates to the county and state conventions. Fri 4-30-48

The cue for the Dillon convention is to show the same generosity and wisdom that the East Dillon club showed, despite the ruling of the state chairman. The East Dillon club was right in its interpretation of the rules and its course was the wiser course. It is the sort of wisdom that South Carolina needs now to make the transition from the all-white primary to the mixed primary with the least friction and no untoward incidents.

South Carolinians In Favor Of Bolt

The Advertiser
Montgomery, Ala.

COLUMBIA, S. C.—(AP)—South Carolina Democrats voted Wednesday virtually to bolt the national party if President Truman is its nominee. Thurs

National convention delegates and electoral college nominees were instructed by resolution to withhold South Carolina support from the President or anyone else with "similar" civil rights views. 5-26-48

The biennial convention then nominated Gov. J. Strom Thurmond for President of the United States.

The state has eight electoral college votes.

Thurmond was selected the state party's candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination on a resolution offered from the floor by J. M. Moorer of Walterboro.

Its acclamation was unanimous.

A committee resolution further instructed the state's 20 national convention votes to be withheld, in any event, from President Truman.

It ordered the delegates to turn their backs also on any other nominee holding "similar" civil rights views to those expressed in President Truman's announced program.

Should Mr. Truman or some one else holding such views be the party nominee, the electoral college votes then would be cast at the direction of the state party executive committee. 5-27-48

Not since the state's votes went to Rutherford B. Hayes in 1877 has this state failed to support the national Democratic nominee.

S.C. DEMOCRATS LEAVE CONVENTION TO PREPARE FOR NAACP SUIT

July 15, 1948

Press Service of the N.A.A.C.P.
New York, N.Y.
Thur. 7-15-48

PHILADELPHIA, July 12.-- The majority of the South Carolina delegates who arrived here this week to attend the Democratic convention were forced to leave on the first day of the convention for Columbia, S.C., to prepare for their appearance in court July 16 to answer the NAACP charge that the Democratic Party in South Carolina is seeking to deprive Negro citizens of their right to vote.

William P. Baskin, Democratic chairman in South Carolina, said that a July 13 meeting was necessary to consider the order of Federal Judge J. Waties Waring, issued July 8, warning that Negroes must be allowed to enroll for the state Democratic primaries which will be held in August. This restraining order was issued after attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People filed suit on behalf of David Brown and other qualified Negro voters against officials of the Democratic Party in South Carolina who, the NAACP complaint alleged, sought to keep Negroes from voting by prohibiting any Negro from joining Democratic Party clubs, by requiring that every Negro upon registering present a general registration certificate, and by requiring every member of the Democratic Party to take an oath to uphold racial segregation and oppose federal fair employment practices legislation.

All members of the state Democratic executive committee and the chairmen of all counties except Richmond were named defendants in the NAACP suit.

LEGISLATURE SEEKERS REBEL

Five Quit Race After Waring's Oath Ruling

The Record
Columbia, S.C.

By the Associated Press

Five candidates for the South Carolina legislature have announced they won't run in the Democratic primaries. It was another Rebel yell against the party.

Three said yesterday they were withdrawing from the Democratic party and would run in the general election. The other two did not say whether they would run in November. All are from the Lowcountry.

Their withdawals came for two reasons:

The state party rule that candidates support the Truman-Barkley national ticket, and a federal court decision allowing Negroes to become members of the South Carolina Democratic party.

Out of next month's Democratic primary are two former House candidates from Charleston county and one Senate and two House candidates from Georgetown county.

Georgetown Trio

The names: T. Allen Legare, Jr., and Henry T. Gaud of Charleston, James B. Morison, Don V. Richardson and James B. Moore of Georgetown. Morison was the Senate candidate. The Georgetown men said they would offer in the general election.

Here are high points of their statements.

Morison: "The party that I announced in is no more. The principles are no longer the same. The oath as written requires me to vote for Truman. Thurmond (Gov. J. Strom Thurmond, presidential candidate Southern states' rights Democrats) is my governor and my leader."

Richardson: "I cannot subscribe to the oath or take the oath that is required of candidates in the Democratic party."

Moore: "I cannot subscribe to the principles and policies of the Demcrtaic party as it now exists. The Democratic party of my forefathers is no more."

'Walls Breached'

Legare: "By fiat of a federal court the walls of the Democratic party have been breached. The way has been paved for every individual ...of whatever real political adherence, Republican. Communist, or Progressive (Negro) Democrat, to enrol and override the will of the real Democrats of South Carolina"

Gaud said he would have a statement later.

CHARLESTON, July 21—In a stormy political day following Judge J. Waties Waring's order outlawing the state Democratic party's voting oath, two Charleston county candidates for the state legislature yesterday withdrew their names, the rest of the candidates were unable to reach an agreement, and the county executive committee urged a new state convention and voted to hold the primaries as scheduled.

Rep. T. Allen Legare, Jr., and Henry T. Gaud withdrew their names after a hectic meeting of the candidates had failed to reach any collective decision.

'Weird Ridiculous'

"For the first time since Reconstruction days our ballots are to be cast under federal supervision," Legare said. "If the ruling which has brought about this weird and ridiculous result is the law of the land, then we in America have truly reached the point when we need a new Magna Carta."

He ended by saying that the "great difficulty" is that there is not enough time to appeal Waring's decision and that the next general assembly must act firmly to prevent this situation again.

Different Now

Gaud withdrew because, he said, "It is a materially different primary than when we put up our names. Now every voter must take an oath to vote for President Truman."

He was referring to the section of Waring's order which forbids "any oath other than that the prospective voter meets the qualifications as an elector—and will support the nominees of the Democratic party ta the ensuing general election."

The county committee paradoxically voted to hold the primaries as scheduled, but also voted to call a new convention to consider the feasibility of holding the primaries

APPEAL ON NEGROES ADMISSION PLANNED

(The Associated Press)

Charleston, S. C., Aug. 14.—South Carolina Democrats are planning an appeal from the ruling of US District Judge J. Waties Waring ordering the admission of Negroes to the party.

34d

Robert McC. Figg, Jr., a party attorney, said today that the Democrats will appeal the decision if Judge Waring makes permanent the preliminary injunction, which is now in effect.

The preliminary injunction, granting Negroes full participation in party affairs, including the right to vote in primaries, was handed down July 19.

Negro Democrats In South Carolina Support Truman

Columbia Record

South Carolina Negro Democrats, it seems safe to say, will support the Democratic ticket of Truman and Barkley in the November election.

John H. McCray, state chairman of the Progressive Democratic party of South Carolina, organized when the Negroes were not permitted to vote in the Democratic primary, has been invited to serve on a national citizens' committee for the re-election of President Truman.

Wed. 8-18-48

And he is actively supporting President Truman. Nor is it strange that Negroes should support the Democratic party and Truman. The Democratic platform is a stronger platform from the Negroes' point of view than that of the Republicans. And Truman, whatever else may be said of him, has had the courage of his convictions, political or otherwise, and has not backed down an inch in the face of the growing Southern revolt. The revolters even may have spurred him on to new acts.

Columbia S.C.

"Because of his position," Chairman McCray declares in a front page editorial in his newspaper The Lighthouse and Informer, "the President is being crucified by traditional un-Americans, and by some Southerners, a group of which comes from South Carolina. These are putting up money, brain and time and energy to defeat Mr. Truman. They, traditionally Democratic, would hand the government over to the big-business-loving Republicans rather than to our great President and just to defeat civil or human rights

Wed 8-18-48

"We take the position that President Truman must be backed by every Negro in South Carolina and of course around the country. What other President has done so much for our people? He has done at least one thing every one of us has prayed would be done. He has stuck his political neck out . . ..

"Now is the time for Negroes, either to put up their votes and their money to help keep Harry Truman in the White House, or just shut up and forget about being first class citizens . . ."

And the Negro Democrats, who voted in the primary, can, if a ticket of Truman electors be provided—and such a ticket is promised in South Carolina—vote for the Democratic primary nominees and for the Truman-Barkley ticket.

Nobody generally took an oath to support the primary nominees—the voters' oath was abolished after Judge J. Waties Waring denuded it of its thought-control provisions—but every person who participated in the primary is honor bound to abide by the result of the primary and to support the successful nominees in the general election.

Wed. 8-18-48

The Democratic party of South Carolina would have been honor bound to support the national party nominees if it had not served prior notice on the party of its intention to bolt should Truman be the nominee. And, in accord with this notice, it has now been delivered lock, stock and barrel to the States Righters, by action of the state executive committee.

There may be others who do not want to go along with the States Rights Democrats and desert the Democratic party, many of the organized labor group, for example. They should be allowed, even encouraged, to vote as they choose.

And there is one easy way to do this. It would greatly simplify matters if the state were to adopt now, as it should have long ago, a secret general election ballot on which all candidates could be named and the voter allowed to make his choice.

Politicians Again Misread A Waring Decision

Columbia Record

Those politicians, who, following the lead of the Charleston News and Courier, have been interpreting Judge J. Waties Waring's order eliminating the thought-control provisions of the Democratic (Politicians') party voters' oath as setting up a new court-ordered oath, need to take a little time out and read the Waring order.

"Wherefore," the order reads, "it is ordered that the defendants, their agents, servants, employes and attorneys and all persons in active concert and participation with them be and they hereby are restrained and enjoined pending determination of this action . . .

Thurs 7-22-48

"4. From requiring the plaintiff and other Negro electors to take the following oath as a prerequisite to voting in the said primary elections:

"'I do solemnly swear that . . . I believe in and will support the principles of the Democratic party of South Carolina and that I (understand and) believe in and will support the social, (religious) and educational separation of the races.

"'I further solemnly swear that I believe in the principles of states' rights and that I am opposed to the proposed federal so-called F. E. P. C. law.

"'I further solemnly swear that I will support the election of the nominees of this primary in the ensuing general election, and that I am not a member of any other political party.'

7-22-48

"5. From requiring of prospective voters in Democratic primaries any oath other than that the prospective voter meets the qualifications as an elector as set out in the constitution of South Carolina, and is a Democrat and will support the election of the nominees of the Democratic party at the ensuing general election."

The News and Courier interprets this as meaning that the Democratic oath must follow the exact language of this Paragraph 5, which, it believes, would require the Democratic voters to swear that they would support President Harry Truman, who is of course the nominee of the national Democratic party.

But this is not what Judge Waring's order says. The Paragraph 5 means in English that the Democratic party of South Carolina may eliminate all voters' oaths if it so chooses. And The News and Courier has pointed out that Democratic primaries without oaths have been held in South Carolina and even argued that they could be held again.

It means that the Democratic party of South Carolina may, if it so chooses, write a new oath which can contain, as the party elects, the substance of every adjuration that the voters' oaths of other years have contained or it may eleminate or weaken any one of them. And last year's oath is enough of an oath for any voter to take.

What Judge Waring has done has been simply to fix the limits beyond which the party may go. And they are sensible and reasonable limits.

7-22-48

What, therefore, is all the shooting about?

But Who Would Listen To The Voice Of Sanity?

The Columbia Record

The Charleston News and Courier's frantic appeals to James F. Byrnes, former secretary of state, to come to the aid of the Democratic party of South Carolina, grow a little pitiful.

Consider this example:

Wed. 8-4-48

"Today in our hour of need South Carolina is crying for leadership.

"Today The News and Courier is addressing an appeal, an earnest appeal, to the citizen of South Carolina whose voice will carry farthest into the other states of the union.

Columbia, S.C.

"Today we are asking Mr. James F. Byrnes, former member of Congress, former associate justice, former secretary of state, to tell the world the story of a sovereign state battling for its freedom.

8-4-48

"He is the foremost public figure in the state, though now a private citizen. He has been honored by his people above most men. His name is known with respect not only in the United States, but in foreign lands. He has made eloquent appeals for the liberty of peoples in other countries . . .

"The citizens of South Carolina are confused. They do not know which way to turn. Outside the state there is more confusion and misunderstanding, and hatred too. Mr. Byrnes could help to clear up the misunderstanding and reduce the hatred. He would be heard . . . He can speak with authority. He can lead his people from the swamp in which they now flounder back to the high ground of sovereignty and home rule."

South Carolina does, of course, need leaders today. It is confused and growing daily more confused. Too many of its people are not even thinking, they are simply feeling and there are demagogues, both in and out of office in South Carolina, who are trying to promote this chaos.

8-4-48

Mr. Byrnes can think as well as feel. If he should speak out as The News and Courier desires him to speak, in reason and without prejudice, would even The News and Courier go along with him? And what can be done to clear up the misunderstanding and reduce the hatred outside South Carolina if we here cannot ourselves clear up the misunderstanding and eliminate the hate-mongerers?

Federal Courts Offer South Carolina Its Chance

Governor J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina expresses himself as "shocked" that the supreme court of the United States refused even to hear the arguments of South Carolina Democrats in their contention that the Democratic party in South Carolina is a "private association."

This action by the court, which is an indirect way of affirming the decision of the Fourth circuit court of appeals, has, the Governor said, cost "every American . . . a part of his fundamental rights."

"I predict," he said, "that Americans everywhere will live to regret the principle of law which has been laid down."

The Governor is thinking of the decision in legalistic terms. And even from this point of view the South may have gained from the refusal of the supreme court to hear the case. The decisions of the district court and the circuit court of appeals did not succeed in reconciling their new opinions with the old civil rights cases and on legal grounds the Democrats of South Carolina had a good case for appeal.

But if the issue had been clearly drawn before the supreme court there was the risk that in deciding the case, as the court would have decided it—and as, of course, it did decide it—it might have been forced to overrule the civil rights cases and the South would have lost much more than it did lose in the courts' decision that the idea that the Democratic party is a "private association" in South Carolina was a pure fiction. Columbia, S.C.

South Carolinians are perhaps a little too close to the issues to see them in perspective. Contrast the comment of the Baltimore Evening Sun, which is a supporter of the South in what may be called the basic Southern endeavors, with that of Governor Thurmond. Mon. 4-26-48

"That the doctrine (that political parties are not private clubs and that party primaries are part of the electoral process) accords with sound sense as well as with the constitution is hardly open to question," The Evening Sun says in consideration of the supreme court's action. "All who are in any way familiar with the business of choosing our public officers know that the making of nominations is often as important as the choice between those who have been nominated. In a state like South Carolina, a one-party state in which a Democratic nomination is equivalent to election, the choice of a candidate is in fact the definitive election. To say that the suffrage in such an election can be regulated by party rules instead of by statute is to fly in the face of facts.

"The termiination of the South Carolinia case marks another milestone in the drive to protect the Negro from electoral discrimination . . . It is probable that fresh attempts to restrict Negro suffrage by means which do not directly relate to race or color will be attempted. But this ruling bars one kind of discrimination and in this way it provides a new prop for the electoral system which the constitution envisages."

And in sober consideration have the Negroes won anything by the supreme court's decision to which they were not entitled? Isn't the decision actually beneficial to South Carolinia? It has been possiible for a long time for Negroes to vote in South Carolina's general elections and no catastrophe has resulted. Not many of them have voted and not many will vote now, if the experience of other states where Negroes now vote be any criterion. But those who wanted to vote Democratic in the general election have had to vote for candidates in the choice of whom they had no voice. The effect of the courts' decision now is to grant them that voice. Mon.

One day South Carolina will see the wisdom of developing the two party system, the only system under which South Carolina may have influence in national affairs commensurate with its population. In the bag for the Democratic party under the one-party system, it has been ignored by both parties, by the Democrats because they always have had the South Carolina votes, by the Republicans because they had no chance of getting the South Carolina votes.

The result has been disastrous for South Carolina, in many ways. All white persons in South Carolina are not of one mind on the great national issues. But by making the Democratic party of South Carolina the white party, South Carolinians have smothered these differences and disfranchised for every practical purpose everybody who didn't go along with the national Democratic policy. And also sacrificed have been the disagreements among white South Carolinians concerning the proper policy to be pursued in state affairs. In the legislature of South Carolina, where all members are theoretically Democrats, there is not one party or two parties, but 170 parties, one for each member of the House and Senate. Party loyalty and responsibility are therefore unknown in South Carolina.

Two parties could have been erected in South Carolina with the whites in the Democratic party and the Negroes in the Republican party. But this would have been a false division. Opinions on issues, except purely racial issues, do not divide along racial lines. And any such division of the state along racial lines would have been more disastrous than even the one-party system. For it would have promoted racial tensions and added an element of hysteria even to politics in South Carolina, a field in which there is already too much emotionalism. The Record

Now the chance is offered South Carolina to build up two real parties, both composed of whites and Negroes, voting their honest convictions on the great national issues. And when this is done South Carolina will have spokesmen in both parties to present its point of view. South Carolina will be courted by both parties and flounted by neither. Columbia, S.C.

The supreme court decision can be therefore a boon to South Carolina—if South Carolinians have the sense to take advantage of it. Mon. 4-26-48

Three Groups To Ask Seats At Convention

The Record
Columbia, S.C.

A three-delegation fight for this state's votes at the July 12 National Democratic convention loomed today. Wed.

A citizens committee meeting here yesterday named 20 delegates—17 white people and three Negroes—and promised to send them to Philadelphia unless the state party convention agrees to send uninstructed delegates. 6-30-48

The May 19 state convention elected 40 delegates instructed to oppose the nomination of President Truman or anyone else who agreed with his civil rights proposals.

The state Progressive (Negro) Democratic party also has selected 28 delegates who will seek recognition at the convention.

Approximately 80 persons who attended the citizens committee meeting named an executive committee to select a slate of presidential elector candidates to support the Democratic presidential candidate, whoever he may be.

The executive committee was given discretion to nominate general election candidates for the United States Senate and House of Representatives.

County committees were asked to "repudiate the leadership" of the state Democratic party by adopting primary rules "in accordance with decisions of the federal courts and the constitution of the United States."

The committee also:

Urged citizens to refuse to take the primary voting oath;

Proposed that anyone qualified for the general election be allowed to vote in the primaries;

Asked Gov. J. Strom Thurmond to call a special session of the general assembly to enact law governing primaries and providing secret general election ballots; Wed.

And endorsed "such action as is necessary" to extend "full citizenship" to 18-21 year-old persons. State party rules set them inimum voting age at 21. 6-30-48

The State Democratic Party Is Due The Blame

The Record

The attempt of some of the Richland county executive committeemen, who go along with the misleaders of the state politicians' party, to blame the party's troubles on the press and radio is both futile and pitiful.

It is, as The Record has pointed out, like blaming the police for a crime wave because they increase the number of their arrests as the number of crimes increase instead of blaming the law violators themselves. Columbia, S.C.

Back of these naive charges is the thought that what the voters do not know will not hurt them. It is the same kind of thinking that led the state and county executive committees into the foolishness of holding their meetings behind closed doors where the voters could not know what was being done nor why. Thurs. 6-24-48

The newspapers are, of course, responsible for publishing the texts of the oath, the declaration of principles and the platform. But what is a newspaper for, anyhow?

But they are not responsible for the mistakes made at the state convention nor for the mistakes made since by the state party leaders. If the party had taken The Record's advice it could have avoided all of them and therefore escaped the confusion which still bedevils it. If after the convention the party leaders had taken The Record's advice and summoned the convention for a second session the mistakes made could have been corrected.

The Richland county executive committee has followed what seems to it a correct course. It was advised by counsel to withdraw the enrolment books to allow the state party officials time to act and when they did nothing, which is the one thing the state leaders seem to do best, the Richland committee voted to allow Negroes to enroll in conformity with the court decisions, simply disregarding any state rules to the contrary as null and void, as undoubtedly they are. This it had to do, if it did not want the executive committeemen and others involved in the Elmore suit to face the prospect of jail or fines for contempt of the federal courts. And this done it settled down to wait awhile longer for the state party leaders to take the necessary remedial action. If none has been taken are either the Richland committee or the newspapers to blame? Doesn't the blame rest where it should rest upon the state party leaders? The Record

No injustice is being done by the latest Richland decision to follow the lead of some of the other counties and to keep the enrolment books open awhile longer to make up for the period during which enrolment was generally halted in the county, waiting upon the state party to take action. If time be allowed for the purging of the rolls the extension of enrolment time simply allows more Democratic voters to enroll, which is or should be the party's aim. Columbia, S.C.

But it is conceded that the Richland committee cannot amend the party rules—what it has done to the party oath doesn't amount to much although it does remove some of the thought-control stigma from it—any more than the state executive committee or the state chairman can amend the rules, which may, as the rules themselves prescribe, only be amended by the state convention. And the state chairman can summon the state convention to meet again when he wills. Thurs. 6-24-48

CONVENTION HELD

Negroes Say National Party To Seat Them

The Record
Columbia, S.C.
Wed. 5-26-48

State Progressive Democrat delegates will be recognized and seated at the National Democratic convention in Philadelphia, A. J. Clement, Jr., keynote speaker at the Progressive's South Carolina convention, predicted today.

The convention endorsed President Truman's candidacy in the same hall where last week the regular Democratic party instructed its delegates not to vote for the renomination of Mr. Truman.

As the South Carolina Democratic party was dubbed a "spoiled child," Negro delegates from 18 counties called for a "human rights" program in contrast to the state party's stand for state's rights.

Patterned after the regular Democratic party, the Negro convention today was prepared to compete with the white Democrats to seat their 28 delegates at the National Democratic party convention in Philadelphia June 12. 5-26-48

201 Delegates Attend

The 201 delegates were challenged to pursue their fight to enter the ranks of the Democratic party for "freedom" and "until we have every right as citizens of the United States." The Record

The program, interspersed with songs featuring Truman and "Gimme That Democratic Spirit," was highlighted by the keynote address of Clement. Columbia S.C.

Clement struck at the state white party as the "office holding industry" of South Carolina which, he said, sought to keep itself in power.

Delegates warmed to his speech with applause at intervals and a few scattered "amens" as Clement branded the white party as "frantic heretics." Wed. 5-26-48

Progressive Democrats Get National Support For Their Fight Against White Party

Atlanta Daily World
Atlanta Ga.

COLUMBIA, S. C.—(SNS)—

National support for Progressive Democrats when they appear for seats at Philadelphia July 12, appeared certain in a letter state chairman John H. McCray made public Monday.

The letter came from James E. Williams, eastern vice president of the National Council of Negro Democrats, of Jamaica, N. Y., who wrote partially:

"For the past few days Mr. Emmett S. Cunningham (of Detroit, Mich.), our national president, has been in conference with several of the key men of the Council, and we have agreed that your fight in th convention to seat your delegates in Philadelphia is a just fight; we have agreed to join the fight with you and other states in the South whose plight you also represent." Fri. 7-2-48

Mr. Williams said that a pre-convention caucus on this battle has been scheduled for 7 p. m., July, at the Hotel Chesterfield in Philadelphia, which will serve as headquarters for the Council which will serve as headquarters for the Council, which is meeting simultaneously with the national party.

PUTS HEAT TO SOUTH

The announcement of this national backing by Negro Democrats for full recognition of southern members puts the proverbial heat behind the lily-white delegation from South Carolina. It also puts the party leaders on notice and perhaps gives more concern than the recent so-called southern revolt.

Clearly, the national party will have to run the risk of recognizing South Carolina's Progressive Democrats as part of South Carolina's seated delegates and irked segments in the South, or reject them and incur the displeasure of northern Negro delegates in important and decisive states.

Unless there is atonement and a backing down on one or both sides somebody is going to walk away from Philadelphia and take with them many sorely needed votes for the all important November elections.

In 1944, Progressive Democrats went to the convention arguing that it was the obligation of the national party to amend its rules so as to make it impossible for units practicing racial discriminations on membership to be recognized. This is the basic contention again this year, but with more weight backing.

SOUTHERN STATES TO HELP

In addition to the powerful northern bloc behind them, the Progressive Democrats will have also the support of delegations from Arkansas, Alabama and possibly Georgia, though the last named hasn't yet committed itself. But since Negro Democrats in that state also belong to the national Council, it can be expected that Georgia will also line up with and behind the South Carolinians. 7-2-48

Moreover, indictions were that key party members throughout the country were also behind Progressive Democrats this year and, a contingent of white Democrats in South Carolina who are opposed to the anti-Negro policy the state maintains, even after Negroes have legally achieved the right to party participation.

The Progressive Democrats will probably entrain for Philadelphia the latter part of the coming week. They will number 28 delegates and a few alternates. Final details for their trip were to be worked out during conference in Washington by this week-end.

Negro Voting Action Criticized In Speech

The Record Columbia S.C.
Thurs. 6-24-48

MANNING, June 24—(AP)—The county-to-county campaign for Democratic nomination to the United States Senate was brought here today by four candidates seeking incumbent Burnet R. Maybank's seat.

Maybank announced last night that he would not speak for "several days" because of the death of his son-in-law at Charleston yesterday.

Continuing the tour are Neville Bennett, Clio farmer, United States Rep. William Jennings Bryan Dorn of Greenwood, attorney Alan Johnstone of Newberry, and Marcus A. Stone, Dillon and Florence lumberman.

They had an afternoon schedule at Orangeburg and will go to Bamberg and Barnwell tomorrow.

Four of the candidates stuck largely to previous speeches yesterday at St. Matthews.

Negroes Criticized

Johnstone injected a charge that a group of Negroes "who are Democrats at court and Republican at the ballot box" are trying to "make a raid" on the state Democratic party. The Record

He said James M. Hinton of Columbia represented this group. Hinton is secretary of the Negro Citizens' committee of South Carolina and state president of the National Association for Advancement of Colored People. Columbia S.C.

This group, Johnstone charged, "wants to vote in the Democratic primary whether they are Democrats or not." Thurs 6-24-48

Earlier in the campaign Johnstone called Maybank "indiscreet" for recommending the appointment of United States District Judge J. Waties Waring of Charleston.

It was Waring's decision that opened voting in state party primaries to Negroes.

Hinton said in a letter to Johnstone that the Negro Citizens' committee "resented and protested" his remarks about Waring's appointment. Thurs. 6-24-48

"Waring said this man (Hinton) should vote in the Democratic primary on his terms, not the party terms," Johnstone declared.

"Hinton does not represent the cause of our black people who believe in the Democratic party."

He asked Maybank to "take off his coat and enter this race," and inquired: The Record

"Does Hinton speak for him? . . . Does he believe a bunch of Republicans, white or black, should vote in the primary?"

Calls For Positions

Johnstone also called for his other opponents to state their positions on this question.

Bennett described himself as a farmer-candidate who would "cherish the opportunity of being the champion of the agricultural people of this state." Thurs

Dorn cited past successful political races and declared that as a congressman "I vote pro-America first, pro-Europe second."

Maybank also appealed for the farm vote by reviewing this support of farm legislation in the Senate. Columbia, S.C.

"I've done the best I could for your liberties, civil and world-wide," he concluded. 6-24-48

Stone repeated opposition to "taxation and vexation," the Taft-Hartley law, universal military training and the peacetime draft.

He suggested "universal education instead of military training.

Democratic Troubles in South Carolina

The Constitution

COLUMBIA, S. C.—Local jealousy, aroused by the elevation of Gov. J. Strom Thurmond to the role of States' rights presidential candidate, combined with the most weird election system anywhere in the world, has made South Carolina a November political battleground for the first time since 1880.

The local involvement springs from a deep suspicion by Sen. Olin Johnston, who did as much as any other to stir up the Southern revolt against President Truman, that Gov. Thurmond's aim in accepting presidential nomination was to build himself up to run against Johnston for Senator in 1950.

Johnston will be remembered as the Senator who walked out on the Jackson Day dinner in Washington, together with his guests, leaving a large empty table immediately in front of President Truman.

Wed 10-13-48

Possibly because he has found it difficult to eat his assertion that "no decent white man would vote for Truman," made last Spring, Sen. Johnston has not come out openly for Truman. All he said is the cryptic sentence, "I am a Democrat." It is generally accepted by all hands in South Carolina, however, that Johnston is doing his level best to save the State for Truman, with an effect of turning the present contest into a preview of an even hotter Johnston-Thurmond fracas two years hence.

Atlanta Ga

Newspaper political writers and similar neutral observers agree that Thurmond will win the 11 South Carolina presidential electors, but also they are as one in predicting that, incident to the Thurmond presidential candidacy, there is being brewed a local Democratic split that will be heard for many future years.

The prevailing November election practice in South Carolina never was intended to decide anything. It was a boresome constitutional necessity, required to register formally the elections—including the choice of presidential electors—that for 68 years have actually been accomplished in the Democratic Party primary.

Alone among all the States, South Carolina has no secret ballot—no ballot at all, in fact, in the sense of a sheet listing the names of competing candidates with the right of the voter to pick and choose.

When the voter enters the election place he will find stacks of privately printed ballots—Republican, Democrat, States' rights Democrat, Wallaceite, etc.—each presenting an exclusive list of candidates for President and for State and local offices as their sponsors please.

All that was required to put either the Truman-Barkley or Thurmond-Wright presidential tickets before the voters was for their supporters in each case to print up a batch of ballots. Both of them claim the whole list of Democratic nominees—congressional, State and local—as their own.

Entering the election place, the voter selects one of these ballots and drops it in the box. Any writing on a ballot disqualfies it, so a voter canot split his ticket. He can't even cross off a name. He can pick up several ballots, but there is no booth or curtain to get behind while making his choice between them.

The Thurmond-Wright ballots certainly will be stacked nearest the door and quite conceivably some of them may find their way into the ballot box credited to voters not actually on hand.

An element in the South Carolina election campaign, not much talked about openly but certainly potential, is the fact that Negroes are voting in considerable numbers this year for the first time since the Reconstruction days following the War Between the States.

White supremacy advocates blame this crack in the previously complete exclusion of Negroes from the polls on the Roosevelt and Truman national administrations. Specifically it got its start from a decision of the U. S. Supreme Court in a Texas case in 1944, ordering the admission of Negroes to Democratic primaries.

In this State a Roosevelt-appointed U. S. District Judge, J. Waites Waring, of Charleston, in a series of decisions over the past two years, has beaten down frantic attempt by the South Carolina Democratic organization to avoid compliance with the Texas decision.

Following a refusal by the Supreme Court to override Judge Waring, Negroes—35,000 of them, according to the claim of their leaders—voted in the South Carolina Democratic primary last August.

The same Negro leaders guess that 65,000 Negroes may have registered to vote in November, but white authorities discount this figure by about half.

The race issue was injected directly into the presidential contest when John McCray, head of the Negro Progressive Democratic Party, publicly advised members of his race to stay away from a meeting at which Sec. of War Royall spoke on behalf of President Truman.

An inkling as to Mr. Truman's popularity in South Carolina may be derived from the fact that in this city of 65,000 Mr. Royall, himself a North Carolinian, was heard by fewer than 300 people—all white—in a hall capable of accommodating 5,000.

Wed 10-13-48

No State or congressional officeholder and very few party committeemen are openly supporting President Truman in South Carolina. The principal leaders in his behalf are the Rev. Maxie Collins, chiefly known heretofore as a Prohibitionist, and Cranston Williams, who ran unsuccessfully for the Democratic nomination for Governor in 1935 on a dripping wet platform.

Excepting members of Gov. Thurmond's own official families and a heavy majority of the Democratic State Central Committee, most Democratic wheelhorses in the State are not shouting for the States' righters either. The only South Carolina member of the Congress who has come out openly for the Thurmond-Wright ticket is Rep. L. Mendel Rivers, of Charleston.

S. C. Negroes Promise Push For Full Democratic Rights

Atlanta Constitution

Wed 12-20-48

COLUMBIA, S. C.—(AP)—South Carolina Negroes are "prepared to go the final mile" in their court fight for full membership rights in the State Democratic Party, one of their leaders announced yesterday.

James M. Hinton, President of the State chapter of the National Association for Advancement of Colored People, said so in a letter to Chairman W. P. Baskin, of the State Executive Committee.

Atlanta Georgia

The Committee and county party Chairmen will meet here tomorrow to discuss a Federal Court decision that the party cannot deny Negroes full participation in party affairs, nor require any primary voters' oath other than the one prescribed for general elections.

The ruling was by U. S. District Judge J. Waites Waring, of Charleston. The party unsuccessfully appealed his previous decision that it could not bar Negroes from its primaries because of race or color.

Hinton wrote Baskin that Negroes intended "to assume our full share of the responsibilities, financial and otherwise, as well as enjoy the privileges that go with our membership in the party. . . .

"We request that all future action, legal or otherwise, that seeks to keep qualified Negroes out of the party be dropped. . . ."

He said he hoped the party would "welcome qualified Negroes on a basis of equality."

"Please understand, however," he added, "should you elect to take further legal action, Negroes will be fully prepared to go the final mile."

And There Is No Excuse For Any More Delaying

The Columbia Record

Governor J. Strom Thurmond has not yet announced his decision on the growing demand for a special session of the General Assembly to write into law statutes to control the primary and set up a real Australian ballot for the general election.

Yet South Carolina needs these things. It needs them now, not tomorrow or the next day.

It would have been sensible for the General Assembly, as The Record suggested, to have enacted these measures at the regular session, anticipating that the supreme court's decision on the Negro voting case would have been what it was. The acts, ratified on the last day of the session, could have been held by Governor Thurmond until the decision was actually handed down when his signature would have made them law.

Wed 7-21-48

The House even made a beginning at adopting the suggestion. An Australian ballot law for the general election was passed and sent to the Senate. A bill to penalize fraud and corrupt practices in primary elections, for which there is now no punishment, was also passed and sent to the Senate. There both of the measures remain, bottled up in committee.

Columbia S.C.

Both measures need some amendment. The Australian ballot law should provide for the voting of split tickets, under which a person might support the Democratic nominees for state and local offices and yet vote for any one of the electoral tickets.

South Carolinians are entitled to the secrecy of the ballot in what the Democratic party leaders, who control the General Assembly, insisted was the real election in South Carolina. They have been entitled to it for years and there is no longer any excuse in logic or otherwise for not giving it them. And it should be granted before the election in November if the grant is to mean anything.

And South Carolinians are entitled to a primary election, regulated by law, a primary election in which fraud or corrupt practices would be punished, a primary election in which the electors' qualifications are fixed by law.

There used to be, until South Carolina hit upon the futile device of the lawless primary, a provision of the constitution which declared that the General Assembly should pass laws to regulate primary elections. The obligation still persists.

The House bill, sent to the Senate during the regular session, provides for the punishment of fraud in the primary. It does not set up the qualifications for voters. It would have to be to amended to accomplish this or a separate bill introduced. Either could be done.

The Democratic party is falling apart in South Carolina and the primary is jeopardized by the fact that it is not regulated by law. Charleston county candidates met yesterday to study the possibility of getting out of the primary and running in the general election, a dangerous procedure.

Jasper county is operating independent of the state party.

Wed 7-21-48

Six counties, defying the state party set up their own rules to govern the enrolment of Negroes, and four of these find themselves exempted from Judge J. Waties Waring"s order requiring the party in every other county to conform to the letter and the spirit of his decisions as the six counties had done.

The Governor's explanation that there is no assurance that the legislature will act even if the special session be called has some validity. There is none. But issuing the call would relieve the Governor of the responsibility and put it up to the legislators. Even the members of the Senate, who delayed acting at the regular session, should be able to perceive the need for both acts now.

S. C. Democrats Vow Fight on Race Ruling

Atlanta Constitution
Atlanta Georgia

COLUMBIA, S. C.—(UP)—South Carolina's Democratic Party leaders vowed yesterday to fight through the court a federal order forbidding restrictions on party membership by Negroes.

Party leaders met here yesterday and determined to appeal the order by District Judge J. Waties Waring enjoining them from enforcement of a set of party rules which includes an oath binding registrants to support racial segregation.

Wed 11-17-48

The appeal will go first to the U. S. District Court of Appeals and then, if it upholds Waring, to the U. S. Supreme Court.

"Private Club" Primary Suffers Another Blow

Journal & Guide
Norfolk Virginia

THE latest ruling of Federal Judge J. WATIES WARING of Charleston, S. C., relative to the issue of the South Carolina Democratic Party and the prospective Negro voter adds another body-blow to the party's "private club" theory.

Sat 12-11-48

In a ruling on November 26, Judge WARING made permanent a temporary injunction issued by him on July 16 restraining state party officials from barring Negro voters from participation in the primary elections.

Through the permanent injunction, the South Carolina Democratic Party is ordered to admit colored voters to full-fledged memberships, and with it the plan by which the state sought to circumvent decisions of the United States Supreme Court outlawing the "white primary" comes a cropper.

It was a frantic Governor OLIN D. JOHNSTON, now United States Senator, who following the Supreme Court decision, called a special session of the South Carolina General Assembly in 1944, for the express purpose of repealing all laws on the statute books pertaining to primary elections.

It was sought through this sweeping repeal to divest the party of all or any status as a state agency, or a unit of its election machinery that might inhere through state regulation and leave the management of party affairs with the party organization.

Sat 12-11-48

Through this nefarious move, the repealers would convert the party into a private club, exempt from the Supreme Court ruling, and in which a Negro would have no more right to vote in its primary elections "than to vote in the election of officers of the Forrest Lake Country Club or for officers of the Colonial Dames of America."

It is this lately-born device for the perpetual disfranchisement of Negroes in South Carolina that lies buried under the decisions of Federal Judge WARING, who in his most recent ruling said:

Sat 12-11-48

"The private club theory has been completely outlawed and demolished by the decisions resulting from a case (Elmore versus Rice) brought a little over a year ago in this court."

Striking at the core of the situation the jurist declared:

> In 1944, as a resul of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Smith vs. Allwright . . . the then governor of South Carolina called an extraordinary session of the General Assembly . . . and repealed all laws relating to primaries. The governor stated quite frankly what the purpose of this was and made no bones of the fact that the intention was to keep the primary elections in South Carolina limited to whites and to discriminate against Negroes.

Judge WARING held that the enforcement of the rules adopted by the party would deprive the plaintiffs and others of the right to vote solely because of race and color and in violation of the Federal Constitution, and declared an injunction is necessary to secure the plaintiff his rights.

Sat 12-11-48

It is unlikely that the ruling will be appealed, and should an appeal be entered it will doubtless prove useless. The principles in the case have already been ruled upon and affirmed by the Fourth United States Circuit Court of Appeals in the case of GEORGE ELMORE, who on July 12, won for himself and other colored voters the right to participate in Richland county primaries. This right was upheld by the Court of Appeals and the United States Supreme Court refused to review the decision.

Judge WARING has displayed the courage to construe South Carolina's abortive attempt to deprive Negroes of the right to vote in the primaries in the light demanded by justice and the Constitution, approved by morality and commonsense, in spite of recent puerile efforts on the part of some state political leaders to embarrass or intimidate him with accusations of bias.

South Carolina Democrats

Wash Post

Here in South Carolina we are all good Democrats. Everybody knows that. In election after election, we have polled a higher percentage of Democratic votes than any other State in the Union; and no one but a Democrat has held political office in South Carolina since we recovered from the effects of the Yankee Plan, following the War Between the States. Even the Federal courts have taken judicial notice of our unswerving democracy by ruling that the privilege of voting Republican in South Carolina is no privilege at all.

Wed 10-13-48

In short, we in South Carolina have been accused variously of prejudice, stupidity, hypocrisy and tyranny; but no one has ever thought to question our Democracy. It is a record of which every South Carolinian may be justly proud.

In recent months, however, there have been some new developments. Not that we have become any the less Democratic. It's only that there is now much greater difficulty in knowing just how a good Democrat should act. There are some things we do know, of course.

We know, for example, that a good South Carolina Democrat doesn't get up and walk out of the national convention, however acceptable such conduct may be in an Alabama or Mississippi Democrat. We know also that it's still good form to say you're going to walk out, even if you don't; and that it's entirely proper to exhibit open hostility to everything that takes place in the convention after you said you were going to walk out but didn't.

Certain authorities, headed by our Governor, maintain that the acceptable course is immediately to attend another convention, organized by those who walked out of the first one, and there to nominate for President on the "Dixiecrat" ticket some good Democrat who can stand on his head after marrying his secretary (see Life magazine for November 17, 1947) and who threatened to walk out of the first convention but didn't. That the only man possessing these several qualifications should happen to be our Governor is, of course, only a happy coincidence.

Another sizable group of authorities, styling themselves "conservative," contend that, since we didn't walk out of the first convention, we shouldn't mess with the second. The correct procedure, these folks argue, is to support the principles of the Democratic Party and work to defeat the President's civil rights program.

Finally, there is the awesome authority of J. Waties Waring, Federal judge for the Eastern District of South Carolina, who has declared that all South Carolinians are entitled to enroll and vote in the Democratic primary, and that all who vote in the Democratic primary should swear to support the Democratic nominees at the subsequent general election.

Since the judge thus makes us all officially Democrats, it's difficult to understand how we could ever manage to produce a non-Democratic nominee whom a Democrat might be tempted to support in the general election; but I reckon the judge just wanted to nail the thing down. I reckon he just wanted to make doubly certain that no foreign "ism" like Republicanism should ever worm its way into the life of this State.

Aug 8

Thus we citizens of South Carolina are confused and pained It is no longer a simple, straightforward thing to be a good Democrat. There now appear to be at least three different kinds of Democracy, and it is by no means clear that any one of them is good. To espouse the first type of Democracy may mean no more new postoffice buildings or school lunch programs for South Carolina; to espouse the second type may mean too many new postoffice buildings with an FEPC agency firmly established in each; and to espouse the third type may result in the outright annexation of South Carolina by the United States of America.

In the circumstances, there is obviously but one possible course for a person of discernment. I shall vote a split ticket. I shall support Governor Thurmond for President, Senator Barkley for Vice President, and Judge Waring for Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

DILLON, S. C.—Eight Negroes were elected delegates to the Dillon county Democratic convention to be held in the Dillon county courthouse on May 3, scheduled to start at 11 A. M.

The delegates, first to be chosen by white Democrats since before the turn of the century as is remembered here, won the seats on a motion by Mrs. C. L. Wheeler, national Democratic committeewoman from South Carolina, who found capable support from Mrs. Joe Layne.

ATTEND MEETING

The colored Democrats had come to the meeting in response to the urgings of Miss Helen Manning, NAACP branch president and school teacher, who Thursday afternoon and night had visited various precincts in the Dillon area and asked Negro Democrats to attend precinct meetings, which were held Saturday morning, starting at 11 o'clock.

Miss Manning was first to walk in at the East Dillon precinct, largest in the county; the other seven came in singly afterwards. None received any embarrassment and all attested to firm courtesy and agreement.

The precinct is entitled to 50 seats in the county convention. However, there were a total of only 42 persons present, including the eight colored citizens.

MRS. WHEELER MOVES

When time came to select precinct delegates to the county convention, Mrs. Wheeler moved that everybody present be elected a delegate. State senator Allen objected but support was so firm that the motion won 38 to 4.

Delegates, in addition to Miss Manning are: James Couser, Mrs. Prince Whittington, school teacher, Miss Mary Blue, teacher, William Lytch, an insurance agent, H. L. Perry, principal of the Dillon high school, his wife, Mrs. H. L. Perry and H. W. Crawford, also a teacher and Dillon representative for The Lighthouse and Informer.

Columbia, S. C. Democrats Don't Want Negroes' Help

Courier (340) Pittsburgh Pa.
Sat 2-14-48

COLMUBIA, S. C.—(ANP) — "Wanna" bet that Negroes in South Carolina will be permitted to participate in the municipal primary here? Well, they won't, if the Columbia Democratic Executive Committee here has anything to do about it.

Last week the committee did two things: (1) They returned contributions made by J. M. Hinton, NAACP branch secretary, and J. H. McCray, editor of the Lighthouse Informer, of $5 each, to help defray expected primary costs—because they do not want Negroes to have any say about voting in the primary, and (2) took the advice of a James H. Hammond that "public buildings should no longer be used for committee meetings."

Referring to the recent district and circuit court decisions granting Negroes the right to vote in primaries, Hammond said: "Regardless of the dignity of the judges, we have a right to have a party, and the colored people have a right to have their own party."

He told the committeemen that they could not keep their registration books at the court house, city hall or any other public place.

2-14-48

"Look up the case you are about to lose now," he warned.

"If you have to use public property then the colored person ought to vote; he's right there, and I agree with him on that. The colored man has as much right to vote as we do, if a public place is used for voting purpose."

CRUMP CRIMPED

"I've never," Boss Ed Crump of Tennessee often said, "been beaten in any election I ever took part in, even when it was running for captain of the baseball team in school."

And for 40 and 8 years the old goat has been taking part in elections. Recently we noted his boast in a Nashville paper that he had won 100-odd elections. And by elections, we mean the most exalted offices and repositories of power within the gift of the people—governor and senator.

But now at last the notorious, the mighty Crump has been met head-on and derailed. Both his candidates for governor and U. S. senator were resoundingly defeated.

Crump's adversaries, chiefly the Nashville and Chattanooga newspapers, had to wait nearly half a century to make the people of Tennessee see what they saw. But it has come to pass. The vote went contrary even in the Crump dump that has been Shelby County.

Montgomery, Ala.

This does not mean the end of the power of the 72-year-old regent of Tennessee; it would be impossible to count him out if only because of the resource of his cunning. But from here on in, rival barons will be most forward in lifting the vizor of the old knight to pluck his beard. It has been well and truly demonstrated that the champ can be had.

Sat.

If we thought this the end of Crump, we might not be so rejoiced, for in some respects, Crump is a stimulating and admirable figure.

8-7-48

Offhand, we would say that Boss Flynn and Crump are the only two extant machine bosses that are able to cite Aristotle and St. Thomas Aquinas to the purposes of their ward-heeling billingsgate.

Crump is a high type man, personally honest, well bred and courageous. The fact that he has held sway so long permitted him to suspect, as is common in such cases, that he probably held sway in accordance with a footnote in the plan for Operation Salvation and by means of a celestial indulgence.

That meant that anyone who opposed his senatorial and gubernatorial barters was an insolent and probably unwashed peckerwood, though the learned and imperious master of all he surveyed would have been more likely to refer to such peckerwoods as pusillanimous Philistines.

What is more, old Crump had none of the politician's traditional fear of "arguing with a typewriter." Let an editor cuff Crump and the old boy forthwith bought himself a full page in that paper. Whereupon, he would sit down with a bottle of rbolic acid and a quill made of an asp's ongue to work on the peckerwood editor t was a high class form of bread and circus for the populace.

Landslide Hits Regime Of Leader In Nemphis; Kefauver Wins Race

Sat. 8-7-48

NASHVILLE, TENN. —(AP)— The E. H. Crump Democratic regime of Memphis, one of the last potent political dynasties on the American political scene, went down to stunnig defeat Friday in a ballot landslide loosed in Thursday's violence-punctuated primary.

The landslide which engulfed the Crump forces was such as Crump himself had buried his opposition without setback in 20 years.

8-7-48

Crump's choice for the state's two top nominations — for U. S. senator and for governor — were soundly whipped.

Crump's choice for governor, Incumbent Jim McCord, seeking a third two-year term, carried only the Tenth (Shelby County-Memphis) District and the First District in Republican east Tennessee.

His senatorial candidate, John A. Mitchell carried only his home district, the Fourth in middle Tennessee, and the Tenth. The state has 10 districts.

Victors in the senatorial and gubernatorial contests were Estes Kefauver, veteran of 10 years in the lower House of Congress, and Gordon Browning.

Broke With 'Boss'

Kefauver was nominated to the senate seat now held by Tom Stewart, who sought reelection. Browning was nominated for the governor's seat he won for one term in 1937.

8-7-48

Browning won his previous race with a Crump support but broke with him and became his bitter political enemy. He pitched his campaign on a "down with one-man rule" slogan.

McCord conceded his defeat Friday as did Stewart. Crump made no statement. Stewart was another one-time ally of Crump but was dropped by the Memphis politics in this campaign.

Democratic nomination in Tennessee usually means election.

But Roy Acuff, ballard singer nominated for governor in Thursday's Republican primary, and Carroll Reece, former GOP national chairman, nominated for the Senate, said they'd make it a contest in the November general election.

The unofficial count in 2024 precincts of the state's approximately 2,300:

Kefauver, 152,489
Mitchell, 78,596
Stewart, 117,787

In the governor's race the count from 1,974 precincts stood:

Browning, 214,465
McCord, 160,142

The biggest surprise of Thursday's results was the vote piled up in Memphis by Kefauver. Heretofore a Crump opponent could count his vote there in the hundreds or low thousands.

Out of 111 of Shelby's 126 precincts, Kefauver polled 21,181 votes. Browning didn't fare as well there, but he amassed a heavy vote elsewhere in the sttate.

ED CRUMP FACES BATTLE OF HIS LIFE IN PRIMARY

Tribune

Meets Stiff Opposition over 2 Offices

Chicago, Ill

Memphis, Tenn., July 31 (Special)—With two of the most bitterly fought political campaigns in Tennessee history entering their final phases, Boss Crump has his back to the wall and is fighting as he hasn't had to fight in a generation.

At 72, Edward H. Crump, last and most powerful of city machine bosses, who boasts that for 19 years he has never been defeated on candidates he has supported for governor or the United States senate, faces crucial tests for both these offices in the Democratic state-wide primary Aug. 5.

Crump is trying to get the Democratic senatorial nomination for Judge John Mitchell, chancery court judge of Cookeville, Tenn., hitherto a political unknown, and is backing Gov. Jim McCord for renomination. Both men have formidable opposition, an unprecedented state of affairs for the white-maned "Old Fox" of Shelby county.

Three Sided Battle

Predictions are being heard that Crump may take a licking in the battle for the senatorship—a three sided affair—but will probably squeak thru on the governorship with the aid of the huge mass of Shelby county votes he is concededly still able to deliver. In Memphis and the rest of Shelby county there are 130,000 voters registered for the primary. The Crump machine has always been able to pile up Shelby county majorities of 50,000 for its candidates.

Sun, 8-1-41

The dilemma in which Crump finds himself with regard to the senatorship stems both from his decision to drop his old friend, Sen. Tom Stewart, and from unexpected strength shown by Rep. Estes Kefauver (D., Tenn.) in his campaign for the senatorial nomination.

Stewart had Crump backing in two successful past campaigns but lost favor this year because of a weak showing in his last race. Dumped by the boss in favor of Judge Mitchell, Stewart refused to bow out of the race. His prestige as an incumbent, his undoubtedly strong personal following in the hinterlands, and his campaign pose as a "faithful friend" tossed overboard for political expediency, have made him a strong factor.

Red Tinge Charged

Kefauver has the support of organized labor, including the AFL, CIO, and independent unions. He has also cracked the Crump wall of absolute fealty in Memphis by getting a group of leading business and professional Memphis citizens to form a committee in his support. Edmund Orgill, a past president of the Memphis Chamber of Commerce, is chairman. 8-1-48

The Crump organization has accused Kefauver of a reddish cast, contending he voted with Rep. Marcantonio (A.L., N.Y.) on many measures and that he courted support from left wing groups. Crump recently challenged a Memphis newspaper editor to join him in submitting their contradictory views on Kefauver's record to a public survey, with the loser "putting on his hat and leaving town."

Crump compared Kefauver with a pet raccoon that pilfers with its paw while looking the other way to distract attention. Since then Kefauver has gibed at Crump by wearing in public a raccoon hat of the Daniel Boone type.

The gubernatorial race is a straight two way battle between Gov. McCord and Crump's political arch enemy, Gordon Browning. In 1936 Browning was elected governor with Crump support but broke with the boss a year later. Crump later said that "in the art galleries of Paris there are 27 pictures of Judas Iscariot and none look alike, but all resemble Gordon Browning." 8-1-48

McCord Given Edge

Browning has been telling audiences in this campaign that "the present governor is the most obedient man ever to hold high office in Tennessee." He asserts that "Ed Crump never had a meeker 'yes' man, and the people of this state never had a more subservient public official."

Reports from all parts of the state, outside Shelby county, concede Browning a tremendous vote. McCord is asking renomination on his record, which includes a 2 per cent sales tax which has been raising 40 million dollars a year, half of it earmarked for education, long neglected in Tennessee. 8-1-48

Observers predict the Shelby county vote will give McCord the necessary edge over Browning but look for Kefauver to take enough support from Judge Mitchell to make renomination of Tom Stewart a possibility.

Texas Democrats Decide Not To Bolt Party

The Record

The Texas Democrats controlling their state convention named an anti-Truman delegation to the national convention at Philadelphia, but at the same time they nominated electors who will be committed to support the nominee of the Democratic party, Truman though he be. Columbia, S.C.

The Texas delegates to the Philadelphia convention are instructed to oppose any declaration in the platform advocating the President's so-called civil rights program. They are instructed to demand inclusion in the platform of a declaration against further invasions of state rights by the federal government. They are instructed to work for the restoration of the two-thirds rule. Mon. 6-7-48

But if they fail in all these objectives—and they probably will fail—they will go along with the Democratic party and take the Texas Democrats with them. There is no chance of reviving the two-thirds rule. The South's mistake was in ever surrendering it. The party nationally can not do less than it did in 1944 on the civil rights plank. And what would a state rights plank in the platform mean anyhow? Most state rights have been sold down the river for federal aid. The Record

Texas paid no attention to the Southern revolt idea of setting up a Southern Democratic splinter party and there would be no logic in any other group's setting up such a party, going nowhere, hoping to accomplish nothing. Columbia, S.C.

Texans, opposed to Harry Truman, will therefore have to vote for the Republican electors, if they want to make their votes effective. And this is as it should be, under the two-party system. Mon. 6-7-48

If the Texas protest is strong enough Texas may end up with a real two-party system, giving it a voice in both parties and making it advisable for both parties to pay some attention to the desires of Texas voters if either of them expect to get the Texas electoral college votes hereafter.

And if this happens Texas will be showing the way to the rest of the South, the way to restore Southern influence in national affairs, now reduced to less than nothing.

Texas Demos Turn Deaf Ear To 'Civil Rights'; Balk At Bolt

The News

BROWNWOOD, Tex., May 26—(AP) — Tough-talking Texas Democrats have given President Truman's leadership the cold shoulder, but they refused to join the Southern anti-civil rights rebellion.

At the Philadelphia convention the Texas delegation will be free to decide on the spot whose nomination it favors. It will vote as a unit. The Texans followed an independent course mapped by their own leader, Gov. Beauford H. Jester in state convention yesterday. It calls for a fight against Truman's civil rights proposals and his nomination, but not for a bolt if he becomes the party nominee. Wed.

While Democrats were fighting through a 12 hour and five minute convention, Senator Robert A. Taft picked up 30 Republican National Convention votes in the party's state convention at Corpus Christi. Gov. Thomas E. Dewey got two and Harold E. Stassen one. Taft forces controlled the convention from the start. 5-26-48

AFTER A DAY-LONG struggle between pro-Truman and anti-Truman factions, the Texas convention took these significant steps:

1. Pledged itself in a body, its delegates and 23 presidential electors to support all party nominees without any ifs. The News

2. Voted to send its delegation of 50 to the national convention instructed to fight the civil rights proposals, especially the FEPC.

3. Gave its delegation no instructions as to presidential and vice presidential candidates. This left it free to fight Truman's nomination. It instructed the delegates to battle for restoration of the two-thirds rule.

4. Buried in committee a proposal for a state referendum July 24 for or against binding electors to nominees who oppose Truman's civil rights program. A group favoring the Southern revolt backed it.

5. Elected Dwight Morrow of Houston, unfriendly to Truman, as national committeeman to replace Myron Blalock of Marshall, who will retire because of illness. Wed.

6. In so doing, rejected Mayor Tom Miller of Austin for the post. He was backed by the Truman faction. Birmingham, Ala.

The tough talk came in an overwhelmingly-adopted resolution which recorded "unalterable opposition" to the federal civil rights plan. 5-26-48

TRUMAN DEMOCRATS QUIT TEXAS SESSIONS

Times

HOUSTON, Tex., Aug. 1 (AP)—Democrats loyal to President Truman stalked out of four county conventions yesterday after states' rights advocates won control of the meetings with test votes.

About 500 angry Democrats left the Harris County meeting here, shouting their loyalty to President Truman. New York

The same thing happened in Dallas at the Dallas County convention, in Fort Worth at the Tarrant County convention, and in Marshall at the Harrison County convention.

After each walkout, the Truman loyalists set up rival conventions and named rival delegates to the state convention in Fort Worth Sept. 13 and 14. At that session the state's party platform will be adopted. The state convention has the power to reinstruct Presidential electors. They are now pledged to Truman. Mon. 8-2-48

Harris County has the greatest voting strength in the state convention. Dallas is second. Tarrant is among the stronger counties. A survey of convention battles in other populous counties showed the loyalists, with twenty-eight delegations, clearly in the Truman column. But a decision at the state meeting over control of the electoral vote may depend on which of the rival delegations are seated.

The survey showed eight counties clearly in the states' rights column and nine sending uninstructed delegations.

After the loyalists walked out of the convention here, the states' rights group voted to submit a Presidential referendum to Eighth Congressional District (Harris County) voters on Aug. 28.

Gain Control of Democratic Meeting and States' Rights Group Marches From Hall

Wed 9-15-48

FORT WORTH, Tex., Sept. 14 (AP)—Pro-Truman Democrats won control of today's uproarious Texas State convention and the anti-Trumanites, many waving Confederate flags, began a march out of the hall.

Delegation leaders from seven counties called on their members to join the walkout.

By a roaring voice vote, the convention then formally purged the temporary roll of the anti-Truman delegations from four of the counties. Wed 9-15-48

The convention approved a resolution creating a committee to make certain that all Democratic electors from Texas cast their ballots for the Truman-Barkley ticket.

The Truman forces won by two decisive test votes on the question whether to seat the anti-Truman Harris County delegation, one of those walking out.

The Trumanites won the first, 1,339 to 757, and the second, 1,349 to 734.

The convention had been in session five and a half hours before the Truman group broke down the opposition. It elected C. C. McDonald of Wichita Falls, Tex., temporary chairman. 9-15-48

After the second roll-call vote trounced the State's Righters, 1,349 to 734, J. Hart Willis of Dallas went to the microphone.

He announced he would walk out with the Harris County delegation.

WASHINGTON — (AP) — Senator Connally (D., Tex.), an opponent of President Truman's civil rights program, announced that he will support the Democratic ticket of Mr. Truman and Senator Barkley (D., Ky.).

"I have consistently supported the nominees of the Democratic Party in the past and I shall not deviate from that record now," Connally said in a statement.

HE ALSO TOLD reporters that in his opinion "Texas Democrats will support the national ticket in November" despite their opposition to Mr. Truman at the Philadelphia Convention.

Texas Always Puts On A Good Political Show

Journal & Guide
Norfolk, Va.

IT IS too bad that a Texas State political convention doesn't go on tour. There simply is too much excitement to waste on a local performance in a one-day stand. The assembled and unterrified Texas Democrats lived up to tradition last Tuesday at Fort Worth.

Norfolk Va

They repelled an invasion by Dixiecrats and kept their party's Presidential electors safe for TRUMAN. Not even a flutter of Confederate flags amid the rebel band swerved them from their purpose of remaining regular. And then they counted up a total of nearly a million votes cast in the August primary, and found that only 87 votes separated the two candidates for the Senate nomination—Representative LYNDON JOHNSON, whom the microscopic majority favored, and former Governor COKE STEVENSON. It was a phenomenon that could happen only in Texas.

To the surprise of some, who had looked for uproar on this point also, the convention ratified JOHNSON'S nomination. There may be a legal contest by STEVENSON, "Mr. Texas" himself, in view of the close finish and its virtual invitation to demand a recount. But as the matter stands now, Texas Democrats will present as PAPPY O'DANIEL'S successor one of the youngest and most progressive of their major politicians. The country doubtless will agree that Texas has helped itself on this score.

As to over-riding the States' Righters who asked the delegates to instruct the Democratic electors for THURMOND and WRIGHT, the convention insured a hot campaign. States' Rights Democrats will have their own ticket in the November election, bidding against the regular Democrats and the Republicans as well. If they make enough noise and fulfill their boast of rolling up a big vote, the Dixiecrats might be responsible for an exciting result. It will be recalled that Texas went for HOOVER against SMITH in 1928, cast nearly 200,000 votes for DEWEY in 1944, for WILLKIE in 1940. Sun. 9-19-48

Another tight November election, with the chances of TRUMAN and BARKLEY riding on the outcome as well, was assured by Tuesday's primary in Minnesota. The dour JOE BALL won the Republican nomination for another term in the Senate, but to oppose him the Democrats selected the dynamic young Mayor of Minneapolis, HUBERT HUMPHREY. The campaign will be something to watch.

States' Rights Democrats Lose Test In Texas

Columbia Record

FORT WORTH, Tex., Sept. 15—(UP)—Texas fell in line today behind the Truman-Barkley ticket as the state's Democrats rejected the States' Rights Democrat ticket and philosophy in short order.

Loyalist Democrats, firm in the saddle during the closing hours of the state Democratic convention, certified United States Rep. Lyndon B. Johnson as the winner over former Gov. Coke Stevenson in the Aug. 28 primary run-off election.

Wed 9-15-48

House Cleaned

When the loyalists cleaned house by firing five Democratic presidential electors on grounds of disloyalty. The insurgent States Righters found the door out easily—some by invitation, others of their own free will.

Certification of Johnson, 40-year-old congressman from Austin, left Stevenson out in the cold after 30 years of political life in which he had not lost an election. Johnson won the nomination—tantamount to election—by 87 votes of the 1,000,000 cast.

Columbia S.C.

But Stevenson's attorneys weren't through. They said they would continue their battle for his election on grounds of vote fraud in several counties.

Only a few "no" votes were sounced during Johnson's certification by voice vote. Some mild boos were heard also.

Johnson pledged that as Senator "I shall support Truman and Barkley."

President Truman's followers recommended that the National Democratic executive committee replace Wright Morrow of Houston, present Texas national committeeman, with Bryon Skelton of Temple, who masterminded the loyalist convention fight.

Morrow had been elected at the state convention in May which took cracks at the President but since then had declared himself as loyal to the regular party's candidates.

John C. Calhoun of Corsicana was named to succeed R W. Calvert as chairman of the state executive committee. Calvert had declined the nomination for reelection.

Insurgents from Harris, Dallas and Tarrant counties—the State's most populous—lost their fight to have the name of Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina substituted on the ballot for Mr. Truman's.

Harris county's delegation from the Houston area was forced out of the coyention. Dallas and Tarrant county (Fort Worth) followed. As result, the Shelby, Cook and Gregg county delegations walked out voluntarily and a few minutes later the Harrison county group followed.

Wed 9-15-48

As the Dixiecrats left the Will Rodgers auditorium, their seats were filled by pro-Truman Democrats. The insurgents hiked out flying Thurmond campaign banners.

R. W. Milner, Jr., leader of the insurgents, said their rejection proved that the state convention was "just a repetition" of the national party's meeting at Philadelphia.

Vote Proposal Of Dixiecrats Loses In Texas

The Courier Journal
Louisville, Ky.

Austin, Tex., Aug. 9 (AP)—The State Democratic Executive Committee today certified the names of President Truman and Senator Barkley as party nominees for President and Vice-President over protests of the Texas Diviecrats.

At the same time the executive committee rejected a Dixiecrat demand that it submit a referendum on the issue to party voters in the August 28 primary.

The vote was 42 to 18 to table a resolution providing for the referendum. Tues 8-10-48

Authority Is Questioned.

Opponents—the so-called Loyalist Party faction headed by Governor Beauford H. Jester—argued the committee had no authority to submit such a referendum and that it was part of a scheme to disrupt the party. They said this would lead to destruction of the two-party system.

Proponents centered their arguments on contentions the Truman civil-rights proposals were aimed at destruction of the Southern social system and the party's long-standing principles. Democratic voters of the state should have an opportunity to speak directly on the issue, they argued.

The States'-Rights Democrats, or Dixiecrats, wanted the committee to authorize a separate ballot on this question:

"For J. Strom Thurmond and Fielding S. Wright as the nominees of the Democratic Party for President and Vice-President respectively. 8-10-48

Choice By Voters Proposed.

"For Harry S. Truman and Alben W. Barkley as the nominees of the Democratic Party for President and Vice-President respectively."

The voters would have been instructed to scratch one.

Proponents of the referendum sharply criticized Jester as having helped to start the Dixiecrat omvement, then having changed to the side of Truman.

The Dixiecrats announced they would carry the fight to the September 14 convention at Fort Worth.

OBVIOUSLY, the brazen proposal of Virginia's Governor William M. Tuck is aimed at President Truman. As chastisement of the Chief Executive for his espousal of civil rights legislation it undoubtedly is unmoral. But there is nothing illegal or novel about it. 3-13-48

The framers of the Constitution contemplated that electors, no matter the manner in which they were selected, would choose the President and Vice President. They believed this method superior to the election of the President by any pre-existing body or the people.

Norfolk, Va.

GOVERNOR TUCK PROPOSED that the General Assembly change the state's elections laws so as to eliminate the names of all presidential and vice presidential candidates from the ballot. There would be listed, by party affiliation, only the names of presidential and vice presidential electors. The presidential electors, unbound to any candidate, would vote as instructed by state party leaders. 3-13-48

Other southern states were urged to take similar action. The purpose is either to force President Truman to abandon his civil rights program or to throw the election of a President and Vice President into the House of Representatives. Dat.

By clause 3, section 1, Article 2, of the Constitution, and by the Twelfth Amendment which superseded that clause, in case no nominee receives a majority of the electoral votes, the House of Representatives is to choose the President, and "the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote." Two-thirds of the total membership of the House shall constitute a quorum, and a majority of all the states is necessary to a choice.

* * *

IF THE HOUSE FAILS to make a choice before January 20, then the Vice President shall act as President. But if no candidate for Vice President receives a majority of the electoral votes, the Senate shall choose the Vice President. A quorum for this purpose shall consist of two-thirds of the entire Senate membership, and a majority of the whole membership shall be necessary to a choice. 3-13-48

State legislatures have the exclusive authority to prescribe the method of choosing electors. Various methods have been used. Electors have been elected by the legislature itself on joint ballot, by the legislature through a concurrent vote of the two vote for representation in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a state, or the members of a state legislature.

Inasmuch as President Truman's civil rights program, so largely affecting the liberties of colored people, is the target of Governor Tuck and other southern politicians, it seems that it would be appropriate for colored people to insist that the Congress take appropriate action to carry into effect the penalty provision of the Fourteenth Amendment.

Reduction of southern representation in Congress would also reduce the number of electors to which the South is entitled since the Constitution provides that the number of electors shall be equal to the number of Senators and Representatives to which the several states are by law entitled at the time when the President and Vice President to be chosen come into office.

houses, by vote of the people for a general ticket, by vote of the people in districts, by choice partly by the people voting in districts and partly by the legislature, by choice by the legislature from candidates voted for by the people in districts.

The second section of the Fourteenth Amendment provides that if the right to vote is denied or abridged to any male inhabitant of the state having attained majority, and being a citizen of the United States, then the basis of representation to which each state is entitled in the Congress shall be proportionately reduced. 3-13-48

WHENEVER PRESIDENTIAL electors are selected by popular vote, and that is the method now generally used, the right to vote cannot be denied or abridged without invoking the penalty provided in the Fourteenth Amendment.' That also holds true in regard to the right to

VA Democrats See Civil Rights As 'Slavery for Whites'

Commentator

Richmond - (ANP) - By a peculiar twist of logic and slave psychology Virginia white Democrats see in the civil rights prograr for Negroes the enslavement of the white population. The logic is if Negroes enjoy civil rights, whites will be slaves.

This kind of appeal that white leaders made last week at the Virginia Democratic State Convention. The keynote speaker assaidel President Truman's civil right program as a "hydra-headed" federal bureaucracy. . leading the 48 states and their people into bondage."

The warning was uttered by W. Taylor Murphy, of Warsawo wh added: 'The ilusion of additional civil rights is what the program offers. Control of the American people is what the program seeks.

A Fair Proposal Of Virginia Origin

Journal & Guide

THE Newport News Daily Press comments favorably on a proposal presented recently to the Democratic City Committee that it amend its bylaws to admit Negro Democrats to membership. In the course of its favorable comment, the Daily Press strikes a note which should be taken seriously to heart by the leaders of the present southern political upheaval when it says:

> With the last twenty years or so there has-been a material change in this (the Negro's exclusive allegiance to the Republican Party). Negroes have begun to divide, naturally, on political issues just as their white fellow citizens do. The Negro vote has played a part in more than one Democratic victory in recent years, and for the South, several judicial decisions have compelled admission of Negroes to Democratic Party primary polls. If the Negro plays any genuine part in deciding elections, he has a right to consultation in Party councils.
> Dat. 3-20-48
> Even more important than this is the influence such a shift in committee policy will have on the amicable feeling between the two races. Race relations in Newport News and vicinity are unusually good, although there have been occasions when they were in danger. This is not a question of segregation in the sense of separating the two races; a thing that to a degree is automatic anyway (in public gatherings) may well contribute to the inner comfort of both. It is more a question of one race deciding for the other what is good for it and acting accordingly; and that is not democracy.

One thing that has dogged the lives of Negroes in the South, particularly in the lower South, has been the matter on which the Newport News paper placed its finger, to wit, that the race question in the South is "more a question of one race deciding for the other what is good for it and acting accordingly." The Daily Press goes on to say "that is not democracy."

The assumption on the part of those in political control in the South in a vast majority of cases, has been that whatever has been done to strip Negroes of civil rights has been good for both the Negro and the South. In that respect, the misguided political leaders have not taken into consideration the elements of human nature, nor equity, justice, and the basic human rights.

If every community in the South would decide for itself to consider Negroes an integral part of their political and economic life and act accordingly, the causes for racial friction and unpleasant race relations would quickly disappear. Dat. 3-20-48

Without making any fuss about the matter, Negroes have been serving on the Norfolk City Democratic Committee for several years. This committee started out by accepting one Negro to membership and this membership has now grown to four. Many other fair considerations in its political life of the community have ben given Negroes in Norfolk and these have minimized unpleasant race relations during recent years. Except in the minds of the uninformed, there is no real excitement here about what would happen if Negroes voted more freely, if generally obnoxious segregation laws on public carriers were repealed, and if equal educational facilities were provided. There is also a growing disposition here, although it is not very articulate, to give Negroes better economic opportunities. If this is being done in Norfolk it can be done in every city in Virginia, and eventually in every city in the South.

Virginia Likely To Go Republican

Montgomery, Ala.

By MARQUIS CHILDS

WASHINGTON.

VIRGINIA is one of the most beautiful States in the Union. Next month the dogwood will come out, and the Virginia bluebells and garden week will draw tourists from all over to view the stately homes and generous gardens of the past.

Walking between the rows of fragrant boxwood, driving through the green and rolling country, the visitor will have a feeling that he is in a museum. And he will be right. Fri. 3-12-48

The past is well preserved in Virginia. That goes for the political as well as the architectural past. The homes of the great men who founded this republic have been tenderly restored and protected. But the creative force of the ideas they gave to the world, the stir and the spark of their creative imagination, is also kept behind glass—carefully locked and only a little dry with age.

Democracy in Virginia is in the custody of a few men who are prepared to tell the people what they can and cannot do. The most remarkable example in recent times was the proposal put up to the legislature by Gov. William M. Tuck.

Under that proposal, the voters of Virginia would not vote for a man for president. When they put their X in the Democratic column, as the majority of Virginians traditionally do, they would be handing the right of choice to the State Democratic organization. The party organization, in a state convention, would select the man for whom the State's 11 electoral votes would be cast.

No one in that State nominating convention would have any doubt about the man who would be chosen. It would be Sen. Harry F. Byrd, who is the boss of Virginia's Democratic machine.

THE country has heard a lot about "Boss" Hague, of Jersey City; "Boss" Kelly, of Chicago, and the late "Boss" Pendergast, of Kansas City. But the masters of city political machines could learn a lot in Virginia. 3-12-48

The controls are not exercised in the same way, of course. It is quieter and much more polite. Nevertheless, the courthouse rings that make up the Byrd machine form just as tight an organization as was ever put together in the crowded river wards on the other side of the railroad tracks in any American city you care to name, not excluding Kansas City.

Gov. Tuck's proposal was not well received. Its crudity stirred wide indignation. Many newspapers in Virginia were critical. Sen. Byrd let it be known that he had not seen the Tuck proposal before it was put to the legislature.

A compromise has been advanced which is likely to be adopted. Under the compromise, the label of the "Democratic Party" will be reserved for the State organization. But by obtaining a thousand signatures to petitions, the Truman Democrats can also get on the ballot. They will, however, have to use another tag, such as "National Democrats."

This means that Virginia voters would have a choice between Sen. Byrd and President Truman. But inasmuch as only a thousand signatures are necessary to put a candidate on the ballot, they will undoubtedly also have a chance to vote for Henry Wallace. As in other years, the name of the Republican candidate will also be on the ballot.

The Advertiser

THIS is an extraordinary advance in democracy. As a result, Virginia is likely to go Republican in November. That is the guess of some observers who, it should be said, are not admirers of the Byrd machine. Their reasoning sounds plausible. Many Virginia Democrats are resentful of the tactics of the machine. Therefore they will not vote for Sen. Byrd. But because of the antogonism stirred by the President's civil rights program, they will vote for a Republican rather than for Mr. Truman, particularly if the Republicans nominate a strong candidate such as Sen. Arthur H. Vandenberg, of Michigan. Montgomery, Ala.

Herbert Hoover carried Virginia in 1928 by 24,463 votes. Four years ago, when sentiment against Roosevelt and a fourth term was running strong, the Republicans got 145,000 votes to 242,000 for the Democrats. While the Wallace vote in Virginia is likely to be small, concentrated in the area around Washington where New Deal contamination is high, it could count in a close election. Fri. 3-12-48

This kind of political calculation does not have the sound of the generous past. The spirit of that great Virginia, Thomas Jefferson, must at times be a little troubled. It might be nice to keep Virginia as a museum, beautiful, intact, untouchable. But that is hardly possible with the winds of change that are blowing across the world today. As Jefferson knew so well, history never stands still.

Anti-Truman Bill Advances In Virginia

The Courier-Journal

Louisville, Ky.

Senate O.K.'s Measure, Sends It to House

Sat. 3-13-48

By the Associated Press.

The Virginia Senate yesterday passed by a vote of 29 to 10 an amended version of Governor William M. Tuck's anti-Truman bill. The measure now goes to the House of delegates for concurrence in Senate amendments.

The vote was taken after an hour-long speech by Senator Lloyd M. Robinette, who pleaded for defeat and implored his colleagues to let the State settle its differences within the Democratic Party.

Can Name Own Candidate.

The bill will permit the Virginia Democratic Party to name its own candidate for President. President Truman, if nominated, could appear on the ballot as candidate of the "National Democratic Party" or some other name besides "Democratic Party."

Governor Tuck proposed the law as an answer to President Truman's civil-rights program. Senator Robert C. Vaden urged Senate adoption to halt a federal invasion of States' rights.

The Courier-Journal

Frank R. Kent, on the Editorial Page, and Drew Pearson, on the back page of Section 2, discuss Truman's situation.

Louisville, Ky.

In Washington, the Democratic Party's National Executive Committee decided to fight its presidential campaign on two issues: "Peace and Prices." Sat.

And from one Southerner came a prediction the Solid South would line up behind the party candidate as usual, despite the civil-rights quarrelings. 3-13-48

Truman Reply Pleases.

Mrs. Lennard Thomas of Montgomery, Ala., said she was "perfectly satisfied" with an answer President Truman gave her on the controversy and added:

"We're going to stand together and work for a Democratic victory."

Frank McHale, Indiana committeeman, said no official action on the issue was taken because "the voice of the party is its convention." 3-13-48

The convention will be held in Philadelphia in July.

"We are certain that the mass of the people will make any sacrifice for peace," McHale said. "The Republicans have missed the boat on the high-cost-of-living issue. They are putting up a tax reduction as a panacea for all the ills of the world."

President Questioned.

The Courier-Journal

Mrs. Thomas, Alabama's Democratic national committeewoman, said she asked Truman at a White House luncheon yesterday: "Can I go back and tell my people you are not going to tear up our social structure in the South and that you are everybody's President?"

She said he answered by reading to her his civil-rights message to Congress and added to her:

"I do not take back one word I've said. I stand on the Constitution of the United States. I'm everybody's President."

She said she found nothing in his message indicating it is planned to force anti-segregation upon the South.

Va. Delegates Mute on Plans

Washington [illegible]

Fri. 7-16-48

Philadelphia, July 15 (AP).—Virginia Democrats headed for home today still officially silent about the outcome of the party's national convention and their plans for November.

Pledged to fight against any candidate espousing enactment of Federal civil rights laws, they were left without a candidate for the Presidency by the convention's nomination of President Truman.

Gov. William M. Tuck declined any comment on future plans and specifically on whether the Old Dominion organization would take part in a rump convention called to meet in Birmingham, Ala., Saturday to nominate a States' rights candidate for the Presidency.

Close associates of the Governor said privately, however, that he would have nothing to do with the Birmingham convention. They doubted that any members of the Virginia organization headed by Senator Harry F. Byrd would attend.

One other course remained open, but there was no indication it would be followed.

The State convention might be recalled. This could be done under a resolution adopted at its regular session. This permits such a recall by a two thirds vote of the State central committee. But no one was willing to guess what a recalled session would do in the circumstances.

Virginia And Truman

The News

Despite the efforts of the States' Rights Democrats, the electoral votes of the Old Dominion State probably will go this Fall to President Truman and Sen. Alben Barkley. 8-26-48

The situation in Virginia has not fully resolved itself, just as it has not in most Southern states, but the present indications are that the state's 11 Democratic electors will string along with the national Democratic ticket. Before the States' Rights ticket had arisen, Virginia's electors were pledged in convention to vote for the nominee of the National Democratic Convention. Although it is theoretically possible to call another state convention and change the instructions, the state party chairman has said he will not call a meeting of the central committee in time to hold a convention.

There is still a chance that Thurmond-Wright electors will get on the ballot as independents, in which case the Democratic vote will be split. The state's electoral vote may thus go Republican, since the GOP got 37.5 per cent of the major party vote in 1944. The News

This refusal of the Democratic leadership in Virginia to go along with the Thurmond-Wright group is another sign of the fact that there are many Southern Democrats who think that the best interests of their states lie in loyalty to the national Democratic Party rather than in lining up with the States' Rights group.

Birmingham, Ala.

The South is not standing solidly behind the ticket named at the Birmingham emotion-charged rally. What is taking place in Virginia is only one sign. Another is the fact that the meeting to be held in Birmingham in the interests of getting Truman-Barkley electors on the Alabama ticket will be addressed by Rep. Estes Kefauver, brilliant Tennessee congressman who recently won that state's nomination for senator over the hitherto dominant Crump machine. Tennessee's Democratic electors are also expected to vote for Truman. 8-26-48

Virginia Democratic Leaders Override Liberal Element In Party

Journal & Guide
Norfolk, Va.

CONSIDERING how Virginians and other southerners have been agitated by the proposal of President TRUMAN that this nation extend a larger measure of civil rights to all of its citizens, it was not surprising that the Virginia State Democratic Convention devoted most of its time and its platform to the party organization's stand on states rights, anti-lynching, anti-poll tax, fair employment practices, segregation of the races and federal grants-in-aid legislation.

Sat 7-10-48

The emphasis on the race question was more pronounced than in any assemblage of Virginia politicians since the convention in 1902 which re-wrote the State Constitution in order to limit education of Negroes and to eliminate their exercise of the franchise.

The state convention revived the issues of the Civil War. That war was fought on the issue of "states rights," which was a device used to cover up the real issue, which was slavery. The present frantic and hysterical agitation of the so-called "states rights" principle is an effort to cover the politicians desire to continue to nullify the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution of the United States which are just as much a part of the Constitution as any other part. The platform adopted by the convention suggested revolt not only against the President and the Congress, but against the Federal Judiciary.

All the hysterics about "states rights" is pure political bunkum. The politicians are just ashamed to reveal themselves as Negro-baiters in the eyes of the world. They use the fictitious issue of "states rights" in order to achieve what they really want to do—keep colored citizens of Virginia and of the South from achieving first-class citizenship and a higher standard of living.

The prize piece of political manipulation was brought forward by Norfolk's senator, EDWARD L. BREEDEN, and Norfolk's former senator, JAMES HOGE TYLER, III, in a resolution repudiating the civil rights proposals. These gentlemen repeated the fiction advanced by Governor TUCK that "after years of patience, education and mutual effort on the part of all races, all are now living together in Virginia and elsewhere in our nation with an amity and forbearance heretofore unknown in the annals of history." They also incorporated in their resolutions the statement that the proposed civil rights laws were "designed to abolish and destroy the barriers of segregation and social division long recognized by the responsible leadership of all races to be most conducive to the maintenance of peaceable and friendly relations." (Italics ours.)

THE apparent amity and forbearance is due to a natural instinct of Negroes. It is natural and cultivated and practiced in the same manner that a bank teller behaves who is confronted with a highwayman who pokes a gun at him and tells him to hand over the money. The only thing that has come out of the South's rank system of discrimination and injustice over the past three-quarters of a century is a cultivated state of forbearance and tolerance on the part of southern Negroes.

There is not a "responsible Negro leader" in the South in any position whatsoever who would dare come out publicly and say that he is satisfied with the present conditions, or that he believes any considerable number of other Negroes are satisfied with existing conditions.

In an effort to make their inhumane position appear reasonable the southerners have misrepresented the Negro leadership of the South and of the country, and by using the press, the radio, and in recent months, particularly, the widely circulated magazines, have tried to create the impression in the rest of the country that Negroes in the South are satisfied with conditions as they are. This has been a huge measure of deception plus a real desire to do something to ease their burning consciences in the face of their cruelty and political mayhem.

If anybody in either race can honestly make out a good case for satisfactory and really fair and just relations between the races in this tragic era of denial of opportunity for education, for a chance at good health, for a chance at good housing, for a chance at jobs at fair wages; of sustained and studied determination to undignify human personality in the Negro race; of sustained and determined efforts to create in the minds of people in other sections of the country the false impression that

Negroes were made by God in one stereotype, and that God did not intend for them to enjoy the fruits of good living on this earth as he intended other men to do, such a person could with his tongue and pen bring together in brotherly love and goodwill JOSEPH STALIN and the members of the Congressional Committee on Un-American Activities.

The Virginia State Convention followed the example of Georgia and other southern states in starting a boom for General EISENHOWER as the nominee of the Democratic Party for the presidency. We may be mistaken, but we do not believe that General EISENHOWER will permit himself to be used as the instrument of a southern rebellion against human justice and democracy. If General EISENHOWER accepts the Democratic nomination, knowing that he is being thus drafted, he will deserve to be defeated as he no doubt will be.

Richmond Lawyer Plans to Challenge Seating Of Virginia's Delegation at Philadelphia

The Post Washington, D.C.
3 Tues

By a Post Reporter

Philadelphia, July 12.—Martin A. Hutchinson, Richmond, Va., lawyer, arrived here today to challenge the seating of the Virginia delegation to the Democratic national convention.

Hutchinson said he will ask the conventions credentials committee Tuesday to insist that Virginia's delegates be required to pledge support for whatever candidates the convention nominates.

As things stand now, Virginia's State Democratic convention has held the door open for a bolt from President Truman in November and the State central committee, by two thirds vote can reconvene the State convention after the national presidential ticket is picked and the convention then could instruct Virginia's presidential electors to cast their ballots for different candidates than these picked by the national convention.

Hutchinson will urge that Virginia's present delegates now solidly in the anti-Truman camp be accredited to the convention only if they sign a pledge saying: "I promise on my honor to support all the nominees of said (Democratic) party at the next ensuing general election.

The pledge is like the one which county and city Democratic committees in Virginia can require of delegates to a State convention.

Hutchinson, in 1946, sought to capture the seat of United States Senator Harry F. Byrd (D., Va.) and lost. He was a leader in the fight against Virginia's new election law put through this year as a move against President Trman. Appearing with Hutchinson at the credentials committee meeting will be Henry H. Fowler, lawyer, of Alexandria, Va.

Meanwhile, Virginia's delegates found a new wrinkle for getting friends into the convention hall.

They elected four Virginians to be honorary officials of the convention, including the resident manager of their headquarters, Benjamin Franklin Hotel, Joseph E. Mears, formerly of Hampton, Va.

Washington, D.C.

Mears was chosen honorary vice president of the convention, a job that entitles him to a badge of admission. The election went to him after Senator A. Willis Robertson (D., Va.) who has a badge, withdrew his nomination for the honorary post.

The Post

Other Virginia delegation officials chosen at a morning causus in the Benjamin Franklin were: Governor William M. Tuck, chairman; State Senator Garland Gray, of Sussex, vice chairman; Archie C. Berkeley, of Richmond, secretary; John J. Wicker, jr., Richmond, and Mrs. George W. Blow, of York County, members of the convention resolutions committee State Senator M. M. Long, of Wise County, credentials committee; Alec H. Bell, of Norfolk, committee on permanent organization; State Senator E. B. BBlackburn Moore, of Clarke on rules.

Tues.

A feature of the meeting was Governor Tuck's reminder to the delegates that they were instructed to vote against any presidential candidate who has espoused a civil rights program. With this instruction in the background, there was a big laugh when Tuck announced that nominations were open for membership on the committee to notify the presidential nominee. D. Lane Elder of Hopewell got the assignment; State Senator Raymond R. Guest, of Warren County, was assigned to the cmomittee to notify the vice presidential nominee.

Other honorary convention officials: Mrs. Floyd Holloway, of Yorktown, honorary assistant vice president; Hugh O. Colbourn, Waverly, Va., honorary secretary; and Mrs. Margaret P. Evans, Rocky Mount, honorary assistant secretary.

6,000 Pick So. Carolinian With Mississippi's Gov. Wright as Running Mate

By David McConnell
A Staff Correspondent

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., July 17.—Southern Democrats, in an uproarious anti-Truman convention here today, unanimously nominated Governor J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina as their "states' rights" Presidential candidate in a move admittedly designed to insure the defeat of President Truman.

The 6,000 Southerners from thirteen states also unanimously named Governor Fielding Wright of Mississippi as the Vice-Presidential nominee. Throughout the earlier portion of the convention it had been reported Governor Wright would head the ticket.

Governor Thurmond and Governor Wright were placed in nomination at 5:44 p. m., when Horce Wilkinson, Alabama Presidential elector, introduced a resolution calling for the South to support them.

Sun.

While the resolution in effect places a fourth party—the States Rights party—in the 1948 Presidential campaign, leaders of the movement said election laws in the various states would make it difficult to conduct an orthodox party campaign. Some were inclined to consider the move behind the two Governors as an indorsement rather than a nomination.

7-18-48

Mr. Wilkinson's resolution stressed that the anti-Truman group would seek to persuade all the South to bolt Mr. Truman and cast their electoral votes for the Thurmond-Wright ticket.

In a bid for other dissenting Democrats to join the anti-Truman move, the convention adopted unanimously a resolution to hold another "states rights" meeting Oct. 1 in Birmingham. The resolution called for invitations to be sent to Democratic party organizations in every state.

Both Governor Thurmond and Governor Wright have been leaders of the anti-Truman movement since the President advanced his ten-point civil rights program early this year. Governor Thurmond, forty-five years old and a veteran of World War II, was keynoter at the May 10 "states' rights" meeting at Jackson, Miss., when the anti-Truman revolt took form. Governor Wright, fifty-three, was host at the meeting.

In his Mississippi inaugural address on Jan. 20 Governor Wright became the first Southern Governor to attack President Truman for his stand on civil rights. In February Governor Wright made the initial move to call for a revolt of Southern Governors against the Administration.

Demonstration Greets Them

Weary delegates broke into a wild demonstration and invaded the speakers' platform with their flags and state signs when Governors Thurmond and Wright appeared at the convention at 6:50 p. m. to accept the nomination.

Introduced as the "next Vice-President of the United States,' Governor Wright asserted that "there are some people in the United States who say we aren't Democrats gathered here today.'

He added: "I say we are the Democrats.

"We have been called rebels and boasters, we will be called many things before this fight is over, but no Southerner is ever afraid to take sides for a principle. Those who believed we would never be able to carry this fight on to a successful conclusion are beginning to tremble.

"We will not, we will not turn back. This is the South's big opportunity to show that we are the Democratic party."

Following the acceptance procedure established at the Philadelphia convention of the Democrats, Governor Thurmond followed the Vice-Presidential nominee to tell the cheering throng that "no true Southerner can fail to answer the call of his people."

Charges Betrayal by Truman

Herald Tribune

"A great beginning has been made in our fight for state sovereignty," he said. "We have just begun to fight. If the South should vote for Truman this year, then we might as well petition the government to give us colonial status.

"He (President Truman) betrayed the South. We Southerners are going to cast our vote for candidates who are true believers of states' government. For our loyalty to the party we have been stabbed in the back by a President who in his mad desire to win has betrayed every principle of the Democratic party."

New York, N.Y.

The one-day convention opened this morning with adoption of a declaration of principles calling upon "all Democrats and upon all loyal Americans who are opposed to totalitarianism at home and abroad to unite with us in ignominiously defeating Harry S. Truman and Thomas E. Dewey, and every other candidate for public office who would establish a police state in the United States of America."

Sun. 7-18-48

Delegates stomped and shouted approval each time speakers condemned the President or assailed the strong civil rights plank adopted by the Democrats. Confederate flags outnumbered those of the United States, and one delegate paraded about the hall holding aloft a framed picture of General Robert E. Lee.

As the rump session developed it appeared certain that anti-Truman forces may be able to divert between twenty and thirty electoral votes from the President.

Mississippi to Divert 9

Mississippi's nine votes in the Electoral College, the vehicle by which the President is officially chosen, will not support Mr. Truman, according to Governor Wright. Alabama's eleven electors signed pledges never to vote for Mr. Truman. A scattered ten other electors from Southern states also have indicated they might withold votes or cast them as designated by the convention here.

The convention opened this morning with a prayer by the Rev. John H. Buchanan, of the Birmingham South Side Baptist Church. He called for the delegates to "purge from our hearts all prejudice" and gave thanks to God for "our heritage of our forefathers."

Eugene C. Connor, Police Commissioner of Birmingham and one of the thirteen Alabama delegates to bolt the Philadelphia convention, rose to assert that if "Al Capone hadn't been dead the Democrats would have had him on the platform." Thirteen of the Alabama delegation remained at the Philadelphia meeting.

Walter Sellers, of Rosedale, Miss., Speaker of the Mississippi House of Representatives, struck the keynote of the convention when he told cheering delegates that "we are here to preserve our Southern way of life, customs and traditions." Saying that the Philadelphia convention "betrayed the true principles of the Democratic party," Mr. Sellers asserted that "we of the South will not yield to pressure of politicians and office holders" to support President Truman.

Segregation Policy Upheld

The session took on the color of a revival meeting when Frank M. Dixon, former Governor of Alabama, shouted that "we've been sold down the river." He said that the strong civil-rights plank adopted by the Democrats was "aimed at us and at securing Negro votes in doubtful states."

"Segregation is our way of life," Mr. Dixon said. Recommending that the Southern states combine behind a "true Democrat," the Alabaman said "maybe we'll take the South and the Republicans the North and then where will the Democratic party be?"

Assailing those Southern Democrats who have refused to join the anti-Truman drive, former Governor Dixon asserted that "some office holders are more afraid of losing their jobs and patronage than following the will of the people."

The assertion touched off a twelve - minute demonstration sparked mostly by students from numerous Southern universities. Delegates were seated merely by registering with the committee. University of Mississippi and University of Virginia students led the parading delegates in singing "Dixie" while the entire parading conventon kept chanting "Down With Truman" and "We want Dixie."

7-18-48

Governor Folsom Present

The convention proceedings frequetly were interrupted when such Southern politicians as William (Alfalfa Bill) Murray, former Governor of Oklahoma appeared. When Alabama's Governor James E. Folsom, 6 feet 8 inches tall, entered the auditorium he was greeted by boos as well as cheers from the audience.

Sun

Governor Folsom, appearing as an observer, told the session he hoped their fight would improve "local states' rights" government. He cited a Federal investigation of his use of National Guard aircraft as "just another invasion of states' rights."

7-18-48

Typical of the oratory which brought loud shouts of approval was a short talk by former Governor Murray.

PARTY NAME IS CHOSEN

Thurmond And Wright Will Accept Action Of Birmingham Convention At Texas-Wide Rally On Aug. 11

By BEM PRICE
Associated Press Staff Writer

ATLANTA, July 24.—The States' Rights Democrats Saturday decided to enter a presidential ticket in all the states of the Nation.

The action was announced in a formal statement released through George McNabb, press secretary to Gov. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, after a strategy meeting here.

Thurmond was recommended at the Birmingham States' Rights Convention July 17 to carry the South's fight on civil rights against President Truman. His running mate, selected at the Birmingham meeting, is Gov. Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi.

"Expects To Be Elected"

The committee's announcement said the decision to campaign in all states was to give "millions of real Americans the opportunity of voting for these candidates, and to preserve our American way of Government according to our Federal and state constitutions."

Shortly after the announcement, Governor Thurmond said, "We are running for President and expect to be elected." He said he would make his first speech at Cherryville, S. C., July 31 at the Watermelon Festival.

7-25-48

The Governor also disclosed that the party's official title, adopted Saturday, is "States' Rights Democrats."

He told reporters "We are not running on a white supremacy, racial hatred or class prejudice platform. We are running primarily on the issue of States' Rights."

The 46-year-old Governor was asked how he expected to finance the campaign and he observed that they expected contributions from supporters of the States' Rights principle.

One reporter asked if he had heard the rumor that oil companies were backing the movement. He said he had not heard of any such thing "and not a dime has passed through my hands."

Thurmond, asked to assess his chances of victory, replied, "we expect to carry most, if not all, the Southern states."

The States' Rights Steering Committee said the Democratic Conventions of South Carolina and Mississippi are being reconvened shortly to pledge support in the presidential race to their respective governors.

The Mississippi Convention is being called back into session Aug. 3. The date of the South Carolina session was not announced.

Merritt H. Gibson of Longview, Texas, former Gregg County judge, said Thurmond and Wright would accept action of the Birmingham convention at a statewide rally at Houston Aug. 11.

Memphis Tenn.

Closed Session Held

Saturday's meeting was a closed session. It served, however, to emphasize that most of the support for the States' Rights movement is coming from Alabama, Mississippi and South Carolina.

Sun.

The South's revolt started when President Truman recommended passage of a civil rights program which asked for a Fair Employment Practices Commission, an end to segregation and the poll tax and a Federal antilynch law.

When the national party platform included these aims of the President over the South's objections, half the Alabama delegation left the National Convention and all the Mississippi delegation walked out.

The result was a call by Wright for the Birmingham convention. Other states with representatives were Florida, Louisiana, Arkansas and Texas.

States' Righters To Carry Fight Into All States

New York, N.Y.

Thurmond to Accept at Big Texas Rally; Place To Be Sought on All Ballots

Special to the Herald Tribune

ATLANTA, July 24.—States rights Democrats decided in closed session here Saturday to wage their fight against President Truman's civil rights program throughout the entire United States. Mon.

Virtually becoming a new national party, the group announced that Governor J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina and Governor Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi would be notified of their nomination for President and Vice-Persident at a mammoth rally Aug. 11 in Houston, Tex. 7-26-48

The dissenting Southern Democrats, who assembled from seven states, voted to enter the names of Governors Thurmond and Wright as candidates in all forty-eight states. Plans will be worked out later, they said, for getting the names on the ballots—the procedures being different in the various states.

Governor Thurmond, meeting reporters after the four-and-one-half-hour session of the organization's steering committee, said he was running for President "with the expectation of winning." He predicted he would carry most, if not all, of the Southern states.

The States' Rights Democrats, who officially adopted that name Saturday, expect to concentrate their opening guns on Texas's twenty-six electoral votes.

According to Judge Merritt Gibson, of Longview, Tex., who attended Saturday's meeting, the Texas States' Rights organization first will seek to obtain a referendum Aug. 14 to permit the people to decide whether States' Rights candidates' names will go on the ballot for the Aug. 28 primary. If that fail, he said, the group will seek to persuade the state Democratic convention at a meeting Sept. 14 to declare Governors Thurmond and Wright the state party's nominees. 7-26-48

Although the steering committee meeting was held in Atlanta, no Georgia delegate was present. Attending were thirty representatives, from Alabama, Mississippi, South Carolina, Florida, Arkansas, Texas and Louisiana.

The states' Righters were greeted by an editorial Saturday morning in "The Atlanta Constitution" which urged them to drop their organized fight and "return to the party and assist it in a united effort to present the most effective protest which may now be made."

"That protest," the paper said, "should be made within the party by each state offering a slate of independent Democratic electors, along with the Truman slate, so that the people may choose." 7-26-48

Governor Thurmond said that a campaign committee would be named soon and that permanent campaign headquarters would be established, mostly likely in the South. Jackson, Miss., was a site suggested by conference delegates.

Governor Thurmond said he would continue to do his work as Governor of South Carolina while running for President.

"I imagine," he said, "that I can do it as well as Governor Dewey and Governor Warren."

Mississippi Denounces Truman's Orders

The Call

Kansas City, Mo.

JACKSON, Miss. — (ANP) — The President is willing to gamble the welfare of the American people for political expediency, Gov. Fielding Wright of Mississippi and vice-Presidential candidate of the Dixiecrats, said last week after hearing of the President's two orders establishing fair employment practices in federal agencies and equal opportunity for all members of the armed services.

Governor Wright said:

"It was clearly demonstrated at the Philadelphia convention that neither he nor the leaders of the administration hesitate to gamble the national welfare for political expediency." Fri.

Speaking of the armed forces order he said: 8-6-48

"All military men of prominence and ability have advised against this step. It is recognized that what the President has now decreed will inevitably result in destroying the greatest fighting force in the world.

"His order decreeing FEPC in all government agencies, bureaus, departments and offices is but another tragic capitulation to minority and radical group pressure."

the outcome of their intensive operation.

A great many Southerners unquestionably have become deeply incensed over the civil rights plank of the Democratic national platform, put in place after a close fight as a climactic and specific endorsement of the Truman proposals in this field.

The uncompromising stand taken by some Southern delegates in opposition to those proposals intensified the dissension within the party and helped to put an acceptable compromise beyond reach. Former Gov. Sparks and others made valiant and long-sustained efforts to that end but they failed.

The successful fight for amendment of the plank on the floor was an unnecessary and bitterly divisive aggravation of the battle. The walkout of Mississippi and half of Alabama's delegates followed. Otherwise the Birmingham meeting might never have developed—at least not in the form and spirit which it took.

Birmingham, Ala.

The result is a situation that must be disturbing to all Southerners and to the entire nation. Tues. 7-20-48

If efforts now are made in Congress to press for legislation enacting the proposals advanced by Mr. Truman, the fight is sure to be further inflamed. Consequently no one can now say what the effects will be on the voting in the South in November.

The sentiment against Mr. Truman and the extremist wing of the national party has been strengthened. The projected Thurmond-Wright ticket will poll a considerable protest vote as a result. But how many electors will finally cast their ballots for it cannot be foreseen at this stage of a movement that will be influenced by the course of events yet to come.

The Birmingham convention was not, of course, a gathering in which representation was worked out according to careful, comprehensive processes. It was open to all who desired to come. It was directed by a relatively small group of leaders. Tues.

In the meantime, the regular political organizations in some Southern states have yet to determine just what their attitude will be. 7-20-48

If the spirit dominant in the Birmingham meeting spreads in force to other parts of the South, Truman and Barkley may suffer in this region a heavy loss of voters who usually have supported the Democratic national ticket. Whether that would lead to giving these Southern forces the balance of power in the electoral college is, of course, a question, but the possibility inevitably suggests itself.

However that may be, the already strong Republican trend may be so broadened by this division among the Democrats that Dewey and Warren may win an overwhelming victory. Just where that would leave the South and the Democratic Party is a matter for the most careful consideration of all Southerners.

No Predicting On This

Georgia Wisely Stayed Away

Atlanta, Ga.

Georgia's congressional leaders and chief politicians did a good job in restraining some of the wilder heads in the State and keeping them out of the ridiculous mess that developed in Birmingham last weekend. Sens. George and Russell didn't appear. Herman Talmadge and M. E. Thompson refused to attend.

The so-called Dixiecrat convention offers nothing to Georgia, except that its loose morals and chicanery might spread within our borders like an epidemic. The Dixiecrats have nominated a ticket the names on which sound actually funny when mentioned in the same sentence with the words "President of the United States."

So far it looks as though the Dixiecrats will carry three States: Mississippi, in which electors are pledged to vote against Truman; Alabama, although the strong labor vote makes this prediction doubtful; and South Carolina, which may or may not stick with its Governor. Fri. 7-23-48

After a close look the Dixiecrat convention loses what some might consider a desperate air of martyrdom on the cross of States' rights. In the first place, this sudden concern about States' rights seems to have come up just when the Federal Government is thinking about taking over tideland oil deposits. Tideland oil is that petroleum which lies under the selves of land projecting out as the bottom of the Gulf of Mexico. It is conceivable that the expenses of the Dixiecrat conclave and that the guiding spirits are the huge oil interests that cover the underwater oil and other parties who stand to profit in oil through already established channels of personal privilege in State politics. . . .

Gerald Smith Rebuffed Fast By Dixiecrats

Courier Journal

7-20-48

Atlanta, July 19 (U.P.)—The Dixiecrat movement today received—and promptly rejected—the support of Gerald L. K. Smith, national director of the Christian Nationalist Crusade.

Smith, onetime follower of the late Huey P. Long, said he would line up his Crusade behind the Dixie States'-rights ticket because "Our 3,000,000 enrolled followers believe that the Negro and the Jew are exerting too much control in American politics."

Louisville, Ky.

Thurmond Gives Loud "No."

But the Dixiecrats, who put up Governor J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina to oppose President Truman on an anti-civil-rights platform at their Birmingham convention Saturday, gave a loud "No" to Smith's offer.

Thurmond, when he heard of it, said, "We do not invite and we do not need the support of Gerald L. K. Smith."

In Birmingham, Horace Wilkinson, chairman of the Dixiecrats' resolutions committee, said, "We're not going to fool with a bird like Gerald L. K. Smith."

Community Sends $1,500.

The Dixiecrats meanwhile got support of a more welcome sort. The community of Inverness, Miss., notified Governor Fielding Wright of Mississippi, Thurmond's running mate, that a campaign check for $1,500 was on the way.

Wright said that he would confer with Thurmond soon on their plans for bucking the Truman-Barkley ticket. But he said he personally was "very tired" and hoped he would not have to make any campaign speeches.

Real Threat To Democrats Is Seen In Control Of 32 Votes In Electoral College—Both Truman, Dewey Are Ahead In Popular Strength In 13 States

Memphis Tenn

By GEORGE GALLUP

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

PRINCETON, N. J., Aug. 19.—At the start of the campaign the "Dixiecrat" movement has the support of about one voter in seven below the Mason-Dixon line. Fri. 8-20-48

In the first survey to be conducted on the popularity of Gov. J. Strom Thurmond since his nomination for President by the States' Rights Party, Governor Thurmond polls 14 per cent throughout the 13 Southern states as a group.

In terms of popular votes he is topped by both President Truman and Governor Thomas E. Dewey in the South, but the popular vote percentage does not fully indicate the extent of the Thurmond threat to the Democratic party.

Claim 32 Electors

Fri. 8-20-48

Dixiecrat spokesmen claim that 32 electoral votes are already "in the bag" for the States' Rights ticket. These 32 consist of Alabama 11, Mississippi 9, South Carolina 8 and Florida 4 of the state's 8 votes. In those states, the Dixiecrats claim, the Democratic candidates for presidential electors already have pledged themselves to vote against President Truman.

Those 32 electoral votes are votes which the Democrats have always in the past counted on as "absolutely sure" for them. To offset their loss this year President Truman would have to take virtually all the New England states which have a total of 40 electoral votes.

Throughout the South interviewers for the Institute put the following question to Southern voters in a survey begun directly after the formation of the States' Rights Party:

"If the presidential election were being held today how would you vote—for Dewey, for Truman, for Wallace or for Thurmond?"

The results among voters who said they plan to vote in November were: Fri. 8-20-48

SOUTHERN VOTERS

Truman	41%
Dewey	34
Thurmond	14
Wallace	2
No opinion	9

With the no opinion vote eliminated the results are Truman 46 per cent, Dewey 37 per cent, Thurmond 15 per cent and Wallace 2 per cent. Fri. 8-20-48

The 13 Southern states include South Carolina, Georgia, Arkansas, Alabama, Mississippi, Florida, Louisiana, Texas, Virginia, North Carolina, Kentucky, Tennessee and Oklahoma. Thurmond sentiment runs strongest in the first eight, comprising the so-called "deep South."

While the new party plans to make a strong effort to get on the ballot in all Southern states, it remains to be seen how successful this effort will be. Today's poll figures indicate the extent of Thurmond's popular following at the present time assuming he were on the ballot in all states in the South.

Wallace Is Low

Henry A. Wallace's figure of 2 per cent in the South compares with a national Wallace percentage of 5 per cent in the last Institute poll reported Aug. 1. Mr. Wallace plans to invade the South for an intensive campaign tour in early September. Future surveys will indicate whether his campaign efforts increase his popularity below the Mason-Dixon line.

The Dewey figure for the South—37 per cent among those with opinions—is slightly higher than the percentage he polled in the South in 1944 presidential election when he ran against the late Franklin D. Roosevelt. That year Dewey polled 31 per cent of the major party vote in the South.

President Truman's figure of 46 per cent compares with the Roosevelt figure of 69 per cent in the 1944 election. President Truman's percentage in the South is roughly comparable to the 1928 election when Alfred E. Smith, the Democratic candidate, polled 48 per cent. The low Democratic figure this year, however, is not due so much to increased Republican strength as to the split of the Democratic vote between Truman and Thurmond.

Dixiecrats

RALPH McGILL

Yes, But Who Pays for the Band?

The Constitution

Atlanta, Ga.

I always try to see past my nose, and so I do not share the enthusiasm of some of my contemporaries for the Dixiecrat revolt. I have respect for their rights, just as I have contempt for the position of those who hired out to create the Birmingham Convention background, which had only about 2,000 delegates and pretended to be so "Southern" and so "Democratic" when every action it took was dictated from two hotel suites in town. Tue. 8-10-48

It is worth noting that the best newspaper in South Carolina—the Anderson Independent—has thought it over and is against the Dixiecrat movement. The Independent also is trying to see beyond its nose. The fact that South Carolina's Strom Thurmond is a man of character and courage makes it all the more unfortunate. Those persons who originated the Dixiecrats and who ran the Convention from hotel suites don't deserve to have that sort of a front. It is well to keep in mind that as soon as it was practical, those who own the Dixiecrat movement took it back home—to Houston, Texas.

Sabotage The Dixiecrat movement is not a movement to "save" the South. It is a movement to sabotage the Democratic Party at the expense of the South and the South's future. It proceeds with exactly the same sort of mentality and the same sort of phrases as that which took the South into the War Between the States which also was "to save the South."

It has attracted to it sincere persons and it is fronted by a sincere person—Thurmond, of South Carolina. The owners of the Dixiecrats will use him and when done with him, put him aside.

Who owns the Dixiecrats? Well, you can't say because they don't leave the proof to be picked up and printed. But you know.

Atlanta Constitution

Gerald And you can point to Gerald L. K. Smith, who was invited to Birmingham and who said, in so many words, that he was invited there by the three largest contributors and by those who organized it. Gerald is always around where the high dollar is likely to be found, and he was there at the invitation of the three men who had the money to finance the Dixiecrats. They were the same men about whom the speaker was talking at Jackson, who got up and said they would have $500,000 for the new party if they needed it.

And they have moved the Dixiecrats to Houston and the "Convention" to nominate will be held there. That's very fitting. The owners are chiefly Texans.

I am sure if the Dixiecrats get on the ballots in enough States they will carry some States. I am quite aware of the fact they will get a lot of votes from people who think they are voting for their region.

Cynically I know all that. And that is why it makes me sad to see the South's political future carried away by men who will use it cynically. And that is why it sickened me that the Confederate Flag and the tune "Dixie" were much in evidence at Birmingham—on orders from the men who were to pay those bills—and the subsequent bills—and who invited Gerald Smith there. "Play 'Dixie,'" they said, "and keep the suckers happy."

We will pay through the nose for the Dixiecrats—as we still pay for the leadership which took us into the War Between the States to "save us."

Issue What is at issue is States' rights—as guaranteed by the tenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

That's what we are fighting for.

I am for States' rights. It scares me to see more and more centralization of powers in Federal agencies.

But what fools we are to let smart promoters try to smash the two-party system and create a third or fourth party out of Southern Democrats by telling us that's the way to save States' rights.

If we don't want to vote for Truman, then let those who don't vote for Tom Dewey.

Is Harry Truman immortal? Is he going to be the issue every four years? Or is the party or the two-party system one of the two big issues?

Is Truman the issue or the Constitution of the United States?

Courts Are the Dixiecrats going to decide the interpretation of the Constitution of the United States or the Supreme Court of the United States?

Beating Truman won't have any influence on the future of States' rights. That is a constitutional issue and a constitutional issue only.

It is not at all connected with any plan to defeat Truman. Withholding electoral votes won't touch the States' rights issue.

There are two different fights—but the Dixiecrats and those who want to break up the two-party system in this country—are trying to say it is one fight. The campaign against Truman is a matter of ballots. The States' rights issue is a matter of constitutional law which only the Supreme Court can determine. The Anderson Independent is quite correct. The Dixiecrats are creating prejudice against States' rights which will make it impossible for the many friends of States' rights in the North and West to join with the Southern supporters of States' rights. The men who manipulated the Dixiecrat movement at Birmingham, and who will manipulate it from offices in Houston, count heavily on keeping the band playing "Dixie" to attract enough sincere persons to give a front to their plans.

Arena They are hollering States' rights when the Supreme Court is the arena where those rights must be determined. They are trying to make it appear that Truman is the issue—when they know he is an episode. There are two—separate—issues.

Tue. 8-10-48

We all thrill to the tune of "Dixie."

But it is well to keep in mind that Gerald L. K. Smith knew who was paying for the band.

Thurmond And Wright: 'The Men'

John Temple Graves

"In vain the Tennessean set
His breast against the bayonet
In vain Virginia charged and raged on."

Columbia, S.C.

For its immortal soul, and its substance, too, the South can't afford to live again in the sign and psychology of a Lost Cause. Especially a lost cause within a lost cause. These states are proposing to count more than ever in the Union of States, not be counted out. It is victory they are after. They have learned the smell of it, strange as it may seem, in the Rose Bowl at Pasadena.

That meeting in Birmingham was not a convention, as its mentors tried to make clear. Neither was it a conference, even though its mentors called it that. The conferring was done over at the Tutwiler hotel beforehand and between sessions. The name for the vast conclave that shouted, waved and said "aye" to everything was mass meeting. The microphones on the floor were misleading. Nobody was expected to make a speech without invitation. There were no delegates, only aroused Southern people, to listen and look and wildly applaud. It could not have been otherwise in the circumstances and there was nothing undemocratic about it because nothing else was pretended.

Thurs. 7-22-48

What happened, therefore, is that an enormous mass meeting of people mostly from Alabama and Mississippi has passionately approved proposals of that element of southern leadership, also mostly from Alabama and Mississippi, which walked out at Philadelphia. The liveliest fire and deadliest earnest in the Southern revolt crackled from Birmingham into the radios and newspapers of America. It was a tremendous show, and a great achievement.

But it is not all of the southern revolt (or, rather, the southern revolution, for that is the name for this thing now). Another expression of the revolution is the great number of Republican votes that will be cast next November in the South. The greatest potential expression of all is the still undetermined one of those represented by the 263 votes for Dick Russell at Philadelphia, who are certain they can't accept Truman and federal force but who honestly don't yet know what do or where to go.

Some who heard Fielding Wright speak of withdrawing later as the meeting's nominee for vice president if a better man could be found thought such humility unbecoming. But Governor Wright was not being humble, as I understood him. He was merely pointing out that the action of the mass meeting, with its "recommendations" to the Democracies of the southern states, was necessarily tentative in a situation packed with events yet to come and decisions yet to be made. The meeting further recognized this tentative status by arranging for a more formal gathering on October 1, with voting delegates on hand.

The large immediate objective is that southern Democratic electors be free of instruction to vote for Truman. The meeting made practical and commendable arrangements in that direction. It could have named no more deserving and impressive southerners than the governor of South Carolina and the governor of Mississippi. They exactly fit the present situation, it seems to me.

Thurs 7-22-48

At Philadelphia, writes Dorothy Thompson, the national Democratic party "exchanged the support of the southern white majority to become a militant leftwing party barely step to the right of Wallace who, if he abandoned his communist allies, could rejoin it tomorrow."

Suppose Wallace does rejoin it. And suppose Dewey, when he invades these states, makes the point that his FEPC in New York is a state affair and that he does not propose federal interference with any state. And suppose Taft, who as leader of the Republican majorities in Congress is going to have more sayso than the White House, makes a speech recalling his own strong denunciation of FEPC as a bureaucratic monstrosity and a violation of states' rights, pointing to his (and therefore his party's) loyalty to states' rights principles in his education, health and housing measures. Isn't it possible that in those events the unmentioned individuals to whom Governor Wright hinted the vote of Democratic electors in the South might be turned over could be Dewey and Warren? Governor Warren would not find it strange to have both Democratic and Republican nominations. He had them in California when he ran for governor.

It is something to think of in this time for bold thinking, at any rate. If the Democratic electors of Southern states should give their votes, as Democrats, to Dewey and Warren, no principles would be sacrificed since the Republicans are at least as Democratic as the Democrats now. And there would be the vulgar but much to be desired business of being one of a victorious combine, not the broken splinter of a rotted timber.

Langan Seeks To Force Support Of President As Nominee Of Party

By The Associated Press

States Rights forces claimed three new supporters for the Thurmond-Wright ticket Friday, but got no assurance they would go out and work for these candidates.

Birmingham Attorney Horace C. Wilkinson, who helped organize the States Rights movement, announced the new converts as Alabama Senators Lister Hill and John J. Sparkman and ex-Gov. Chauncey Sparks. 7-31-48

The state electors pledged themselves Thursday, to cast their 11 votes for the Thurmond-Wright States Rights ticket. Sat.

Suit Is Hinted

At Mobile, State Senator Joe Langan even hinted he might file a court suit in an attempt to force the Democratic electors to support Truman as the nominee of their party, if he could not get a slate of Truman electors on the November ballot.

Wilkinson followed this up with the claim that Sparks, Hill and Sparkman had come over to the Thurmond-Wright camp.

They did so, he said, in declaring they will vote the Democratic ticket in November.

All three confirmed that they will vote for all Democratic nominees in November. They did not say whether this means they will get out and work for the State's Rights ticket.

Under Rooster

Sparks, in a letter to the Selma Times-Journal, said merely he will vote under the rooster in November. He declined to discuss Wilkinson's claims and made no mention of the Thurman-Wright ticket.

The former governor said he was mainly interested in preserving the Democratic party of Alabama and added:

"By so doing we can face the future with hope that when the national Democratic party has purged itself forever of such aliens as Truman . . . we of the South can again hold our rightful place in the party with honor and pride." 7-31-48

The two senators said they took an oath to support nominees of the Alabama Democratic primaries and would do so. They, like Sparks, steered away from a commitment for the States' Rights movement. Sat.

Meanwhile, Senator Langan hinted of a court test to force Alabama's presidential elector nominees to support Truman.

He said if Truman supporters are unable to get their own elector slate on the November ballot, he might go into court to force the Democratic electors to vote for the Democratic candidate.

In Montgomery, Secretary of State Sibyl Pool said if other slates of electors are certified to her office, she would ask the State Attorney General for an opinion before having them put on the ballot.

Atty. Gen. A. A. Carmichael said he has received no request for such an opinion and has not issued one either formally or informally. The Advertiser

In hinting he might go into court to force the state's Democratic electors to support Truman, Senator Langan recalled that the State Supreme Court has held invalid a 1945 act binding electors to support their party's National Convention nominee.

This, he said, came in an advisory opinion requested by Gov. Folsom and would not be binding if an actual court test is undertaken.

He said since a federal question is involved there is a possibility of taking the question to the U. S. Supreme Court.

Special session talk was being heard again in Montgomery this week, but it apparently had nothing to do with how electors will vote. Montgomery, Ala.

Gov. Folsom is known to have conferred with several legislators in the past few days. One, who asked that his name not be used, said prospects of an extraordinary session of the Legislature were discussed. Sat. 7-31-48

One source close to the governor said there is a chance the governor will call the legislators into session if they can agree on a plan to provide more money for roads and old age pensions.

Another said if such a call goes out it won't come until after Christmas.

Candidate Warns South Cannot Be Forced

By G. C. LONG, JR.
Staff Writer

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.—Southern states' righters, boiling mad at the treatment they had just received at the hands of the national Democratic party in Philadelphia, came up with their own presidential and vice-presidential candidates here Saturday.

With a vast throng of about 7,000 persons jammed into the Birmingham Municipal Auditorium, the states' righters named South Carolina Gov. J. Strom Thurmond their presidential candidate, and Mississippi Gov. Fielding L. Wright as his running mate.

Great Ovation

And it was with a thunderous approval that the delegates gathered here adopted the resolution naming their candidates, followed by stony silence when the convention chairman asked if anyone disapproved of the selections.

Not satisfied to stop with the work done here, the convention voted to convene again in this city on Oct. 1 to complete any business that might come up in the meantime. It also voted to set up campaign headquarters and to provide for a general campaign chairman. 7-18-48

Force Defied

In accepting the candidacy for the presidency, Governor Thurmond, lashing into President Truman's civil rights program that was placed in the national party platform, stated, to cheers that rang throughout the vast auditorium, that there were not enough troops in the U. S. Army to force "the Southland to admit Negroes to our theaters, Swimming pools, schools and homes."

Vice - presidential Candidate Wright, like Governor Thurmond a bitter opponent of the civil rights program and advocate of state sovereignty, declared the people who said the South could not unite to fight the things that were against its traditions "are now trembling in their boots."

Noisy Convention

This convention here Saturday was not a quiet one. There were frequent demonstrations and parades, and the bedlam that followed the keynote address delivered by former Alabama Gov. Frank Dixon, Birmingham, lasted 17 minutes before the conference chairman, Mississippi House Speaker Walter Sillers, finally managed to gavel the milling throngs back into their seats.

Few of the many speakers got far without being interrupted by the famous Rebel yell.

Angered over what both candidates termed "a stab in the back" at the Democratic convention earlier this week, the tumultous meeting gave shouting agreement to assertions the South will never surrender local control on racial issues.

Primary Reasons

The President's message on civil rights, and the Philadelphia convention's endorsement of it, were the primary reasons for this regional revolt.

Neither candidate made any claim of victory, but both promised to show the national party "the real Democratic Party is in the South." 7-18-48

Campaigns were planned in 15 states including Missouri, home of Mr. Truman.

In seconding the two nominations, Senator Eastland (D), Mississippi, made the forecast that "the race next November is between Gov. Thurmond and Gov. Thomas E. Dewey."

"Truman will not get a single electoral vote," he shouted.

Nomination of both candidates was by acclamation.

According to reports the convention did not come by its final action without a struggle within the inner circle of those directing the activities.

It is reported that the top leaders were divided on just what course of action should be followed here. Some thought that the best lead for the states righters to follow would be to leave off naming candidates, at least for the present, and concentrate on getting friendly presidential electors named in the various states, while others thought that the best plan was to go ahead and put out their own candidates.

What come out of the internal struggle was a naming of presidential and vice presidential candidates for the electors of the several states to fall in behind, and thus bring about the possibility of defeating Truman in the electoral college. 7-18-48

If it would not be possible to decide the race in the editoral college, then the election of the next president would be thrown into the House of Representatives, where the South would stand a better chance of having its weight felt, according to Gov. Thurmond.

Principles Cited

Although the states righters came up with their own candidates, they did not come up with a platform that contained anything other than a denunciation of civil rights and an endorsement of states rights. And those points were covered in a declaration of principles that was approved by the convention without any opposition.

Always before the convention was the constant reminder from the leaders that the Southern Democrats were not bolting from the national Democratic Party.

Pounding away constantly on the idea, all speakers contended that the Southern Democrats are the only ture Democrats, and it was the national party that left . . . the principles of the old party and is now a new organization.

Democratic Committee Official Calls Truman Ballot Ban Work of 'Small Clique'

New York, N.Y.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 11—A spokesman for the Democratic National Committee today likened the removal of Truman-Barkley electors from the Louisiana general election ballot to Soviet tactics.

William J. Primm Jr., assistant to the chairman, issued the statement denouncing the Democratic Central Committee of Louisiana for "a high-handed and arbitrary act which will not go unchallenged by the people of Louisiana and the Democratic party."

Declaring that the "vast majority" of Louisiana's citizens were Democrats and the right to vote for the nominees of their party had been denied to them, Mr. Primm added:

"The action of a small clique of men who have assumed dictatorial powers beyond all concept of democracy has deprived the people of Louisiana of a free ballot. This action cannot be tolerated, and will not be tolerated by the people of Louisiana. Sun 9-12-48

"Tactics employed in Louisiana to deprive the people of the right of a free choice in the general election are virtually identical with means used in Alabama, Mississippi and South Carolina by small groups in these states. To find a similar situation one must go behind the 'iron curtain' of Eastern Europe."

Mr. Primm said that the "Dixiecrats" had every right to form a new party, but their tactics in taking over the Democratic party machinery in certain states "are flagrantly dishonest and fraudulent."

He charged further that leaders of the "Dixiecrat" movement "have cleverly seen to it, through subterfuge, that the States' Rights party is nothing more than a wing of the Republican party and is being financed by oil and private utilities interests. Recent happenings in Indiana offer irrefutable evidence of their Republican party connections. * * *

"The Democratic National Committee has clearly stated its position that the 'Dixiecrats' are a fourth party. They are not Democrats, and the National Committee has called upon all national committeemen and national committeewomen who are supporting the "Dixiecrats" to resign."

Dixie States' Righters Eye Truman Wagon (Wistful?)

Montgomery, Ala. Advertiser

WASHINGTON, Nov. 5—(AP)—Southern States' Rights Democrats reflectively eyed the Truman bandwagon today.

Montgomery, Ala.

From States' Rights and regular Southern Democrats came telephone calls to Washington sounding out the wisdom of switching any, or all of the 38 electoral votes scheduled now for South Carolina Gov. J. Strom Thurmond for president and for Mississippi Gov. Fielding L. Wright for vice-president. Any switch, they made clear, would be to President Truman and Sen. Barkley (D) Kentucky.

Sat. 11-6-48

Democratic National Committee representatives said the votes could be switched from the States' Rights candidates to the Democratic candidates unless specific laws prevent it.

Southerners, who declined to be quoted by name, said they hoped negotiations to raise President Truman's electoral vote total from his present 304 to 342 would bring back to South Carolina, Mississippi, Alabama and Louisiana Democrats their "bonus" votes in the next national Democratic convention. "Bonus" votes are earned if the states cast their votes for the Democratic presidential and vice-presidential nominees in the electoral college, said Sen. McGrath (D) Rhode Island, Democratic national chairman.

The bonus for going Democratic in 1944 was four votes. Thus, South Carolina's 16 convention votes was raised to 20 because South Carolina Democratic electors voted for President Roosevelt and Sen. Truman (D) Missouri, for vice-president.

The electors meet in individual states in December, sending their ballots to the Secretary of State in Washington. He in turn presents them to the Senate for counting in the presence of both senators and congressmen on Jan. 6. It's on this so-called electoral college vote, therefore, that the Democratic convention bonuses depend. Sat. 11-6-48

It takes 266 electoral votes to elect a president and vice-president.

Some Southerners also are fearful less their straying from the Democratic fold will cut down the number of jobs which come from being loyal Democrats.

THE DIXIECRAT VOTE

IT DOES NOT PORTEND ANY IMMEDIATE POLITICAL CHANGE

Chicago, Ill.

Life Mon 11-8-1948

Probably the strangest—and most welcome—portent of the election is the difficulty of reading any long-term portent into the Henry Wallace and J. Strom Thurmond third-party movements. When Bryanism and Bull Moose insurgency were the dominant maverick impulses in our political life, they foreshadowed important changes in national legislation. But all that Wallace has proved is that a mere handful of Americans can be deluded by brummagem slogans of "peace" and "plenty" into supporting the effort of a foreign power to sow dissension among us. As for the Dixiecrat disturbance, it is somewhat more complex and enigmatic. But the very difficulty of analyzing it down into a set of durable meanings would seem to prove it a "one-shot" phenomenon.

The Southerners themselves have seemed rather mystified by the States' Rights Democratic party. Just before the election a number of Dixie editors were polled by a news service on the subject of Thurmond's presidential candidacy. Of those who answered the poll an even 90% concluded that the States' Rights party would die soon after the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November.

Does the record of the Dixiecrat campaign mean that "white supremacy" must forever call the tune in Southern politics, with the States' Righters eternally giving the pitch? If so, then such items as the admission of the Negro's right to vote in the South Carolina primaries are eddies on the margin of a stream that is flowing backward. But the stream is not flowing backward. In spite of the resurgence of Talmadgism in Georgia, it is impossible to believe that the movement to widen the franchise in the South can be stopped.

Undoubtedly the Dixiecrat movement has turned entirely on Southern pride—if changes are to be made in the South's social structure, most Southerners, whether liberal or conservative, would prefer to make them for themselves, without federal prodding. But to keep the federal government off their necks Southerners must retain their Democratic committee seniority and power of maneuver in Congress. Mon.-11-8-1948

This means that they cannot afford a permanent break with the official Democratic party organization. The Dixiecrat leaders have been aware of this from the start: hence their insistence that they were merely rejecting Harry Truman, not Harry Truman's party.

By analyzing the Thurmond movement down, one is compelled to proclaim it a transient thing. But this does not quite dispose of it. The really significant item in the poll of the Southern newspaper editors is the 23% who answered "yes" to a second question: "Do you think a merger of States' Rights Democrats and the Republican party is possible?" In Texas 61% of the editors envisaged a future for the States' Rights movement under a Republican banner.

This Texas response leads one to an interesting field for speculation. The Southwestern states, as distinct from the "old" South, have been having a terrific economic boom. Part of the wealth of Texas is in tideland oil, over which the states and the federal government have been contending. If Texas money forces its way eastward along the Gulf coast, as it shows indication of doing, the States' Rights issue may do much to prepare the way for the growth of an effective second party throughout the South. In which case the Dixiecrats will have unwittingly done something for the political health of a region. Mon. 11-8-1948

50,000 Detroiters War On Dixiecrats

Atlanta Daily World

Atlanta Ga

DETROIT—(ANP)— Fifty thousand Detroiters have declared war on the Dixiecrats through the signing of petitions circulated by the National Negro council requesting Congress to deny Dixiecrats their seats, according to Edgar G. Brown of Washington, spokesman for the organization.

Thur 12-23-48

Brown, who was in the city last week, said the petitions have been signed by more than 750,000 persons in the United States.

They urge the unseating of four senators-elect, Russell Long of Louisiana; John J. Sparkman, Alabama; James Eastman, Mississippi, and Burnett R. Maybank, South Carolina; and 24 representatives-elect. The petitions charge the Dixiecrats are violators of the Constitution.

Brown stated that the council is urging President Truman to name State Senator C. C. Wimbish of Chicago, secretary of the interior in fulfillment of his civil rights pledges. Thur 12-23-48

It's Mississippi's Child And Mississippians Lay Plans To Make Issue Respected In Years To Come

Memphis Tenn

By CARL CORBIN
Associated Press Staff Writer

JACKSON, Miss., July 24.—The States' Rights cause, suh, can point with pride to Mississippi—and that's not just Southern oratory.

Here are five reasons why:

1. Mississippi was midwife to the birth of the States' Rights movement. Governor Fielding L. Wright heralded its arrival last January in his inauguration address. Subsequently the movement developed into national importance.

2. Mississippi fostered the organization of a Southwide States' Rights movement. The mandate for the calling of a southwide States' Rights conference here on May 10 came from a Mississippi mass meeting.

3. Mississippi, along with Alabama, walked3 out of the Democratic National Convention when it became committed to a civil rights course. The currently-discussed civil rights program is held by the States' Rights movement to be at odds with its principles.

4. Mississippi produced the vice presidential choice of the States' Rights movement. He is Governor Wright. A States' Rights conference at Birmingham, Ala., on July 17 recommended to the Democratic parties in each state that they support Wright for vice president and Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina for president.

Sun 7-25-48

Solid For States' Rights

5. Mississippi shows strong indications of standing solid in its States' Rights position in the Nov. 2 election, regardless of what happens in other states.

A reasonable weathervane of the strength of the States' Rights movement in this land of moonlight and magnolias is likely to be found in the reconvened meeting of the State Democratic Convention here Aug. 3.

At the first meeting of the convention on June 22, the States' Rights cause got an all-out endorsement. Not one voice was raised in protest.

At the forthcoming meeting, the leaders are inviting, even urging, anyone with an opposition point of view to speak.

The States' Rights leaders are confident that the second convention will line up as solidly behind their cause as did the first. They believe the convention will reflect the will of the majority of the voters in this predominantly Democratic state.

Governor Wright says:

"The Mississippi vote (at the polls) will be cast for a loyal Democrat, and that loyal Democrat will be Thurmond."

If his prediction is correct, the strategy of the States' Rights movement will have worked as intended, at least in Mississippi.

That strategy has been to obtain control of the electoral votes in the electoral college. Because of varying laws and party procedures from state to sate, the problem of obtaining that control is different in each state.

The planners hope that they can corral enough electoral votes to prevent the election of Harry Truman, whom they blame for leading the Democratic Party into a pledge to support a strong civil rights program.

Looks To Future

By controlling a sufficient number of votes, the States' Rights movement would become a factor to be dealt with now and in future years. It would have demonstrated that the heretofore solidly Democratic South—i.e., solidly behind the leadership of the national party—is no longer to be assumed to be solid.

J. Howard McGrath, Democratic national chairman, has predicted that the dissenters will be "back in the fold" by November. Governor Wright disagrees with him. Wright says the States' Rights movement will show McGrath that Mr. Truman cannot be elected without its support.

As originally outlined, the States' Rights strategy pointed a way for the election of a Southerner to the presidency. That is still a possibility, but the accent of the movement is on the prevention of a Truman election and on the establishment of the political potency of the South.

Eastland Outlined Program

The Mississippi Legislature early this year heard the original strategy outlined in an address by Senator James O. Eastland (D., Miss.). He pointed out the importance of controlling electoral votes.

If the electoral college fails to give a majority of its votes to one man, the election then must be decided by the House of Representatives. In such an election, each state has one vote. The House makes a choice from the three men who were highest in the electoral college running.

If it is a close election year—if neither of the major candidates obtains a majority in the electoral college—then the House of Representatives might have to make a choice from among the tickets of Thomas E. Dewey, Harry S. Truman and J. Strom Thurmond.

As originally planned, Eastland expressed the hope there would be enough Republicans in the House disgruntled over their candidate, and enough Democrats opposed to President Truman, to line up with Southern believers in States' Rights to elect the Southerner.

Just how much electoral college strength the States' Rights group can expect to muster may be indicated at its meeting that will be held in Birmingham on Oct. 1.

By that time, the Democratic parties in the South will have nominated their electors. The movement is at work now in the separate states seeking the nomination and election of electors who will not vote for President Truman.

Recap On Oct. 1

At the October 1 meeting—which was called by the Birmingham conference of July 17—there is to be a showing of electoral hands. The States' Rights group will solidify its expected electoral vote.

Probably some of that vote will be "pledged" by the respective states to vote for the Thurmond-Wright ticket. Other electors may come "unpledged," but could be counted on to support the States' Rights plan.

The movement hopes for electoral strength from Alabama, Arkansas, Mississippi, Louisiana, Tennessee, Georgia, Florida, Texas, Virginia, North Carolina and South Carolina. Those states represent 127 electoral votes.

Governor Wright says don't be surprised if the States' Rights movement gets support from electors in Missouri, Mr. Truman's home state, and in Kentucky, the home state of his running mate, Senator Alben Barkley.

Whether Mississippi will take steps to send its electors to the college as "pledged" to the Thurmond-Wright ticket, or "unpledged" probably will be decided at the August 3 convention.

That is one of the reasons the convention is being reconvened. It was recessed, not adjourned, after the June 22 meeting. That prevented any other group which might claim to represent the Mississippi Democratic Party from holding an "official" convention.

What the state Democratic Party does about listing its nominated electors as pledged or unpledged on the state ballot will have no material effect on the way they will vote in the college if elected, Governor Wright has pointed out.

All of the nominees already have publicly declared themselves in full support of the plans of the States' Rights movement.

Charles G. Hamilton of Aberdeen, who tried to be seated at the National Convention in place of the Wright delegation, has announced he will call a statewide rally for the purpose of framing a Truman slate of electors.

But the States' Rights group thinks few Mississippi voters will mark an "X" by Truman-supporting electors in this state where the negro population almost equals the white

Sees Strong Home Support—States' Righters Gather For Campaign Kickoff

Wed 8-11-48

By The Associated Press

HOUSTON, Texas, Aug. 10.—A Louisiana States' Rights Democrat Tuesday said his state's electoral votes will go to the "true Democratic ticket" headed by Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina.

Memphis Tenn

Leander Perez, district attorney of St. Bernard and Plaquemines Parishes (counties) and a supporter of Louisiana Gov. Earl Long, said there "is no doubt but that the people of Louisiana will strongly favor the support of our American constitutional way of government."

Wright Expected Today

Perez was among the early arrivals of States' Rights Democrats from throughout the South who were moving into Houston to formally launch [illegible]ond's presidential campai[illegible]

Confederate [illegible] along with the Stars and [illegible] were being placed at noon [illegible] street balcony of the Rice Hotel where Thurmond late Tuesday afternoon established headquarters for a busy three-day schedule of States' Rights activities.

Wednesday night the South Carolina Governor is to make his formal acceptance as the States' Rights candidate for President at a rally in the Sam Houston Coliseum in downtown Houston.

His running mate, Gov. Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi, as vice presidential candidate is expected here Wednesday morning by special train.

Wed 8-11-48

Perez said Louisiana will favor the Thurmond-Wright ticket "as true Democrats, as against the action of the Philadelphia Convention which followed the New Deal repudiation of the Constitution, particularly the Tenth Amendment, which guarantees the rights of state governments."

Texans Licking Wounds

He said both the national Democratic ticket of Truman and Barkley and the Southern States' Rights Democratic ticket of Thurmond and Wright will be placed on the Louisiana ticket.

Texas Dixiecrats were licking wounds suffered Monday at Austin, the state capital.

(24 D)

The State Democratic Executive Committee certified the names of Truman and Barkley as party naminees for President and Vice President over protests of the Dixiecrats and rejected a Dixiecrat demand that it submit a referendum on the Thurmond-Wright isue to party voters in the Aug. 28 primary.

The visit here of Thurmond and Wright formally launches States' Rights campaigns for the Nation and within Texas.

Party leaders held conferences here before Thurmond's arrival on campaign plans to sweep the 127 electoral votes in the 11 Southern states.

One of those on hand to greet the South Carolina governor was H. R. Cullen, multi-millionaire oilman and philanthropist.

The Dixiecrats, or States Righters, said they would carry the fight to the Sept. 14 Texas convention at Fort Worth, and go on the stump between now and then to urge their position. The certification is "an unlawful act," they said.

Editor, The Advertiser:

Greed and selfishness centered in the reactionary political and economic forces have little conscience. The desired end (in this instance, the control of the government) in their philosophy, will justify the use of any means to attain that end.

The demagogues, blatherskites and synthetic and artificial statesmen leading the revolt against the Democratic Party in the South have joined hands with the reactionary interests and the leadership of the Republican Party, either consciously or as a strange coincidence, in an effort to return the government to the control of such interests. And as a necessary move in that direction, they have succeeded in splitting the Democratic Party in Alabama and other Southern States.

They are exaggerating and misrepretsenting the so-called civil rights or states rights question to conceal their real purpose. Behind the screen and curtain of inspired fear, hate and prejudice the agents and representatives of the reactionary forces are doing their dirty work. They have decided that their best chance to accomplish their purpose is through the Republican Party. The history of that party is based upon its ancient and cherished philosophy that only "the rich and well-born are fit to vote and govern."

The greatest concern of the American people and their most vital problems are presented in the following questions: (1) Shall the people retain control of their government or permit the return of that control to the reactionary political and economic interests? (2) How can the people and their government avoid another great depression? (3) How can the United States as the great leader of the Democratic world stop Russian aggression without further apeasement and without precipitating another world war. These are the real questions that concern us, and not the false, fictitious and phony scarecrow as presented in the South, designed to split the Democratic Party and divide the Democratic electors in aid of a Republican victory.

Montgomery, Ala

These predatory interests and their dissemblers on the one hand, and Henry Wallace, his Communists and fellow travelers on the other, are hell-bent on destroying the Democratic Party, though for different reasons.

Strange as it may seem, some of these same agents, puppets and stooges in Alabama acting for their masters, who bolted the Democratic Party in 1940 and in 1944 and who refused to support the Democratic nominees for president both times, but instead actively supported the Republican candidates, took the lead in the Democratic Party purge in Alabama after the 1928 presidential election. The party was purged of the leaders in Alabama who bolted Al Smith that year. Some of the purges have now joined their former enemies in the 1948 bolt against the Democratic nominee for president. The shades of Machiavelli!

These powerful agents, puppets and stooges, heeding their masters' voices, "work in a mysterious way their wonders to perform." They should be repuiated as effectively as Henry Wallace and his gang will be repudiated in the coming election.

States' Rights And Pecans

Sun 10-31-48

Atlanta, Ga.

Pecan growers have been asking that their States' Rights be interfered with by the Federal Government.

They want the Federal Government to interfere with their individual rights, too, by putting a floor under the price of pecans . . . as the Federal Government has done for State roads, the price of cotton, tobacco, wheat and so on.

I think the Government should have done so for the pecan growers. But, as of now, they have not done so and so it looks as if the unhappy pecan grower, with a record crop on his hands, is going to be left to savor his right not to be interfered with or to have his property, pecans, interfered with by any of those snooping, nosey Federals. I'm sorry.

Indeed, the farmers of America are beginning to worry for fear Mr. Dewey, who all the polls say is going to win, may be forced by a stubborn Congress, to cease bringing outside interference to bear on the price of farm commodities. In Mr. Dewey's behalf it must be said that he has pledged to continue this interference by the Federal Government. But, if outside Federal interference is removed from the rights of the individuals to get what they can for their property, such as cotton, wheat, potatoes, and so on, there will be loud lamenting in the land and we will start on the toboggan of an economic recession. The city dweller, plagued by high prices, always forgets that when the farmer gets poor the whole economy goes to pot shortly thereafter. Federal price support is necessary.

Dixiecrats There is, as we have said, a very real issue of States' Rights and we are so strongly for States' Rights that we are against the Dixiecrats States' Rights conception, for the good and simple reason they are making it impossible for an effective fight to be made in behalf of States' Rights.

Not once has Strom Thurmond, the Dixiecrat candidate, talked about States' Rights. True, he has used the phrase over and over again, ad nauseum. But the only right he talks about is the rights guaranteed in the tenth amendment to the Constitution.

There are nine other amendments in the Bill of Rights.

Failure It is our failure to make good on them which causes the present trouble; which has made the South vulnerable to so many Federal Court rulings supporting the entire 10 amendments. If we had obeyed the laws we made and kept separate but equal facilities in education, recreation, travel and so on, we would not now be vulnerable.

The Dixiecrats do the South great harm and create needless fears and violence in the South by setting up a false premise.

The Federal Government obviously has got to enforce the whole Constitution under which we live. It cannot void everything else and support only the tenth amendment, as the Dixiecrats ask. It cannot support cotton prices and refuse to support tobacco.

Issues There are many great issues—Russia, the atom bomb, the Berlin crisis, the national crisis in school support; the grinding problem of inflation and of farm parity.

Strom Thurmond goes on his way, talking only about States' rights and the tenth amendment to the Constitution and ignoring all else.

The people who believe in States' rights and who are tremendously concerned to see Federal encroachment on local government halted are enormously handicapped in their fight for States' rights by the hypocritical narrowness of the Dixiecrat States' Rights party.

Sun 10-31-48

Rights Those who believe in States' rights cannot say to the people of the United States, "Come help us defend the tenth amendment." There are nine others. If Mr. Thurmond's right to speak for his party were to be questioned, he would appeal for Federal protection. That right is the first amendment. If he were to be denied the right to have his supporters gather to hear him he would appeal to the Federal courts to interfere with the rights of the State or community denying them. That right is in the first amendment.

The fourteenth amendment states that the rights and privileges of no citizen may be abridged by the States and that no citizen may be deprived of equal protection of the law by the States.

Why? Why do not the Dixiecrats, who profess to stand by the Constitution, stand by the provisions of the fourteenth amendment as well?

It doesn't make sense. The citizen who thinks about it at all will admit that a Federal Government which interests itself in the plight of the cotton farmer or tobacco farmer or the State roads must also interest itself in the plight of citizens denied the right to vote and denied equal protection of the law.

The Dixiecrats are destroying those who wish to fight for States' rights by saying that their conception of States' rights is bound up in one amendment and includes the right to ignore all the others, especially the fourteenth.

That is why the Dixiecrats are doing as much harm to the two-party system of government as the Wallace party and that is why they are harmful to the best interests of the South, which is, and cannot be otherwise, an integral part of the United States.

Look at France—and vote for either the Democrats or Republicans.

Politics Target of Frat's Spirited Digs at Dixiecrats

The Constitution

Atlanta Ga.

The Chi Phi Fraternity at Emory University has an amazing proclivity for poking fun at the South's tangled political messes. Friday night they laughed again when they staged a mock Dixiecrat convention. A year and a half ago they threw a governor's party, featuring a mock Talmadge and a mock Thompson, and proceeded to laugh hilariously at Georgia's gubernatorial tug-of-war.

On a platform bedecked with Confederate flags and heavily guarded with Confederate soldiers sat Gov. J. Strom Thurmond, "Kissin' Jim" Folsom, Roy Harris, Gerald L. K. Smith, the Grand Dragon of the Ku Klux Klan, Sen. Claghorn, and two "untainted flowers of Southern Womanhood."

A band played brassy renditions of "Dixie," "Kissing, Fussin' and Fighting," and "Georgia On My Mind" and mass demonstrations followed every nomination, as the red-suspendered wool-hatted, cigar-smoking delegates "whooped it up" with ample support from their dates, who ranged from barefooted "Sugar Creek Gals" to hoop-skirted "Southern Belles."

But the man who got the nomination was the man who wasn't there. Despite the wild cheers for "Kissin' Jim," who affectionately hugged all the flowers of Southern womanhood at the party, the screams for Thurmond, who loudly refuted the well-known fallacy that Lee surrendered at Appomattox; and the demonstrations for a battered "Hummon" who attended the party with crutches, a bandaged big toe and a black eye, it was the "late departed Senator Dildo" that got it!

The Senator, who attended in a coffin, delivered a filibuster acceptance speech, promising that, if he were elected, politics would be hot.

Aim Of Grange

Session Starts Work On Platform For Next Year

Montgomery Ala

PORTLAND, ME., Nov. 17.—(AP)—The National Grange convention started work today on a 1949 platform expected to feature a "States' Rights" approach on national problems.

Tentative drafts of convention resolutions went strong in demands for greater local control. This was true particularly on problems relating to farming, education, health programs, waterway development, flood control and soil saving.

This stand for local control is in line with the farm organization's traditional stand. It frequently has warned that a "strong central government" soon would destroy democracy.

The Grange turned to the job of writing a new platform after granting its seventh degree to 17,008 members from various parts of the country.

This was the second highest number to be granted the degree at a national meeting. The record of 18,374 was set at Columbus, Ohio, last year.

On the controversial issue of federal financial aid to education, the Grange prepared to endorse a warning of National Master Albert S. Goss.

Thur 11-18-48

In his keynote address, Goss told the convention, it must "recognize the grave danger of having our school system fall under political control where the minds of our children could be moulded to suit the whim of the party in power."

New Approach To Old Problem?

Bham News

B'ham Ala

Representatives of the States' Rights Democratic movement spent Thursday in Birmingham. When Gov. Ben Laney of Arkansas was queried as to the purpose of the meeting, he said that it was "just for a general discussion among our group simply to determine what the ideas of one another might be and consider what's happened and what to do in the future." After the leaders had been in session five and a half hours they announced an agreement to establish an institute in Washington for the purpose of upholding states' rights principles and extending membership into all states. Gov. Laney had sparked the meeting with a statement favoring a continuation of the fight to preserve states' rights which are "as sacred and necessary now as they were before the presidential election."

Sat 11-13-48

The group gathered here passed a resolution declaring that states' rights are jeopardized by a trend toward centralized government in Washington and that "the social and economic atmosphere . . . in which this nation grew . . . powerful is under constant attack by those who approve . . . bureaucratic government." It called for a committee to set up the states' rights institute which is to be informational in nature and on a "nonpartisan, non-profit basis."

Thus it seems evident that the states' righters are determined to maintain a movement in support of certain general convictions rather than to perpetuate a separate party. They are dedicating themselves to a principle which is broad enough to attract adherents who might be left cold were the objective more narrowly political and divisive. The larger objective, however, will certainly include support of a traditional way of Southern life.

* * *

By widening the field in which they stand, the states' rights group is hoping to attract many followers from all sections. The result may be a final understanding that much can be accomplished by working within the party concepts and organizations instead of outside them. Many a sympathetic Southerner who could not force himself to open break with the national Democratic Party may approve and willingly offer his help and influence toward the new objective.

States Righters Cannot Alter Republican Victory

The States Rights Democrats cannot have any hope of cutting in on the Republican vote for Dewey and Warren. Their only real hope—and it will be realized—is to cut down the Democratic electoral college votes, to make the defeat of Truman a rout.

But they cannot affect the election result. The Republicans will win. They would have won if the States Rights Democratic movement had never been born. They would still win if every Southern state supported the Thurmond-Wright ticket; and there is almost no chance of this. For the total Southern vote does not affect elections except in extraordinary years. And this isn't one of them.

The idea that the South can throw the election into the House of Representatives by denying Truman the South's electoral votes is based, of course, upon the theory that Harry Truman could have been re-elected President this year. It is a false idea and everybody at the national Democratic convention, except perhaps Harry Truman, knew that it was false. This is one explanation of the disregard of the South at Philadelphia. The national election was already lost. The South could threaten, but it could do no real harm.

Columbia S.C.

So the States Rights Democratic party aims are illusory. The only thing that the States Rights can hope to achieve is to make clear their protest, which already, of course, is clear enough; to say to the Democratic party that hereafter the desires of the South will have to be given some heed if the South is to be solid again. They do not hold out hope to the Republicans, of course, that they will support the Republican nominee. They still retain the Democratic label; they seek to deal through the regular Democratic organization in those states that they have any real expectation of carrying. They are caretakers for the Democratic party in the South and the preservers of the one-party system.

The weakness of their position is that they undertake to vent their wrath upon poor old Harry Truman, who, of course, is the inheritor, not the inventor of the civil rights program. The protest, which is sound enough, comes almost too late; the South long since sold its state rights birthright for a mess of federal aid.

Now Governor J. Strom Thurmond, South Carolina's candidate for the presidency, undertakes to denounce the Southern Democrats who differ with him, the Southern Democrats who believe that they have more to gain working within and through the party than they have bolting it. They also may be chasing a will-o'-the-wisp, but that is beside the point.

"Now as the South undertakes this fight," he told the Cherryville (N. C.) Watermellon festival crowd, "the thing that disappoints us most is to see some of our so-called political leaders, who pretend to be against these (civil rights) proposals, turn around and support the man who stabbed the South in the back . . .

Wed 8-12-48

"These traitors in our midst deserve the censure of every right-thinking Southerner. The people . . . in their wrath will rise up and repudiate them."

What is Governor Thurmond's definition of a "traitor" to the South? It is a politician, who, even though opposed to the civil rights bills, elects to remain a Democrat in 1948, despite Truman. How much real difference is there between the position of these Democratic loyalists and the position of Governor Thurmond who is still a South Carolina Democrat today and apparently expects to be a regular Democrat again next year when the Republicans take over the White House and the Southern Democrats expect to take over the Democratic party in the Congress?

The South as a whole isn't mad enough yet to vote Republican; it isn't rising in its wrath to set up the two-party system. It is getting its feet out far enough to be able to kick Harry Truman, but its head is still in the bag.

Henry Grady before him would have done so. If it is not true, or if Ralph has no facts, then he is guilty of being a common gossip, and Henry Grady would be ashamed of him.

"I know nothing of any attempt by oil interests to make any contribution whatsoever to the States' Rights Democrats," Governor Thurmond wires me from Columbia. "Not one dime has been contributed by such persons, and so far as I know there has been no suggestion of any kind to come from oil interests. We consider the tidelands oil question as a matter for the states just as we consider so-called civil rights legislation and many other like questions to be reserved to the states by the Constitution. Anyone who insinuates that there is any other intention in the States' Rights movement than that of protecting and preserving this constitutional guarantee must undoubtedly be attempting to smear our movement..."

Has it occurred to those strange southerners who criticize the Birmingham meeting because of the much playing of Dixie that when disorder broke out on the floor after a retired army officer suggested himself for President the device used to quiet the crowd and bring it to instant, respectful attention was to have Bandmaster Nappi play "The Star Spangled Banner"?

Mon 8-2-48

A proper current criticism of the States' Rights movement, I believe, is that there is a difference of opinion among leaders as to what it is. Some say it is a third party, some not. Some say Thurmond and Wright have been "nominated for President," some say they have not.

It seems to me that whether a third party comes out of the movement or not, none was created at Birmingham, and no one was officially nominated for office. The resolution which named Thurmond and Wright reads as follows:

Columbia Record

"Be it resolved, that we recommend to the Democrats of the several states that they take all necessary and appropriate action to have the electoral vote of their respective states cast for the Honorable J. Strom Thurmond, Governor of South Carolina, for the Presidency of the United States, and for the Honorable Fielding Wright, Governor of Mississippi, for the vice presidency of the United States, and that this conference cooperate with the Democrats in each state to bring about their election."

Mon 8-2-48

That is no third party, and those are no nominations. The mass meeting merely recommended that the Democratic Party in the several states give their votes to Thurmond and Wright.

The answers are so simple to these players of politics with the South on the race question, if only the facts could be brought to the nation's attention. No long economic, sociological or constitutional treaties are needed or would suffice. Here we have Congress about to make a disgraceful scene of itself in a quarrel over the poll tax while the very planet is on fire. And the fact is that the poll tax is disappearing by state action, if only the outsiders would leave states alone. Look at the record:

Columbia S.C.

The Poll Tax

Abolished by North Carolina in 1921.

Abolished by Louisiana in 1934.

Abolished by Florida in 1937.

Abolished by Georgia in 1945.

En route to abolition in Virginia, 1947.

Southwide abolition trend now halted because of new resentments and fears created by federal force proposals.

The most recent state to abolish the poll tax, Georgia, did so not because Ellis Arnall proposed it (as many think) but because the late Eugene Talmadge did. While Arnall, as governor, pussy-footed the question and was, even up to the last moment, refusing to go farther than a mere proposal that the legislature "study" it, Talmadge suddenly came out for abolition. As one of the "outs", he explained, he wanted more voters to beat the "ins" with their control of the machine. With Talmadge taking such a stand it suddenly became safe for Governor Arnall to be brave and nothing withholding, and give the nation a noble picture of himself forcing the legislature to repeal the tax.

Mon 8-2-48

The funny thing is that a poll tax exists in New England States. There is such a tax in Connecticut, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island and Vermont. There is also one in Nebraska. Connecticut calls hers an "old-age assistance" tax because the revenue is directed to that use, but it is a take per poll, or capita, just the same. From information at hand it is not clear what penalties apply against failure to pay, except in the case of New Hampshire. In that state you must either have property or have paid your poll tax in order to vote. And you must have been assessed for your poll tax before voting whether you have property or not. Once assessed, there are, of course, penalties for non-payment. The current federal anti-poll tax bill is so worded as not to destroy New Hampshire's tax.

UPHOLDS STATES' RIGHTS

Thurmond Lambastes 'New Russian Look'

Columbia Record

Thurs 8-12-48

HOUSTON, Tex., Aug. 12—(AP)—States' Rights Democrats, their presidential campaign officially underway, today concentrate their strategy on Texas' 23 electoral votes.

Gov. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, who last night formally accepted his nomination as the Southerners' presidential candidate, speaks at 11 a. m. (EAST) before a statewide mass meeting at which Texas campaign strategy will be mapped.

Texas holds the largest number of electoral votes, an important block in the 127 vote, 11 state total on which Thurmond and his vice presidential running mate, Gov. Fielding Wright of Mississippi, plan to concentrate.

Only a few hours before accepting his nomination, Thurmond predicted the States Rights ticket will collect more electoral votes than President Truman and placed the anticipated number of votes at over 100.

It was a noisy, rebel yelling crowd of between 8,000 and 9,000 that attended the rally last night in Houston's big Sam Houston coliseum.

It was the city's first big political rally in 20 years, the first since the late former Gov. Alfred E. Smith of New York was nominated for president in 1928 by the National Democratic convention.

The Truman-Barkley ticket, as well as Thomas E. Dewey, the Republican nominee, and Henry A. Wallace, the Progressive party leader, took a beating in last night's speeches.

Thurmond labeled the three parties as having brought "the new Russian look" to America, and told the flag and banner waving crowd that "we sound a call for a return o constitutional government in merica.

Wright said the principle of states ghts "is the only alternative to ject subjection to the tyranny of ctatorships."

Thurs 8-12-48

"The Democratic convention re-diated the principles of the Dem-ratic party and followed a pattern shioned by the nominee of the publican convention as a blue-int prepared by the nominee of Communistic Progressive party lifting the face of America and ing us the new Russian look," rmond said.

How beautiful it is for such thren—Dewey, Truman and Wal-—to dwell together in unity," added.

Dewey is not the choice of the publican rank and file," the Missippi governor said. "Truman, acknowledged loser, certainly es not represent organized Demcracy. Wallace represents Russia nd its ideology."

Four Progressive party protest pickets appeared briefly at the coliseum but proceedings of the rally were not disrupted.

Thurmond and Wright received formal notification of their nominations from Democratic leaders of three Southern states—Alabama, Mississippi and South Carolina—which have named them as the party's official standard bearers.

Dixiecrat Strength Appears Concentrated In Four States Of Splintered Southland

One-Party System Dying (?) Because Of Split-Up

By The Associated Press

ATLANTA, Oct. 27 — The South's one-party system appears to be dying; sacrificed, many say, by President Truman on the altar of civil rights.

Even as two factions of the Democratic Party in the South struggle over the remains, the Republicans are acting as chief beneficiary.

The extent of the Republicans' legacy, and the validity of their claims, will be determined in the Nov. 2 general election.

In bitterness, the South claims it was knifed to offset the desertion of many liberal elements from the party to the Progressives of Henry Wallace and to appease Northern Negroes.

But whatever the reasons, the solidly Democratic South ended when President Truman proposed to end racial segregation and the poll tax as a prerequisite to voting, make lynching a federal offense and set up a fair employment practices commission.

Thur 10-28-48

The Democratic body has split asunder, giving birth in the process to the States' Rights Democratic Party which claims that the proposals invade the field of authority relegated to the individual states.

This party now claims it can muster with certainty 100 electoral votes to revenge the South and defeat President Truman.

The States' Righters real strength, however, seems to be concentrated in four states — South Carolina, Mississippi, Alabama and Louisiana. These states have 38 electoral college votes.

As for the other votes, the States Righters say they have excellent chances of carrying Florida and Tennessee; possibly Virginia and Arkansas, and fighting chances in Texas and North Carolina. Georgia is on the doubtful list.

34d

The Republicans, meanwhile, are campaigning as they haven't since the days of reconstruction.

They are working hard in Virginia, Georgia, Tennessee, Florida, Texas, Arkansas, and Louisiana.

Thur 10-28-48

Just how deep their strength goes is highly problematical, but Florida, Tennessee and Virginia have gone Republican in the past.

What worries the Democrats, both factions, are the strong efforts the Republicans are putting out on the congressional and state house levels.

In Texas former Gov. Coke Stevenson, who lost the race for senator recently by only 87 votes, has endorsed Republican Senatorial Candidate Jack Porter.

Something Else

There is a strong possibility that Republicans may capture three House posts in Virginia. Kentucky is certain to have one Republican in the House, maybe more. The GOP candidate in the ninth district is unopposed.

Kentucky's senatorial race is something else again. Rep. Virgil Chapman, Democrat, is having a knock-down fight against Sherman Cooper.

In Tennessee Rep. Carroll Reece, Republican, is making a stiff fight against Democratic Candidate Estes Kefauver for the Senate. The GOP's candidate for governor against Gordon Browning is the hillbilly entertainer, Roy Acuff.

Acuff and Reece together have drawn crowds estimated at 20,000 at one time, but since Acuff appears with his band, there is no way to judge whether the crowds came to support the candidates or to be entertained.

The Tennessee Democrats have confined themselves mostly to a hand-shaking, get-out-the-vote campaign.

Florida GOP Fighter

Florida's Republicans are putting up a good fight on the presidential level and on the local level in four counties — Dade, Broward, Pinellas and Orange.

The Republican's candidate for governor, Bert Acker, is making only a token fight.

Though Florida has gone Republican only once, in 1928, the election figures for 1944 show that many a Democrat voted Republican. In that year, there were only 53,935 registered Republicans, but Dewey got 143,215 votes.

There is even a chance a Republican, J. Pauline Duhe, may carry a congressional race in Louisiana. He has opposition from E. E. Willis, Democrat, in the third district, which includes much of the state's sugar industry and which is high-tarrif in sentiment.

Here are the parties appearing on the various state ballots for the presidential race:

Florida — Democrats, Republicans, Progressives and States' Rights.

Alabama — Democrats (Thurmond), Republicans, Prohibitionists and Progressives. (Truman does not appear on the ballot).

North Carolina — Progressives, Republicans, Democrats and States' Rights.

Arkansas and Tennessee—Democrats, Republicans, States' Rights, Progressives and Socialists.

Georgia—Democrats, Republicans States' Rights, Prohibitionists and Progressives.

Mississippi—Mississippi Democrats (Thurmond), National Democrats (Truman), Independent Republicans, Republicans (both for Dewey) and Progressives.

Louisiana and South Carolina—Democrats (Thurmond), Truman-Barkley Independents, Republicans and Progressives.

Kentucky — Democrats, Republicans, States' Rights, Prohibition, Progressives, Socialist and Socialist-Labor.

Virginia — Democrats, States' Rights, Republican, Progressives, Socialist and Socialist-Labor.

Texas—Democrats, Republicans, States' Rights, Prohibition, Progressives and Socialist.

A South Divided

New Republic

MEMPHIS (NR correspondent)

THE SIZE of the Dixiecrat electoral vote—40—was the only consolation the poll takers had the day after election. Governor J. Strom Thurmond and his running mate, Fielding Wright, won precisely the proportion of the electoral total the pollsters had allotted to their ticket: Alabama, 11; South Carolina, 8; Mississippi, 9; Louisiana, 10; plus 2 maverick electors out of Tennessee's 12. In popular vote, too, the Dixiecrats came close to fulfilling their own expectations. When all the votes are in, the States' Righters will approach the million mark, very close to Wallace's total.

Mon 11-15-48

New York N.Y.

The voters of the South won't have a chance to act for or against the Dixiecrats now occupying top posts in the regular Democratic organization in many states until the primary elections of 1950. Until then, the relationship of the Solid South to the national party will remain confused.

There does not seem to be definite agreement even among the leaders of the Dixiecrats on the course of the future. Governor Thurmond hastened to congratulate President Truman on his victory. He has insisted to all who would listen that he is still a Democrat, that the States' Righters are Democrats, and that the civil-rights rebellion, after all, was a "fight within our own family." But more of the top leaders of the revolt agree with Alabama's leading Dixiecrat, State Democratic Chairman Gessner T. McCorvey, who said: "We may be temporarily defeated, but we are not going to give up. If we could have gotten a few other Southern states to go along with us, we would have had the balance of power. We are going to work toward that four years from now."

Dixiecrat and Republican leaders in Tennessee are able to get some encouragement from the fact that the combined States' Rights and Republican votes equal the Truman total. Efforts will now be made to effect a working coalition of these two groups into a single conservative party. Neither has a chance of standing alone in the face of the smashing victories of the Democratic candidates, Estes Kefauver for the US Senate, Gordon Browning for Governor, and President Truman.

Mon 11-15-48

The weakness of Ed Crump in his home county, as revealed in this election, does not encourage Dixiecrat hopes. Although Boss Crump sent down the word for the Thurmond ticket, it ran ahead of the Truman-Barkley ticket by only 2,000. In his heyday, Crump could have counted a 55,000 plurality for any candidate of his choice. At the same time, Kefauver and Browning piled up three-to-one majorities over Crump's private choices, Carroll Reece and Roy Acuff, in the Memphis stronghold.

Despite the popular verdict, three of Tennessee's 12 electoral votes could be taken from Truman, and at least one of them is regarded as certain for the Dixiecrats. Preston Parks of Fayette County, one of two to go for Thurmond, remained adamant against Truman. One electoral post is in legal question as a result of the resignation of a Crump man as a Democratic elector, too late to have his name removed from the ballot.

Alabama Leaders Fly To Aid Texas Dixiecrats

The News

Birmingham Ala

A campaign squad of Alabama States' Rights Democrats left Birmingham today by plane to help Texas Dixiecrats blitz voters of that state for the Thurmond-Wright ticket in the closing days of the presidential campaign.

The plane's destination was Houston, where the States' Righters will hold a rally tonight.

Arkansas Gov. Ben Laney and Frank Dixon, former Alabama governor, will be speakers.

Dixon already was in the Texas city. He left Birmingham Saturday for Little Rock, where he addressed a Thurmond-Wright meeting Sunday afternoon, before proceeding to Texas.

Alabanians going to Texas for the stretch drive blitzkreig in an attempt to overcome the lead Gallup Pollsters show President Truman has piled up in the Lone Star State include Rep. George Andrews, Union Springs, Third District congressman; George Huddleston, Birmingham, former Ninth District congressman; Robert Albritton, Andalusia, one of Alabama's 11 Democratic elector nominees; John D. Mandeville, Mobile, walkout delegate from the Democratic National Convention; O. P. Lee, Opelika attorney, and others.

Leon Nolen, executive secretary of the States' Rights Democrats' campaign headquarters here, said some 40 to 50 Alabamians would go to Texas to take part in the vote drive seeking to overcome reported leads of both the National Democratic and Republican presidential candidates there.

Truman is shown ahead in Texas, with Dewey running second. Coke Stevenson, former Texas governor who was nosed out for the Democratic senatorial nomination by Lyndon Johnson, recently declared himself for the Republican ticket.

Meanwhile, other Alabama States Righters planned to journey to Selma tomorrow for a rally to be addressed at 3 p.m. by Mississippi Gov. Fielding Wright.

The barbecue is being staged at Twilley's Lake, near Selma, by the Dallas County Farm Bureau. The Dixiecrat vice presidential nominee will speak on "Civil Rights."

Dixon will go from Houston to New Orleans to speak in behalf of the Thurmond-Wright campaign tomorrow night.

Basis Of Party Numerous Abuses And Usurpation Of Power Cited

Montgomery Advertiser
Montgomery, Ala.

Sun. 7-18-48

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.— (AP) —The following is the "declaration of principles" reported by the resolutions committee of the States Rights meeting Saturday:

"We affirm that a political party is an instrumentality for effectuating the principles upon which the party is founded; that a platform of principles is a solemn covenant with the people and with the members of the party; that no leader of the party, in temporary power, has the right or privilege to proceed contrary to the fundamental principles of the party, or the letter or spirit of the Constitution of the United States; that to act contrary to these principles is a breach of faith, a usurpation of power, and a forfeiture of the party name and party leadership.

"We believe that racial and religious minorities should be protected in their rights guaranteed by the Constitution, but the bold defiance of the Constitution in selfish appeals to such groups for the sake of political power forges the chains of slavery of such minorities by destroying the only bulwark of protection against tyranical majorities. The protection of the constitutional rights of a minority does not justify or require the destruction of constitutional rights of the majority. The destruction of constitutional limitations on the power of the central government threatens to create a totalitarian state and to destroy individual liberty in America.

7-18-48

To States, People

"We believe that the protection of the American people against the onward march of totalitarian government requires a faithful observance of Article X of the American Bill of Rights which provides that: "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the states, respectively, or to the people.

"We direct attention to the fact that the first platform of the Democratic party, adopted in 1840, resolved that: 'Congress has no power under the Constitution to interfere with or control the domestic institutions of the several states, and that such states are the sole and proper judges of everything appertaining to their own affairs not prohibited by the Constitution.' Such pronouncement is the cornerstone of the Democratic party."

Individual Liberty

A long train of abuses and usurpations of power by unfaithful leaders who are alien to the Democratic parties of the states here represented, has become intolerable to those who believe in the preservation of constitutional government and individual liberty in America.

The Executive Department of the government is promoting the gradual but certain growth of a totalitarian state by domination and control of a politically minded Supreme Court. As examples of the threat to our form of government, the Executive Department, with the aid of the Supreme Court, has asserted national dominion and control of submerged oil-bearing lands in California, schools in Oklahoma and Missouri, primary elections in Texas, South Carolina, and Louisiana, restrictive covenants in New York and the District of Columbia, and other jurisdictions, as well as religious instruction in Illinois. By asserting paramount federal rights in these instances, a totalitarian concept has been promulgated which threatens the integrity of the states and the basic rights of their citizens.

With Contempt

"We have repeatedly remonstrated with the leaders of the national organization of our party but our petitions, entreaties and warnings have been treated with contempt. The latest response to our entreaties was a Democratic Convention in Philadelphia rigged to embarrass and humiliate the South. This alleged Democratic assembly called for a civil rights law that would eliminate segregation of every kind from all American life, prohibit all forms of discrimination in private employment, in public and private instruction and administration and treatment of students; in the operation of public and private health facilities; in all transportation, and require equal access to all places of public accommodation for persons of all races, colors, creeds and national origin.

Police State

"This infamous and iniquitous program calls for the reorganization of the civil rights section of the Department of Justice with a substantial increase in a bureaucratic staff to be devoted exclusively to the enforcement of the civil rights program; the establishment within the FBI of a special unit of investigators and a police state in a totalitarian, centralized, bureaucratic government.

"This convention hypocritically denounced totalitarianism abroad but unblushingly proposed and approved it at home. This convention would strengthen the grip of a police state upon a liberty loving people by the imposition of penalties upon local public officers who failed or refused to act in accordance with its ideas in suppressing mob violence.

We point out that if a foreign power undertook to force upon the people of the United States the measures advocated by the Democratic convention in Philadelphia, with respect to civil rights, it would mean war and the entire nation would resist such effort.

The convention that insulted the South in the party platform advocated giving the Virgin Islands and other dependencies of the United States: "The maximum degree of local self- government."

Sun. 7-18-48

"When an effort was made to amend this part of the platform so as to make it read that the party favored the Virgin Islands and the several states the maximum degree of local self-government, the amendment adding the words "these several states" was stricken out and the sovereign states were denied the rights that the party favors giving the Virgin Islands.

Loyalty Cited

"We point out that the South, with clock-like regularity, has furnished the Democratic Party approximately 50 per cent of the votes necessary to nominate a President every four years for nearly a century. In 1920 the only states in the union that went Democratic were the 11 southern states. Notwithstanding this rugged loyalty to the party, the masters of political intrigue now allow Republican states, in which there is scarcely a Democratic office holder, to dominate and control the party and fashion its policies.

7-18-48

"As Democrats who are irrevocably committed to Democracy as defined and expounded by Thomas Jefferson, Andrew Jackson and Woodrow Wilson, and who believe that all necessary steps must be taken for its preservation, we declare to the people of the United States as follows:

"1. We believe that the Constitution of the United States is the greatest charter of human liberty ever conceived by the mind of man.

"2. We oppose all efforts to invade on destroy the rights vouchsafed by it to every citizen of this republic.

"3. We stand for social and economic justice, which we believe, can be vouchsafed to all citizens only by a strict adherence to our Constitution and the avoidance of any invasion or destruction of the constitutional rights of the states and individuals. We oppose the totalitarian, centralized, bureaucratic government and the police state called for by the platforms adopted by the Democratic and Republican conventions.

Racial Integrity

"4. We stand for the segregation of the races and the racial integrity of each race; the constitutional right to choose one's associates; to accept private employment without governmental interference, and to earn one's living in any lawful way. We oppose the elimination of segregation, employment by Federal bureaucrats called for by the misnamed civil rights program. We favor home rule, local self-government and a minimum interference with individual rights.

"5. We oppose and condemn the action of the Democratic convention in sponsoring a civil rights program calling for the elimination of segregation, social equality by federal fiat, regulation of private employment practices, voting and local law enforcement.

"6. We affirm that the effective enforcement of such a program would be utterly destructive of the social, economic and political life of the southern people, and of other localities in which there may be differences in race, creed or national origin in appreciable numbers.

"7. We stand for the checks and balances provided by the three departments of our government. We oppose the usurpation of legislative functions by the executive and judicial departments. We unreservedly condemn the effort to establish nationwide a police state in this Republic that would destroy the last vestige of liberty enjoyed by a citizen.

"8. We demand that there be returned to the people, to whom of right they belong, those powers needed for the preservation of human rights and the discharge of our responsibility as Democrats for human welfare. We oppose a denial of those rights by political parties, a barter or sale of those rights by a political convention, as well as any invasion or violation of those rights by the federal government.

"We call upon all Democrats and upon all other loyal Americans who are opposed to totalitarianism at home and abroad to unite with us in ignominiously defeating Harry S. Truman and Thomas E. Dewey, and every other candidate for public office who would establish a police state in the United States of America.

The Aftermath at Birmingham

For all its sound and fury, the rump convention held over the weekend at Birmingham attracted official Democratic Party representation from only three Southern States. Mississippi and Alabama, who walked out at Philadelphia, were joined by South Carolina whose Governor, Strom Thurmond, has been "recommended" for the presidency by those attending the Birmingham "conference," to use the terminology upon which its sponsors insisted.

Mon. 7-19-48

The surprise withdrawal and denunciation of the rump convention by Arkansas's Gov. Laney—who had been pushed, before adoption of the platform in Philadelphia, as a Southern presidential candidate—weakened the Dixiecrats' position. It had been thought, when he refused to allow his nomination after the civil rights plank was placed in the Democratic Party platform, that Laney would be selected as the standard-bearer at Birmingham. When he refused the "recommendation" of the "conference," branding it an ill-considered action stemming from selfish political scheming, it was an unexpected blow.

But Gov. Laney's position—"Whatever is done must be done through the official Democratic organizations in each State"—was a conclusion at which party leaders in Georgia, North Carolina, Virginia, Tennessee, Florida and even Texas had long since arrived.

Georgia's Sen. Russell, who has fought vigorously and intelligently against enactment of the President's civil rights proposals, spoke for all thoughtful Southern Democrats when, refusing to allow his name to be "recommended" at Birmingham, he declared that the South most effectively can resist encroachments on its traditions by remaining within the party.

It is our conviction that view will prevail and that the hotheads who met at Birmingham will in time be proved to have accomplished nothing more than did the fervid but futile Grass Roots Convention held in Macon a few years ago.

Power Behind the Dixiecrats

Mon 10-25-48

Atlanta Ga.

NEW ORLEANS—Every so often you can go right to the nub of a political situation that otherwise might be baffling by ferreting out a forceful character who combines politics with business. Knows what he wants and knows how to operate politically to get it. Such in Louisiana politics just now is Leander B. Perez, Attorney General of Plaquemines Parish, who is recognized as the real boss of the Louisiana Democrat organization which includes two of the old Huey Long clan—Huey's brother, Earl, who is Governor, and his son, Russell Long, who will be the new United States Senator from this State in the next Congress.

Mr. Perez is the power behind the Dixiecrats movement in this State and his direction of it and use of the regular organization to promote it explains why the betting today is that the Dixiecrats will run first in this State in November, with a scramble for second place between President Truman and Governor Dewey. It is possible that Mr. Truman may wind up third.

Mr. Perez's business interests, furthermore, explain the economic influences behind the Dixiecrat campaign which, as anybody might guess who knows anything about Louisiana politics, include oil, always a major factor in the State's politics.

Here in replica, too, is a diagram of the Dixiecrat movement as a whole and what is back of it as pointed out often here before. It is based upon exploitation of so-called "states rights" and the racial issue to serve selfish private interests, including oil, utilities, textile and finance, among others, to end once and for all any threat from New Dealism that Harry S. Truman took over from Franklin D. Roosevelt. New Dealism stands for a watchful eye from Washington on natural resources, such as oil and electric power, to protect the public and a watchful eye to see that other industrial interests protect workers and preserve competition. State rights means leaving such matters to the less watchful and more easily controlled state governments, which is what the powerful economic interests behind the Dixiecrats movement want.

Mon 10-25-48

The big issue here is State rather than Federal control of oil-bearing tidelands in which Louisiana is so rich. Plaquemine Parish, of which Mr. Perez is the political overlord, embraces that section of the Delta about the mouth of the Mississippi River and is reputed to have more miles of coastline than it contains square miles in its entirety.

Mr. Perez is interested in oil, among other holdings his has been one of those careers in politics that is paradoxical but, after all, not too unusual. He started out in politics as a reformer, but eventually he became involved in those complex business arrangements that go along with politics, particularly in this State, and now he is powerful in both business and politics, a winning combination. His dominant political interest just now is State rather than Federal control of tidal oil lands.

Mon 10-25-48

The Truman Administration is for Federal control. Mr. Truman, therefore, must be driven from the White House at all costs to protect the oil interests here and in other Southern States that have coastal lands.

Mr. Perez has a nice prescription to take care of that. It is to draw as many votes as possible away from the President to the Dixiecrats so that, with others that are drawn off by the Republicans, also a strong "state rights" party here, Harry Truman will be completely frozen out. He has enlisted a considerable part of the regular Democratic organization here in that little plot through his influence and organization is whipping the small fry leaders into line. Whether he knows it or not, or approves of it, Governor Dewey is being represented here by Republicans as a strong "state-righter" who is sympathetic to State rather than Federal control of tidal oil lands. The Republican candidate has taken no position publicly on this issue.

There is no organized political campaign here for the national Truman-Barkley ticket. President Truman will get strong support from labor and from Negroes but obviously this will be in the minority.

NEGRO EDITOR SUPPORTS DIXIECRATS—This picture, and a copy of the current edition of The MEMPHIS CITIZEN, published by Rev. G. L. Rev. Young, a local minister whose newspaper in its last week's edition advocates 'Patience on part of the Negro' and an understanding of the States' Righters' point of view, was not available for an interview, but the accompanying picture of his office at 175 South Third Street, near Beale, tells most of the story. It was President Truman's Civil Rights proposal that started the new Rebellion in the South. Yet Editor Young, and his contemporary in New Jersey, Davis Lee, editor of the TELEGRAM, with headquarters in Newark, have played right into the hands of these reactionary forces which clearly define their attitude toward the Negro in a States Rights Information and Speakers Handbook. This book carries an editorial published by Davis Lee in his TELEGRAM, and later republished by a number of southern newspapers as a great pronouncement on the race question. This handbook under a topic entitled, "The Race Question," declares in part:

"We must face the race question frankly and fairly, as we have learned to face the question of veneral disease in this country. It must be examined by those who regard the interest of the nation as paramount. It is too important to be overshadowned by any effort at political advantage.

"The first step towards a Communized America is the invasion of States Rights by greedy politicians, ambitious for power, and determined to make life in each State conform to a Washington pattern.

"If we start out with he self-evident proposition that the whites and black are different, we will not experience any difficulty in reaching the conclusion that they are not and never can be equal. It is no crime to be different. A horse and a cow, for instance, are not equal Food that will enable a horse to perform a day's work will dry up a cow. They are not equal and cannot be treated equally, if the best interests of both are to be served Gold and silver, both precious metals, are not equal. They are unequal in almost every way.

"Justice—not equality—is the only thing possible under the law. No law enacted can make gold and silver equal.

Tues 10-26-48

The theory of equality is a communistic theory. It reduces all to a dead level. From a racial standpoint, the practical effect of the general acceptance of this theory, when carried to its logical conclusion is the merging of all the peoples and races of the world into one race."

RALEIGH, N. C., Aug. 10—(AP)—States rights Democrats today took steps to prepare for court action in their fight to get on the general election ballot in North Carolina.

Tues 8-10-48

Columbia S.C.

Hubert E. Olive, chairman of the state board of electors, said that the states righters had requested and received permission to have petitions they presented the elections board Aug. 4 checked to determine whether the signers were registered voters.

The board last week rejected the states righters' petitions on the grounds that no check had been made to determine if the signers were registered voters and if they voted in the primaries this year.

The board had ruled that those seeking to form a new party must present at least 90 days prior to the election petitions signed by 1,000 persons who were registered and who did not vote in the primary.

The states righters had presented petitions signed by 18,000 signatures but had made no attempt to have the names checked.

Leaders of the group, which is supporting Gov. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina for the presidency, immediately announced they would take their fight to the courts.

Raymond Maxwell, secretary of the state elections board, said that decision to permit the petitions to be returned to the counties for a check was "made only for the purposes of their suit."

"It in no ways affects the action already taken by the board," he added.

Tues 8-10-48

Maxwell said the petitions would be returned to county elections board chairmen with a letter asking "but not instructing" them to make the check.

Maxwell said that no attempt would be made to check on whether the signers voted in the primaries.

He said the states' rights Democrats had offered to pay costs of having the names checked.

The checking process, Maxwell said, would require about a week. After that, the States' Rights Democrats are expected to file their suit.

'DIXIECRATS' GAIN MOCK ARMY UNIT

Columbia, S.C.

34d

DELAND, Fla., July 22—(UP)— Prankish law students today offered the Dixiecrats military backing in the fight for states' rights, provided every "soldier" can be a general or a colonel.

In its first communique the "Stetson Confederate army" recognized "the role of Southern womanhood in the fight for states' rights."

Columbia Record

Gen. Robert E. Lee, Jr., then formed a Women's Army corps.

Lee (his real name) appointed Miss Ray Jordan, librarian of the college of law at Stetson university here, as women's commander. She was mustered as Maj. Scarlett O'Jordan. (It is all right for a woman to be less than a colonel.)

7/22/48

Col. D. "Rhett" Butler of Orlando, Fla., was named advisor.

The students, mostly World War II veterans, were silent about their next political salient. A serious staff matter concerned them. Prof. Roy Francis Howes volunteered as a private.

This threatened to upset the table of personnel. The generals and the colonels conferred, enlisted Prof. Howes, but immediately made him private FIRST CLASS!

Candidates Of Rump Session To Hold Meet Here

Atlanta Ga.

Fri. 7-23-48

Atlanta Daily World

Atlanta will be the second Southern city to be contaminated with a rally of political aspirants heading the so-called "Dixiecrats," who recently held a rump session in Birmingham and threatened secession from the Democratic Party.

It was disclosed that the vice presidential candidate of the disgruntled organization, Gov. Fielding Wright, of Mississippi, has called a meeting of his Southern rebels in Atlanta for tomorrow.

Its purpose has been labeled "strategic," with the explanation that plans will be mapped for a Southwide campaign against the election of President Truman, who won the nomination as presidential candidate of the Democratic Party.

The Mississippi governor asserted that his co-nominee for the presidency, Gov. Strom Thurmond, of South Carolina, will also be in attendance along with several other Southern party leaders.

7/23/48

Gov. Wright said at Jackson Wednesday that he does not consider himself and Gov. Thurmond as accredited candidates because they were not nominated at the regular convention held in Philadelphia. The action at Birmingham did not launch a new party, he added.

Candidate Warns South Cannot Be Forced

Montgomery, Ala.

Sun. 7-18-48

By G. C. LONG, JR.

Staff Writer

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.—Southern states' righters, boiling mad at the treatment they had just received at the hands of the national Democratic party in Philadelphia, came up with their own presidential and vice-presidential candidates here Saturday.

With a vast throng of about 7,000 persons jammed into the Birmingham Municipal Auditorium, the states' righters named South Carolina Gov. J. Strom Thurmond their presidential candidate, and Mississippi Gov. Fielding L. Wright as his running mate.

7-18-48

Great Ovation

And it was with a thunderous approval that the delegates gathered here adopted the resolution naming their candidates, followed by stony silence when the convention chairman asked if anyone disapproved of the selections.

Not satisfied to stop with the work done here, the convention voted to convene again in this city on Oct. 1 to complete any business that might come up in the meantime. It also voted to set up campaign headquarters and to provide for a general campaign chairman.

7-18-48

Force Defied

In accepting the candidacy for the presidency, Governor Thurmond, lashing into President Truman's civil rights program that was placed in the national party platform, stated, to cheers that rang throughout the vast auditorium, that there were not enough troops in the U. S. Army to force "the Southland to admit Negroes to our theaters, swimming pools, schools and homes."

Vice - presidential Candidate Wright, like Governor Thurmond a bitter opponent of the civil rights program and advocate of state sovereignty, declared the people who said the South could not unite to fight the things that were against its traditions "are now trembling in their boots."

Noisy Convention

This convention here Saturday was not a quiet one. There were frequent demonstrations and parades, and the bedlam that followed the keynote address delivered by former Alabama Gov. Frank Dixon, Birmingham, lasted 17 minutes before the conference chairman, Mississippi in charge of the Office of Selective Service Records — a "stand by" organization established to keep the old draft board records intact.

As head of the peacetime draft, he is expected to use these records in setting up the new machinery. He will have charge of the local boards in each state which will do the actual drafting. Many of these boards already are organized and ready to function.

Hershey believed in decentralization of the draft. He often said that a local board, composed of prominent and respected "friends and neighbors" of a registrant, was far better able to decide whether that registrant should bear arms or stay on his job than was an agency in Washington.

At the peak of its operation, his World War II selective service system had about 185,000 unpaid workers and about 25,000 who were paid. It inducted into the armed services a total of 10,023,599 men, about two-thirds of those who served in World War II.

His organization will be much smaller this time. Estimates are about 58,000 workers will be needed, and there will be many fewer draft boards.

House Speaker Walter Sillers finally managed to gavel the milling throngs back into their seats.

7-18-48

Few of the many speakers got far without being interrupted by the famous Rebel yell.

Angered over what both candidates termed "a stab in the back" at the Democratic convention earlier this week, the tumultous meeting gave shouting agreement to assertions the South will never surrender local control on racial issues.

Primary Reasons

The President's message on civil rights, and the Philadelphia convention's endorsement of it, were the primary reasons for this regional revolt.

Neither candidate made any claim of victory, but both promised to show the national party "the real Democratic Party is in the South."

Campaigns were planned in 15 states including Missouri, home of Mr. Truman.

In seconding the two nominations, Senator Eastland (D) Mississippi, made the forecast that "the race next November is between Gov. Thurmond and Gov. Thomas E. Dewey."

"Truman will not get a single electoral vote," he shouted.

Nomination of both candidates was by acclamation.

According to reports the convention did not come by its final action without a struggle within the inner circle of those directing the activities.

Sun.

It is reported that the top leaders were divided on just what course of action should be followed here. Some thought that the best lead for the states righters to follow would be to leave off naming candidates, at least for the present, and concentrate on getting friendly presidential electors named in the various states, while others thought that the best plan was to go ahead and put out their own candidates.

What come out of the internal struggle was a naming of presidential and vice presidential candidates for the electors of the several states to fall in behind, and thus bring about the possibility of defeating Truman in the electoral college.

If it would not be possible to decide the race in the editoral college, then the election of the next president would be thrown into the House of Representatives, where the South would stand a better chance of having its weight felt, according to Gov. Thurmond.

Principles Cited

Although the states righters came up with their own candidates, they did not come up with a platform that contained anything other than a denunciation of civil rights and an endorsement of states rights. And those points were covered in a declaration of principles that was approved by the convention . . . without any opposition.

Always before the convention was the constant reminder from the leaders that the Southern Democrats were not bolting from the national Democratic Party.

Pounding away constantly on the idea, all speakers contended that the Southern Democrats are the only ture Democrats, and it was the national party that left the principles of the old party and is now a new organization.

May Be Retired

In his keynote address, Dixon, in an effort to show that the south meant business and that the convention here was just not just a flash in the pan, declared that any public office holder in the south who attempted to lead any southern state into the Truman camp "will be retired to private life." (by the voters).

That remark touched off the first big demonstration of many that sent tremendous ovations echoing through the vast hall.

The convention was originally scheduled to get under way Saturday at 10 a.m., but it was delayed for an hour, because, some said the leaders could not agree on the procedure.

Sun.

While an almost empty auditorium waited for the beginning of the session, a shirt-sleeved band blared out music, which brought cheers from the people on hand.

With the huge auditorium showing gaping areas of blank seast, many began to wonder if the meeting was going to be a "bust."

That doubt was soon answered, however, for as the time to start neared, the onlookers and delegates began pouring in.

Wallace Pickets

Some of them were met at the entrance of the hall by pickets who carried placards asking for the election of Henry Wallace. There was a brief flurry of excitement over the fact that the presence of the pickets might cause trouble.

That failed to happen and the Wallace group soon faded away.

Meanwhile, inside the auditorium, places had been set up for Florida, Mississippi, Tennessee, Kentucky, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, South Carolina, Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina, Virginia and other states.

In addition to delegates from the states named, many others were here in the "other" classification. The chair recognized Pennsylvania, California, District of Columbia.

7-18-48

Just before the convention began its program, Birmingham City Commissioner Eugene "Bull" Connor, a delegate to the national convention, who walked out of that meeting, called all the Alabama and Mississippi bolters to the platform.

Gessner T. McCorvey, Mobile, chairman of the State Democratic Executive Committee, called the meeting to order, following which Ruby Mercer, a Metropolitan Opera singer performing in Birmingham, sang "The Star Spangled Banner" and "Dixie."

McCorvey presided until the convention elected Sillers permanent chairman of the meeting.

In answering the address of welcome given by Connor, James Arrington, mayor of Collinsville, Miss., declared that the "insults heaped on the South in Philadelphia cannot and will not go unchallenged and unanswered here."

Prophetic Omen

He asserted that the convention, by refusing to hear Alabama when it demanded to be heard in Philadelphia, gave a "prophetic omen of what is to happen to Alabama and the South if the civil rights planks of either the Republican or Democratic Party is adopted."

Sun. 7-18-48

In accepting the chairmanship of the convention, Sillers stated that "we are here to vindicate the principles on which this country was founded, the principles on which we stand now, and will stand until doomsday."

Wright Says States' Rights Is Alternative To Dictatorship

The Advertiser

HOUSTON, TEXAS—(AP)—Gov. Fielding Wright, of Mississippi, declared Wednesday night that the principle of states' rights "is the only alternative of abject subjection to the tyranny of dictatorship."

Thurs 8-12-48

He said that "with a full consciousness of . . . the dire necessity for immediate and aggressive action" he accepted the nomination for vice-president of the United States tendered him by States' Rights Democrats.

"Today the present Democratic and Republican parties are philosophically bankrupt. They are mere vehicles for getting into and holding onto office," Wright said in his speech at a rally launching the states' rights group's national campaign.

Montgomery Ala.

"They veer from point to point without regard to principle, but only with an insensate desire to pander to any minority for votes. Government by bloc, by vociferous minorities, is a cowardly thing. It is a disgrace to America. It paves the way for ultimate dictatorship or Socialism.

"Only a return to American principles, to local self government, can halt the unseemly spectacle we are now witnessing."

He said Dewey wasn't the choice of the Republican rank and file; called Truman "an acknowledged loser," and said "Wallace represents Russia and its ideology."

Believes He'll Beat Truman

Wright's acceptance speech preceded one by Gov. J. Strom Thurmond, of South Carolina, presidential candidate for the state's righters.

At a press conference earlier Thurmond had said he believed he would get more electoral votes than President Harry Truman, the National Democratic candidate.

Thurs 8-12-48

He said the states' righters are determined to get their ticket on as many state general election ballots as possible.

Wright accepted his nomination as tendered by the "Democratic Parties of South Carolina, Alabama and Mississippi." The states rights group says it is trying to work similarly in the regular Democratic oaganization of as many states as possible.

"Local self government is what a majority of the people of this country are convinced is the best form of government on earth," Wright said.

"The moment that government becomes remote, distant, mysterious, and beyond the comprehension of the people themselves, danger arises and we subject ourselves to the possibility of abuse and ultimate dictatorship. This ever constant peril is visible to us at all times.

Threat Is Augmented

"In our large cities and more populous areas machine politicians and self-seeking officeholders have obtained and held an unrelenting grip on their municipalities.

"This threat of seizure of control by big city bosses and their henchmen is today greatly augmented and increased by the three million Federal jobholders, none of whom are elected by the people other than the President and vice-president."

Earlier, Thurmond told his press conference:

That he and his running mate, Gov. Wright, will receive more than 100 electoral college votes.

That "we hope" to win if the electoral college winds up in a deadlock and the final decision on the presidential election goes to the House of Representatives.

That the campaign of States' Rights Democrats will strengthen the position of Southern congressmen, will gain more respect for Southern delegations to National Democratic Party conventions of the future, and will make the American people more conscious of the present threat to the American way of life.

"We expect to carry most if not all of the Southern States and expect to receive more than 100 electoral votes," the South Carolina governor said.

He admitted the Southern Democrats were off to a late start but confidently added that "we hope to make up a lot of lost time."

Truman Stand Rebuked By Rushton, McCorvey; Write-In Plan Fails

Sat 10-30-48

Repeating charges that Truman has betrayed the South, Marion Rushton and Gessner T. McCorvey, Alabama Democratic leaders, last night urged voters to "throw the South's political weight around" by voting under the rooster Tuesday.

Rushton, Montgomery attorney and Democratic national committeeman, and McCorvey, Mobile lawyer and chairman of the Alabama Democratic Executive Committee, spoke over a statewide radio hookup.

Montgomery Ala.

At Mobile State Senator Joe Langan, a Truman supporter, admonished voters against "a last minute attempt to split the Democratic party." He said any move to write in names of Truman electors in an independent column would serve to split the Democratic vote and "react to the benefit of the Republicans." He warned of a possible GOP victory in the state should Democratic strength be weakened.

Denounce Folsom

In a statement, McCorvey also announced that Alabama's slate of Democratic presidential electors had denounced Gov. Folsom's "attempt to drive votes away from the Democratic ticket in Alabama." They added, he said, that "neither the governor nor the courts is going to force us to vote for Truman."

Meantime, accordnig to an Associated Press report from Birmingham, the 11th-hour drive for a write-in slate of Truman-pledged elector candidates apparently has failed. Eight of the 11 proposed as independent write-in candidates in Tuesday's election said they opposed the plan. A ninth, Senator Joseph Langan, Mobile, said he would serve. The other two could not be reached for comment.

Sat 10-30-48

McCorvey threw scathing words at the civil rights program and the rest of what he termed "outrageous proposed statutes." He asked voters not to think a Dewey vote would be a vote against Truman, but insisted that Alabamians should cast their votes on a straight Democratic ticket. "And this will be a vote for the 11 presidential elector nominees who have pledged to you that they will never, under any circumstances, vote for Harry S. Truman . . . or any man advocating his diabolical civil rights program."

McCorvey pleaded for the preservation of "white supremacy" and the States Rights doctrine. He said that a show of strength at the polls Tuesday would do much to add to the South's national prestige, and reinstate it as a bargaining power.

Had Opportunity

McCorvey hotly denounced Folsom and others who had accused the Alabama committee of denying Trumanites the right of vote in Alabama. "They know that under the Alabama code, that any caucus or mass meeting of any political party or faction could have nominated a slate of Truman electors and had their names put on the ballot in November. But through political cowardice, they failed to do so."

McCorvey concluded by saying that a display of power now would put the South in a very favorable position in the 1952 election.

Sat 10-30-48

Rushton underscored most of McCorvey's remarks, but his address was less accusing and calmer. He insisted, as he has so often in the past, that the South is capable of solving its problem alone, and that it has already made rapid strides in that direction.

Rushton said that "now that we are orphans, let us be sure before joining up with any family, that we will be received and respected on equal terms."

Already Settled

He denied that there was any validity in the proposed suit Gov. Folsom, saying, "The Supreme Court of Alabama, at Folsom's request, has already settled that question under both the state and Federal Constitutions."

As evidence of the legality of Truman's not being on the ballot, Rushton said "Although Alabama is the only state in the Union in which Truman's name is missing on the ballot, there are some 30 states in which the States Rights ticket was unable to qualify, and you don't hear us complaining."

This is the South's last chance to assert itself, Rushton added: "If we do not make an effective protest, if we slink back into the party with our tails between our legs, we will brand our-selves as political cowards and our principals will be lost forever."

Rushton said that if necessary, he advocated a two-party system in Alabama. He said that the presidential candidates have never, within the memory of his lifetime, come into Alabama on their campaign tours because "our vote has always been already cast. We must become an independent state politically."

Democratic Campaign Cost Listed As Zero

The Democrats must be pretty sure of winning next Tuesday's election in Alabama. They haven't spent any money on it.

Campaign expenditures reported to the Secretary of State Friday show seven Republican candidates have spent a total of $1,159 and one progressive nominee for presidential elector $15.

But of all the Democratic candidates, not one listed any campaign expenses.

Republican W. P. (Bill) Ivey, who's running for Congress in the Sixth District, topped the list. He said he spent $643. Another GOP Congressional nominee, Hiram Dodd in the Ninth District, was next with $200. A third, Harry J. Frahn, listed $155 as the expenses in his campaign for Congress in the Eighth District.

Four GOP candidates for presidential elector also turned in expense accounts. L. A. Carroll of Slicomb reported $75, A. M. Walker of Tuscaloosa $60, W. H. Gillespie of Clanton listed $25 and Raymond P. Wheeler of Anniston said he spent $1. It went, he said, for postcards.

The Progressive elector who paid out $15 was Joe M. Goodwin of McKenzie.

Besides the individual expenditures, the Republican state campaign committee reported expenses of $10,033 and contributions of $13,993. The Progressive Party listed donations of $2,719 but no expenditures. No report has been received from the Democratic committee.

ONE THING IF NOTHING ELSE

Montgomery Advertiser

Montgomery Alabama

There is one thing the most tart and resolute detractor of the Dixiecrat movement must unhesitatingly give it great credit for. The political movement has occasioned an accompanying debate over Southern racial problems that has made a wide and strong impression on the Northeast.

Sat 10-9-48

The Dixiecrat movement may not have been the most powerful and availing means of rebellion, but it unquestionably has served the cause of the South by making the people of the Northeast—who are just as sincere and good Americans as we Southerners—think with more reason and information about our racial disorders.

One of the most impressive examples of that is this week's Time Magazine, whose front cover features Gov. J. Strom Thurmond and a lengthy article on the party of which he is standard bearer. Time Magazine has been consistently unsparing and injudicious in its treatment of Southern racial problems.

The treatment has been consistently jabbing and jeering, the attitudes being as barren of comprehension and knowledge as that of the average Southerner about Britain and her imperialism. Prior pieces in the magazine were apparently always written by hot-rock junior editors with an eastern college campus patter of liberalism—by untaught experts who never perhaps observed that in all the Time-Life-Fortune empire, there was only one Negro writer they could call colleague.

But now at last the Dixiecrat stating of the South's case has evidently occasioned a conference of senior Time editors with the wits to regard the South with some reason and wisdom.

Following are excerpts from the Time article: Sat 10-9-48

. . . But if it was States' Rights that Thurmond was battling for, what was the theoretical difference between him and a lot of Northern U. S. citizens who were equally apprehensive of Big Government?

The main front of the Dixiecrats, indeed, was a Southern upper crust of mill owners, oil men, tobacco growers, bankers, lawyers, who might have felt more comfortable voting Republican. Would the Dixiecrat party be a kind of political decompression chamber for conservative Southerners, on their way to the Republican party? No; for Tom Dewey also advocated civil rights for the Negro. The Southerners wore their States' Rights with a significant difference.

No decent citizens in the South condoned the night riders, the fiery crosses and the lynch mobs. No one but a fool condoned them. But what about the Negro's right to an education, a job? As far as Strom Thurmond was concerned, he would not deny the Negro the right to an education and a job. Thurmond had to accept a federal judge's decision that the Negro had a right to vote; 35,000 voted in the South Carolina primaries this year. The so-called Southern "liberal" went further: He would and did encourage the Negro to better education, to enfranchisement as a self-respecting citizen.

But what about segregation, which was also a denial of rights? Segregation was not peculiar to the South—it was simply more universally enforced there. In the North, not only in the eyes of hotel owners and real estate dealers, but in the eyes of the vast majority of people, the Negro was still a second-class citizen. Those whites who considered the Negro their social equal were a minute exception to the general rule.

Because of the Negro, guilt haunts the whole U. S., South and North. But the North's guilt is glossed over by the hypocritical assumption that it has "solved" the Negro problem—in principle and on paper. Behind the South's gloss of "states' rights" is defiance and fear.

Beyond a certain point, the Southerner will not or cannot give a reasonable answer to the Negro problem. It is not, he feels, a reasonable problem. And it was not a problem that he brought on himself. It is his business to live with it, but it is no more capable of overnight solution than any other vexation he inherited. This sense of irrational frustration reduces most Southerners to the flat statements of defiance with which they commonly respond when a Northerner—especially a Northern "liberal"—attacks them on the subject.

On his part, the Northerner—and not just the Northern "liberal"—often finds this Southern attitude baffling, incoherent or plain infuriating.

The Southerner talks about his personal solicitude for the Negro, but to the Northerner it seems much closer to the solicitude of the master for his slave than to the friendliness of neighbor toward neighbor. What most Southerners seem to deny the Negro is human dignity, even in such small ways as refusing to call them "Mr." or "Mrs." "You've got to keep niggers in their place," they say.

Said Douglas Southall Freeman, the noted Southern historian: "There were two abolitionist movements, the Civil War movement and Mrs. Roosevelt's movement to abolish segregation. The South is too much influenced in its treatment of the individual Negro by the ignorance of the mass. But the North is too much misled by the ability of a few conspicuous Negroes." Adv. 10-7-48

The Time article goes on to make a point often hammered on on this page. That is that it is ridiculous to blame all the trouble on Truman. He is merely an incident of the disturbance and it will continue when he is gone.

It is unrealistic to assume that revolting parts of the South can go happily back into the Democratic Party once Truman has departed. It is questionable and then some that the South can then gain control of the party. The so-called Northeastern liberals overwhelmed the South at Philadelphia and it is probably they who will hold control. Time suggests that this may bring a "permanent realignment"—which means a strong G. O. P. in the South.

Not everything in the article will please Dixiecrats, but they will find assurance that the movement has brought on more talk in the North and has thus served one unchallengeable purpose. And it didn't "cost" anything—for the Democratic nominee was hopelessly defeated regardless of how the South votes.

Birmingham, July 15--The South's troubled Democrats indicated tonight a plan to hamstring President Truman's election chances by leaving their electors unpledged.

The plan was indicated by Ex-Governor Frank M. Dixon and two members of the Alabama States'-Rights Committee.

Dixon, presidential elector Horace Wilkinson, and Sidney Smyer stressed that Saturday's meeting here of Democrats disgruntled over the national party's civil-rights plank would be a "conference and not a convention." Wed. 7-15-48

Wilkinson and Dixon said that leaving the presidential electors free to vote for whom they pleased would not mean throwing support to the Republican candidates.

Could Cast Votes Freely

It would mean, they said, that for electors could vote for any man. Presumably the Southern states could unite in the Electoral College as they did in the convention, when 263 votes went to Senator Russell (D., Ga.) for the presidential nomination.

Alabama already has a delegation to the Electoral College which is unpledged, save against Truman.

Wilkinson said the support by 11 Southern states of his plan would mean 127 free votes in the Electoral College. He said that before November there still was time for any Southern states to change the statute of their delegations now pledged to Truman. Daily World

Says It's to Pick Candidate.

Earlier, Governor Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi had said the Birmingham conference was to nominate a presidential candidate.

W.W. Wright, Jackson, first of the Mississippi delegation to return from the convention, said the main purpose of the meeting here was to "get control of the Democratic Party back in the hands of the regular Democrats." Atlanta, Ga.

Wright admitted there was no hope of electing a Southern President, but said the conference was to "defeat the Philadelphia nominee."

The call to the Birmingham conference was issued as the delegated left Philadelphia and the scene of the Democratic National Convention.

Summoned by Wright, Dixon.

The summons was issued by Governors Wright and Dixon to all those opposed to the civil-rights program and the renomination of Truman.

But whether these leaders would find the South united behind them was problematical. Wed. 7-15-48

The Mississippi delegation was scheduled to arrive in Birmingham at 8:10 p.m. tomoroo, some of the Alabama delegates from the national convention at 10:45 a.m.

Florida said it would send seven members, and Governor Ben Laney of Arkansas said he "probably" would attend. Laney may be the nominee of the "Dixiecrats" for President, if the Southern conference decides to place a candidate in the race.

Representatives of Texas and South Carolina also are expected. Louisiana and Georgia already have said their delegates would not attend. Daily World

Thurmond Not Expected.

Governor J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, keynoter of the original "States'-rights" meeting of the rebels before the convention, also is not expected to attend. His Columbia office said "previous engagements" would keep him busy elsewhere. But South Carolina Party Chairman William P. Baskin is expected to bring a delegation from his state.

Dixon, head of the arrangements committee, said Laney had told him he would lead his state's delegation here.

Laney is regarded as the Dixiecrats' logical choice for President, if they make one, because he removed himself from the Philadelphia picture before the balloting started. He was a Southern favorite-son candidate, along with Russell. But he withdrew because he said he could not run on what he considered a Socialist platform after the convention embraced the civil-rights program in full. Wed 7-15-48

George Isn't Hopeful.

The senior senator from Georgia, Walter George, said he didn't see what the Birmingham convention could hope to accomplish.

Both Russell and Editor Ralph McGill of The Atlanta Constitution said they believed the cleavage in the Democratic ranks would result in a major realignment of parties.

McGill predicted the party 10 years hence would find its strength mostly in urban areas and be further to the left than the party of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

There were other reactions to the developments at Philadelphia.

Marion Rushton and Mrs. Lennard Thomas, both of Montgomery, Ala., said they would remain on the Democratic National Committee.

At Mobile, State Senator Joseph N. Langan called on Alabama Democrats to unite behind Truman, and outlined a write-in plan whereby they could vote for him. 7-15-48

He proposed that party members who favor the President hold a convention in Montgomery August 16 to name a slate of 11 electors pledged to Truman. These candidates would run under the banner of the National Democratic Party and would appeal for write-in votes.

States' Rights Party Headed For Oblivion, Dr. Martin Says

"The States' Rights Democratic Party is headed for oblivion."

That's what Dr. Roscoe Martin told the Young Men's Business Club at its meeting yesterday.

Dr. Martin, head of the Bureau of Public Administration at the University of Alabama, said the States' Rights Party is not a political party and has never claimed to be. He predicted that it will not cast its lot with the Republicans.

B'ham, Ala.

SPEAKING OF MINOR parties, he placed emphasis on the Progressive Party. He said no minor party has been successful except the Republicans. He compared the Progressive Party to the People's Party and said that the Democratic Party took over People's Party platform as a whole.

Dr. Martin predicted that the South will never have a two-party system because "we aren't in the mood to analyze the Republican Party in the South.

Commenting on the recent election, Dr. Martin described President Truman as an "incident." He said the people voted for the Democratic Party rather than for Mr. Truman and added, "Any other nominee would have done just as well, maybe better."

IN PREDICTING the death of the States' Rights Party, he said it has no organization and nothing to exist on. "A state party must be in with the ~~national~~ party," he emphasized. Tues 11-9-48

States' Righters In Georgia Claim Victory, Talmadgeites

AUGUSTA, GA., Oct. 13— (AP) — States' Rights Democrats whooped their way into Georgia's political arena today, predicting victory in "our fight for a principle."

Montgomery, Ala.

More than 300 delegates, sprinkled heavily with supporters of Democratic Governor Nominate Herman Talmadge, joined in the new party's founding convention.

They cheered as they staged Georgia's first big split in years from the Democratic Party. Speakers shouted that the national party had abandoned its basic principles in the "muck and mire" on big city machines which have "destroyed the party's soul.

The fast moving convention chose headliners in Georgia's potent Talmadge political camp to lead the fight in Georgia for South Carolina's Governor Strom Thurmond for president.

Charles J. Bloch of Macon, a member of the State Democratic Executive Committee, Mrs. Julius Y. Talmadge of Athens, a cousin of the gubernatorial nominee, and Former Agriculture Commissioner J. J. Brown of Thompson were among 12 presidential electors named.

Herschel Lovett of Dublin, a Talmadge legislative chieftain for years, was named States Rights national committeeman. Mrs. Talmadge is the new party's national committeewoman.

Ed L. Willingham, Augusta businessman who spearheaded the convention, was named state party chairman. He is a long time Cracker Party leader in Augusta and a Talmadge partisan in state politics. Thur 10-14-48

"The Talmadge organization is behind us 100 per cent," he claimed to reporters.

Talmadge had no comment. He has been reluctant to join any move that might resemble "bolting the Democratic Party." Thur 10-14-48 Willingham told the convention "this is not altogether a political matter, it is just something we feel. We are fighting for a principle."

A telegram from Thurmond urged Georgia to repudiate "the trickery and treachery of the Truman leadership of the Democratic Party. When a great principle is at stake, I am sure the people of Georgia will fight for their rights."

Keynote Speaker William P. Congdon of Augusta described President Truman as "a little boy wearing papa's clothes." Republicans, he said, seek only to exploit the South for the benefit of the north.

"That leaves us the States Rights Democrats the only party with a presidential candidate who has the courage to fight in this hour of peril to preserve the principle of local government and individual dignity on which the nation and the Democratic Party were founded."

Meantime, in Atlanta, the States Rights Party, regular Democrats, Progressives and Prohibitionists qualified presidential electors for the state's general election ballot.

States Righters were the last to present credentials of electors on the final day of qualifying. Names of the electors were sent there from here immediately after they were named.

Thurmond Believes House May Settle It

LOUISVILLE, KY., Oct. 13— (AP)—J. Strom Thurmond, States' Rights Democratic candidate for president, said here tonight the House of Representatives may select this nation's next president.

The South Carolina governor said in a campaign address prepared for delivery at a party rally, that the States' Rights group "will not let our great party be kidnaped by the Pinks and the subversives." Thur 10-14-48

"We shall recapture the leadership of the Democratic Party," Thurmond said, "and restore it to the ideals and principles for which it has stood more than a century.

"It is possible that we may do so by preventing any candidate from gaining a majority of the electoral college vote, so that we can take the election to the House of Representatives. There the smaller states will be able to elect a president who will respect their rights."

Thurmond said the paramount issue of the campaign is: "Whether we Americans can put our own House of Democracy in order so that we may lead the world out of its despair."

Why Be Scapegoats?

The News

To the Editor of The News:

Alabama and Mississippi seem to be on the receiving end of a flood of criticism and ridicule by newspapers throughout the nation, including the South, due to the walkout at Philadelphia and the so-called "rump" meeting in Birmingham. I shudder to think of how Time and Life magazines are going to cut us to pieces, due to their manner of reporting the news from the South heretofore.

But the question I should like to ask is: Why should Alabama and Mississippi and maybe South Carolina alone carry the fight and the flags for the entire South on this matter? According to the editorial opinions of the newspapers of the South, and public reaction reflected therein, the sentiment of the people of the South is against this movement. Birmingham, Ala.

Unless the other Southern states, that should be deeply concerned, wish to cooperate and join hands in this matter and offer publicly and to the nation some assurance of this, why doesn't Alabama just call the whole thing off, and accept gracefully with the other Southern states whatever indignities the national Democratic Party and the rest of the nation wishes to impose upon us? Don't Force Things

Birmingham, Ala.

To the Editor of The News:

I am not concerned about segregation, first because I know it is not wanted here in the South, and, second, if this agitation keeps up the Negroes will be deprived of what little privilege we now enjoy. But I do hope the Congress will enact some laws that will give us as free access to the polls as any one else and also protection from the mob, for as it, is if one Negro commits a crime in a community all in that community stand in danger of being slaughtered. News

If the Congress can do something along the above mentioned lines there will be many grateful hearts, both white and black, here in Alabama, but the whites are afraid to come out in the open and advocate it, but once the anti-lynch and anti-poll tax bills become law you will find there will be many white, like Nicodemus, and Joseph of Arimathea, consenting to the way things are going, yet are powerless to do anything about it, they think. Tue. 8-3-48

Give the management of industry more power in hiring and firing and the F. E. P. C. will take care of itself. Things are not so bad as some are inclined to believe. Give the Negro a little more time to be educated. Let him first learn what it is all about and he will adjust himself to conditions satisfactorily. But I am afraid if we undertake to force things too fast it will only make bad matters worse.

Call To Minorities

To The Editor of The News:

I write this attempting to answer some of the questions raised by Mr. Edward E. Cale. He proposes to eradicate selfishness of the Negro, and says that the Negro only bobs up when there is something for their advancement, and that he should be selfconscious and not expect white people to do all the dancing. B'ham. News

Well, I think everyone should want to advance because when a people advance that shows progress and without progress the world would stop. Tue. 8-3-48

Can we say that the law is what it should be when it is a one-sided affair? We have no Negroes in our courthouse, nor on our law force. Why not make the minority a part of the law? Some are capable of handling a position in any branch that would reduce lawlessness in many ways.

We are all selfish, great and small, to some extent, and I say truthfully it would not be as much crime and violence if every man had equal rights, political and financial. Social rights should not cross the color line. The Negro has no right to crash the white man's society, but in the political world the Negro and all minorities should have some part.

To all Negroes and minority groups: Let's all do our best and show the majority that we too are red-blooded Americans, loyal to the flag and to the republic for which it stands. Let every man do as he may but we minorities do right, continue in prayer and faith. Not for one group but all mankind. For he serves himself best who serves others most.

Should we get civil rights, let us use it in a civil way with good intention. Birmingham, Ala.

It is up to us to show our best qualities and ability. Let us see if it is our conduct that kept us behind the eight ball or our color. That's an old question. And now we may have a chance to find the answer.

It Is Not "State's Rights" They Fight

No matter what is said to the contrary by candidate J Strom Thurmond and his consorts, their real fight is no for "state's rights:" it is a fight for the rights of certain whites who would impose a racial pattern on all of the United States. And the proper title for them is "white rightists," as nefarious exponents of white supremacy as was Adolf Hitler and his nazis.

Thurmond And Baskin To Go To Conference

Gov. Strom Thurmond said today that he would be accompanied to a Dixiecrat conference in Atlanta by State Democratic Party Chairman William P. Baskin.

Thurmond, discounting any suggestion that he resign as governor to run for president on a Dixiecrat ticket, said that Sen. R. M. Kennedy of Camden, Robert McC. Figg of Charleston, Walter Brown of Spartanburg and Baskin would attend the conference.

In Atlanta, Thurmond will meet with Gov. Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi to outline plans for the forthcoming presidential election. Gov. Ben Laney of Arkansas is the campaign committee chairman.

No Manager Yet

Thurmond said that a manager had yet to be chosen. Other particulars of the campaign will be decided upon in Atlanta.

"Governors Dewey and Warren haven't resigned," Thurmond said. "And Roosevelt didn't resign while he was campaigning. Also I haven't received any reports that President Truman intends to resign."

The governor made his statement in reply to a newspaper's open letter which implied that he should resign from the governor's seat to run.

The Spartanburg Journal said, "It is a long established custom of this state, though not mandatory, that a man holding one office and seeking another underscores the sincerity of his convictions in the race he is about to make by resigning the office he holds."

Thurmond said, "The affairs of the state of South Carolina will be carried on properly.

Letters Piling Up

Meanwhile, officials in Thurmond's office said letters were piling up from all parts of the country. They said the letters, many containing contributions ranging from $1 to $100, urged Thurmond to get his name on the ballots in their states.

In North Carolina, Atty. Gen. Harry McMullan said today he still hadn't decided on what date to set the deadline for Dixiecrats and third party Progressives to file petitions for legal recognition as political parties.

7-22-48

McMullan said he was called yesterday by Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, who asked what he would have to do to get his name on the North Carolina general election ballot as Dixiecrat presidential candidate.

The attorney general told Thurmond 10,000 signatures of registered voters who didn't take part in the last primary election must be filed 90 days before the election. McMullan was not sure whether that 90-day period should include Nov. 2 or not and deferred decision.

He promised to notify Thurmond as soon as a decision is reached on the point.

Beats Dixiecrats

DR. RALPH E. HANLEY

Dr. Ralph E. Hanley, noted dentist of Indianapolis, led the successful fight to remove Dixiecrats from the ballot in Indiana. He filed suit in circuit court charging the States Rights party with violating the State's "Anti-hate" law of 1947. Which assures civil rights to all minorities, something the Dixiecrats oppose.

Attorney General Aids Court Plea by Dentist

Baltimore, Md.

INDIANAPOLIS—Circuit Judge Lloyd E. Claycombe last Friday permanently enjoined the State Election Board from giving the States' Rights Democrats Party (Dixiecrats) a place on the General Election ballot.

In an unusual procedure, Cleon Foust, Indiana Attorney General, joined with the plaintiff, Dr. Ralph E. Hanley, a local dentist, in requesting that the injunction be made permanent.

GOP Governor for Dixie

On Sept. 2, the election board voted to permit the party to put the names of Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina for President, and Gov. Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi for Vice President on the ballot representing the Dixiecrats.

Sat. 9-18-48

Gov. Ralph F. Gates and Edwin Steers, Republican members, voted for the Southerners, but William Steckler, Democrat, voted to keep the party off the ballot.

The State's attorney general said that some of the 11,188 signatures on the Dixiecrats' petition were found to be those of dead persons, and that not more than 700 were properly acknowledged.

He pointed out that all the signatures certified by Betty Jean Biro, who attested 8,600 of them, were obtained "on or before Aug. 31, whereas Miss Biro did not secure her notary public commission until Sept. 1."

Keep Fight In Party --Laney

Constitution

Atlanta, Ga.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., July 18—(UP)—Leaders of the second great bolt in Democratic Party history today planned an early conference to set up a campaign organization and denied they had technically pulled out of the Party.

Gov. J. Strom Thurmond, of South Carolina, Dixiecrat nominee for President, said at the home of a friend in Anderson, S. C., that "We are not bolting the Democratic Party. They left us."

Arkansas' Gov. Ben Laney, who refused to let himself be designated by the Dixiecrats yesterday, again emphasized his desire to keep the civil rights fight within regular organizations.

"Whatever is done must be done through the official Democratic organizations in each State," Laney said. "I made this plain to the leadership here, and this is my position now and in the future." Only Alabama and Mississippi had regular Party representation here yesterday.

He also said, "It is not too late to avoid permanent division of our people."

Mon. 7-19-48

The statement indicated disagreement with some of the policies adopted at the State rights gathering. Gov. Laney did not attend the session at the auditorium but was in several Committee meetings.

Thurmond was resting after the tumult of a Dixiecrat Convention which nominated him in a thunder of Rebel yells here last night. It marked the first mass walkout on the regular Democratic organization since insurgent Southern Democrats nominated John C. Breckinridge in 1860.

The Dixie Presidential nominee pledged a finish fight against President Truman's civil rights program and against social equality for Negroes.

In accepting the call, Thurmond thundered that "We believe there are not enough troops in the Army to force the Southern people to admit Negroes to our theaters, swimming pools and homes."

Gov. Fielding Wright, of Mississippi, Dixiecrat Vice Presidential choice, said he and Thurmond have agreed on an early conference to set up "co-ordinating machinery" for the State-by-State drive to end the South's traditional loyalty to the Democratic Party.

7-19-48

The Southerners moved yesterday to run slates of electors in opposition to Mr. Truman and his running mate, Sen. Alben Barkley, in every Southern State and in the border States of Missouri and Kentucky.

Wright continued to call the Southern revolt group a "movement" rather than a party. "We haven't done one single thing except recommend a course of action," he said. Whether this course of action is followed, he added, depends on State Democratic organizations.

Both Thurmond and Wright today stoutly maintained that they had been "recommended," not nominated. Another Dixiecrat conference called for Oct. 1 would do the nominating, they said.

Wright admitted that the Dixiecrats may have trouble getting electors on the ballot in some States. He said there would be no trouble in his own State though where under a recent act electors will be on the ballot "For Gov (Thomas E.) Dewey, Truman Gov. Thurmond and even for Henry Wallace if nine people in Mississippi are crazy enough to vote for him."

The Texas delegation here last night planned to seek a referendum in its State on the fourth Saturday in August to decide between Truman-Barkley and Thurmond-Wright electors.

Today the band was resting after playing Dixie all day, interrupted with several performances of the Star Spangled Banner to quell disturbances. The delegates were home, or headed home to begin work in thier States after parading President Truman in effigy with a placard saying "President Truman Killed by Civil Rights."

Thurmond gave them a keynote this afternoon: "The Southern people are aroused. They are going to stick together and carry this fight to victory."

Dixiecrats Can't Make Grade For Missouri Ballot

The Defender

WASHINGTON — The states rights Democrats were recently informed that the new party can not qualify as a presidential ticket for the Missouri voting by the August 23 deadline.

Chicago, Ill.

In eight other states, the Dixiecrats predict that they will get at least 100 electoral votes and will hold the balance of power if a deadlock between President Truman and Governor Dewey forces the election into the House of Representatives. The states are: Texas, Louisiana, Arkansas, Georgia, Florida, South Carolina, Alabama, and Mississippi.

States' Rights, Federal Aid

Herald Tribune

To the New York Herald Tribune:

It seems strange that the same Congressmen who are "States' Rights" advocates when it comes to poll-tax, anti-lynching and fair employment practice bills are the leading supporters of Federal aid for education which would benefit the "poorer" states. Apparently they practice the teaching that all children are Americans and should be treated and educated equally only when it is convenient.

What Are States' Rights?

To the Editor of The News:

What are states' rights? We here in Alabama should seek the answer to that question before Nov. 2. When we go to the polls on that date and cast our votes, for many of us our first votes in a national election, we should know for whom, and for what principles, we are voting. What are states' rights? I challenge any of our so-called States' Rights leaders to answer that question. The public is entitled to know. Is it merely a group of politicians who are obsessed with the desire for power; power which they can hold over the heads of racial and minority groups? Or do they have a comprehensive program to work for the benefit of our great country? I, for one, am inclined to doubt the latter.

What are our federal government's rights? Is it the power to install such agencies as TVA? Has the federal government the right to set into operation a social security program? Has it the right to enforce anti-trust laws? I think about 130,000,000 Americans will agree that our federal government has these powers and is morally bound to carry them out. These functions are only a few of the thousands of things our government performs for the welfare of the public. Where would these invaluable agencies be if states' rights had been the watchword down through America's history?

Franklin D. Roosevelt's New Deal was a major usurpation of power by our federal government. Why did our States' Righters not rise then to fight for the narrow principles they advocate? They received benefit from those federal acts, that's why. Let the national government just mention a word which is not directly to the interest of this very small minority of our population though and watch them let out a howl that is heard, and ridiculed, around the world.

I could be wrong about the States' Rights Party. That is the main reason I am writing this letter. I, along with most of the people of the world, would like to know where the States' Righters stand. Where are they on internal improvements, social legislation, foreign policy, defense, and the host of other functions a government in our day is responsible for? Do they have a specific policy, or are they only against everyone else?

DIXIECRATS SEEM CERTAIN OF VOTES

May Get 8 South Carolina Electoral Ballots

(The Associated Press)

Columbia, S. C., Aug. 17.—The states' rights Democrats were assured today of South Carolina's eight electoral college votes if the state goes along with its Democratic party in November.

Wed 8-18-48

The state party's executive committee unqualifiedly endorsed the ticket headed by Governors J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina and Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi.

The committee action, at a meeting to canvass and report returns of the August 10 primary election, confirmed a mail poll of members conducted two weeks ago by Chairman W. P. Baskin.

Baskin said after that poll that the committee membership was "overwhelmingly for the Thurmond-Wright ticket." Today's voice vote of the committee brought forth but a handful of "noes."

New Orleans La.

The committee will name the elector candidates at a meeting after the August 24 primary.

The elector candidates will compete with those of the Republican party, and possibly with those of Henry A. Wallace's Progressive party and a slate expected to be put forth for President Truman by a rump state Democratic party movement.

A Letter And Answer

The News

To the Editor of The News-Age-Herald:

Immediately after President Truman urged the enactment of his civil rights program numerous persons began searching for means for the South to protect itself from the dire consequences which would follow. It was realized that, with both major parties using civil rights as bait for the votes of minority groups, the Senate filibuster would probably no longer be effective. The repulsive proceedings at Philadelphia prove that the issue thrust upon us by Mr. Truman could not be solved within a party composed of such discordant elements.

The plan that the South use its electoral vote as a defensive weapon was recommended by Sen. Eastland. This plan was approved by a substantial majority of the Democrats of Alabama by the nomination of 11 candidates for presidential electors pledge to withhold Alabama's electoral vote from Mr. Truman if he were the Democratic nominee.

Mr. Truman and his program and this plan of combating it were the issues in the May primary. These issues were fully debated. The people in a clear voice said they did not want Alabama's electoral vote cast for Mr. Truman. If you think the people of Alabama did not understand what they were doing, you underestimate their intelligence.

During the primary campaign you wrote thousands of words belittling and ridiculing the plan of the South's withholding its electoral vote from Mr. Truman. You did not, however, make one constructive suggestion as to a means of defense the South could or should employ.

Apparently not willing to abide by the result of the May primary, you have followed the same lines in your subsequent editorials, and now you seem to suggest the election in November of pro-Truman electors. This, of course, would require that a majority of the voters who participated in the May primary dishonor their pledge to support in the general election the nominees of the primary.

The greater the unity in the South, the greater will be the success of the plan. Your unwillingness to abide the decision already made in Alabama is contributing to disunity in the South. For that you must accept responsibility.

Birmingham Ala

Those who have and are now trying to defend the South by peaceful and lawful means are sincere in their conviction that the plan advocated by them is the only effective means of protecting the South. In justice and fairness to them and to your readers, please print this letter and with it please answer these questions:

Sun 8-1-48

1. What, in your opinion, could the South have done or could it now do to defeat Mr. Truman's civil rights program?
2. Did you participate in the May primary, and, if so, do you intend to honor the pledge you then made to support the nominees of that primary, including the 11 nominees for presidential electors?
3. Do you advocate that the voters who participated in the May primary vote for presidential electors in the general election other than those nominated in the primary?
4. If you intend to repudiate your pledge or advocate that others do so, how do you justify such action?

I am taking the liberty of circulating copies of this letter among various newspapers and individuals who are interested in these matters and will await your answers to the foregoing questions with much interest.

NORMAN W. HARRIS.

Editor's Note—(1) Oppose it within party, in Congress and by any other means that seem legitimate and effective. (2), (3), (4) American federal government is based on national parties—in the main, two major parties. Many Alabama Democrats, like this newspaper, desire to have effective voice in national party affairs and an opportunity, if they wish to do so, to support the national ticket of the Democratic Party even when that ticket is not what they would prefer. They believe that elector nominees of the Democratic Party in Alabama should support the national nominees if representatives of the party participate in national party processes. They regard a pledge against supporting such national nominees, made long in advance, as a mistake. With Democratic elector nominees pledged, however, against the national ticket, many Alabamians feel justified in seeking other ways of giving support to that ticket. We have sought repeatedly to make these points clearly in discussing the present situation.

When States' Rights Issue Backfired

The Post

(An Editorial in The Anniston Star)

WHEN ANDREW JACKSON was president of the United States his political strength lay principally in the Southern and Western states, New England having been relegated to the position of comparative insignificance it had occupied during the first 25 years of the Union. But on Dec. 29, 1829, Sen. Samuel A. Foot, of Connecticut, introduced a resolution for the further restriction of the sale of public lands that turned the balance of power against the South.

Wed 9-22-48

The Western states resented that gesture on the part of the New England statesman, as they wanted a liberalization of the federal government's land policy instead of its restriction. Accordingly, Benton, of Missouri, got the floor and vigorously opposed the Foot resolution. Others joined in the debate which soon turned into a contest between the East and West, and while the South was not interested in the land policy it took advantage of the opportunity to widen the East-West breach.

Bham, Ala.

The objective of the Southern senators at the time was to restore the alliance between the South and West, and they did not fail to remind the Westerners of the many times when their objectives had been thwarted by the Easterners. But Foot and his allies, seeing that they were at a disadvantage, attacked the South on the issue of state rights, particularly against the South Carolina Exposition and Protest, which had been written by John C. Calhoun.

Calhoun, 10 years before, had been a liberal constructionist of the constitution and favored vesting the federal government with broader powers. But he had reversed himself in his famous Exposition, which Foot and his allies contended would have the effect of weakening the national government and might eventuate in the destruction of the Union. The West also was reminded of the many times its aim had been defeated by the South's strict constructionists.

* * *

"AT THIS POINT," says Charles S. Snyder in his great book, "The Development of Southern Sectionalism?" the Southern senators made a grave tactical error. Instead of disregarding constitutional questions and pushing ahead into the breach between East and West, they accepted the challenge and rushed to the defense of state rights. Whether Daniel Webster or Robert Y. Hayne won the great debate on the nature of the Union was of little consequence from the standpoint of immediate political advantage. The important point is that the South let New England escape from the trap of Sen. Foot's making."

Then, as now, we were placed on the defensive, whereas if we had kept the offensive by taking advantage of the quarrel between the East and West, instead of being diverted into a constitutional disquisition, the entire course of American history might have been changed. We might have been compensated for our property interest in slavery and thereby have averted a civil war, in addition to which the South and the West might have been developed industrially along with the East.

Wed 9-22-48

A SITUATION SOMEWHAT similar to that of the 1829 incident occurred at the recent Democratic National Convention. The platform committee, eager to appease the Southern dissidents, agreed on a civil-rights plank that was virtually the same as the one contained in the platform of 1944, and it also was agreed by the majority that they would not introduce a minority report unless the South undertook to do so. But when the South insisted upon a states' rights amendment before the convention, the Northern delegates were released from their pledge and Mayor Humphreys, of Minneapolis, then made his fiery speech that completely upset the apple cart.

This was a most unfortunate episode, because the interests of the South and of the West are as similar today as they were in the early days of the Republic. They both are struggling for industrial development, for equality of freight rates, for public power development, for conservation and reclamation, for farm support laws to equalize the tariff laws that are supported mainly by the East and for the ending of government by monopoly.

These advantages cannot be obtained through the agency of a sectional state-rights party and, of course, they will never be granted by the big moneyed interests of the East. They are to be attained, and maintained, only through a strong national Democratic Party, and after the Dixiecrats shall have run their course in the tradition of all other splinter parties of the past it is to be hoped that the South and West can get together again in the interest of a better balanced national economy.

Voice Of The People

The Lesser Evil

To the Editor of The News:

The News

I would like to take this opportunity in answering Carey E. Haigler, president of the Alabama State Union Council, in his attack upon the States' Rights candidate, their platform and the 11 Alabama Democratic electors pledged for the States' Rights ticket.

It seems that Mr. Haigler is somewhat perplexed for himself and organized labor as whom to vote for in November, which is an indication that he has been lacking foresight as to what the real aims of the States' Righters are. "Controllers of the state Democratic Party machinery are not Democrats but backdoor Republicans; Texas oil men and Southern lawyers are more concerned with Northern corporations than the social and political dangers that face the South, and that Gerald L. K. Smith, who was publicly denounced by the States' Righters, is an indispensable cog in the States' Rights machinery!" Mr. Haigler would have you believe this, if you are gullible.

Fri 9-10-48

Birmingham

The question is whether the working men and women of America will put their faith into a full, strong, whole Democratic Party or only a remnant of it which would do them no good for many years to come. As it stands now, the Democratic Party is helpless without the whole-hearted support of the South, but the States' Righters are determined, whatever may result, to choose the lesser of two evils, and in this they are right.

The Alabama Democratic delegates who had pledged themselves to walk out of the Philadelphia convention in case a civil rights plank was included in the platform had no other choice, but this is superficial; its significance lies in the fact that for the first time the South was demanding recognition as an indispensable part of the Democratic Party and that its success or failure rested with the South.

Fri 9-10-48

If and when the Democratic Party is defeated in November, the fault will not be the States' Righters but the "Trumanites" who have cut off their noses to spite their faces. The States' Righters and Thurman are more foresighted than one would have you believe. A Republican victory now may easily mean a Democratic victory in 1952. A Democratic victory is also a labor victory. The South must bargain cleverly and with the aid of Southern labor, but they must have patience, the final result being inevitably satisfactory to both.

The Very People Who Prate About States Rights'

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER: The nominee for president of the Dixiecrat Party, speaking at Fairfield on Labor Day, said: "Party loyalty" is being urged by men who "deserting the faith of our fathers." "Those who carry party loyalty have told their political bosses in Washington that they can come into your state and the other states in the union and fix up the political fences that are badly in need of repair . . . Does this mean that we must humiliate ourselves . . .? etc."

By what sort of labored reasoning, do these ~~self~~-appointed leaders of the Dixiecrat movement (schism), think they can hoodwink ~~and~~ mislead the determinate thinking voters with the false cry about States' Rights?

The matter of states' rights was settled some 82 years ago at West Appomattox.

If this is denied . . . then, the claim was forfeited by the South's support of the Volstead Act, the creation of TVA, the laws controlling interstate commerce, and all of the New Deal legislation resting upon the welfare clauses of the Constitution.

As for humiliation . . . we who administer the affairs of the town hall, the county courthouse, and the state capitols, should be ashamed that this civic responsiblity has been side stepped, and burden after burden laid upon the federal government.

The very people who prate much about States' Rights, are perfectly willing to accept the largesse of the central government for local activities from boon-doggling—through farm subsidies—up to and including, the parents' God directed obligation to educate and to train his offspring.

BOLTERS ALL

The Advertiser

"The term Dixiecrat," relates The Arkansas Gazette, "was coined by an inspired deskman on The Charlotte News for headline designation of the cumbersomely named States Rights Jeffersonian Democratic movement after it was founded last spring at Jackson, Miss. It has been generally accepted by both friends and foes of that organization, which has now developed into a full fledged fourth party with its own candidates for president and vice president. Ala.

"Although some of the Dixiecrats are twisting logic in an effort to explain that they are still loyal Democrats, the fact remains that they are engaged in an active effort to defeat the Democratic nominee. Dixiecrats, for all practical purposes, therefore, is synonymous with party bolter —and it is a label that most Southern politicians are extremely anxious to avoid."

Dixiecrat is an unfortunate name because it rawly suggests descent in a direct line from Hoovercrat. But the fourth party is now stuck with it.

The Advertiser has often been intrigued by the anguish it causes such gentlemen as Gessner T. McCorvey, chairman of the State Democratic Executive Committee, to be called a bolter. He struggles as if it is the embrace of a serpent. 8-1-48

Contrarily, we do not in the least object to being called a bolter. This newspaper has a long history of bolting. We regard bolting as highly laudable in the Truman case.

Mr. McCorvey contends with prodigious energy that Alabama is not bolting because it will, as always, vote under the rooster. In 1928 a man who voted against Al Smith was a bolter. But in 1948 a man who votes against Truman is not a bolter.

We believe that within the framework of Mr. McCorvey's logic we may proceed to argue that Great Britain "bolted" the Colonies in 1776. We may argue that the North seceded from the South.

But all of this is academic to The Advertiser. In 1860 this newspaper bolted the national Democratic Party (Douglas) and supported Breckenridge. In 1896 this newspaper bolted the national Democratic Party (Bryan) and supported Palmer. And it considers that in 1948 it is bolting the national Democratic Party (Truman).

What's wrong with bolting?

Mr. McCorvey is an old bolter like the rest of us. 8-1-48

Liberalism On The March

To the Editor:

President Truman's victory was not only a triumph for the man but also for the New Deal.

11-16-48

The people were fed up with two years of Republican control in Congress and the actions the Republicans took and failed to take. The people disliked the aloof, overconfident, evasive attitude of Thomas E. Dewey. They warmed to the friendly but fighting Missourian who faced the issues and told the American voters just where he stood—squarely behind the New Deal.

President Truman's smashing victory over Gov. Dewey, and the Democratic Party's sweep of both the House and Senate prove that liberalism and progress are again on the march in America, and that conservatism and reaction, after a two-year sway, have been plainly repudiated by the voters.

The American people expressed their belief in the social reforms of the New Deal and their desire for the continuation and extension of those reforms by electing Harry S. Truman and giving the Democratic Party control of Congress.

It seems to us that it is now incumbent on every one of Alabama's nine congressmen and both of our senators to give President Truman their support in the 81st Congress to pass measures that will be of benefit to the people. We refer to such measures as legislation to halt inflation; an increase in the minimum wage to 75 cents an hour; a national health insurance program; extension of social security to groups not yet covered, with benefits at least 50 per cent higher; a housing program that will relieve the terrible housing shortage; and repeal of the Taft-Hartley act with re-enactment of the Wagner act to place American labor once again on an equal footing with the corporation powers of our country.

On many of these issues as they came before the 80th Congress, senators and representatives from the South voted with the Republicans against the Democratic administration of President Truman.

It is time to stop such an unholy coalition! In the 81st Congress, congressmen from the South should be Democrats in fact as well as in name. If they cannot bring themselves to this, then we suggest that they become Republicans in name as they have often been in fact. The people gave President Truman a clear mandate and a majority of Democrats in both houses of Congress on the basis of the president's stand on the New Deal.

The people expect expansion of the New Deal, and no members of Congress who call themselves Democrats should stand in the way.

Alabama is in the sad and unenvied position of being the only state in the Union which denied President Truman a place on the ballot. We do not believe, and said so many times prior to the election, that the people of Alabama were in sympathy with the Dixiecrat leadership that accomplished that denial. It is our feeling that the majority of the people who voted under the rooster on Nov. 2 were doing so not to support the Dexiecrat candidate, J. Strom Thurmond, but because they felt they had a right to expect their vote in the Democratic column to be cast for President Truman.

This election has served to discredit even more so the already-discredited politicians who were the prime movers in the Dixiecrat movement. It would now seem to us that it is incumbent on any Dixiecrat who holds a position in the Democratic Party, including the state Democratic Party, to resign that position. As Dixiecrats they belong in their own party. They do not belong in the party of Truman.

States' Rights Democrats Become A Fourth Party

The States' Rights Democratic party, despite its desire to retain its connection with the Democratic party, begins to look more and more like a fourth party.

The States' Rights candidates will be on the ticket in Texas, North Carolina, Florida as a result of action this week.

In Texas, where the regular Democratic party has been successful so far in preventing the capture of the party machinery by the State's Rights Democrats, the States Righters held their own convention Wednesday and nominated J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina and Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi as their candidates for president and vice president. For the Texas election the party dropped the word "Democrat" from its designation and will be known as the States' Rights party. In 1944 a Texas court decision held that only the Democratic party was entitled to use the word Democratic, a decision which incidentally makes more sense that the decision of the South Carolina Democratic executive committee to retain the word Democratic in its designation while supporting the States' Righters.

In North Carolina a supreme court decision held that the States' Rights Democrats had met all of the requirements of the North Carolina law and were entitled to be listed on the state ballot despite the failure of the State's Righters to secure the signatures of 10,000 voters, not members of other parties, to their petition for recognition. The state election board had required that the signers be, not only qualified electors, but also persons who had not voted in any primary of the current year. This additional requirement, the court held, was "unreasonable and invalid."

In Florida a special legislative committee voted to include Thurmond and Wright on the Florida ticket. The committee will make its report to a special session of the Florida legislature expected to be called to straighten out Florida's Democratic voter puzzle.

In South Carolina, where the States' Righters have seized the Democratic party machinery, the pro-Truman Democrats also took steps Wednesday to see to it that a regular Truman-Barkley Democratic ticket will be put out this year. Even in South Carolina the voters will have their choice, which is as it should be.

States' Rights Democrats Hold Strategy Meet

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Aug. 28.—(AP)—States' Rights Democrats held a "strategy meeting" today to map campaign plans for the Thurmond-Wright ticket.

Both the party candidates, Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, and Fielding Wright of Mississippi, were here for the closed-door session.

There was no official announcement of matters up for consideration.

In Tune With the Votes

"Manipulators," in hotel suites at Birmingham, had it planned so that the band would play "Dixie" whenever the "grass roots" movement of the vast number of 2,000 persons showed signs of quieting down. "Keep 'em hollering," was the word.

Since that time the press agents, hired in the same fashion as the musicians, have been playing "Dixie" on their typewriters, demanding the South remain provincial and "Southern." One assumes their definition of "Southern" is Dixiecrat.

Well, now let's look.

People are beginning to see the Dixiecrat outfit, now gone back home to Houston and the original copyright owners, for what it is—just as Gerald L. K. Smith saw it for what it was. "The three largest contributors to this meeting invited me," said Gerald, and the "grass roots" died. That phrase, "grass roots," at least, has dropped from the writings of the Dixiecrats.

In South Carolina, Wilton Hall's Anderson Independent, the best known newspaper in South Carolina and the one with the most influence—an influence built through the years by honest opinion, honestly arrived at—has come out strongly against the Dixiecrat movement as harmful to the South and the States' rights fight.

States' rights and its friends are being cut down by the Dixiecrats who, while they have attracted sincere persons, are nevertheless dominated by those who believe not in States' rights but in States' wrongs.

People are beginning to think.

Census

It is important they think about the Dixiecrat mind, which wants to retain the status quo and to bind us with the bonds of the past, in terms of many factors—and especially in terms of the latest one—the census report.

On Monday morning newspapers published the U. S. Census reports from 1940 to 1948 which showed that the Pacific Coast led the nation in population gain, with California, Oregon and Washington State showing amazing increases, the first two increasing more than 40 percent. California, having passed Ohio and Illinois during the war is about to pass Pennsylvania and become the second most populated State in the nation.

Now, no one insists that mere population is, per se, of value. But, when the nation is revealed as in the throes of a migratory revolution, it does mean that some section is losing population at an unhealthy rate because there are attractions of opportunity elsewhere. Income and jobs are there.

Wed 8-11-48

South

So, let's look again. Nine States lost population. They are Arkansas, Mississippi, Oklahoma, Kentucky, West Virginia, Nebraska, North Dakota, South Dakota and Montana.

Twenty-eight States showed net losses by migration, but were able to show slight population gains because of excess births over deaths. Florida alone in the South had a real increase.

The South is chiefly concerned. Only the South, as a region, continues to lose population.

Not all those leaving the South are Negroes. Not all those being born are white children.

Ask

Ask any rural community you know where its best high school graduates—girls and boys—of the 1947 class are today. And where the graduates of 1948 are going.

Georgia had enough more births over deaths to give her a gain of 15,000 persons from 1940 to 1947. Atlanta's gains were enough to save the State a net loss. Alabama had a gain of 1,000. Arkansas and Mississippi lost population.

BUT, IN ALL THESE STATES THE CITIES GAINED POPULATION.

Does that mean anything to the Dixiecrat mind?

Cities

I tried to say, from Philadelphia's Convention where the South was shaken out of the Party's decisions, that the South, too, has cities.

In Albany, Cordele, Savannah, Augusta, Rome, Macon, Columbus and other Georgia cities are gaining population—and they are—the same thing is happening in other Southern States. Consider what it means has happened to the rural regions.

That process will go on as machinery comes—and it is coming more and more every day.

There are many important things happening in, and to, the South.

The Dixiecrats plan to meet them by hiring bands to play "Dixie" and by repeating the dusty words of the heroes, long dead.

Positive

We must—here in the South—realize that what friends we had at the Philadelphia Democratic Convention could not help us because of the Dixiecrat state of mind and words.

If we save States' rights—as we must try to do—we must save them before the Supreme Court. The Dixiecrat clamor, seeking to preserve States' wrongs, prejudices the cause of States' rights.

And do not make the greatest error—in the light of the census returns—of thinking that the big city machines, which now control the Democratic Party, acted contrary to public opinion in their cities. They were out to get votes.

Wed 8-11-48

And where are the South's votes going more and more each year?

Look at the census reports.

And look ahead another 10 years.

Shall we act positively? Or form a splinter party which may be effective for four or eight years—which is not very long, as time goes.

Tomorrow I want to shell down some corn.

Strength Of Gov. Thurmond, While Cutting Truman's Lead, Not Enough For Dewey Victory

In Contrast To South Carolina, Where States' Rights Party Holds Big Lead, Only Few Voters Favor Dixiecrats

By GEORGE GALLUP

Director, American Institute Of Public Opinion

PRINCETON, N. J., Oct. 2. — Inroads of the insurgent Dixiecrats on the regular Democratic vote in North Carolina and Kentucky are today not large enough to take those states out of the Truman-Barkley column.

In contrast to South Carolina, where the States' Rights Party holds a substantial lead, only 5 per cent of Kentucky voters and 13 per cent of North Carolina voters today say they will vote for J. Strom Thurmond, South Carolina's governor and States' Rights Party nominee for president.

Dr. Gallup

Mon 10-3-48

While Kentucky today gives a popular vote advantage to the Democratic ticket, the lead over Dewey is slim compared to 1944. The poll reported today was taken before last week's visit by President Truman to Kentucky, home state of his running mate, Senator Alben W. Barkley.

Kentucky Holds Interest

The election in Kentucky holds more than ordinary interest for political observers because of the importance of the senatorial race there to the Republican control of the Senate. Today's survey would indicate that the Republican candidate, Senator John S. Cooper, is not going to be helped substantially by the fact that Dewey heads the national G.O.P. slate.

President Truman's lead in North Carolina also is materially below that customarily given a Democratic candidate, primarily because of Governor Thurmond's following. As of the moment Governor Dewey is supported by about one out of every three North Carolina voters, which is roughly the strength he showed there four years ago against Roosevelt.

Institute interviewers in both states asked a representative cross section of voters this question:

"If the presidential election were held TODAY, for whom would you vote—for Dewey, for Truman, for Wallace or for Thurmond?"

The results:

KENTUCKY

(11 Electoral Votes)

Truman	45%
Dewey	42
Thurmond	5
Wallace	2
No opinion	6

NORTH CAROLINA

(14 Electoral Votes)

Truman	44%
Dewey	33
Thurmond	13
Wallace	1
No opinion	9

While neither of these states, politically speaking, is considered part of the "Deep South," they have seldom wandered out of the Democratic column. Both went Republican when Alfred E. Smith was the Democratic candidate in 1928 and Kentucky also went Republican in 1924.

In each of Roosevelt's four elections, Kentucky gave him better than 54 per cent of its major party vote. However, Republican candidates for Congress in 1946 were successful in getting 53 per cent of the major party votes cast that year. North Carolina's vote for Roosevelt never fell below 67 per cent.

Previous polls showing presidential standings in Southern states have revealed Governor Thurmond leading in South Carolina, and President Truman far ahead in Texas.

'States'-Rights Democrats to Youall, Suh'

Detroit

ATLANTA—(U.P.)—Don't call us Dixiecrats, the Dixiecrats appealed.

"Call us States'-Rights Democrats, Jeffersonian Democrats, even Southern Democrats — but don't call us Dixiecrats," they urged.

Leaders of the southern revolt said the Dixiecrat tag put them behind the eight-ball in other parts of the country. It's a psychological penalty in talking to voters of the North, Middle West and Far West.

* * *

THE NAME "Dixiecrat," coined by a headline writer, has stuck despite the efforts of the states'-rights group.

"I don't like it," said Gov. J. Strom Thurmond, Dixiecrat presidential candidate, of South Carolina, "because our movement is a national one.

"Most papers have used the term with good intention, but some have used it in a manner calculated to throw unfavorable light on us."

Dixiecrats Must Give Way

Gov. Strom Thurmond's "God-help-you" wire to Harry Truman has stirred up some guesses that the prodigal States Righters soon will be looking for a way to get back into the Democratic party. On the other hand, as astute an onlooker as the New Republic's Helen Fuller, out of the deep South herself, believes (or did before the election) the revolting Dixiecrats will lay to their "carefully laid scheme for taking over the whole Democratic party between now and 1952." I think Miss Fuller will want to cast another look—for if anything was blown right out of the water by last Tuesday's electoral explosion, it was the possibility that any such scheme could hope to succeed—ever.

Mon 11-8-48

The Dixiecrats have put themselves into outer darkness in the cold and unbearable company of their own moral turpitude. They will be looking for a way back—a way "with honor" of course. There is no question about that. The question is whether the Democratic party can find a way of letting the Dixiecrats come back—without dishonoring itself.

Good Riddance

At Philadelphia, the Democratic party under H. Truman did for itself what even under FDR it could not bring itself to do. It refused at last to compromise with the Southern Bourbons for the sake of what the late Mr. Dewey doted on calling "unity." It refused to weasel-word its platform on either civil rights or tidewater oil. The Bourbons marched out with a tawdry show of mock heroics, singing "Dixie."

New York P.

This was not a calamity for the Democratic party. It was good riddance—as Tuesday proved. It made an "honest woman" out of the Democratic party as far as the great issue of civil rights is concerned. It refurbished the name of a party that often, because of the adulteration of its principles to keep the Bourbons happy, had been democratic in name only. Now, what could be calamitous for the party would be the readmittance of the erring Southern brethren on a simple kiss-and-make-up basis, as if nothing had happened. For this would be the folly of Aesop's countryman who gave the fox shelter under his coat only to have the fox eat out his vitals.

The States Righters—the avowed and the unavowed—who will be coming up to the 81st Congress, with an eye out for the prestige and patronage "being a Democrat" would give them, will be as ready as ever to continue their unholy alliance with reactionary Republicans when reforms are at stake. As nominal Democrats they would have position and influence. and as in the past would not scruple at trading out the Democratic party's pledges opposed by big interests in other parts of the country to save themselves from the party's pledges aimed at their own special political and social privileges.

I see no reason why Mr. Truman's party should put up with it, why it should kiss and make up without demanding that the Dixiecrats first "wipe off that nightshirt," without requiring that the Thurmonders meet at least the minimum qualifications of a Democrat.

Poetic Justice

Mon 11-8-48

In their own 1948 campaign, the States Righters made a great to-do over selectively interpreting the Constitution according to the narrowest view: I think the Democrats very well might insist that acceptance of our social purpose in accord with the specific undertakings of the Democratic platform be a prerequisite to party membership. In their own states the States Righters are used to restricting the suffrage by a multitude of devices, including frivolous "literacy tests." It would be poetic justice, as well as an appropriate security measure, for the Democrats to require all applicants for reinstatement in the party to be able to read—and subscribe to—the party's promise to abolish the poll tax promptly and without fail.

If this were done, the Dixiecrats either could stay outside and wither with their perishing limb, or, on their indication of good behavior, come into the fold; the Democratic party would protect itself from subversion; and the restoration of free elections in the South, to which the party has given its firm parole, this time would be accomplished surely.

The States' Righters Offer No Solutions

Journal

THE States' Rights Democratic Party of THURMOND and WRIGHT, conveniently called Dixiecrats, offers nothing to the voter. It launched its campaign in Houston, Texas, with an appeal as bare of ideas touching on the problems of humanity as a block of marble. Nobody who took time to read the report of the acceptance speeches could have missed the total lack of reference to things on which people today need reassurance and clear lights.

There was no suggestion of interest or concern in foreign affairs, inflation, housing or social security, its extension or limitation. There was no mention of fiscal policies, Federal budgets, labor legislation. No speaker revealed an awareness that farm programs or curbs for monopoly have any part in our lives.

Fri 8-13-48

There was nothing but incitement of sectionalism and prejudice. What the country saw was not the birth of a party or even the splintering of an old party, but a frothing at the facts of life in the Twentieth Century. It was not a promise of help for anything that troubles the world, but a rabid scream of frustrated reaction.

These points are made and the sterility of a dubious movement, somewhat sinister in its origins, is pointed out, because Kentucky is involved. News comes simultaneously that petitions are circulated to get the States' Rights Party on the ballot here. This is comparatively easy to do. WALLACE's Progressive Party, the Socialist, Socialist-Labor and Prohibition parties will be on the ballot. There can be no quarrel with this fact or with the effort of the States' Righters as an effort by citizens exercising their legal privilege. But there is room, even a necessity, to dispute the States' Rights movement itself on principle.

Those who know their American history will see the parallel between this movement and that of the Know-Nothings who flourished, and gained a certain amount of power, in the Forties and Fifties of the last century. Banding into the American Party, with splinters within splinters into the Native American and Independent Native American parties, they even got 8 electoral votes for their candidate, MILLARD FILLMORE, in 1852. They stood for little or nothing more than taking political rights away from naturalized citizens and Roman Catholics. The name Know Nothing came from the fact that the movement issued from secret societies, whose members were required to keep silent in public.

The Dixiecrats are anything but silent, but they don't seem to say anything that matters. They are not saying anything at all about the plain evidence which indicates that the movement issued not from secret societies but from no less secret directors' chambers of special interests. Among the few positive statements in the Jackson, Mississippi, conference of States Righters last May 10 was a denunciation of the Federal Government's efforts to take domain over tideland oil; and of the President for vetoing the income tax reduction.

The former was repeated in an almost identical statement, the nearest thing to a party platform, adopted at the Birmingham conference last month, when Governor THURMOND and Governor WRIGHT were nominated. Oddly enough, both statements opposed "destruction of the constitutional rights of . . . individuals," while basing the entire movement on opposition to laws assuring civil rights to everybody.

Fri 8-13-48

Nor do they say anything about the shady, forbidding figure of GERALD L. K. SMITH who, in person or through representatives of his Christian Nationalist Crusade, hovered on the fringes of both conferences. They say only that States' Rights (by their own narrow definition) must be preserved. And this in a day when the only hope of peace in the world lies in success of united effort among nations of the world, with natural adjustment even of national sovereignty.

'RECLAIM LEADERSHIP'

Candidate Blasts Truman As A 'Confused Little Man' Holding To Machine

By HARRY WOODBURY

Gov. J. Strom Thurmond, States' Rights Democratic presidential candidate, put the Nation on notice last night that his party is here to stay, despite the outcome of the Nov. 2 election.

The Governor's 45-minute speech at Ellis Auditorium set the stage for a Southwide conference of States' Rights Democrats called into session at the Peabody Sunday to consider making the party permanent.

Recapture Control

However, by use of the word "permanent" it was obvious that Governor Thurmond is hopeful that the States' Rights Democrats can recapture control of the National Democratic Party. There would be a new party in the sense that present Democrat leaders and their ideals would be eliminated.

"... I believe we are all agreed," he said, "that the two-party system is best for this country . . . We must use our votes in this election to reclaim leadership of the Democratic Party, and to return it to its rightful place in the two-party system in this Nation."

Governor and Mrs. Thurmond arrived at Memphis Municipal Airport in a private plane at 6:30 last night, and were greeted with the strains of "Dixie." About 300 Memphians and students from the University of Mississippi, Southwestern, Memphis State and the Southern College of Optometry gave out a big cheer when the plane rolled to a halt before the terminal building.

Fri 10-22-48

Mayor Pleasants shook hands with the Governor as he alighted. E. W. Hale, chairman of Shelby County Commission, also was present, along with all of the city and county commissioners.

Parade of 50 Cars

Walter Simpson of Greenville, S. C., one of 15 members of the South Carolina Undergraduate Optometric Association at the College of Optometry, presented Mrs. Thurmond with a bouquet of red roses. The Thurmond car preceded a police-escorted parade of about 50 cars into the city.

Harold H. (Doc) Earthman of Murfreesboro, former representative, who will accompany the Thurmonds on their cross-state junket also greeted them when they arrived at the airport.

The South Carolina governor said he was not the kind of Democrat "who will debase the party by yielding to the hysterical demands of a Truman or a McCrath or a Humphrey."

He said there were millions of good Americans "in both the Democratic and Republican parties" who value "loyalty to real American principles."

"Acting together in this election," he said, "we shall teach these false leaders what loyalty really means. And when this election is over, we shall continue to act together until the Democratic Party has been cleansed so that it can regain its rightful place in our ~~Nation's~~ political affairs."

No Brief Struggle

Fri 10-22-48

Governor Thurmond cautioned his audience, including listeners to eight Tennessee radio stations, not to be "misled by those who tell you we are going to make a brief struggle and then give up the fight.

"Ours is a cause that can never be relinquished if American ideals of self-government and individual freedom are to be maintained.

"Our purpose is not to seek temporary power in the Government, although we have an excellent chance to throw the election into the House of Representatives, where our ticket will be respected.

"Instead, we have as our purpose the permanent establishment in this Nation of a Democratic Party dedicated to constitutional, representative government. The party has always been symbolic of true democracy in the past. There is no good reason why it cannot be made to remain so, in the future, no matter what its false leaders have done in this political year."

Governor Thurmond had something pointed to say about each of his three major opponents.

He said the States' Rights Democrats intended to see that they "are not betrayed by those who seek to win elections by turning the United States Constitution into a scrap of paper."

Choice Between Evils

There was once a day, he declared, when the American voter's great difficulty was chossing between "two good men" in presidential elections. "After the Philadelphia convention in 1948, however, it appeared that his difficulty had now become that of choosing between evils," the candidate said.

Apparently referring to both President Truman and Governor Dewey, the Democratic and Republican nominees, he said voters previously "did not feel it necessary to trim those offices down to fit the size of pigmy politicians who demanded them."

Fri 10-22-48

Obviously meaning President think it necessary to deliver up the thing it necessary to deliver up the office of president on a silver platter to an inefficient and confused little man who had brought his machine connections into the executive chambers with him."

About Governor Dewey, he said: "Nor did we believe it desirable to hand over the office to a pennyweight glamour boy who had shoved himself into the limelight with the best vaudeville techniques, and who had used the machine minorities of the big city states to capture the nomination."

Speaks of Wallace

Then turning to Henry Wallace, he added: "Neither did we find it desirable to boost into office a tool of the subversives who had publicly announced his willingness to turn over security to the Communists."

Governor Thurmond did not refer to his opponents by name.

He gave five reasons why the States' Rights Democrats were making a vigorous fight:

(1) We will not yield our state control of elections and of voting qualifications to an AntiPoll Tax Bill, which will open the way to Federal control of the manner in which we choose our representatives in Congress.

(2) We will not yield our control of state courts and our state laws to an AntiLynching Bill, which uses the horrors of an almost nonexistent crime as a pretext to turn state laws into Federal laws.

Social Legislation

(3) We will not yield control of our social legislation, which permits us to solve the problems of our race relations in a manner best suited to our own states. We will not break down separation of the races in the states where such action would promote lawlessness and discord.

4. We will not yield the rights of our business men to employ whom they please so that an FEPC law may be passed to please the Communists and the selfish racial groups. We will not yield the right of our working men to associate with whom they please, so that votes may be purchased by violation of the Constitution.

5. And we most certainly will not permit a Federal police force to roam this land, meddling with our private affairs, to enforce an invasion of our personal liberties.

Governor Thurmond went back to the "first formal platform" of the Democratic Party in 1840 to find support for the position his party is now taking on the States' Rights issues.

Fri 10-22-48

One of the platform resolutions was intended to reserve to the states powers not specifically granted to the Federal Government by the Constitution, and the other specified that the "Congress has no power, under the Constitution, to interfere with or control the domestic institutions of the several states."

"There you have the party's voice ringing in the ears of its leaders today," Governor Thurmond said.

"It is interesting to wonder what crusty old Andy Jackson would have said, if he could have spoken to the Democratic convention in July, 1948. No doubt he would have measured his words by his convictions, yielding nothing to the radical temper of that infamous convention.

"For that July convention wrote a sorry page in the history of the Democratic Party, when it strayed away from the historic principles that had made it great.

"I cannot believe Andrew Jackson would have endorsed a repudiation of the rights of the states, and promise to violate the letter and ~~spirit~~ of the Constitution."

South Not 'In Bag'

Fri 10-22-48

Governor Thurmond concluded his address by declaring:

"The States' Rights Democrats stand on the faith that our great party can be and will be restored to the type of leadership that gave us Jackson and Cleveland and Wilson. To that end, we invite the support of Americans everywhere, whatever they may have called themselves in the past.

"And while we are at it, we shall demonstrate to the Nation that the great South is not 'in the bag,' to be kicked around for political purposes. We shall restore to the South a position of respect in the political life of this country which she has not had since 1860. We shall bring our great Southern States back into the full enjoyment of all the privileges that combine to make ours the greatest Nation on this earth.

"The voice of the States' Rights Democrats will tell all the world that the American people value their hard won liberties, and that they will not relinquish them to the demands of any foreign pilosophy, whether it be Fascist or Communist or what not."

Dixiecrats Now A Dead Party Dr. Mays Tells M'house Students

Atlanta Daily World
Fri 11-5-48

In a post-election political analysis Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president of Morehouse College, speaking to the Morehouse students in the College chapel, said that "after today the Dixiecrats are forever dead."

Atlanta Ga.

The popular educator, religious leader and writer based his predictions on the fact that a political party, in order to last, must have some moral basis or RAISON D-ETRE. The South, he declared, has no future apart from that of the rest of the nation. Now, the Dixiecrats, he asserted, were born in the iniquitous and fallacious concept of the South as a separate entity. Moreover, the party's real purpose was not states' rights, as it professed, but to defeat the enforcement of the Constitution of the Untied States in so far as the protection of minorities--and especially Negroes-is concerned. Such dishonesty and lack of moral direction in the inception of a political group can only lead to disaster concluded Dr. Mavs.

President Mays attributed Mr. Truman's success to several factors: 1) Dewey's lack of popular appeal, charm and fascination; 2) the Democratic party's success in making people feel that it is the "people's party;" 3) President Truman's special session of Congress, which proved that the Congress was blocking progressive legislation; and 4) Taft's labor record. "The common people are beginning to think, to make up their own minds politically," concluded Morehouse's eminent president.

Fri 11-5-48

Dr. Mays attributed Wallace's defeat to fact that historically third parties in the U. S. A. are ineffective, to the highly effective smear campaign of which he was the object, and to his exceptionally courageous defense of minorities and especially Negroes. Here he called attention to the unpopularity of the Negro cause in this country despite progress in race relations.

Dr. Mays had correctly forecast the outcome of the elections.

FEPC Would Hit Here First, Gov. Wright Warns Alabama

He Spends Night In City And Advises McGrath That He's Mistaken

By G. C. LONG, JR.

Alabama and Mississippi would be the first to feel the power of any agency set up to enforce an FEPC law that might be enacted by the Federal government, Gov. Fielding L. Wright, of Mississippi, declared here Thursday night.

The Mississippi chief executive, whom the Dixiecrats named as their choice for U. S. vice-president in Birmingham Saturday, made that statement as he stopped overnight in Montgomery on his way to Atlanta where campaign strategy will be planned.

And the reason Federal agents would come to these two states first to enforce any Fair Employment Practices Commission law that might be passed would be because the entire Mississippi and part of the Alabama delegations to the Democratic National Convention in Philadelphia took a walk when the convention adopted a "civil rights" program that was unsatisfactory to them.

7-23-48

As for what the Dixiecrats have up their sleeves in the way of campaign plans, Gov. Wright refused to discuss them. He said they would come out at the proper time.

He said the Atlanta meeting was going to be the first session of the Dixiecrat leaders since the Birmingham meeting and that they were going to discuss plans and see what could be done.

The Mississippi governor said he did not know who would be at the meeting but among those present would probably be those named earlier this year by Gov. Ben Laney, Arkansas, who has split with the group leaders, to plan the organization of the Dixiecrats.

Wright said that he had been receiving encouragement from all over the country since the Birmingham meeting. He would not estimate the number of responses he had received but did say that the postman who delivers the mail at the Capitol in Jackson was complaining of the increased work during the hot weather.

"But he said he didn't mind the extra work since it was for this cause," the governor said.

He stated that most of his response and encouragement came from people "who claimed to be both Democrats and Republicans" —who said they believed both major parties were straying too far from constitutional government.

Wright emphasized that he and Gov. J. Strom Thurmond, South Carolina, were "recommended" for president and vice-president and are not candidates. He said that the resolutions putting forth his and Gov. Thurmond's names merely put them up as suggestions or recommendations.

He explained that the plan is for the various states are going to be requested to get electors who will vote for the two rather than the Republican or Democratic nominees.

If the South can keep its 127 electors in a unit and withhold them from President Truman, then it would be possible that no candidate would have an election in the electoral college and the naming of the president would be thrown into the House of Representatives, where the South would stand a better chance of getting a man who would be more favorable to it.

Gov. Wright said that even if the South fails to get its man elected president, it is the "golden opportunity to show that the South has been and is the backbone of the Democratic Party."

"They have ignored us and now is our chance to teach them a lesson," he declared, referring to the national party's refusal to listen to the South on the civil rights question.

7-23-48

GOV. FIELDING WRIGHT

"The Democratic Party as it is now constituted is not the Democratic Party we have belonged to," he continued. "That party believed in strong constitutional government."

7-23-48

The present controversy is a fight to preserve the Democratic Party that believed in constitutional government and not gain leadership of the party, he added.

According to the Mississippi Governor, Thurmond is assured of the electoral votes of one state—Mississippi. And, he added, the Republicans haven't a chance of carrying his state.

Not only that, he continued there will be no backing down or the part of the Dixiecrats in Mississippi.

He said the people of Mississippi had instructed the state's electors to carry through with the program even if the state stood alone.

"And Mississippi is not going to be backing Truman by November regardless of what McGrath says," he declared.

He said he was referring to a recent statement by the Democratic Party leader's statement that the Southern states would be behind the president by the time November rolled around.

When the late Senator Bilbo of Mississippi was mentioned, Wright tated:

"Senator Bilbo would be a valuable man to have in this fight. Mississippi and the South will be missing him."

Other than that he would not comment on the late Senator from Mississippi.

Governor Wright, who is traveling with his wife and adopted daughter, Elaine, said he would leave here some time today to continue his trip to Atlanta.

Dixiecrat Tells All Cousin of Nominee

MORRISTOWN, N.J.—The reason that Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, Dixiecrat presidential nominee, does not resemble his half-cousin, Robert G. Thurmond, Morristown post office labor department worker, is natural because Robert G. is not of the Caucasian race.

There is, however, resemblance in their political aspirations, as it was pointed out by Mr. Thurmond here in an AFRO interview on Wednesday. Both men are political leaders.

Baltimore Md.

Their kinship was disclosed by Mr. Thurmond, who stated that Gov. Thurmond's father, James E. (Snip) Thurmond, a prosecutor in Edgefield, S.C., and his father, the late Thomas Thurmond, were half brothers, which makes them half first cousins.

Says Relationship Well-Known

Asked whether he knew Governor Thurmond personally, and whether the South Carolina State head recognized him as a relative, Mr. Thurmond said:

"I certainly do know Strom and he knows me and he knows of our relationship because we were the only Thurmonds in Edgefield. He was a youngster when I left home."

Mr. Thurmond, who is 63 years old, also explained that his brother was named after Gov. Thurmond's father.

Before coming to Morristown, Mr. Thurmond lived in New York City where he operated a barber shop. He then moved to Newark where he continued in the barber trade.

He came to Morristown in 1928, opened and operated a cafe here, popularly known as the Maple Leaf Restaurant. Most of his customers, he said, were from Newark and New York City.

It was during the period he was a bistro operator that as was drafted as Morristown's first colored Democratic leader.

Responsible for Job Openings

"When I accepted that post 15 years ago," he asserted, "there were no colored persons in any of the better jobs here, not even a cuspidor cleaner in the town's municipal buildings."

Afr 8-21-48

Although Morristown is predominantly Republican, he, a Democratic leader, figured in the employment of six other persons in the post office, of whom five are working at present.

Mr. Thurmond said he was the first colored person to gain employment in the Morristown post office, a job he has held for the past 11 years.

Looking at least 15 years younger than his actual age, Mr. Thurmond has been married twice and is the father of four children, and though he was unable to name the number of grandchildren, he did name four great-grandchildren.

Living with him at 21 Morris St. is his present wife, Mrs. Viola G. Thurmond.

He has one sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Holmes, who lives at 385 Morris Ave., Newark. One of his sons, the Rev. Ramsey Thurmnod, is a Baptist minister in Augusta, Ga.

Mr. Thurmond is a member of Bethel AME Church where he has been a member of the trustee board for the past seven years, and is a member of the Pride of Morris Elks Lodge.

Afr 8-21-48

An ardent gardner, he spends several hours after regular work each day on a small vegetable farm several miles outside of Morristown.

His farming skill drew wide interest in Jersey two years ago, when he harvested a crop of cotton, a product that is a rarity in this section of the country.

Believes Cousin Made Mistake

On the subject of Governor Thurmond, to whom he voluntarily referred as "my cousin," Mr. Thurmond said that he believed that the South Carolina Governor made the worst mistake of his life in accepting the nomination for U. S. President on the Dixiecrat-State's Rights Party since the Democratic Party in the State is no longer a "franchised club" and colored persons are permitted to vote.

Afr 8-21-48

As a matter of fact, he had planned to write Governor Thurmond to explain his views.

Mr. Thurmond said he never had corresponded with the Governor but he kept close tab on him through the newspaper reports.

Mr. Thurmond stated that he believed that the Governor of South Carolina would be one of the more liberal leaders in that State if he "had his own way about things."

Anti-Truman Demo Elector Nominees Blast Governor

B'ham Ala

BY FRED TAYLOR
News Staff Writer

Alabama's political fronts were churned with campaigning Saturday as divided Democrats and Republicans slugged away at each other.

The state's slate of anti-Truman Democratic elector nominess blasted Gov. Folsom, who fired shots back at them as he took the stump again at Gadsden and Huntsville in behalf of the president and the "straight Democratic ticket."

"Neither the governor nor the courts are going to force us to vote for Truman," State Democratic Chairman Gessner T. McCorvey and the other 10 elector nominees, who are pledged to the States' Rights ticket of Thurmond and Wright, declared in a joint statement.

Alabama Republican Chairman Claude Vardaman, leading a GOP upsurge in this state, repeated his attacks on both the Truman-led National Democrats and the "Dixiecrat splinter party" at a Chilton County rally at the courthouse in Clanton.

Sat 10-30-48

AT MOBILE, State Sen. Joe Langan, pro-Truman spearhead, said Republicans offered a strong threat in Alabama and warned against last-minute efforts to split the Democratic vote. His warning was against an attempt to put out a write-in slate of Truman-pledged elector candidates, which had completely collapsed 24 hours earlier.

McCorvey and the other Democratic elector nominees denounced what they said was Gov. Folsom's "attempt to drive votes away from the Democratic ticket in Alabama."

They were referring to Folsom's stumping campaign for Truman, to his effort to proceed directly with the U. S. Supreme Court to force the electors to vote for the president and his announced intention of instituting like proceedings the next day after Tuesday's voting.

THE STATEMENT APPEALING to "every Democrat in Alabama to vote under the rooster," was signed by McCorvey, Tom Abernethy, Bob Albritton, Ed Blair, Ben Bloodworth, Walter Givhan, Tully Goodwin, Norman Harris, John Lusk, Walter Miller and Horace Wilkinson.

Statewide radio appeals were made Friday night by McCorvey and Marion Rushton, States' Rights campaign director, for Democrats to vote under the rooster.

Sat 10-30-48

Langan warned there is a "strong possibility that the Republicans will win Alabama." He advised that "rather than confuse the voters, it will be better not to have any write-ins at all."

"The way I see it," said the Mobile senator, "the Republicans will poll between 80,000 and 100,000 votes next Tuesday. The largest number of votes polled for a Democratic elector in last Spring's primary was 129,000. So, if there are any losses in Democratic strength there's a strong possibility the Republicans will win Alabama."

Folsom turned thumbs down on the write-in attempt, declaring that President Truman himself recently opposed such action.

* * *

BESIDES LANGAN, others proposed as write-in elector candidates were Neal Davis, Auburn; DeWitt Carmichael, Anniston; Mrs. Lucille Patterson, Enterprise; Mrs. Evelyn Hicks, Birmingham; Atty. Gen. Albert Carmichael; Jimmie Faulkner, Bay Minette; Rep. E. L. Roberts, Gadsden; W. W. Malone, Athens; William Mitch, Birmingham, and Bart Cowart, Haleyville.

Atty. Gen. Carmichael and Mrs. Patterson could not be reached for statements, but all the others, except Langan, said they had not authorized use of their names on the proposed slate.

Orrie W. Irwin, Republican nominee for Jefferson County tax assessor, announced he would speak in behalf of his candidacy at 6:10 p.m. Monday over WSGN.

THE 11TH-HOUR ATTEMPT by a Calhoun County group to project a slate of Truman write-in elector candidates quickly collapsed, as eight of 11 proposed candidates said they had not been consulted before hand and opposed the plan. Two others could not be reached for statements and only Sen. Langan, who subsequently condemned the plan, had said he was willing to run.

Sat 10-30-48

Langan said that any move to write in names of Truman electors in an independent column would "react to the benefit of Republicans." A leader of Truman forces, Langan has been urging the president's supporters to vote for the Democratic elector nominees, even though they are pledged to vote for the Thurmond-Wright ticket.

The Mobile senator has said he would join in bringing post-election proceedings in an attempt to force them to vote for Truman, however.

VARDAMAN DECLARED that "If you vote Republican on Nov. 2 at least you will know for whom you are voting. There is no split in the Republican Party."

"However," the GOP chairman said, "if you vote in the Democratic column you may be voting for Thurmond or you may be voting for Truman."

Pointing out that the courts might later direct the Democratic electors to vote for the National Democratic Party nominee, Vardaman asked: "Where will disgruntled Dixiecrat die-hards be then? The only solution to our problem is not a splinter party, but it is for the South to quit being modern Rip Van Winkles, wake up and build a much-needed two-party system in the South."

Chairman McCorvey and the other elector nominees said that, "Every citizen can rest assured that every ballot marked in the circle under the rooster will be counted for Thurmond and Wright for president and vice president."

Dixiecrat Unit Doesn't Exist, Folsom Claims

Suit Against Governor Possible If Election Of Electors Rejected

Montgomery Ala.

By G. C. LONG, JR.

Gov. Folsom declared last night there is no Dixiecrat or States' Rights Party in Alabama, adding: "This is the record in the Secretary of State's office."

He said in a prepared statement that a group did try to defeat "the Rooster" in 1928 and "some of these same leaders tried to shanghai the Rooster in 1948." He suggested that the group be called the "Shanghaicrats."

(The rooster is the emblem of the Democratic Party in Alabama.)

"Everything looks good to me," said the Governor. "The nation went Democratic and the President looks happy. Alabama went Democratic and I know I am happy. In fact, I ain't mad at nobody."

This statement came as speculation was increasing in political circles as to what might happen should Gov. Folsom refuse to proclaim the election of Alabama presidential electors, possibly bringing a suit against himself. Rumors persisted also that the Governor is seeking a conference with the President.

Gov. Folsom denied the latter, saying: "I have no post-election business at this time."

Harrington En Route

(An Associated Press dispatch from St. Paul, Minn., said last night that Stephen H. Harrington, of St. Paul, Democratic leader, is en route to Montgomery to confer with Gov. Folsom. One of Harrington's close associates, who declined use of his name, said Folsom and Harrington, national secretary of the Truman-Barkley Club, will discuss the relationship of the States' Rights Democrats and the "regular" Democrats. Harrington, a close friend of Folsom, was prominent in Democratic circles in the South before he went to St. Paul from Memphis, Tenn.

(The article said that Folsom had sent a plane for Harrington's trip.)

Fri 11-12-48

Gov. Folsom hinted at refusing to proclaim the election of Alabama's 11 electors at the time he filed a suit in federal court here to force them to support President Truman instead of Gov. J. Strom Thurmond, to whom they are pledged. Thurmond was States' Rights candidate for president.

Such a course—if followed—some observers say, might bring another suit, this time against Folsom. The electors, who received an overwhelming majority on Nov. 2, could initiate court action to compel the governor to follow the law and declare them elected, it is claimed.

According to Alabama law, Section 224, Title 17, Code of Alabama, 1940, the following action must be taken:

"Within 15 days after the time for making the returns the governor, in the presence of the secretary of state and attorney general, or either of them, in the absence of the other, must estimate the returns, ascertain who are elected, and notify them by proclamation."

Fri 11-12-48

In his suit in federal court here the governor pointed out that section of law, but went on to explain in his petition:

"Under the provisions of said statute, it would become the duty of the plaintiff (Folsom is the plaintiff) to proclaim the defendants (the 11 electors) elected at said election but as set out above it is likewise the plaintiff's duty to enforce the constitution and laws of the United States and of the State of Alabama and plaintiff should not be required to perform any act or proclaim the results of any election, if the effects of the same would be to work a fraud upon the voters of the State of Alabama."

The suit contends that Alabama's electors are bound to vote for Truman because of a 1945 legislative act that says electors shall vote for the nominees of the national parties.

However, an advisory opinion by the Alabama Supreme Court, requested by Folsom, declares the law to be unconstitutional. Because it is an advisory opinion, the law still is on the statute books and the governor therefore contends the electors are bound to vote for Truman.

The governor would not comment on what action he might take in proclaiming the election of the electors but a source close to him said he might seek a clarifying opinion from either the attorney general or the State Supreme Court.

If the chief executive decided to take such, the course of not proclaiming the electors elected, he might run into a suit himself.

Such a suit could be in the form of a mandamus to compel the governor to issue the election proclamation or a mandatory writ of injunction commanding him to issue the proclamation.

According to law counties had to canvass their returns at noon Nov. 5. County election supervisors then had five days from that date to certify their returns to the secretary of state.

Must Make Canvass

Then, 15 days following the certification of the returns to the secretary of state, the governor, with the secretary of state and-or the attorney general, must make the canvass.

It could be the latter part of November before the electors are officially elected—unless Folsom thinks such action might "work a fraud" on the voters of Alabama.

Fri 11-12-48

Meanwhile, the number of court suits against Alabama's electors increased to six. A petition was filed Thursday in Colbert Circuit Court against Walter Miller, Tuscumbia, one of the electors, to compel him to vote for Truman instead of Thurmond, and in Dallas County against Rep. Walter C. Givhan, Safford.

The suit was filed by Otis H. McRight, Tuscumbia, former ABC administrator, and former member of the ABC board, and against Givhan by Robert Thrasher, unidentified.

Similar actions were taken Wednesday in Birmingham against all 11 electors; in Decatur, against Rep. Norman Harris and Ben Bloodworth, and in Mobile against Gessner T. McCorvey, chairman of the State Democratic Executive Committee.

Other suits are still to come, said State Senator Broughton Lamberth, chairman of the Pro-Truman Rally held here Nov. 1.

Lamberth said individual petitions would be presented in court against each of the electors

The Dixiecrats Ignore the Facts

Fri 8-20-48
Atlanta, Ga.

We could start this off kind of fancy. We could say—

Change is a river, endlessly flowing. History is a book that floats down that river and in it the moving finger ceaselessly writes.

It has written that the walls of Boss Crump's Jericho fell down. It has written that 30,000 Negroes voted in South Carolina, which was the State most furiously busy two years ago erecting barriers against their voting.

And it writes of the Dixiecrats—who were met by the oil milions at Houston, and were guests of the oil money at a Belshazzar's feast where none looked to see the writing on the wall. . . .

It writes a message to a South, just now struggling up out of the chaos of defeat and the economic quicksands left by a war fought almost 100 years ago. And the message asks if we will allow the Dixiecrat patriots as they modestly term themselves, to set us back another 50 years?

Price If they are to lead us, and we are to follow, in a headon charge against the walls of sure defeat, then let us be sure we understand the price.

Let us understand, too, that in South Carolina Sens. Maybank and Johnson have not joined the Dixiecrats; that in Texas there is firmness in the face of political blackmail, that in Alabama there is determined resistance; that even in Mississippi there are Cassandras crying the truth. The Georgians have not gone in, nor the Texans, Tennesseeans, or North Carolinians.

So, if we are ready, let us shell down some more corn about us here in the South.

Recapture South Carolina's Thurmond believes he will get more electoral college votes than Truman. He may. If he does it will be almost entirely meaningless since he can get them only in those States where the machinery of voting is in the hands of his supporters and there is difficulty or intimidation, or both, in the way of those who seek to support the party or vote Republican.

Fri 8-20-48

These gentlemen, and many who sincerely and out of genuine fear or concern, have been drawn into the Dixiecrat fourth party movement, speak wistfully of the Dixiecrats bringing pressure on the Northern wing of the party and thereby decreasing the influence of the labor and city groups in the Eastern and Western cities. They say they will then be able to "recapture" the party. This is a political opium dream.

The gentlemen can destroy the party. They can no more "recapture" it than they can refight the battle of Gettysburg.

They ignore the facts of their own political life.

Facts The Democratic Party has never in its history won a national election except as a liberal, militant party fighting for human rights and against special privelege. Have the gentlemen forgot Jackson and the fight against the entrenched Bank of the United States? Have they forgotten that Cleveland was elected out of protest against the greed and corruption of the special privilege groups so long in power? Have they forgotten why Woodrow Wilson won and on what national crisis Franklin D. Roosevelt came to power for so many years?

It is folly to think that the most archly conservative elements of the Southern party can form a fourth party and "recapture" the National Democratic Party. The facts are it was lost long ago. When these gentlemen speak of "recapturing" the party let them recall that the Southern electoral votes were not needed to elect Franklin D. Roosvelt in any one of the four elections. They can't recapture something they didn't have.

It is necessary to shell down this corn because the Dixiecrats are damning the cause of legitimate States' rights?

Meaning Everyone knows what Mississippi's Gov. Fielding Wright means when he speaks of States' rights. Everyone knows that When Gov. Thurmond, for all his integrity, speaks of Democracy he doesn't mean popular government and a ballot open to all qualified voters. Let us examine the Mississippi Dixiecrats, for example. They control their State machine. They can do about as they please. They feel they can, thus secure, assert their will. Some of the same feeling seems to exist in Alabama.

Fri 8-20-48

This is a pipe dream. They can never gain committee chairmanships, patronage and other factors in political party strength, unless they are a part of a winning national party.

If they "recaptured," as they say, the Democratic Party, they would never win because, as the Republicans have found out, they cannot build a victorious national party without protecting the interests of the city voters in the North (and the South, too, has cities), as well as protecting the legitimate regional interests.

Tide The tide of change which makes itself felt in the South in growing industrialization, migration of population, and change from cotton to many crops built on machines, is not going to be damned up by the Dixiecrats for more than a second or so, by the cosmic watch. The electorate already is expanded by many new votes, white and colored in Georgia. It is expanded by at least 30,000 Negro votes in South Carolina and other States.

There is such a thing as States' rights. They are important. What we do about them will determine what happens to local government. It will determine whether we move more swiftly toward more bureaucracy.

But no State can protest effectively save in Congress. It will be Congress which will have to pass, or reject the legislation. It will be the Supreme Court which will decide where, between the Tenth Amendment and the Fourteenth Amendment, States' rights are to be defined. The Dixiecrats are trying to destroy the South's Senators and Congressmen—the South's only chance

All the Dixiecrats are doing is dividing the region psychoticly. The issue of States' rights is vital and real. The Dixiecrats' definition of States' rights is largely hypocritical.

When the South Goes to Washington!

Atlanta Constitution
Atlanta Georgia
Sun-11-21-48

With the Dixiecrat movement labeled "failure" and with few sincere mourners about its bier, the South obviously owes to its future an obligation to work out a constructive policy or plan.

Southern Congressmen and Senators can go back to Washington in January with the old, bitter and belligerent attitude of resisting any and everything, or they can go back with a plan of action.

It is rather obvious now that if the return is one of chip-on-shoulder and a resolve to filibuster every proposal in the field of civil rights, the majority will destroy the rule of unlimited debate. Once that is gone, much more than the civil rights fight will be gone. Forever.

Plan Compromise is the essence of our form of government. We progress only by compromise. Our entire national life, from the time of the proclaiming of liberty and the rights of man, on through the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, which almost failed of adoption, has been one of compromise.

Obviously, if two contending forces merely lock horns and struggle over an issue, one of two things will happen: Both will fall exhausted with nothing accomplished toward resolving the issue. Or, the stronger will triumph and the merit of the opposition's position will be lost, the radical measure predominating. This, for example, will happen if debate is limited through irritation with filibuster.

Procedures There is actually but one of the so-called civil rights measures which involves civil rights. This one is the antilynching legislation. A citizen certainly has the right to be protected against lynchings so that the orderly processes of law may apply to him and his case.

There isn't much doubt that antilynch legislation is unconstitutional. But there also is no doubt at all that the nation is out of patience with those counties which fail vigorously to prosecute cases of lynching. It has been suggested that a Federal law which specifically stated it would not apply to States which authorize its highest enforcement officer to prosecute persons charged with participation in lynchings and which also transfer the trials to a county not involved in the lynching, would be constitutional.

There could be no valid objection to such a law. It would leave the States as sovereign in the matter. It would do something all States should have done themselves—assure vigorous prosecution in a county not connected with the lynching. Local juries have often refused to convict even when the evidence was there.

Poll Tax Repeal of the poll tax laws is being hurried, anyhow. Arkansas has just voted to allow that State to substitute a registration system for the poll tax requirement. Tennessee is favorable to repeal. A constitutional amendment, for submission to the States, certainly would not be in the least objectionable. It would end the poll tax without any objectionable "force" or "Federal" actions. Sun-11-21-48

Segregation Here the Southern representatives must frankly admit that the Supreme Court has ruled in the matter of interstate travel and agree that the decisions of the Supreme Court must be enforced. This can be done without in the least abandoning support of the segregation in local transportation, in schools and so on, which are the features of segregation the South insists most on retaining.

FEPC We certainly must resist any suggestion of Federal police powers attached to an employment bill. A "force" bill was proposed, but due to the emotions aroused and the distortion of it, the public lost sight of the fact that even Senators Robert Taft and Joe Ball were against it. It never had a chance, anyhow.

All President Truman ever proposed was "a bill for fair employment practices."

During the war the best work of the FEPC was in the field of negotiation and conciliation. Time after time it worked out solutions satisfactory to all concerned. A bill setting up a committee in the Department of Labor to conciliate, negotiate and recommend, along the lines of the Federal Conciliation Service, certainly would not be objectionable.

If the South can go to Washington with a plan along these ideas it can be worked out and we will be wondering—when it is done—why we ever got so excited about it. Sun-11-21-48

To go back to Washington blindly determined on a negative, unreasoning opposition would, in my opinion, be to betray the South.

Southern Party Maps Plans to Sweep Dixie

Los Angeles Examiner
Los Angeles, Calif.
Mon 7-19-48

By John R. Henry
Staff Correspondent International News Service

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., July 18.—Governor J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina disclosed today that the new Jeffersonian Democratic Party plans an active campaign to elect him President.

The 45-year-old war hero, who was indorsed by the initial party meeting at Birmingham yesterday, made it clear that he intends to launch a vigorous speaking tour in the "not distant future."

Thurmond conferred with his running mate, Mississippi's Governor Fielding L. Wright, and said the campaign would be carried directly to the voters.

Governor Wright said that he and Thurmond would confer "at an early date" to work out details of their battle against the Democratic and Republican nominees.

7-19-48

TEXAS MOVE——

Both made it clear that their ultimate goal is to corral the solid electoral vote of the Southern States and possibly additional support from outside Dixie.

7-19-48

A Texas group attending the birth of the Jeffersonian Party launched immediate plans for action. In a caucus last night, the Texans decided:

To plead with the delegates to the Lone Star State's September Democratic convention that they instruct Texas electors to support the Thurmond-Wright ticket.

Mon. 7-14-48

2. Possibly to urge that a statewide Democratic referendum be held on August 28 to give the voters a chance to express their support of the Jeffersonian Party.

A Communication

Wash. Post

Sat 10-9-48

Because the leading daily newspapers published in South Carolina have failed to fairly state the facts as to the political situation in this State concerning the 1948 election, and because there is no hope that such newspapers will change their attitude as to this matter prior to November 2, I deem it proper that the record should be kept straight.

The simple truth is that so far as Governor Thurmond is concerned, he never exhibited the slightest interest in State's rights until the majority in the Democratic Convention in Philadelphia adopted an attitude toward the representatives from the Southern States, of which he was one, similar to that which these representatives have been displaying toward minority groups in these same States for many years.

Wash. D.C.

The first action along this line was when the Legislature of South Carolina repealed all statutes which dealt with primary elections, and this notwithstanding the fact that the constitution of this State has a provision specifically commanding the General Assembly to pass laws for the regulation of primary elections. This repealing of these statutes was done only after the United States Supreme Court had ruled that Negroes having the general qualifications for suffrage as prescribed by the laws of South Carolina could not be denied the right to participate in such primary elections.

THE SECOND action was when—with deliberate purpose to evade and circumvent the laws of South Carolina as set forth in the constitution and statutes of said State—the May, 1948, Democratic convention set up in the "Voting Rules and Party Principles," the requirements that to be eligible to read and write the constitution, but also be able to interpret that instrument.

Also, that such persons were required to state under oath an understanding of, belief in and commitment to support "the principles of the Democratic Party of South Carolina," as well as the belief in and support of "the social, religious and educational separation of the races."

Sat 10-9-48

Although the distinguished gentleman who now heads the States' Rights ticket held the office of superintendent of education for Edgefield County, senator from the same county and circuit judge in addition to that of Governor of the State, he is not on record as ever having at any time, even by way of suggestion, tried to obtain for any member of the Negro race of this State the enjoyment of the right to act as a juror

The distinguished candidate certainly cannot plead ignorance of the fact that there are many Negroes in this State who are fully qualified in all respects to be jurors, and this under the laws of South Carolina.

If he is so sincerely committed to the idea that the rights of the State should be enforced, does it not seem reasonable that in the hundreds of instances in which he charged grand juries throughout the State when he was on the bench he would have pointed out this great wrong which was being done to a minority group of citizens?

∾

AGAIN, it does not seem out of place to point out that when the members of the General Assembly of South Carolina made an illegal raid on the public treasury and undertook to pay themselves a much larger sum than the plain letter of the contract provided they should receive, this same alleged preserver of the State's rights approved the Act, thereby becoming party to the rape of the State's Constitution.

Sat 10-9-48

And again, according to widely published statements in the South Carolina press, certain members of the courts of South Carolina on the Supreme and Circuit Benches have been paid and have retained large sums of money to which they are not legally entitled according to the plain letter of the constitutional contract under which they have been employed. But this same alleged defender of the State's rights has not lifted a finger or said one word by way of preserving the integrity of this most essential State's right!

∾

CERTAINLY it is true that the growth of centralized government in these United States is a grave and menacing danger to the people. Certainly it is true that our people should be instructed to the effect that "the citizen should lean on his State for nothing that his own arm can do; on his Nation for nothing that his State can do, that his home is his castle and that his sovereignty rests beneath his own hat." But the cry, "State's rights! State's rights!" should carry no conviction to the hearts of men who are sincerely committed to that system of government when such cries are made through the lips of men who have kept those lips closed until because of their illegal and unconstitutional acts the Federal courts have been compelled to declare that they have taken themselves outside of all law, both State and national. There is an old saying, but a true one, "What you do speaks so loud I cannot hear what you say."

IT IS the sincere hope of the writer that no intelligent citizen in any of the States will suffer himself or herself to be mislead into believing that any good can come to any part of this Nation through the activities of this States Rights Party.

Sting Of Philadelphia Soothed; Every Line, Every Act Cheered

BY VIRGINIA VAN DER VEER
News Staff Writer

All the pent-up fever of a giant, boisterous revival meeting was loosed in Municipal Auditorium yesterday.

7-18-48

The crowd filled the 6,000-seat hall to its top rafters, jammed the aisles and swung their legs over the balcony rails.

Outdoors, loudspeakers carried the speeches, horns and rebel yells to a few hundred in shirt sleeves who munched popsicles as they listened.

* * *

Orators Have Field Day

IT WAS A RESPONSIVE, excited, sometimes hysterical crowd—and the convention orators made the most of it.

The magic names were Robert E. Lee and Jefferson Davis. They never failed to bring swelling roars from the audience.

The rat-tat-tat of "Dixie," played by a swing band, raised the people screaming to their feet.

The phrasemakers talked over and over about "the dagger in the back of the South." Recognizing its cue, the crowd yelled back with one, vast voice.

The swaying, state standards, Confederate banners, gyrating paraders, all bathed in the unreal lights of newsreel cameras, made a fantastic scene.

* * *

Throw That Commie Out'

EVERYBODY WAS A DELEGATE. Anybody who felt the spirit move him paraded.

It was a crowd to soothe the ruffled feelings of the men who had been booed and laughed at in Philadelphia. With a single exception, it violently approved every word the orators said.

The audience came closest to mob hysteria when a lone man spoke up in some sort of protest, nobody knew quite what.

"Throw that Communist out," the people screamed. A crowd quickly collected around the objector, who turned out to be Brig. Gen. Herbert C. Holdridge, of Washington, D. C., a retired Army officer and self-styled candidate for president.

Surrounded by yelling, angry men, Holdridge gratefully accepted police escort to an auditorium office where he was almost instantly forgotten in the excitement.

* * *

Everybody Turns Out

THE PEOPLE, THEIR radio memories of Philadelphia still vivid, seemed eager to take part in a convention of their own.

Radio broadcasts in the morning brought the curious, the sympathizers, the excitable streaming into the afternoon meeting.

They craned forward with feverish interest to see for the first time the two men they had just screamed into nomination for the presidency and vice-presidency.

If Gov. Strom Thurmond and Gov. Fielding Wright looked a little less than enthusiastic, it did not dim the crowd's ardor.

They Knew Their Cues

TUTORED BY NEWSREELS and pictures from Philadelphia, men and women grabbed state standards at the strategic moments and snake-danced through the aisles and across the stage.

A 77-year-old woman, who said everybody knew her as the "Wool Hat Woman of Georgia" but her real name was Mrs. Beulah Waller, jigged on the stage and the crowd yelled "Wool Hat Woman!"

The Kenutcky standard in the Thurmond parade was carried by a woman from Paducah who has lived in Birmingham the past two years.

The "Others" sign was in the hands of a Birmingham college boy.

An Alabamian held the "North Carolina" standard aloft. "Somebody's got to carry it," he yelled.

* * *

Ole Miss Boys Cut Up

THE 55 BOYS FROM "Ole Miss" University were the convention's noisiest demonstrators. "To hell with Truman, to hell with Truman," they chanted.

A young boy from Charlottesville waved the "Virginia" standard. He said he was self-appointed.

Texas' banner was in the hands of a woman who said her father had been a Philadelphia delegate and she had come to meet him.

* * *

Never Any Opposition

THE "DELEGATES" COOPERATED with vehemence. Resolutions were read from the stage. Chairman Walter Sellers moved that they be adopted.

"Is there any discussion?" he asked. There never was.

"All in favor?" asked the chairman. The crowd roared.

"All opposed?" Nobody. The resolution passed.

The people laughed a bit self-consciously—but it was fun to pass resolutions.

FREE SANDWICHES and cold drinks were passed to the large press corps by a boy wearing a sign: "Courtesy of the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce."

In answer, evidently, to many questions, the word "Free" had been lettered into the sign.

Gov. Warren For State's Rights

Thur. 7-30-48

Atlanta Ga

I take it that there is a meeting of minds between Gov. Thomas Dewey and Gov. Earl Warren. A person as thorough as the Governor of New York would not have it otherwise.

Therefore, it seemed to me that at least all the Southern newspapers should have pulled out the stops and given an 80 or 90-point spread to the utterances of the Californian who has the No. 2 spot in the Republican campaign. Yet, I find that all of us more or less overlooked it.

And that is a pity, too, because he was promising something that has the South in a hysterical political condition which has already led it to decisions which, in the light of a more sober day, will seem incredible.

States' Rights There is a high ground of discussion for States' rights. The citizen must give thought to just how far he wants the Federal Government to go in regulating his personal and State affairs.

The great and awful pity of it is that the issue in the South should have been made a racial one. Strom Thurmond may dispute it all he pleases, and he may personally stand upon sincere ground, but his organization is anti-Negro and its front of States' rights has behind it every demagogue and every interest in the South that is committed to States' wrongs and the status quo. That such an organization should carry a few Southern States, might even carry Georgia, is an illustration of the depth of our political hysteria.

Therefore, the speech by Earl Warren was tremendously important. It was a speech on States' rights. It was pitched on a high level, recognizing, as the Southern revolt hypocritically refuses to do, that it is the Congress and the Supreme Court which will determine the issue of States' rights.

Warren Gov. Warren, asserting the 48 States were perfectly able to solve their own problems, spoke in behalf of decentralization to an audience at Springfield, Mass.

"It is neither necessary nor desirable for the national Government to depart from the spirit of the old town meeting of New England," the Californian said. "It is just as necessary now as it ever was to keep government close to the people."

"Every problem that can possibly be solved locally should be solved on the local level," he continued. "Every problem which can be solved in whole or in part through State Government should be attacked in State Government. Even when the Federal Government must participate, it should do so with the aid of our State Governments.

Thur. 7-30-48

"Unfortunately, the people of America have been propagandized to the effect that every program designed to improve their lot must be administered from Washington under the jealous, watchful eye of a paternal Federal Government. There is no magic in Washington."

That is a most significant and important statement. It attacks the problem on a high level, and not on a sordid one, as does the leadership now behind the Southern fourth party.

South There is a very real chance that if Gov. Dewey, in his North Carolina speech, and Gov. Warren, in a speech which may be delivered in Georgia and which will be given in the South, should repeat these sentiments in so many words they might carry deep South States such as Georgia.

The Dixiecrats ought, in service to the South, withdraw their ticket. But if they are to remain in, then the anti-Truman votes may be so divided between them that enough Southerners who believe strongly in the two-party system will go to the Dewey ticket, on the basis of its States' rights pledge, and give him an edge.

At any rate, we welcome Gov. Warren's statesmanlike position on States' rights—concerning which we long have taken the Warren position. The States' right party, which is supported by every Ku Klux Klan and every associated prejudice in the South, is the South's spokesman for States' rights. That this should be so is tragic.

Let Warren and Dewey come South with their message. There are more and more people who want to hear it.

Let's Shell Down A Little Corn

The Constitution

Thur 8-12-48

Atlanta Ga

"Can you put down this States' rights issue in first grade reader fashion?" the letter asked.

I can try.

When the Constitution of the United States was completed and adopted—after a very hard fight since there was much opposition to it—those who had found it lacking in certain essentials, submitted 10 amendments. They are called our Bill of Rights. It is in these amendments that we find all our protection of free speech, rights of assembly, freedom of worship and so on.

The tenth amendment says that those rights which are not specifically granted to the Federal Government, and not prohibited to the States, are reserved to the States or the people.

It was this amendment some of the Democratic speakers asked the recent convention at Philadelphia to reaffirm in the platform.

Rights There is loose on the South an organization calling itself Dixiecrats. It met at Birmingham. Gerald L. K. Smith, who was invited there, said he was invited there by the three men who were paying the bills. Why are the three men paying the bills and what do they want? One may be sure they are not paying them for States' rights. Nevertheless, it had a right to meet and organize. It has attracted some sincere persons.

It is against Harry Truman, our President. So are a lot of other persons. That, too, is quite all right and proper.

But what is not right or proper is for these people who are against Truman to put about their organization the cloak of States' rights. And it is hypocritical of them to say they are fighting solely for States' rights. They know that States' rights are—and can only be—a matter of Constitutional law, and that Harry Truman is but indirectly involved.

We here on this newspaper have long been against the centralization of Federal power. We join with all others in being for States' rights. We have fought for them all our life.

Rights But they will be determined in Congress, which will or will not pass legislation canceling out States' rights, and, finally, by the Supreme Court, which must determine if the acts of Congress are legal, or Constitutional. The Truman fight is another fight. Both he and the Republicans have declared for certain civil rights which many think—including us—violate the Constitution. But beating Truman won't have any more to do with that than beating the Ordinary or the Sheriff in your home town. The Congress and the Supreme Court are the only arenas where States' rights will be involved.

Wrongs Now, let's shell down a little corn. The truth of it is that a good two-thirds of those who are squalling so loud about States' rights are interested in States' rights only so long as it permits them to maintain States' wrongs.

We—the South—are in bad with public opinion in the East and West, and with some of our own people, because we have had States' rights all these years and have not removed abuses and discriminations. The Negro is the chief controversial figure, although on other regions the Japanese and Mexicans are involved.

Because we have not lived up to our own laws which require us to maintain separate but equal schools and travel accommodations; and because we have not given equal protection of the law, we—the South—are under fire and the whole cause of States' rights is jeopardized by the "States' wrongs" crowd among us.

The South is not going to abandon segregation. It exists almost as absolutely in other regions. But the Federal Government is going to require the South to live up to its own laws as to schools, travel and the courts. It ought to do that. The bitter truth is, we ought to have done it. If we had we would not now be in trouble.

Losses No thoughtful Southerner can read the latest reports of the Census Bureau and not be worried. The South continues to lose population. It will lose more as farm machinery becomes more obtainable. Our cities are growing, even in States with a net loss in population. Our rural populations are shrinking much faster than we think. The South is progressing. Yes. But our share of progress is not as great as that of other regions. Our share of the progress will increase only if we have the labor supply and the skills, and only if we can attract industries to use those skills.

Thur 8-12-48

As the greatest population migration in history shakes the nation, let us shell down some more corn.

As long as roughly one-third of our population is held to menial, unskilled jobs, we will never attain the progress or the income of the rest of the nation. It just is not possible. This is a fact not possible to deny or avoid.

This does not imply social equality, mixing of the races, or anything else. It emphatically does mean that if we are to raise the South's income and purchasing power to that of the rest of the nation we cannot avoid giving the Negro economic opportunity and equal, if separate, treatment in education, and in justice.

We who believe in States' rights as a protection of the well-springs of democracy—local self government—cannot afford to allow the Dixiecrats and the groups peddling hate and discrimination to destroy our chances to retain States' rights and local government, by accepting the practice of State wrongs carried out under the protection of States' rights, until an aroused nation and outraged justice really does come forward with forceful measures.

Let us be sure who are our patriotic and loyal Southerners.

Extend That Purge

Daily World

Sun 11-14-48

Atlanta Ga

We regret that we cannot share the views of those who would limit the purge among the Dixiecrats to only the two top leaders: Governor J. Strom Thurmond and Governor Fielding Wright. Purge them, yes by all means. But let's do more than that. Let's extend the purge to include all of the leaders, party spokesmen, campaign managers, and all lesser lights, down to the precinct workers in every state.

This is no time to be wasting our sympathy on recalcitrants within the Democratic Party. Either they should be made to abide by the party rules and regulations and therefore support its program, or they should be banished once and for all before it is too late. Now is the time to teach them that object-lesson which they threatened and tried to teach to President Truman, even at the peril of wrecking the Democratic Party.

And make no mistake about it, the Dixiecrat spirit is not dead. To prove it witness the testimony of one of its spokesmen in Alabama'

"We may be temporarily defeated, but we are not going to give up. If we could have gotten a few other southern states to go along with us, we would have had the balance of power. We are going to work toward that four years from now."

Stop the Dixiecrats now by purging them for they are much more dangerous than most of us imagine.

The "Colored" Dixiecrats

(From The Lighthouse And Informer)

Atlanta Daily World
Thur. 11-4-48
Atlanta, Ga.

By U. S. Census count there are approximately 383,000 colored adults in South Carolina, each of whom, excepting a possible negligible number, could obtain a registration certificate and where necessary meet poll tax qualifications.

It is estimated that of this number, about 60,000 were qualified to vote in last Tuesday's election, for about 16 per cent of the possible voters. And this 60,000 include those who had registered between Jan. 1, 1938 and Oct. 2, 1948.

The November 2 election is now history. If its choice for the presidency is what the South Carolinians wanted, then the 16 per cent had to carry the duties of the 84 per cent that didn't vote, as well as their own. If the choice is not that the South Carolinians would have preferred, then the 84 per cent, so far as this State is concerned, are largely to blame.

There are few Negroes in South Carolina who consider it an honor to be associated with the "Dixiecrats." Unfortunately, the record indicates that most of the Negroes in South Carolina are Dixiecrats. The non-voting Negro is as great an ally of Dixiecrats as can be found. If a Negro sits quietly by and gives this diabolical element a free hand with which to slap around all our rights, he is a "friend" of the Dixiecrats, a helper, an ally and must be considered an active agent against himself.

Can They Stop the Dixiecrats?

The Constitution
Fri 9-10-48
Atlanta, Ga.

WASHINGTON—The sudden burst of aggressiveness against the Dixiecrats by the regular Democratic managers is plain evidence that they have given up hope of winning back these rebels by peaceful persuasion.

Indeed it appears that the only hope of holding the normally Democratic solid South even appreciably intact now rests on the chance that Federal courts, manned mostly by Presidents Truman and Roosevelt, will manage somehow to thwart the Dixiecrat plans.

The Supreme Court of Alabama and a lesser State court in Florida already have affirmed the right of Democratic electors to vote for or against President Truman as they please. Steps are being taken, however, to appeal these decisions to the Federal courts in the hope that the U. S. Supreme Court, before the electoral college meets, will establish the dictum that presidential electors, however named or instructed, must vote for the national nominees of their party.

548

Bolters In a like situation within the Republican Party back in 1912 the aggrieved candidate, President William H. Taft, himself later Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, decided against carrying the case to court. In that instance Republican electors in two States—California and South Dakota—bolted to the Progressive Party nominee, Theodore Roosevelt. President Taft was credited with no votes at all in South Dakota and he received only 3,914 write-ins in California compared with 283,610 for Roosevelt and 283,436 for Woodrow Wilson, the successful Democratic nominee in the nation.

Besides challenging the anti-Truman electoral lists, Democratic Committee lawyers are searching for legal means of barring the Dixiecrat ticket of Thurmond and Wright from the ballot in Virginia, Tennessee, North Carolina and Texas.

Subject to change by court action, the Southern situation at present shapes up as follows:

The Dixiecrats have full possession of the Democratic column in Alabama, Mississippi and South Carolina, and four Democratic electors in Florida—just half the State's total representation—have announced their support of Thurmond and Wright.

Fri 9-10-48

There is talk in Florida of a special session of the Legislature to solidify the Democratic electors either for or against President Truman, but the indications are that, in Alabama, Mississippi and South Carolina, if Truman gets on the ballot at all it will have to be outside the regular Democratic column.

Georgia Everything in Georgia has been in abeyance awaiting the primary. If Gov. Thompson had been nominated, the regular Democratic electors were assured for President Truman. And although Herman Talmadge, the victor, is bitterly against Truman, there is doubt whether he will go so far as to attempt to bar him from the regular Democratic column.

In Texas, Truman seems assured of the regular Democratic setting, with a slate of Thurmond and Wright electors entered against him, and this same situation is probable in Louisiana and Arkansas.

Atlanta Ga.

Two polls recently taken in Florida have given the Republicans great hope of carrying that State. One of these, by the John N. Perry chain of newspapers, embraced 16 Florida counties, selected as typical of the whole State. It found 35.03 percent of the voters for Dewey, 34.75 percent for Thurmond, 28.1 percent for Truman and 2.12 percent for Wallace.

Another poll—of schoolteachers in Lee County, Florida—resulted as follows: Dewey 303, Thurmond 226, Truman 109.

Republicans are confident of carrying Virginia, North Carolina and Tennessee, whether or not the Thurmond ticket is on the ballot. Indeed, some of the Republican managers feel that they will have a better chance in these three States if the battle is confined to Dewey, Truman and Wallace. The contention in support of this theory is that the States' rights Democrats are mad enough to vote even for a Republican if they have no other way to express their disgruntlement against President Truman.

'Her Mouth Is Smoother Than Oil'

The Constitution
Sun 9-19-48
Atlanta, Ga.

Down in Florida a gentleman who must possess a shallow brain pan, is writing that opposition to the kept Dixiecrats is Communistic.

Well, there isn't any Communism in it on either side, but if the gentleman wishes to play that way I can convince him the Communists are very happy indeed that the Dixiecrats have come into the picture.

The Communists want to break up the two-party system.

Never forget that the two-party system is the backbone of the American way of government and life. If it ever gets broken down, as the Wallace party and the Dixiecrats are trying to break it down, our system of checks and balances of a majority and minor party in Congress will go with it. (Go look at France.)

There is no Communism in it, the Dixiecrat controversy, but the Communists are made happy by another effort in addition to their own with Henry Wallace, which has as its objective the smashing of the Democratic Party.

Decision Georgia's committee will meet late this month. It isn't really very important, except to those politically involved, what Georgia does.

I hope the committee will have the wisdom to keep Georgia independent and out of the well-kept Dixiecrat organization. Georgia acted with independent courage at Philadelphia. Georgia can act with independent courage again. To throw in with the dubious crowd behind the Dixiecrats will be of little value in the years ahead. And of even less today.

The electoral votes don't have to be cast until well after the November election They don't have to be cast "for" anyone. To cast them for the Dixiecrat candidates is to bolt the party. To withhold them and not cast them at all would have the same effect of withholding them from Harry Truman, if that is the desire. Let Georgia's electors be independent.

Nowhere on the horizon is there any reason for haste.

Future If Georgia's Herman Talmadge is to run for the Senate in 1950, as all indications have it, he will be running for the office to which Tom Watson came back after a quarter of a century of bitterness outside the party, to rejoin the party and win in 1920.

If the Democratic Party of Georgia can find a way to withhold its votes from Harry Truman and still stay in the party, history demonstrates that would be the wiser choice. That way can be found by simply withholding them when the electors are called to meet.

There are a lot of people who want to break up, for a generation or more, the Democratic Party. The Dixiecrats are the present front for that attempt to destroy the two-party system.

Sun 9-19-48

Republicans For the many citizens who wish to punish the Democratic Party, there is a simple solution. That is to vote for the Republicans.

There will be a Republican Party in Georgia, and the South, within the next four years. There always have been Republican voters in the South.

In the 11 Southern States, in the 1944 campaign, Tom Dewey got 26 percent of the total vote. Tom Dewey got 18 percent of the total vote in Georgia in that 1944 campaign.

In Virginia, Tennessee, North Carolina and Florida, Gov. Dewey got about 31 percent of the vote in 1944.

That is why this year finds the Republicans concentrating efforts in North Carolina, Virginia, Florida and Tennessee. But they are trying all over the South. It is very likely, for example, that Gov. Earl Warren will visit Georgia for a speech.

Sun 9-19-48

The Year This is a fine year for all those who want to quit the Democratic Party to go over to the Republicans. Within a very few years there will be a full Republican ticket in about half the 11 Southern States, including Georgia. Harry Truman won't be around then. The issues will. It will require a vital two-party system to deal with them—not one strong Republican Party and three or four splinter parties.

Let all Democrats who wish to stay with the party think twice. The Dixiecrats have lots of money and lots of promises. They are talking of democracy, and refusing it in those States where they control. They have decked out a perfumed political bed.

Proverbs has a good verse for them:

"She is loud and stubborn; her feet abide not in her house . . . the lips of a strange woman drop as an honeycomb, and her mouth is smoother than oil. . . ."

The Democrats will do well to avoid the strange woman, smooth with oil. Votes can be withheld from Truman without breaking up the two-party system.

Truman and the Dixiecrats: Purge Or Not Purge?

Courier Journal
Louisville Kentucky
Sun-12-19-48

WHAT should happen to the Dixiecrats in Congress? Americans for Democratic Action, a fighting liberal organization, demands that the Dixiecrats be purged from the Democratic Party caucuses in both Senate and House. This would strip them of the important committee assignments several of them would normally inherit by the rule of seniority. It would appear to be the course of strict justice. There is no good reason why men who renounced the Democratic Party last summer and fall should expect to pick its choicest plums in January.

Yet other considerations must be weighed in addition to cold justice. It is not too easy to hedge off a little group in Congress and label them "Dixiecrats." Of course there were some members who were particularly loud and ugly in their denunciations of President TRUMAN on the civil rights issue, particularly truculent about supporting the States Rights Party. But there were many other borderline cases. Even such comparatively liberal Southerners as Senators HILL and SPARKMAN of Alabama felt compelled to give TRUMAN'S campaign the cold shoulder in deference to sentiment in their home State. A very large portion of the Southern delegation in Congress is at least touched with the Dixiecrat tar-brush. Sun-12-19-48

That is the reason why a purge would have to be handled with extreme care. If the President should decide to repudiate the out-and-out Dixiecrats, he might work from the minimum list suggested by JOSEPH and STEWART ALSOP: EASTLAND of Mississippi in the Senate; in the House, COX, DAVIS, RIVERS, BATTLE, HOBBS, BOYKIN, RANKIN and WILLIAMS. But he would have to make sure that such a punitive gesture would not alienate the whole Southern group of Democrats. The Deep South holds 88 seats in the House, 18 in the Senate. If extreme action from the White House should drive this whole group out of the fold, they could go over to the Republicans and organize Congress. A full combination of Republicans and Southern Democrats would hold a 259-to-175 majority in the House, a 60-to-36 lead in the Senate. Sun-12-19-48

That is the President's dilemma. On the one hand, he needs to show the liberal Democrats and independents who elected him that he means to give the country a progressive Administration. On the other hand, he must not lose control of the Democratic Party at the very moment when he has won a fresh mandate to lead it. His position calls for a fine quality of political poker playing. Fortunately, he will have the advice of two remarkably capable old hands at the game, Senator BARKLEY and Congressman RAYBURN, his chief allies in the two houses of Congress.

There are some effective things that can be done without upsetting the apple-cart. For instance, the Administration has an unsual number of places to fill on vital committees of the House. It has an opportunity to appoint probably five new Democratic members to the powerful Rules Committee, which controls what bills can get to the floor of the House. It can add seven Democrats to the Banking and Currency Committee, to deal with legislation on housing and inflation. Six or seven more can be added to the Education and Labor Committee, where action on the TAFT-HARTLEY Bill will center. Another six or seven added to Ways and Means can watch over the President's program on tax revision and expansion of social security.

We have a hunch that President TRUMAN will consider first what he can do with such opportunities. He will naturally plan to fill these vacancies with Democrats who share his liberal views. He can then take a look and decide if the new additions are heavy enough to outweigh the influence of such Old Guardsters as EUGENE COX of Georgia, who stands second on the Rules Committee by virtue of seniority. If necessary, the purge tactic can be used sparingly and guardedly. A frontal assault on the whole system of seniority will probably not be attempted, though if successful it would be a blessing to both parties. Sun-12-19-48

We believe the President can afford to focus his attention on the vital Congressional committees, the ones which really control the movement of legislation, and ignore such minor hazards as Congressman RANKIN'S chairmanship of the House Veterans' Committee, which is non-controversial. We believe Mr. TRUMAN will handle the Dixiecrats in Congress without favor (for certainly he owes them less than nothing), but also without vengefulness. It is far more important to him to get a liberal program through Congress than to punish a parcel of political enemies. Sun-12-19-48

Dixiecrats Are Men Without a Party

The Courier-Journal
Louisville Ky

IT COULD be that the THURMOND-WRIGHT ticket of States' Rights Democrats represents a sort of last stand. It could mean the approaching end of States' Rights as a political issue and of white supremacy as an argument for Southerners to vote the Democratic ticket. Wed 8-11-48

In Governor THURMOND'S own South Carolina something occurred yesterday which that State's political leaders vowed, only four years ago, would never happen. It would never happen, they shouted up and down the halls of the Capitol in Columbia, as long as there was a musket left and the name of WADE HAMPTON was known. Negroes would never vote in a South Carolina Democratic primary—but yesterday they did vote.

In Texas a furious drive by States' Righters to get a public referendum on THURMOND and WRIGHT as opposed to TRUMAN and BARKLEY was beaten down by the official Democratic organization.

It is old stuff now to say that things like these tell of the end of the Democratic Party, Southern brand. This particular variety of Democratic doctrine was rooted in emotional experience. In the pre-New Deal days there was an invariable answer from the Southern politician, or from almost any Southern voter, to the question what the Democratic Party meant to him. It meant, he would be sure to say, States' Rights and white supremacy. Occasionally he would say that it meant also strict construction of the Constitution and tariff for revenue only, but such words had come to lose meaning. There were elements in the South, stoutly and regularly Democratic, that were as hot for tariff protection (in their own interest) as any Eastern industrialist.

What now remains of the old reasons for being solidly and indiscriminately Democratic? States' Rights, perhaps? But the Democratic convention in Philadelphia refused to write a plank explicitly endorsing the idea. It refused to do so, though aware of the alternative. The party which States' Righters claimed as uniquely their own has rejected them—in Philadelphia, now in Texas. States' Rights as a fighting cause has come to be seen as a survival of the days when it took GEORGE WASHINGTON longer to get from Mount Vernon to Philadelphia, then the capital, than it now takes to circle the globe. The remoteness, the lack of communications, the impossibility then of imparting to the average citizen an intelligible meaning of national issues—all these gave a practical point to the idea of local self-government as the best, perhaps the only desirable process.

The old party, and the habit of voting in an unchanging pattern, doubtless will run for some time on its own momentum. But the very people who are shouting most loudly in behalf of the Democratic tradition—the so-called Dixiecrats of the THURMOND-WRIGHT following—are the people who say most plainly that the end has come. Nothing else has happened to make this so vividly a fact as the acceptance, unwillingly but finally, of the Negro as a Democratic voter. Wed-8-11-48

It is not to be expected, of course, that the Negro will remain a Democratic voter in the South. He enters the party because local government is Democratic Party government. If he is to find a meaning for his citizenship, he must do so within the local pattern. But the pattern soon will change. Candidates cannot talk of the old things. They must give new assurances; and positive assurances, at that. The facts of life in a world of supersonic travel and of the split atom make the appeal of the THURMOND-WRIGHT school as dead as the dodo. Evolution, not revolution, has killed it.

Two Different Kinds of 'State Rights'

Detroit Free Press

WORLD affairs have grown to be American affairs.

The farmers who sell their produce to the ECA, the workers who are enjoying high wages from a "cold war" economy, the housewives who have to pay inflated prices for the necessaries of life, all realize (or should) that we are influenced as much by Moscow, London, Paris, Berlin, as by Washington.

Why, then, if bipartisanship has worked in foreign policy, would not nonpartisanship be desirable in domestic policy?

The question is raised in The New York Times Sunday Magazine by Mark Etheridge, publisher of The Courier-Journal of Louisville. Detroit Michigan

The number of parties which entered candidates for the Presidency and Congress this year indicates to Mr. Etheridge that in a sense "we are more divided internally than we have been at any time since the Civil War." Mon-11-22-48

Were the number of major candidates merely symptomatic of a desire for power it would be a minor consideration. Actually, writes Mr. Etheridge, it is "symptomatic of deep splits, which must be healed or bridged before we can effectively approach a solution of our dilemma."

The deepest of these splits is over states rights, as Mr. Etheridge sees it.

★

THE Dixiecrats are political states righters. They are interested in retaining control in such matters as poll-taxes and lynchings. They resent Federal interference in what they regard as internal concerns of the several states.

The "economic states righters" are after different game. They are not deeply interested in "civil rights." They believe that State governments are more easily influenced than the Federal Government. Consequently they throw their weight against any proposal to take away from the States control of oil and other natural resources, which they covet.

The economic states righters include Democrats, but mostly Republicans, according to Mr. Etheridge. They seek to divide the national economy into 48 State economies in order the more easily to exploit it.

★

ADMIT, for the sake of argument, that Mr. Etheridge's indictment of states righters is well grounded.

Admit, too, that a national policy on fundamental domestic issues is highly desirable.

We are still confronted with the question of how best to achieve that policy.

With our two-party system, we have threshed out many vital issues in the past and settled them by ordeal of debate and ballot. They've stayed settled.

Would the weakening of this method of solution by the hasty adoption of nonpartisan formulas really produce the desired result?

A widely heard complaint in the recent campaign was that "there's no difference between the two old parties: they're as alike as two peas in a pod."

★

ACCORDING to Prof. Arthur W. MacMahon, the difference between the two major parties today is tempo rather than direction.

They have, that is to say, the same ultimate objective but differ as to the speed with which it should be approached.

The recent Presidential campaign seemed to show that even this difference had disappeared. Gov. Dewey tried to outstride Mr. Truman in reaching the New Deal's Valley of Happiness.

That substitutes personalities for principles.

The Republican Party isn't dead, although its recent leadership showed unmistakable signs of advanced moribundity.

Any attempt to write it off, and adopt a nonpartisan solution of vital national issues, would invite the eventual replacement of our two-party system by a one-party government.

The end of one-party government is dictatorship.

States' Righters And The Klan

To the Editor of The News:

With much interest, I have read a story published in The Birmingham News Sept. 1, relating to statements made by the attorney general before a meeting of churchmen in Montgomery.

I do not happen to know any Klansmen and all I know about them is what I read in the press. I do, however, know many States' Righters who are among the finest citizens in the South. They are a type of people who, like Jefferson and other such statesmen of his time, place principle above party and practice it regardless of personal gain.

In Jefferson's day the principle of states' rights was somewhat a theory but now as a practical principle of democracy it has been proved by more than 150 years of government progress without parallel in the history of the world. It is strange how men, sometimes, twist, squirm and evade to avoid facing sound principles of government as a means of attaining personal, selfish gains in political power. And stranger still is it that a man intrusted with high office will stand before an intelligent audience and state flately that he opposes certain things and with that same tongue, at the same time and from the same platform assert that he is going to follow those directly opposing the principles for which he says he stands. Then he denounces his own good fellow citizens who stand for the very same principles that he says he does but who value principles above party name.

I happen to know Mr. Wilkinson and Mr. Locke and I value them along with the very best citizens of the South. I also know Mr. Carmichael and voted for him on one occasion. Before having had some dealings with him, I held him in great respect. I regret to say that in dealing with him, his actions changed my mind.

Henry Wallace differs with Harry Truman with respect to our dealings with Russia and with respect to the Marshall plan. If there is any other difference in the ideals of the two men I have failed to get it from the press or radio. For 38 years I have voted the Democratic ticket and I now feel that I would be voting just as far from Jeffersonian democracy by casting a ballot for Harry Truman as I would for Henry Wallace. As a matter of fact neither of the two want to talk about Jeffersonian democracy but both would have us forget it, do away with the constitution which guarantees states' rights and follow the Stalin plan, but thanks be to the great Master of the universe, there are too many states' righters in every state of the union to allow that to happen.

JOE L. TEAVER.

The South's Losing Battle

The Southern revolt fails to progress. Resentment persists, but the organized determination is lacking. All that the solid South could or perhaps cared to accomplish was the anti-Truman vote for Senator Russell at Philadelphia. With that done, the South had spoken its collective mind and went home to wait and see. The bolt, for all practical purposes, failed to develop. The ancient states' rights cry was not enough to force the Southerners into a unified course of opposition to their own party, and the abortive Birmingham convention, or whatever it is to be called, was the proof. Mississippi furnished the hard core, Alabama somewhat less certain, South Carolina also unsure, and that was about all. As for proposing an effective alternative, the program and leadership were still lacking. The South was no further along than the day that President Truman mentioned civil rights.

For the Democratic politicians below the Mason-Dixon line, there could have been little real doubt about their course after Philadelphia. Aside from the force of tradition, which in much of the South has practically the power of law, a Southern party regular has the same instincts as the politician anywhere. He sticks to his organization, rather than pursue futility, for practical reasons of jobs and influence. The party, despite its glum and starved look, is far more likely to endure than any individual now in sight. And in the South, at least until November tells otherwise, there is only one party.

The truth is that the South is resisting the inevitable. and losing the battle. White supremacy is not a slogan that can stand. The substance of civil rights, a cover-all term, is hard to refute, much as fair-minded people may sympathize with the South's objection to being pushed by outside force. Failure to follow Mississippi is perhaps far more than a matter of immediate practicality. Back of the political skin savers who are thinking of four years hence is, we believe, a growing realization that the whole business of minority suppression is as false and obsolete as the states' rights clamor. You can't make a good fight on a bad cause.

Be A Sport

To the Editor of The News:

E. B. Harris, of Fayette, Ala., writes in the Voice of the People: "Who nominated Mr. Thurmond and Mr. Wright anyway? It would seem that a small handful of designing and somewhat reactionary gentlemen called themselves together and selected men to their liking, whether it suited anyone else or not. I do not know of anything more undemocratic than the action taken by this small group of citizens. They have taken advantage of their positions to satisfy themselves and barred many a good Democrat from voting his or her conviction."

I would like to ask Mr. Harris just who Mr. Truman is anyway? He was not elected to the presidency by the people. He was not the choice of the Democratic Party at Philadelphia. He was thrust upon the Democratic Party by an undemocratic, ruthless minority party machine of politicos, Howard McGrath presiding.

The majority of the voters of Alabama plainly expressed themselves on what they wanted and expected done at election time. In a democracy the majority rules. The election was free and fair and square. Be sport enough to abide by it and quit whining.

If anything is done to set aside the will of the majority of the people, some political scalps are going to be pulled at the next election. Some in high places are going to be blamed if anything is pulled off in Washington.

Mr. Harris spoke of voting the Republican ticket if he could not vote for Truman. I will venture to say Alabama will go almost solidly Republican if citizens are forced to vote for Truman. A man spits tobacco juice in your eye and you go back and tell him that you have two eyes. A pro-Truman ticket for Alabama makes just as much sense to me.

If the people of Alabama do allow the pro-Trumanites to run the election over them, I hope that they will accept the consequences in good grace and quietly, federal police and all.

LONG REMEMBERED

Editor, The Advertiser:

The dark storm of the Dewey-Truman-Wallace-Thurmond campaign and election is all passed over. I couldn't vote for the candidate of my choice in a real democratic legal way for the simple reason of political trickery. But later (Nov. 2) it all turned out just like Paul's journey to Damascus.

He was going there to persecute the saints and bring them back bound when he was stricken with light and blindness and he heard a voice calling him and he was persecuting Jesus unaware.

I have been wondering what kind of government of these (48) United States we would have for all of its citizens to be benefited and to serve it with officials like Gov. Thurmond and Wright as president and vice-president—both of them not being impressed with anything but states rights and opposed to civil rights. They didn't mention anything in their campaign concerning social security, housing, nor farming program, neither veteran benefits, nor labor legislation, nor foreign policy. Other things I could make mention about, nevertheless, the way of the ungodly shall perish.

My being disfranchised in a national election shall long be remembered by me and many, many others, but now speaking like Cousin Minnie Pearl, "I am sure glad to be here." These Dixiecrats, prodigal sons, should now, after their straying away into foreign lands and dwelling among the swine and losing their wealth in riotus living, should say now as the prodical son said. "In my father's house is plenty, and I perish with hunger, I shall arise and go home to my father, and say, Father, I have sinned against heaven and in thy sight, and I am no more worthy to be called thy son." Then we could all get together and kill the fatted calf. Then feast and be mery again, and all things would work together for good for our future democracy.

BUS CONDUCT

Editor, The Advertiser:

I am forced to speak about this incident of Sunday night on the South Jackson bus.

When we think about race relations and what not, it is interesting to note the type of people who never want peace and harmony to exist.

I merely want to compliment the white gentleman on the bus who showed so much intelligence. He was the only white passenger on the bus. He had a seat just in front of the colored people. He was asked by one of the colored passengers to move up one seat so as to give a seat for the ones standing.

The bus driver showed his poor intellect by telling the colored man in a raised voice, "Get up nigger and move back, I don't allow colored to sit up this way when I am on this bus. Get into that alley."

Now this bus driver was wrong, so was the colored man. First, the colored man should not have taken this seat, as it is understood that the first four seats are left for white, even though there is seldom any one in them. The driver should be instructed how to speak and never let his passengers know that he is far from average.

14 Percent in South Favor Thurmond

PRINCETON, N. J.—At the start of the campaign the "Dixiecrat" movement has the support of about one voter in seven below the Mason-Dixon line. In the first survey to be conducted on the popularity of Gov. J. Strom Thurmond since his nomination for President by the States' Right Party, Gov. Thurmond polls 14 percent throughout the 13 Southern States as a group.

In terms of popular votes he is topped by both President Truman and Gov. Thomas E. Dewey in the South, but the popular vote percentage does not fully indicate the extent of the Thurmond threat to the Democratic Party. Dixiecrat spokesmen claim that 32 electoral votes are already "in the bag" for the States' rights ticket. These 32 consist of Alabama 11, Mississippi 9, South Carolina 8 and Florida 4 of the State's eight votes. In those States, the Dixiecrats claim, the Democratic candidates for presidential electors already have pledged themselves to vote against President Truman.

Those 32 electoral votes are votes which the Democrats have always in the past counted on as "absolutely sure" for them. To offset their loss this year. President Truman would have to take virtually all the New England States which have a total of 40 electoral votes.

Throughout the South interviewers for the Institute put the following question to Southern voters in a survey begun directly after the formation of the States' Rights Party:

"If the presidential election were being held today, how would you vote—for Dewey, for Truman, for Wallace or for Thurmond?"

The results among voters who said they plan to vote in November were:

SOUTHERN VOTERS
Truman	41%
Dewey	34
Thurmond	14
Wallace	2
No opinion	9

With the no opinion vote eliminated, the results are Truman 46 percent, Dewey 37 percent, Thurmond 15 percent and Wallace 2 percent.

The 13 Southern States include South Carolina, Georgia, Arkansas, Alabama, Mississippi, Florida, Louisiana, Texas, Virginia, North Carolina, Kentucky,, Tennessee and Oklahoma. Thurmond sentiment runs strongest in the first eight, comprising the so-called "deep South."

While the new party plans to make a strong effort to get on the ballot in all Southern States, it remains to be seen how successful this effort will be. Today's poll figures indicate the extent of Thurmond's popular following at the present time, assuming he were on the ballot in all States in the South.

Henry A. Wallace's figure of two percent in the South compares with a national Wallace percentage of five percent in the last Institute poll reported Aug. 1. Mr. Wallace plans to invade the South for an intensive campaign tour in early September. Future surveys will indicate whether his campaign efforts increase his popularity below the Mason-Dixon line.

Dixiecrats Repeat False Pretension

ENGINEERS of the THURMOND-WRIGHT movement in Kentucky clutch at a delusion on which these columns have frequently commented. This is the notion, as Dixiecrat State Chairman ORVAL BAYLOR puts it, that the fight is "to restore the Democratic Party to its rightful owners."

Tues 8-31-48

It is fair to ask how far back the Dixiecrats propose to go in establishing their claim to ownership of the party. Do they think their title rests on the performances of Southerners in Washington for the last 20 years—on the filibusterers and obstructionists led by BILBO and the screamers led by the likes of JOHN RANKIN? Or do they go farther into the past, before ANDREW JACKSON fought the States' Righters of his day and wished he could hang CALHOUN?

In either case the Dixiecrats seem to persist in a program of action—of action too plainly designed to perpetuate inaction—which has come to make the country rather sick and tired. In days like these the people need and deserve something more intelligent than such a course. If it has any pretension to being a party of progress, the Democratic Party needs more substantial and responsible leadership than that of the pretenders to the title of Democratic heritage who are revealed as making up the executive committee of the THURMOND-WRIGHT movement in Kentucky.

Southern Democrats in Congress, made up largely of party hacks, owe their seniority—their very right to declaim and obstruct as committee chairmen—to the vitality of the national Democratic Party. They never won it by any enterprise or statesmanlike quality of their own. The best among them are not found on the side of Governor THURMOND or Mr. BAYLOR. They are found reasonably proposing to save the Democratic Party from itself, if it requires saving in this way, rather than to destroy the party as the Dixiecrats of 1860 (their ticket headed by another Kentuckian, JOHN C. BRECKINRIDGE) destroyed it, defeated the regular nominee, elected the Republican LINCOLN and precipitated a conflict from the effects of which the South has hardly emerged today. In the next 72 years, the Democrats were in power for only 16, and then in times of national emergency or by virtue of divided opposition. The party's recrudescence with ROOSEVELT from 1932 on was no accomplishment of the Deep Southerners; rather, they were the passive (and sometimes even the querulously reluctant) beneficiaries of the party's rebirth.

A pointed comment on the THURMOND-WRIGHT movement was made a few days ago by a Southern journalist, GERALD W. JOHNSON, writing in The New York Star:

Tues 8-31-48

> The Dixiecrat Party is the party of inaction, the party of terrified men. No doubt they are physically brave enough. Governor THURMOND himself has an admirable war record—but so had Major General JOHN C. BRECKINRIDGE. One of the tragedies of human existence is that so many men who dare to face a machine gun without flinching break and run for the rear the instant an idea whizzes close to their ears . . . Their revolt is releasing all parties, including the Democratic, from any obligation to respect Southern preferences and prejudices, and is opening up to the Republican Party the possibility of capturing three or four million additional votes among Southern Negroes. If the Dixiecrats have any idea that DEWEY will not seize that opportunity, they have grossly underestimated the ruthlessness of the man . . .

Nothing could be emptier, more false or more lacking in assurances for a world that needs fresh solutions than the words of the Dixiecrats' national chairman, MERRITT H. GIBSON of Longview, Texas, the city about which the oil derricks proliferate more amazingly than anywhere else in the world. Here to speak at the Kentucky group's meeting Sunday, he said the Dixiecrats must oppose the old parties because the latter do nothing to "preserve representative government or individual freedom." But everything the Dixiecrats have done, since the Alabama-Mississippi walkout at Philadelphia, has been a defiance of representative action, a denial of individual freedom except in terms of their own dogma.

For Thurmond And Wright

To the Editor of The News:

Because of the apparent confusion in the minds of many good citizens, I should like to say something apropos to the present political situation. To make my communication brief, I am presenting a categorical list of reasons why the Thurmond-Wright team has a good chance of throwing the election of a president into the House of Representatives:

1. Thurmond and Wright offer millions of voters the country over the right and opportunity to protest against the federal encroachment on state and personal rights and privileges.

2. Thurmond and Wright head a movement that will turn out to be the greatest educational program in civics (politics) this country has ever seen.

3. Jeffersonian Democrats will take a new interest in governmental affairs and will be encouraged to fight for a genuine democracy with every legal means possible.

4. Millions of people who live in wealthy states with practically no racial or religious problems will learn that for a man from a state like Missouri to try and settle the internal problems of the people in a state like Alabama all by himself is just as illogical as the same man trying to settle the Palestine problem, the Soviet problem or the problem of world peace strictly from a personal or party political standpoint.

5. Millions of people will learn that it is no more right for a U. S. president from the South to tell the people of California that their business interests must hire a certain percentage of Japanese, Chinese, Catholics and Jews, or what have you, than it is for a U. S. president to tell the mayor of New York City that he must hire a certain number of all nationalities, races and creeds, regardless of aptitude or qualifications for available jobs.

The News

6. Millions of people will fully realize that you cannot force economic equality in favor of one racial minority any more than you could social equality among white, Anglo-Saxon-descended, native-born Americans.

7. Millions of people will pause and consider the plights of Italy, France and Great Britain, three great liberty-loving nations whose very existence has been threatened in recent years, marked in the beginning by a trend toward socialism. They will learn more about socialism, how the New Deal was tinged by it and why the Communist Party began infiltrating our government. They will learn that centralization of government will ruin any democracy.

Wilkinson Vs. Primm

The News

To the Editor of The News:

I ~~object~~ to being slandered by McGrath's flunky, Bill Primm, otherwise known as "William J. Primm, Jr., executive assistant to National Party Chairman J. Howard McGrath.

In Tuesday's News (Sept. 7) he accused me of being one of the behind-the-scenes manipulators of the states' rights movement. Instead of being behind-the-scenes I have been shouting from the housetops and I am now in the front ranks of those fighting to keep Bill Primm, Howard McGrath and Harry Truman from helping Dewey and Wallace rivet a Russian pattern on our way of life.

The Democratic Party in Alabama has spoken. If Primm voted in the primary, he is obligated to support the nominees of that primary. If he is not going to keep his promise then he should resign from the Democratic Party of Alabama. If he is going to keep his promise and vote the straight Democrat ticket in Alabama in November then he should sever his connection with McGrath's payroll. Let's find out which side of his mouth he is talking out of.

Primm and McGrath's plan to purge Col. Rushton now is evidently a predicate for their undertaking to purge Sen. Hill in 1950, because Sen. Hill will vote the Democratic ticket in November, carrying with it electors pledged to vote for Thurmond and Wright. To be consistent, Primm and McGrath should ask Sen. Hill to resign. They should ask Sen. Sparkman to resign. They should ask every congressman and every other Democratic nominee in Alabama to resign. But they are too shrewd to do that. They first want to purge Rushton and then turn on the others.

I claim that Alabama Democrats should run their own affairs without suggestions of dictators from Washington and without interference from these fellows that get the Potomac fever after hanging around Washington for a spell. Once they are afflicted with that disease they can find nothing good in their own state. The only way to cure it is to give them a good dose of states' rights.

Gallup States' Rights Poll

Sat 8-21-48

The Gallup poll is not infallible; but it has a remarkable record of accuracy. Consequently the report by Dr. George Gallup on strength in 13 Southern states of the States' Rights Democratic Party commands attention.

It is unfortunate that Dr. Gallup did not immediately break his survey down by states, for that would have produced a more interesting evidence, perhaps, of where lies the greatest, and the least, States' Rights strength. That has been promised later, however. We already know that Alabama, Mississippi and South Carolina are probably overwhelmingly in support of Gov. Thurmond. Texas remains questionable; part of Florida's electors may go for Thurmond. Some other states may provide a measure of support for the States' Rights Party—but most show few signs of doing so now.

Dr. Gallup's figures are startling. He finds that in the 13 Southern States President Truman retains 41 per cent of Southern voters' support. Gov. Dewey runs second with 34 per cent and Gov. Thurmond third with only 14.

Of course, in measuring sentiment by statistics, it is at once apparent that only a few states with little demonstrable support for Gov. Thurmond would quickly whittle down a statistical measurement. And we have reason to believe, so far, at any rate, that in Kentucky, Virginia, Arkansas, Tennessee and North Carolina, support for States' Righters has not made much headway.

We here in Alabama—and our neighbors in Mississippi and near-neighbors in South Carolina—have been on the front doorstep of States' Rights Party headquarters. Probably an equal number of "declarations" and revelations of campaign plans have been made from the three states. Consequently we have been given more evidence of political action in this group's behalf than have Southerners in most Southern states. It is possible that this has led some among us to over-estimate the attention these candidates, Gov. Thurmond and Gov. Wright, have been receiving outside of Alabama.

Voter sentiment throughout the South is, of course, important to the success or failure of the States' Rights movement. But the immediate issue facing States' Rights leaders is and has been getting a slate of electors on the several states' ballots. If this technical battle can be won by States' Righters, then it is possible many more Southerners would actually cast votes for Thurmond and Wright.

Southern Voters

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

It seems to me that the editorial "The Dixiecrat Vote," in your issue of Nov. 7, rests upon an unwarranted assumption of fact.

The editorial says that the States' Rights campaign "showed how great a majority of Southern voters disagree with the antediluvian attitude that it represents." It also says that "when only 19 per cent of the voters of the South support an issue as clearly drawn as was that between the President and the States' Rights candidates, it doesn't seem to us they represent the real attitude of our Southern neighbors."

New York N.Y.

Unfortunately, your editorial writer does not tell us specifically what issue he is referring to. But the inference is that only 19 per cent of the Southern voters oppose the Truman civil rights program and that 81 per cent do not oppose it.

If this is the intended meaning of your editorial, I believe it to be without basis in fact. One persuasive evidence of this is that virtually all of the Southern candidates who publicly supported the Truman-Barkley ticket also proclaimed their opposition to the civil rights program, and in my opinion this is true of the great majority of Southern voters who supported the straight Democratic ticket.

Your editorial expressed the commendable hope that the new Congress will be able to repair the cleavage between North and South. This is eminently desirable, but it will not be accomplished by any effort to bridge the gap which rests on the erroneous assumption that seems implicit in your editorial. At best, the task will be difficult enough. It will be all but hopeless without an accurate appraisal of Southern sentiment on the racial question.

The 'Cause' Gains

Columbia Record

"Hear me for my cause, and be silent that you may hear!"

These states are being heard for their cause. Two per cent, 14 per cent or 19 per cent, the Thurmond-Wright movement spearheads and proves the deep earnestness of a revolt which has put this region's problem, cause and philosophy before the nation as never before and identified for the nation its own basis tenets of home rule, local self-government, and States' Rights.

The movement has grown and is growing. Shadowed behind it, whatever its size, is that total vote of the South against Truman at Philadelphia, that almost 50 per cent of the whole convention against the Humphrey amendment, and the assurance in every current poll that the Democratic President will not carry the South.

The record has been made, the precedent set, the grim proof given. Never again will either of whatever two parties remain great in this land look upon the South as (1) unnecessary to win, or (2) incapable of being won.

Into every home of America has gone the southern case as a result of attention the revolt has achieved. And eveywhere there are little islands of sympathy for the South and recognition of its quarrel with federalism gone mad as something historic in timeliness and Americanism.

The islands are expanding. I have been impressed with it in letters from Pennsylvania after the Ray Sprigle stories appeared and Publisher Block of The Pittsburgh Post Gazette sportingly published in full my comments against them.

"Ray Sprigle is not the whole North," writes Beatrice Redinger of Pittsburgh. "Many of us understand the South and thoroughly dislike what he is trying to do."

"My wife and I have just returned from out first real trip into the South," writes L. A. Wright of McKeesport. "I had my eyes open all the way. I have a stronger feeling than ever that the Southerner regards, and hac never ceased to regard the Negro as a responsibility. I am a believer in States' Rights."

"Congratulations on your letter to The Pittsburgh Post Gazette," writes Mrs. Kathleen Giles of Pittsburgh. "Isn't it strange that Mr. Sprigle went to all that trouble when he could have found the same situation in his own backyard?"

"I read your comment," writes Carl Davidson of Ellwood City. "There is no question but what a lot of pressure was used on the Northern delegates (at the Democratic National convention) to have them vote for the Civil Rights resolution. In one caucus I know of they were told that the Negro voters in New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois and Michigan were worth more to the party than the whole South . . ."

"The Sprigle articles will be a distinct disservice and handicap to the steady and comparatively rapid progress of the Negro in this country," thinks John F. Duffy of Pittsburgh. And so forth and so forth.

"I was interested in your column on the Sprigle pieces, writes Publisher Philip J. Graham of The Washington (D. C.) Post. "We did not run them because they seemed to give an unbalanced picture of the South."

The counter-tide is setting in. Its spearhead and sign of earnest is the Thurmond-Wright ticket. No matter how great or small a vote that ticket has next November—and it will be much greater than many scoffers believe—it represents already an epochal victory for the South and for America's basic way.

CADDO DIXIECRATS CLAIM 125 NAMES

Times Picayune

(Special to The Times-Picayune)

Shreveport, La., Aug. 18.—About 125 independent Caddo parish voters have signed petitions for nominating states' rights electors for the November elections in Louisiana, it was disclosed here Tuesday by Robert G. Chandler, co-chairman of the Louisiana states' rights executive committee.

Of the 50 petitions being circulated in the parish, about 25 per cent have been completed, Chandler said. He said circulation of the documents would be finished within the next two days.

"We expect to get a minimum of 350 eligible signatures in Caddo," he stated.

Chandler asserted that Caddo's petitions will be sent to Registrar of Voters Jim Martin, who will certify signatures as belonging to valid independent electors. Petitions then will be forwarded to New Orleans to be bound with others from throughout the state and mailed to the secretary of state.

Chandler said that a Fourth Congressional District states' rights executive committee would be organized shortly after completion of the petitions.

A low bid of $112,314 was submitted Tuesday for construction of another new municipal pool in Shreveport by the General Construction Co.

Bids on the pool, to be constructed in the park section of the Louisiana state fair grounds to serve the Queensborough and Ingleside sections, were received by the city council at a special meeting.

Eight bids were received. All were referred to a committee composed of Mayor Clyde E. Fant, Commissioner of Finance John McW. Ford and Recreation Director Clyde Stallcup. The committee will tabulate the bids and make recommendations to the council.

Wright Raps 3 Foes In Marianna Address

MARIANA, FLA., Oct. 13.—(AP)—Governor Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi tonight called upon voters to use ballots to fight "subversive forces who would destroy our way of life."

The States' Rights vice-presidential candidate told a rally that President Truman, Governor Thomas E. Dewey and Henry Wallace were on record as committing themselves "to enactment of unconstitutional laws which would give the Federal government a police force and destroy our American heritage."

He said "the Civil Rights programs of all three seek to take away Civil Rights of the majority" and that "President Truman's so-called Civil Rights measures are not enforceable without a Federal police state. They not only are unconstitutional, but are legally and morally unsound. They would destroy the right of association and the freedom of choice."

Sparkman Opposes Dixiecrats

Courier Journal

Here condensed is a copy of a letter sent to The Birmingham News by H. C. Sparkman, brother of Senator John J. Sparkman of Alabama:

In your eagerness to protest States rights you are about to destroy the party that has done more for the South than any party, organization or group.

My advice, as an American citizen born in Alabama, is for you to lay down your grievances and reluctantly support Mr. Truman in this campaign. You cannot win anything without the support of all the States' Democratic organizations. You will not only lose the Presidency, but you will lose States rights and get a stronger civil rights plank than the one adopted by the Democratic Convention delegates. You will lose appointments in post offices and other agencies. The Republican Party will hamstring every appropriation, as they have in the past, that would benefit the South.

Louisville Ky.

Gentlemen, listen to reason and not to men like Senator Heflin of Alabama, and others of 1928. Don't have this fair land of ours return to the Hoover conditions we found in 1928-1932. This is a time we need unity in the Democratic Party. There is enough disunity in the world at present without the so-called solid South differing from the rest of the Party and classing itself with the Henry Wallace Progressive Party, in that it is splitting and differing from the strong Democratic organization that has been so successful.

With the thought and consideration of all the people of the South as well as the whole world in mind let us determine that those bread lines and hunger marches shall not return, and continue to be leaders in the Democratic Party and the Solid South.

Dixiecrat Chieftans Map Strategy Here

Birmingham, Alabama

Laney And Wright Head Up Group; Thurmond Absent

Thur. 12-16-48

BY FRED TAYLOR
News Staff Writer

How best to carry on the States' Rights Democratic movement and wage effective warfare on "civil rights" legislation was discussed by Dixiecrat chieftains here today.

Arkansas Gov. Ben Laney, chairman of the Laney Committee, and Mississippi Gov. Fielding Wright, vice presidential running mate of Gov. Strom Thurmond, headed the group of States' Righters.

* * *

THIS SESSION TO MAP strategy for the future of the movement got under way at 10 a.m. at the Tutwiler Hotel.

South Carolina Gov. Thurmond, who headed the States' Rights ticket that carried Alabama, South Carolina, Mississippi and Louisiana, was unable to attend.

Gov. Wright said Gov. Thurmond was prevented from meeting with others of the top committee group because of state budget hearings at Columbia. He and Gov. Laney, with members of their families, stopped over in Birmingham last night en route to their homes from the Southern Governors Conference at Savannah. Thur. 12-16-48

Gov. Laney, who called the meeting, said:

"It's just for a general discussion among our group simply to determine what the ideas of one another might be and consider what's happened and what to do in the future."

Wallace W. Wright, Jackson, Miss., business man and co-chairman with Laney of the States' Rights directing group, also arrived last night.

"I DON'T KNOW exactly what they're going to do," Wallace Wright said with reference to members of the Laney Committee. "They'll probably lay some plans for the future and determine when we'll have a full-scale meeting, probably sometime in February or March."

The Laney Committee is made up of two members from each of several Southern states. Frank Dixon, former Alabama governor, and Robert T. Goodwyn, Montgomery, this state's members, are among States' Rights leaders attending. Thur 12-16-48

University Students Challenge The Dixiecrats

Daily World

34d

BY JAMES B. LaFOURCHE

Tue 11-16-48

NEW ORLEANS—(ANP)—Forty eight white students of Tulane university here signed their names to a circular on the eve of the recent presidential election and branded the Dixiecrats as having nothing to offer but "freedom to hate."

Atlanta, Ga.

The circular, bearing the name of "Dixiecrat Myths," was widely distributed throughout the city and marked the beginning on the part of local white college students to fight the rising tide of prejudice.

MYTHS EXPLODED

The students branded as a myth that Negroes are inferior to "pure-blooded" whites and maintained that both races are the same from a standpoint of "flesh, marrow in the bones and other respects." As to pigmentation, it was agreed that "there is no hard and fast rule."

The students denied that northern agitators were to blame for the civil rights program and held that "segregated schools, white only" civil service jobs, restricted polling booths and jim crow church pews," were in the main contributory.

Relative to the Negro not being able to attain in a short while the "culture" which it has taken the white race centuries to develop, it was held that "old buildings," "insufficient and out-od-date equipment and poorly trained teachers," were the answers to the so-called "culture" problem.

It was pointed out that "in spite of all the handicaps, the American scene shows plain evidence of the Negro's ability in, and his contribution to the national well-being and culture in every trade, art, science and profession."

Tue 11-16-48

NOT A RACIAL ISSUE

The students contended that there was no "race issue." "Human Rights," they argued, was on the altar of sacrifice. The states, they said, were given the "right to make laws and supervise their citizens' affairs" and whenever these states fail to protect their citizens, there was no other alternative, the students thought, but to petition congress to enact the necessary legislation to force the desired results.

The circular stated in its conclusion that the signers of the petition were not directing the circular in the interest of President Truman, Gov. Dewey, or Mr. Wallace. They seemed to content themselves with the fact that all three of the presidential candidates had declared themselves favorably on the "equal and impartial treatment for all Americans."

Dixiecrats Claim 6 States

Constitution

Atlanta, Ga.

By JACK BELL

WASHINGTON, July 18—(AP)—The entrance of a "Dixiecrat ticket" into the Presidential field brought a disputed prediction today that President Truman might lose the support of up to six Southern Staes in the November election. Mon. 7-19-48

Sen. McClellan, Democrat, Arkansas, told a reporter he thought the Southern Democratic rebel ticket might help take the electoral votes of a half dozen Southern States away from President Truman and Sen. Alben Barkley, his running mate.

The new ticket—Gov. J. Strom Thurmond, of South Carolina, for President and Gov. Fielding Wright, of Mississippi, for Vice President—was put forth at Birmingham yesterday as one Dixie answer to the President's civil-rights program.

McClellan—who fought the President's nomination but did not walk out of the Democratic Convention—named Alabama, Mississippi, South Carolina, Florida, Georgia and Tennessee as possible participants in a bolt he said was almost certain to result in the regular Democratic Party's defeat in the Presidential election.

He put Tennessee in the list, McClellan said, because of a sharp local division among Democrats there. 7-19-48

He said that if the Thurmond-Wright ticket got on the ballot in Arkansas it might split the Democratic vote in his home State and give the Republicans some chance of winning there.

But McClellan's prediction drew immediate fire from Sen. Hatch, Democrat, New Mexico, close personal friend of the President.

Hatch said he didn't think the effort to place a fourth party in the field "will be effective in more than one or two States."

The New Mexico Senator predicted election of a Truman-Barkley ticket even if some of the Southerners don't go along.

Hatch hinted the Democrats thought there was some chance that Henry Wallace—scheduled to get the official nomination of his Third Party in Philadelphia next weekend—might not carry through until November. Wallace repeatedly has asserted he had no intention of quitting the race.

"I'm not so sure about what Wallace is going to do," Hatch said. Politics is in such a state of flux now that no one can say just what will happen in the next month or two."

Sen. O'Mahoney, Democrat, Wyoming, another friend of the President, said the Birmingham rump convention's action in nominating Thurmond and Wright could be "rather serious from the stand point of the Democratic Party."

"If the Southerners carry out this fight," he said, "it means that the Democratic Party as a whole will have to campaign a good deal more diligently in the South than it has heretofore." He added he did not think the entrance of the Dixiecrat ticket in the field "will have the effect of taking the South out of the Democratic column."

O'Mahoney conceded, however, that if the margin between Democrats and Republicans was close in any single state, a third party ticket might cost the Truman-Barkley ticket that state's electoral backing. 7-19-48

Rep. Clarence Brown, (Republican, Ohio), said he didn't think the Dixie rebellion would make much difference in the November outcome.

"The Dewey-Warren ticket will make such a sweep that it can win without help from the South," he predicted.

Nevertheless Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, of New York, has indicated he might make a direct bid for Southern votes. Tentative plans have been made for him to campaign in Virginia, where he got 38 percent of the vote in his 1944 race against Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Three Texas Counties Prefer Gov. Thurmond

The News

Birmingham, Ala.

HOUSTON, Tex., Aug. 31—(AP)—The States' Rights presidential ticket was preferred by Democrats of this county—Harris, which has Texas' largest voting population — and two others. Wed. 9-1-48

Brazoria and Harrison Counties also gave J. Strom Thurmond and Fielding Wright, States' Rights candidates, preference in a referendum election held Saturday.

In Harris County the States' Rights received 44,936 votes to 22,721 for President Truman and Sen. Alben Barkley, his running mate.

The margin in Brazoria County was the slightest — Thurmond-Wright 933, Truman-Barkley 752.

Harrison County voters preferred the States' Rights candidates by a margin of 3,126 to 1,533. Wed

The referendum did not remove Truman and Barkley from the ballot as the Democratic candidates for president and vice president in these counties, however. It merely showed state Democratic leaders for which ticket the voters want their electors instructed. 9-1-48

States' Righters Say Campaign Finances In Hole

Talladega Editor Repeats Warning On 'Civil Rights'

Tues. 9-21-48

Instead of having received heavy chunks of dough, including a $200,000 contribution from a Texas oil man, States' Rights Democratic chieftains declared today they actually had gone in the hole with campaign finances.

A financial statement from Dixiecrat national headquarters at Jackson, Miss., said the States' Righters took in $13,890.53 the first 28 days of the movement's existence. During the period from Aug. 3 (beginning date) to Aug. 31, expenditures totaled $14,890.53, leaving a deficit of $1,440.75, according to the report filed with the clerk of the House of Representatives in Washington yesterday.

* * *

MEANWHILE, A STATES' RIGHTS speaker in Birmingham was repeating the warning that enactment of President Truman's "civil rights" program would lead to a police state, with Negroes and other minority groups suffering.

On the other hand, the States' Rights movement is "many things to many people,' declared Tom Abernethy, editor of The Talladega Daily Home, who led the ticket last May 4 when Alabama Democrats nominated a slate of 11 anti-Truman presidential electors. Abernathy and the other 10 have since pledged themselves to support the Thurmond-Wright ticket.

"Actually," Abernethy told the Young Men's Business Club at its Redmont Hotel luncheon yesterday, "the States' Rights movement battles for the Negro, just as it battles for every American who wants to retain government by home rule.'

Abernethy denied claims that the movement is founded upon the Ku Klux Klan. Tues. 9-21-48

* * *

THE TALLADEGA EDITOR took a crack at Sen. Lister Hill, challenging him to "take the stump for Strom Thurmond and Fielding Wright," the States' Rights presidential aspirants.

Abernethy asserted that Sen. Hill'se position so far was one designed to "play both ends against the middle."

Regarding States' Rights campaign finances, Justice Department attaches at Washington reported Saturday they had "under consideration" the fact that the Dixiecrat headquarters had failed to file a financial report between Sept. 1 and 10. It was pointed out that the corrupt practices act requires political parties to file such reports with the House clerk between those dates.

It was said that all other political parties had filed financial reports within the specified time.

AT HOUSTON, TEX., Judge Merritt Gibson, national campaign director for the States' Righters, denied as being "without a word of truth," a report that H. R. Cullen, wealthy Houston oil man, had contributed $200,000 to the campaign fund.

Tues 9-21-48

"All our contributions will be made public at the proper time," said Gibson.

The Jackson campaign headquarters made known several contributions to the States' Rights movement, the largest of which was listed $2,672.73 from the Mississippi Democratic Party. The largest individual contribution listed was $540 from Frank Wynee, Meridian, Miss. Others included $1,590 from citizens of Inverness, Miss., and three others of more than $100 each. There were 17 contributions of $100 each and $1,297.05 in contributions of less than $100 were shown.

The financial report was made public by George Wallace, national States' Rights treasurer.

States Rights Democrats Win First Round In Courts

The Columbia Record

The States Rights Democrats have won the first round of their court battle to get on the North Carolina ticket.

Judge W. C. Harris at Raleigh ruled Friday that the States Rights Democrats are entitled to a place on the North Carolina ticket.

(34a)

The decision has been appealed, of course, to the supreme court of North Carolina and a petition filed to advance the hearing date in order to get the case argued before the supreme court in the first week of its fall term.

Mon. 8-23-48

The North Carolina board of elections had ruled that the States Rights party failed to comply with the board's requirement that all new parties must present petitions signed by 10,000 registered voters who had not participated in the primaries and denied the party the right to place its candidates on the state ticket.

The States Rights Democrats did secure the signatures of more than 10,000 registered voters in the short time available to them. They made no effort to limit signatures to those persons who had not participated in the primaries, contending that this provision of the board's requirements was illegal.

Columbia, S.C.

And Judge Harris agreed with them. The board has authority to make rules and regulations governing the qualifications for new parties in North Carolina, but the requirement that no voter who participated in the primary of another party may sign the new party petition is, he said, "unreasonable" and therefore null and void.

The board's requirement was, of course, based on the theory that no voter should be permitted to participate in the same year in two parties. But this overlooks the fact that new conditions may arise after the primaries which may suggest to any voter the need for a change and may lead him to leave the old party, in which he has formerly voted, and to join a new party.

North Carolina's requirements for the establishment of a new party and its qualification for admission to the state ballot are too rigorous. The 10,000 voters who must sign the petition is too large a figure and when South Carolina comes to adopt the Australian ballot law, as, of course, it should now do, it should not require so many signatures. Virginia requires only 1,000 signatures to get a new party on the ticket.

Mon. 8-23-48

The entry of the States Rights party into the North Carolina race will, Tarheel political observers believe, aid the Republicans. With the Progressive party and the Democratic party already on the ticket the normal Democratic vote in North Carolina will be split three ways and the Republicans with some accessions from the Democrats may be able to carry the state, even electing some members of Congress.

North Carolina, it should be remembered, was in the Republican column in 1928. And the Republican vote in North Carolina in 1944 was 33.3 per cent of the total, a rise over 1940 when they garnered only 26 per cent of the major party vote. Fourteen counties in North Carolina voted Republican and in 18 others the vote was too close for Democratic comfort.

Dixiecrat Failure

(34a)

HUMPHREY OF MINNESOTA—Hubert Humphrey, who toppled Joe Ball in the Minnesota senatorial race, is a proverbial giant killer.

Less than four years ago, Humphrey literally wore his voice out at the 1944 Democratic convention in Chicago screaming for Henry Wallace. In fact, Humphrey was such a rabid Wallace man that he refused to vote for Truman after Truman won and the convention chairman moved to make the nomination unanimous.

(34.1)

Few who watched the Democratic convention closely will ever forget the sight of Humphrey and Barney Allen, a Red River Valley farmer, their clothes half torn off their backs and their voices gone, racing through the Chicago Stadium carrying an American flag and a Wallace banner; begging and pleading with the delegates to support their man.

But that was four years ago. One year later, Humphrey, by wrapping up practical politics with a clever doorbell-ringing campaign managed to become mayor of Minneapolis.

The trigger-tongued Humphrey will bring to the Senate a clamorous voice for civil rights and social reforms. As mayor of Minneapolis, one of his first acts was to set up a council on human relations. He founded it on dreams, but made it work. Again at the Philadelphia convention, it was Humphrey who split the Democratic Party wide open by demanding a strong civil rights platform. In retaliation, the Dixiecrats poured money into the Republican campaign in Minnesota and even sent ex-Gov. Sam Jones of Louisiana up to help reelect Sen. Joe Ball.

Built on springs, Humphrey won't hold still long in the Senate. He has the breathless personality of a youth on a roller-coaster. Jet-propelled ideas shoot through his head and take off on the busiest tongue in politics. He has the vocal endurance of a phonograph, can blow up an oratorical windstorm at the drop of a gavel. But he is a man of action as well as words.

A professor-politician, Humphrey taught his classes at MacLester College to take an active part in politics; then he himself went out to practice what he preached. He brought a truce between labor and management, brought quarreling Sister Kenny and the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis together to fight the crippling polio epidemic which struck Minneapolis.

6-11-48

His ambition in the Senate will be a position on the education and labor committee.

Lincoln Said

The News.

To the Editor of The News:

It is interesting to note how the views of Abraham Lincoln on the race problem and states' rights agree with the present attitude of the Southern Democratic Party, and Lincoln is the patron saint of the Republican Party.

(34a)

I quote from a letter of Lincoln to Gen. Duff Green: "I declare that the maintenance inviolate of the rights of the states, and especially the right of each state to order and control its own domestic institutions according to its own judgment exclusively, is essential to the balance of powers on which the perfection and endurance of our political fabric depends."

Birmingham, Ala.

The above was embodied exactly as quoted in the Republican platform of 1860, on which Lincoln was first elected.

Tue. 8-3-48

Next, I quote from Lincoln's speech delivered at Ottawa, Ill., Aug. 21, 1858, in his debate with Judge Douglas: "Free them (the Negroes) and make them politically and socially our equals? My own feelings will not admit this; and if mine would, we well know that the great mass of white people will not. A universal feeling, whether well or ill founded, cannot be safely disregarded. We cannot, then, make them equals.

"Anything that argues me into this idea of perfect social and political equality with the Negro is but a specious and fantastic arrangement of words by which men can prove a horse chestnut to be a chestnut horse. I have no purpose to introduce political and social equality between the white and black races."

After the War Between the States the Black Republican Party (the radicals) repudiated Lincoln and inflicted reconstruction on the South. We suffered indignities hard to forgive and forget. However, we have more in common with the Tafts, the Hoffmans and the Brickers than with the Wallaces, the Trumans, the Marcantonios and the Isaacsons.

If the Republican Party had incorporated in their platform the views of Lincoln on states' rights and the race problem, and should then enact appropriate legislation, we might ultimately come to an understanding.

THE DIXIECRAT VOTE

The Times

The inclination of some of the Southern electors who supported J. Strom Thurmond to "yield to the election returns" and cast their votes in the electoral college for President Truman strikes us as immoral, if not illegal. Those citizens who voted through them for Governor Thurmond on the States' Rights ticket have a right to have their votes recorded. We agree with Chairman Gessner T. McCorvey of the Alabama electors that to climb on the Truman bandwagon now would be a "dishonorable act."

Sun. 11-7-48

We hope that in the Eighty-first Congress the cleavage between North and South that has been widening in recent years will start moving the other way. We believe that the lead editorial of the Athens (Ga.) Banner-Herald, quoted in this newspaper yesterday morning, is more representative of the thinking of the majority of the leaders of the South than was the Dixiecrat rebellion in the Democratic convention at Philadelphia. "Our politicians must drop their tactics [of division] and seek to find a solution to the great civil-rights question, for instance, that will be in accordance with the facts and the spirit of democratic institutions," it said. We agree heartily with that. But a supine surrender in the electoral college will do nothing to promote that end. The votes were cast. Let them be recorded for history.

New York, N.Y.

The States' Rights campaign did one good thing. It showed how great a majority of Southern voters disagree with the antediluvian attitude that it represents. In the thirteen Southern States where votes for Governor Thurmond were recorded, the divisionists polled 925,115 votes. In the same states President Truman got 2,926,835 votes and Governor Dewey 1,795,665. And the President was not even on the ballot in Alabama, where the Dixiecrats got 127,643 of their total. Only in Mississippi and in South Carolina (Thurmond's home state) was the vote overwhelmingly against the President. When only 19 per cent of the voters of the South support an issue as clearly drawn as was that between the President and the States' Rights candidates, it doesn't seem to us they represent the real attitude of our Southern neighbors. We hope the Southerners in the Eighty-first Congress prove this to be a valid conclusion.

Electer Nominees Plan To Discuss Thurmond, Wright Support Pledge

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.—(AP)—Alabama's anti-Truman Democrats plan two meetings in Birmingham Thursday to discuss strategy in opposition to the national party.

The state's 11 Democratic presidential elector nominees will confer on a proposed pledge to support in the electoral college the states rights ticket of Govs. J. Strom Thurmond, of South Carolina, and Fielding L. Wright, of Mississippi.

In a separate session, members of the executive committee of the Alabama states rights Democratic committee will draw up organizational plans for each of the state's 67 counties.

Closed Meeting

Former Gov. Frank M. Dixon of Alabama, said this closed meeting would be held at 11 a.m. at the Tutwiler Hotel.

Thurs.

The meeting of the 11 elector nominees will be held at the same hotel at 2 p.m.

7-29-48

John A. Lusk, Jr., Gadsden attorney and one of the electors, wired the other 10 asking that they attend the session. He declined to disclose business to be discussed, but said he expected the question of the electors pledged to vote for the states right ticket would come before the meeting.

Others Invited

The other electors asked to attend are:

Tom Abernethy, Talladega; Robert B. Albritton, Andalusia; Edmund Blair, Pell City; Ben Bloodworth, Decatur; Walter C. Givhan, Safford; Tully A. Goodwin, Florala; Norman W. Harris, Decatur; Gessner T. McCorvey, Mobile, state Democratic executive committee chairman; Walter F. Miller, Tuscumbia, and Horace C. Wilkinson, Birmingham.

They were elected in the May Democratic primary on a platform pledge they would not cast the state's electoral votes for President Truman.

The States' Rights Movement

New York Times

Position Explained by an Elector on Rights of Man

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

As a Presidential Elector chosen by the State of Louisiana to vote for Thurmond and Wright, I beg to thank you for the editorial entitled "The Dixiecrat vote," appearing in your paper Nov. 7.

To find Northern thinkers who can draw the line between loyalty to a cause and surrender to an outside majority, even though they confuse an "antediluvian attitude" with a constitutional stand, is heartening.

The States' Rights movement does not oppose the submission of a constitutional amendment aimed at the poll tax as a prerequisite of voting. It does not condone lynching, because the true Southerner abhors mob murder, mob mayhem, mob violence and mob coercion, but considers the punishment for such crimes, whether individually committed or done by groups, under the reserved rights of the states is theirs.

Wed 11-24-48

Our movement carries further: it upholds the natural rights of man, the "unalienable rights" of the Declaration of Independence: some rights and powers reserved to the people, the rights not delegated by the Constitution; the rights that the Government of the Union must not "deny or disparage."

We believe in freedom of choice, which is "the first principle of freedom," and has been exemplified since time began: by Adam in the Garden of Eden; in the "chosen people"; in the selection of the twelve Apostles from that "chosen people," and in the choosing of the successor to Judas by the Disciples.

It has never been better expressed than in the words of that sermon, which President Truman once called his favorite scripture, wherein we read: "Whatsoever you would that men should do to you, do you also to them. For this is the law and the prophets." Therein lies equality of justice.

We find in the textbook of Ethics, prepared by Father Hill, S. J., and used in the schools of the Society of Jesus, this precept: "Labor unions, when no violence or injustice intervenes, are quite legitimate, and ought to be countenanced by the state. But certainly one workman is allowed to refuse his services to whatsoever employer and one employer is allowed to refuse employment to whatsoever workman."

Wed 11-24-48

This is an epitome of that principle which marks the FEPC as destructive of natural rights.

The words of Justice Harlan in Adair v. U. S. confirm our position and that of Father Hill. They read: "A part of every man's civil rights is that he be left at liberty to refuse business relations with any person whatsoever," and he quotes the great legal author Cooley as holding this view.

SAYS DIXIECRATS MOVE WON'T DIE

Wilkinson States South Has 'Just Begun to Fight'

11-11-48

Asserting that "the long subservient South has just begun to fight for its political rights," Hugh M. Wilkinson, attorney, predicted Wednesday that the States' Rights movement will not die.

Addressing the Young Men's Business club at their luncheon meeting at The Roosevelt, the States' Right leader said he laughs at the suggestion of punitive steps against the so-called rebels.

"In practical politics," he asserted, "it appears much more noble to be magnanimous and forgive the prodigal sons. More important, it keeps the votes in the family. There are people who will sound off about punishing somebody, people like Meddlesome Eleanor, who has always been antagonistic to the South; people like Jimmy Comiskey, who having nothing to lose, made a long odds bet and now want to cash in. Well, he's entitled to it, but I doubt if Jimmy gets much. As I said, such people sound off about punishment, but I'll wager the party chiefs will think twice before stirring up any more rebellion."

Wilkinson, whose talk was climaxed by rousing applause, said, "You may have noticed that some of our state political leaders walked the tight ropes very expertly in this campaign.

"Do you remember seeing our governor or even our mayor or our two Senators or many of our Congressman at the big States' Right banquet? Had Truman lost, they would have been big States' Righters on Wednesday. Now, of course, they were feeling sorry for Mr. Truman all along.

"I freely predict that Congressman Eddie Hebert, who had the guts to believe in the basic principles of the movement and put his name only on the Thurmond ticket will turn out to be the next chairman of the important House committee on un-American activities—this for his splendid work in the last Congress and despite the fact that he is a States' Righter."

Thur 11-11-48

The speaker said he has been informed that there will be a meeting of States' Rights Democrats in New Orleans in the near future.

"Of course," he added, "there will be some faces missing. Rome may be regarded as the center of Christianity today, but nobody walked its streets wearing the sign of the cross when Nero was throwing Christians to the lions."

Regardless, the important fact will remain that Louisiana and three other states served notice on the world that we are not going to be kicked around any more. If a presidential candidate wants Louisiana's ten electoral votes in 1952 they had better treat Louisiana right."

Ban Dixiecrats, ADA Urges Party

(The Associated Press)

New York, Dec. 12.—Americans for Democratic Action today urged expulsion of States' Rights Democrats from the Democratic party caucuses of both House and Senate and their removal from all important congressional committee posts.

New Orleans States

The ADA, in a statement issued from the national board meeting, asserted that their retention in important posts in Congress, would, in effect, "constitute a repudiation of the people's election mandate and a sharp blow to Southerners who loyally supported the Democratic ticket."

Mon 12-13-48

The statement also called on the Democratic leadership to name liberals to all committee vacancies, reach agreement on a plan to end Senate filibusters and limit, by legislation, the power of the House rules committee.

Leon Henderson is national chairman of ADA. Members of its executive committee include Joseph L. Rauh, Senator-Elect Hubert H. Humphrey of Minneapolis, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., and President Walter P. Reuther of the CIO United Auto Workers.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Aug. 10.—(INS)—State Senator Joseph N. Langan of Mobile urged Dixiecrats Tuesday to work toward driving President Truman from the Democratic Party rather than setting up a separate slate of candidates.

He made public a letter to Alabama Democratic Head Gessner T. McCorvey in which he urged that Alabama's 11 presidential electors run as Democrats opposed to Mr. Truman instead of electors for the States' Rights Democrats.

McCorvey is one of the 11 who have indorsed the States' Rights ticket of Governor Thurmond of South Carolina and Governor Wright of Mississippi.

Langan has called for a convention of proTruman Alabamians at Montgomery next Monday to try to put Truman electors on the Alabama November ballot.

WRIGHT DENIES LANEY DESERTED MOVEMENT

Commercial Appeal

Takes Sharp Issue With Talk About 'Runout'

LAUDS ARKANSAN'S FIGHT

By W. D. SISSON

From The Commercial Appeal Democratic Convention Bureau

PHILADELPHIA, July 15.—Governor Fielding Wright of Mississippi Thursday took sharp issue with a report in a Mississippi newspaer inferring that Gov. Ben Laney of Arkansas had "run out" on the States' Rights movement.

"Such an impression is totally untrue," Governor Wright said shortly before leaving with the rest of the Mississippi delegation for Birmingham, where they are scheduled to participate Saturday in a States' Rights planning conference.

Fri. 7-16-48

"Plenty" To Attend

Governor Wright said he could not speak for other delegations, but anyone attending the Saturday conference will see "plenty of people there."

"It is my impression that an article appearing in the Mississippi press this morning creates the impression that Governor Laney's decision to withdraw his name as the nominee for President was a runout on the Southern states which were supporting him," Governor Wright said.

"This is totally untrue, and does Governor Laney a great injustice.

"Governor Laney withdrew his name after consultation with all the Southern delegations, and announced he could not afford to run on a platform such as the one adopted by the convention Wednesday afternoon. He repudiated the Civil Rights planks specifically, and in every way acted as a Southern gentleman and statesman should.

Fight Is Praised

"The Mississippi delegation was pledged to vote for Governor Laney, but desired to withdraw after the adoption of the platform. Governor Laney released our delegation and refused to permit his name to be offered. Every Southerner should be indebted to him for the magnificent fight he has made in our behalf."

Governor Laney said late Thursday he had not decided whether he would be able to attend the Birmingham conference, but others close to him said he "mose likely will be at the meeting.

The Mississippi delegation, which dramatically walked out of the Democratic National Convention Wednesday night along with 13 members of the Alabama delegation, spent Thursday conferring and shopping, and left early Thursday night by train for Birmingham.

States' Rights Electoral Votes Show Increase

Truman Gives Up Plan For Lengthy Tour Of Dixie States

ATLANTA, (AP)— States' Rights Democrats Saturday jubilantly claimed 45 electoral votes from six states and, in addition, had a place on the general election ballot of four others.

Their campaign of opposition to President Truman's civil rights program also was bolstered during the week by Herman Talmadge's "white-supremacy" victory for the governorship of Georgia.

In the face of the new party's growing strength, Truman gave up his plans for a lengthy Southern campaign tour and, according to friends, will appear only at strategic spots for one-night stands.

The States' Rights ticket of J. Strom Thurmond and Fielding L. Wright won 10 more electorial votes in Louisiana when Democrats there removed Truman's name from the presidential ballot.

The action, in effect, gives the state's 10 unpledged electors to Thurmond, now Governor of South Carolina. However, court action in behalf of Truman is expected.

Already pledged to Thurmond for president were 11 electors from Alabama, nine from Mississippi, eight from South Carolina, four out of eight from Florida and three out of 12 from Tennessee.

Sun 9-12-48

A court action in North Carolina finally was won by the States' Rights Party. Originally denied a place on the November ballot by the board of electors, the party appealed to the state supreme court.

The court rejected the board's

However, if Thurmond needs the electors, they would be his.

In Texas, Thurmond Democrats organized a States' Rights Party and prepared to name a presidential ticket. Thurmond himself attended the meeting.

His supporters were busy, as well, in the border state of Maryland where they started a petition to get his name on the ballot. Only 2,000 names are needed but ordinarily they must be filed with the secretary of state in the Spring before the general election.

Inasmuch as the secretary of state is expected to turn down the petition, a court case may follow or the States' Righters may conduct an intensive write-in campaign.

A group of "minority" Democrats in South Carolina, meanwhile, came out for President Truman. The states electors are pledged to Thurmond but the minority members of the party's executive committee want to name rival electors pledged to Truman.

Sun 9-12-48

Friday night Judge Horace C. Wilkinson of Birmingham, Ala., predicted Thurmond and Wright could win the presidency if the election were thrown into the House of Representatives.

He pointed out that the 127 electoral votes from the 11 "solid south" states, if united behind Thurmond, conceivably could prevent either Truman or Gov Thomas E. Dewey from winning a majority.

Dixiecrat Rally Orders Negro Press Jim Crowed Or Ousted

Black Dispatch

LOUISVILLE — (ANP) — Efforts to give news coverage to the first public rally of the newly-formed "Dixiecrat" party last Wednesday night were defeated when a Louisville Defender reporter and photographer were given a choice of segregating themselves or leave the auditorium.

Oklahoma City

Okla

The rally, attended by approximately 800 states rights supporters and about 10 Negroes, was held at the Memorial auditorium. Gov. J. Storm Thurmond of South Carolina and States Rights Presidential nominee, was the main speaker.

As he was being introduced, a man, who was later identified as M. L. Sharplep, local Dixiecrat party member and copyreader for the Louisville Times, left the auditorium stage and approached Miss Nettie Alice Broaddus, Defender staff writer, and William P. Lanier. photographer, and stated:

"You will have to move to the balcony."

When Miss Broaddus and Lanier asked why, Sharpley told them "because it is a segregated meeting." He then gave them the alternative of moving into the balcony or leaving the building. They left.

Stop The Dixiecrats

The Defender

Sat 11-27-48

Chicago Ill.

THE white-supremacy conspirators who organized the Dixiecrat party and won the electoral votes of four Southern states are now attempting to crawl back into the Democratic Party and seize for themselves some of the fruits of the great Truman victory. These snakes in the grass must be stopped now.

The issue upon which these Dixiecrats based their rebellion was civil rights, no other. President Truman and the new Democratic Party are pledged to fight for civil rights legislation and these pledges have been repeated since the election. The white-supremacy Dixiecrats have renewed their vows to stop this legislation. The battle lines have been sharply drawn and we shall never rest until this army of die-hard, anti-Negro rebels is routed and destroyed.

We cannot appease the enemies of our democracy at home or abroad. We could not appease the Nazis and we are not going to appease those white-supremacists who would sacrifice our democratic system to protect their racial prejudices.

We agree with Mrs. Roosevelt when she stated last week: "I think the people who voted for President Truman did so out of approval for civil rights bill and other progressive measures and would not want to see him hampered by having important committee chairmanships in the hands of fellows who most bitterly opposed the President."

In this hour of triumph for President Truman, the editor of the Atlanta Constitution, Ralph McGill, has asked the northern press to note that "many Southerners earnestly fohght the fraudulent and hypocritical Dixiecrat movement." Mr. McGill failed to point out, however, that Negroes in the South helped to swell the Truman vote in the Southern states that remained loyal to the President and there were close to a million Negro votes cast below the Mason and Dixon.

We believe that the new Democrat Party in the South must include those Negro leaders who fought so valiantly for President. Truman. . .Those loyal white Southern Democrats should welcome the Negro leadership and join hands in building a new Democratic Party, shutting the door against the radical white-supremacists forever. No political movement can be genuinely representative of the South unless it includes Negroes.

Today we stand on the threshold of full citizenship in America and we have demonstrated again in this election how seriously we regard the responsibilities of citizenship. We have stood every test of loyalty and courage. We have perservered in the face of violence and, despite all the odds against us, we have kept the faith. Now the time has come for our emancipation from the shackles of Jim Crowism and the crippling handicaps of second class citizenship.

Editor Constitution: I am not in sympathy with those who would criticize the Birmingham convention, although I was not there. I think that every true Southerner is in sympathy with what that convention was trying to do. And I for one resent the attacks being made on Gov. Thurmond and Gov. Wright. These men accepted their nominations with very little hope of becoming President and Vice President. Acceptance on their part meant sacrifice and hardships which they were willing to undergo for their Southland. They put principle above party expediency. And so long as they are right, and we haven't the slightest doubt that they are, we would prefer seeing them go down in defeat rather than to see them kissing the boots of insincere men. We believe that right, if we stand firm for it, will triumph over wrong and that sooner or later, these controversial issues will be submitted to the individual States for solution.

Editor Constitution: May I congratulate you on your Sunday's offering, "States' Rights Hurt by Claghorns?"

I think as you do about the Dixiecrats. They are absolutely disgusting, and for the most part, as despicable as the Grand Dragon of the KKK and his dupes.

I am convinced that the resurgence of the Klan in Georgia is sponsored by schemers in one of the old political clans, and that those schemers are employing race hatred and strife as one of the instruments to achieve power once again in our great State, a ruthless power, that would turn the clock back to the days of reconstruction and out-Hitler Hitlerism.

Keep telling Georgians that the Confederacy has fallen and that we are all Americans, most of us Democrats fighing for our ideals intelligently and cleanly within our proud Party. As for me, Truman is my President, worthy of a term of office in his own right.

Both my grandfathers fought four long years for a mistaken cause; but why should I, the third generation, try to dig up issues that have damned us for three-fourths of a century? We have kept and always will retain our racial integrity in Georgia in a sane, orderly, legal way. Why worry about something that doesn't exist?

Editor's Note: Following is a partial text of Col. Marion Rushton's speech in support of the Thurmond-Wright ticket at Sidney Lanier Auditorium last night. Neither the Republican nor the Wallaceite speaker furnished a text.

Montgomery Alabama

By COL. MARION RUSHTON

IT should not be difficult to explain to this audience, nor to any American, what we States' Rights Democrats believe.

In brief, we believe that the men who founded this Republic were inspired by a stroke of genius. We believe that they worked out a plan of government, as good today as it was then, which is the fairest, simplest, and most practical government mankind has yet discovered, to enable large and diverse populations to live together in peace and unity.

Under that plan there were certain things which the Federal Government was created to do—things of national concern which it could best do and of necessity ought to control—that is, war, treaties, currency and banking, interstate and foreign commerce.

We think the founding fathers were wise in granting these powers to the Federal Government. We believe with equal firmness that all other matters were, and of right should have been, entrusted to the states.

Such a system promotes unity and full power to act in national matters, yet leaves local customs, habits and laws undisturbed. We believe that this separation of powers is the great strength—the great guaranty, the great safety valve—of the Constitution.

Fri-10-8-48

We believe that the continued existence of this nation as a free people, responsible to ourselves rather than to some bureau in Washington, depends upons its preservation.

We think that this distinction between state and Federal power is important to every liberty-loving man or woman in this country, whether living in the North or in the South.

We know that it is of transcendent importance to us in the South because, by the accident of history and geography, we have on our hands a peculiar and special problem—one with which our fathers, our grandfathers, and our great-grandfathers have struggled for over 200 years.

I am not here tonight to debate that problem, though I do not fear to do so. If I did, I should contend as Senator Borah did, that "the Southern people have met the race problem and dealt with it with greater patience, greater tolerance, greater intellignce and greater success than any people in recorded history, daling with a problem of similar nature.

Dixiecrats of Louisiana Join the Hi-Jacking Gang

The Courier-Journal
Louisville, Ky

THE Democratic official organization in Louisiana has seceded from the national party. That State's central committee substitutes the names of Thurmond and Wright for those of Truman and Barkley as the party's candidates. Thus in effect it has taken over by force the familiar processes of political determination.

For in spite of their bland announcement that they are the Democratic Party, at least in their State, and so can do what they please about nominees, the Louisiana politicians must know that their title has no substance. The Democratic nominees are Truman and Barkley, selected by a national convention in which Louisiana delegates participated. No local action can change this fact. Sun 9-12-48

Actually, there is no moral difference between the Louisiana committee's action and seizure of government without popular sanction. There is certainly no difference in the mood of violence and ruthlessness involved in one or the other. As tempers are today, Thurmond and Wright may win in a Louisiana test with Truman and Barkley. But the test should be made as an issue before the people.

What the Louisianans, what Dixiecrats everywhere are after doing, is, of course, to show 'em. In a rankling and blind sense of inferiority, they are after proving that what they could not do in an open clash, face to face, they can do by an assault from the rear, a stab in the back. Sun 9-12-48

The action in Louisiana is the course which the States' Rights Democrats frankly said, at their conference in Birmingham, they would take. This is not to go to the time, cost and labor it would take to fight it out with rival ballots, Truman and Barkley against Thurmond and Wright. It is to persuade State central committees and State conventions to instruct their electors to vote against the nominees of the Philadelphia convention.

It is, in short, a job of political hi-jacking. It is an intention which does the South no credit, either as to political integrity, sportsmanship or concern for the American way. They plan to do it, as they have succeeded so far in Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina and Alabama, not because it is right but because the constitutional provision on the independence of electors seems to say they can do it.

However, the Constitution is yet to be interpreted on this point in light of the moral obligation which until the last four years had come to be universally accepted—the obligation of electors to support the nominees of the party in whose name they were chosen. The custom to which the Dixiecrats now would go back is the custom of a day when electoral processes in the United States were anything but democratic. In that day—say, before 1824, when the "independent elector" theory was generally discarded—electors were chosen in six States by legislatures. In the other 18 States popular elections were popular only in name. Voters must have qualified by property ownership, money and a large tax payments.

If the old custom was a travesty on democracy, so is the States' Rights Party of 1948 a travesty on political parties. It stands for nothing, offers nothing by way of platform declarations touching on problems at home or in the world. It is the expression of hysteria. Its action and intentions, as shown in the Louisiana case, are the ways of oligarchy. It invokes ignorance, prejudice and vengeance against a party whose strength in the last 16 years has kept Southern politicians in national power through seniority in Congress. Sun 9-12-48

In the fantastic notion of regaining a control it never really had, it would destroy the party whose program from 1933 on has bailed its farmers out of debt, fed people who would have starved for all that their localities could or would have done, and made the economic improvement of the South, of all regions, a major enterprise and a dedication. Louisiana's professional politicians, whose subservience to the vested interests of oil, sulphur, sugar, lumber and power was all too well revealed in the support of the Longs' returns to power, make plain enough the real anatomy of the Dixiecrat movement.

Who's That A-Knocking At the Democrats' Door?

Courier Journal
Mon 11-8-48

THE facts of political life have dawned on the Dixiecrats. Dispatches tell how, balked of revenge and chastened by President Truman's victory, finding themselves without a party, they are knocking at the door, asking for readmittance to the old family fold.

If this is the case, it is a story that shows the sordid side of politics. Seeing that the Democratic Party has moved triumphantly away from them, and this in despite of their avowed efforts to smash Harry Truman and the party with him, they see also a danger of losing the spoils of Democratic victory. These are the patronage, the seniority, the chances of support for their local ambitions by the now heartened and aroused regulars, the participation in party councils and conventions.

Louisville, Ky

Nobody who was politically knowing had doubted the inner purpose of the States' Righters' revolt. Theirs had been a callous calculation from the start. They had believed, like so many others, that this was the Republicans' year, and that the benefits which would have come with continued Democratic tenure were lost anyhow. It was the time for Southern conservatives to do what they had wanted to do for some ten years; that is, to throw their weight against the New Dealish tendencies of their old party.

If they could capture control of State organizations, they could go, they thought, to a shattered national party and drive a bargain for their return, for the continued solidity of the South. All this is not mere surmise. The shape of the plan was openly described in every conference they held. The high principles extolled by their orators, the incitements to racial tradition, were for the populace, the voters. There were some shrewd operators behind the scenes—the same who began toying with the idea of hi-jacking electoral votes as far back as 1940.

How different things look today! Henry Wallace purged the Democratic Party of a radical leftish cancer: the States Righters purged it of the Bourbons, those partners of the "unholy alliance" with Republicans in Congress. Out of the Truman victory the party emerges the stronger and more homogeneous. It would be a loss of this substantial advantage, a slap at the Southerners who remained loyal as Democrats in face of pressures and threats by the rebels, if all were forgiven and forgotten. It would be appeasement that would cost dearly in terms of newly won prestige.

The Supreme Court Heaps Coals of Fire

Courier-Journal
Thurs 10-7-48
Louisville, Ky

ONE of the routine declamations of the Southern politician is his demand that the Federal Government keep its meddling hands out of local election processes. With fire in his eyes he moves into this song and dance at the drop of a bill in Congress to outlaw the poll tax. He warns against a menace to democracy and self-government. The Constitution is being violated. A blow is aimed at the heart of the compact between sovereign States.

Now, however, the Supreme Court reminds him in effect that he can't have his States' rights and eat them too. He can't have it both ways, on one hand insisting on the authority of a State to handle its own election rules; on the other, rushing to a Federal judge when things look dark in his local scene.

The reminder comes in the disputed contest between Lyndon Johnson and Coke Stevenson for the nomination for senator from Texas. Eight justices act as one in throwing out the appeal of Mr. Stevenson, former Governor of Texas, to keep the name of Mr. Johnson off the November ballot as the choice of Texas Democrats. Thus they uphold Justice Black, who threw out Stevenson's petition a week ago and warned Federal district courts to stop umpiring local election results. It was a Federal judge in Texas who had granted Stevenson's original petition for injunction to keep his opponent off the ballot, though Johnson had been certified as the nominee by the State party convention.

Thurs 10-7-48

The reminder seems reasonable enough. There appears a kind of poetic justice in it, when you recall the super-heated declaration of principles by the Dixiecrats at their convention in Birmingham. "The executive department of the government," they declared in one flaming passage, "is promoting the gradual but certain growth of a totalitarian state by domination and control of a politically-minded Supreme Court. As examples of the threat to our form of government (it) has asserted national dominion and control of submerged oil-bearing lands . . . schools in Oklahoma and Missouri, primary elections in Texas, South Carolina and Louisiana . . ."

The Supreme Court's action points up a truth that must generally have been plain enough for some time. This is that the furious cry for States' rights though the heavens fall—the battle-cry of the Thurmond-Wright campaign of sectionalism—is usually a thing of fraud, weakness and political expediency, a concoction of motives rather than of principles.

We are aware, of course, that we may be unjust to Mr. Stevenson in all this. There is nothing in the evidence relevant to this case to show that he has ever burned for States' rights; but as a former Governor of Texas, the odds are that he would have been as stout as the next one in their nominal defense. At any rate, the Supreme Court is insisting that there are times when you have to take States' rights and like 'em, whether or no.

THE N. Y. TIMES ESTIMATE

The Southern political rebellion was not well understood in the nation in the beginning and they minimized it. But its significance is being grasped now and the rebellion has the status of a page one, top head story in The New York Times.

The Times' story Monday for example, is headlined, "Southern Revolt, Gaining Strength, Aids Republicans." "Henry Wallace and Thurmond make it virtually certain," The Times says, "that Mr. Truman will lose at least 45 of the 127 electoral votes of the 11 states that make up the usually Democratic Solid South." It makes The Times think of 1912 when Teddy Roosevelt gouged so much Republican flesh out of the Taft haunch.

Thur 9-16-48

The Times made this report on Southern states:

Montgomery Ala

ALABAMA—Out of the bag for Truman. The possibility of Dewey carrying Alabama was given as "not too remote."

GEORGIA—Truman will not get Georgia's vote; it will go to Thurmond or some other Democrat.

FLORIDA—The eight electors are equally divided between Truman and Thurmond. Republicans believe they have a good chance.

KENTUCKY—Thurmond will get a flattering vote, but Truman will run far ahead of him.

MISSISSIPPI—The works for Thurmond.

NORTH CAROLINA—Cold to the Thurmond ticket, but he will appear on the ballot.

OKLAHOMA—Truman, even if Thurmond is able to make the ballot.

SOUTH CAROLINA—Strongly for Thurmond, the governor.

TENNESSEE—A convention will decide today whether or not the Thurmond ticket will be on the ballot. What worries the Democrats is not Thurmond, but the threat of the Republican Acuff, G. O. P. string band clown.

TEXAS—Truman.

VIRGINIA—Republican hopes are high Thurmond will not appear on the ballot.

To the Editor:

"What are you going to do now, Williams, dig a hole and climb in it?" That is the general nature of questions being asked me. Last February I qualified as a candidate for delegate to the Democratic National Convention, not because I was an outstanding citizen or a crackerjack politician, but because I had certain ideas I believed in deeply and I wanted to present them to the people for what they were worth.

In my qualifying statement and before the formal revolt, I said that I would not support Truman unless the South received concessions from the party. I joined the walkout candidates and if I had been elected I would have proudly walked out. If the party parted from Jefferson's ideals and I could not support its candidate, the honorable thing for me to do would be to leave the convention.

After the Birmingham convention I preached states' rights to everyone I met. While living in Washington, D. C., I organized a states' rights club at George Washington University. I returned to the University of Alabama and carried on my fight with all of my energy.

I imagine this states' rights move means different things to different people. To some "white supremacy"; others "tidewater oil"; others "ultra-conservatism." But, to me, it is a courageous fight for a principle, a principle of government that must be maintained for the preservation of our constitution.

I supported this movement for one other reason. For years the South has gone solidly Democratic and naturally the Northern party heads have come to take the South for granted. The Democratic Party makes concessions to Negro minorities in New York, but none to the millions of Southerners. I had hoped that the South would go three ways this election — Republican, Democratic and States' Rights. If it had done so there would be more bargaining for the South's votes in 1952.

As for reprisals against us, it would be foolish. I grant that Truman owes us nothing, but we can no longer be considered "in the bag" for any party. He can kick the other Southern states around as he pleases, but, when it comes to Alabama, he must watch his step because we have proved that we will not blindly follow any party.

The suggestion by Sen. Ellender that Thurmond electoral votes be cast for Truman shows the general purpose for many people voting for and supporting Truman. He wants us to cast our votes for Truman so that we will be in line for a large slice of the Truman pie. He can take his plan and get his pie. We voted for Thurmond; we are proud we did so, and we want our electoral votes cast for Thurmond. We will cook our own pie (or goose).

Wed 11-17-48

There seems to be quite a few questions about the future of states' rights Democrats. The number of questions show just how many people never understood this movement. It is a fight within the party and will continue until we win our battle. I cannot say what steps will be taken by heads of the States' Rights Democratic organization, but I think the permanent organization should be maintained, ready for action if neded. There isn't much we can do until next election. Maybe by then we will not even be needed.

Since the rest of the country is behind Truman, I think that we states' righters should pledge our support to him also. This would add to the unity of the country, state and party. It is bad to start out angry at a person you have to live with for four years. Of course, if things get too rough for us we would be forced to part company with him and fight him through our organization. Some doubt that we are in a position to deal with Truman, but, don't forget that the Democratic Party will be dependent upon us in Congress and in '52. ROY E. WILLIAMS.

PROSPECTS FOR SECOND PLACE

The Advertiser
Tues 8-3-48
Montgomery Ala

Some discount the claim that the Thurmond-Wright ticket will outrun Truman and Barkley in November. Yet it is possible—bearing in mind that we are dealing with electoral votes and not the popular vote. It is possible for a candidate to garner a substantial popular vote total and yet get few electoral votes. Another whose strength is concentrated in such a way as to enable him to carry a bloc of states may make a far better showing in the electoral college with a much smaller total popular vote.

Consider that other memorable Southern bolt, on the eve of the Civil War. In the 1860 election the Dixiecrat candidate of that day, John C. Breckinridge, ran second to Lincoln, the victor. And Stephen A. Douglas, running on the national Democratic ticket in a role comparable to that of Truman today, finished a very poor fourth in a field of four.

Douglas did indeed run next to Lincoln on the popular vote—but that is not the way we choose our presidents. The Douglas vote was so dispersed that he received only 12 electoral votes—the nine votes of Missouri and three from New Jersey.

Breckinridge carried most of the Southern states and received a respectable total of 72 electoral votes, placing him next to Lincoln, who had 180. A fourth candidate, John Bell, running on a "constitutional union" ticket, fared better than Douglas. Bell carried Virginia, Tennessee and Kentucky, with a total of 39 electoral votes.

It is possible in any event that Truman will suffer the worst defeat in November of any Democrat since Reconstruction. Although many of our presidential elections in the last 50 years have been landslides, the worst-defeated candidates have been Republicans.

Tues 8-3-48

This was because the Democrats, even in the darkest days, could count on the Solid South. When the party was hopelessly defeated, the Southern phalanx formed an unbreakable shield around the loser and enabled him to leave the field beaten but not annihilated.

Because the Republicans lacked any comparable nucleus, when the landslide went against them it was worse than anything the Democrats suffered. The climax of course was in 1936 when Landon carried only Maine and Vermont, with eight electoral votes.

Some of our younger voters, raised on the Roosevelt tradition of victory, may overlook the fact that there have been elections in which the Democratic ticket carried not a state outside the South. But that is what the record shows. And it is a factor in the resentment against Truman and the national Democratic organization—the fact that they have spurned the South which more than once was all that kept the Democrats from being blanked in the electoral college.

In 1920, and again in 1924, the Democratic candidates, Cox and Davis, failed to take a state above the Mason and Dixon Line. Cox even lost Tennessee. But the South gave them enough votes to total 127 for Cox and 136 for Davis. Although badly beaten, they received more electoral votes than did Willkie in 1940 or Dewey in 1944.

Tues 8-3-48

The worst defeat a Democrat has suffered since Reconstruction, in the electoral vote, was that of Al Smith in 1928. Smith actually carried two states outside the South—Massachusetts and Rhode Island—but this was more than offset by losses in the South and he received only 87 electoral votes.

Whether Truman will do as well probably depends upon how widespread the Dixie revolt becomes by November.

I notice with a great deal of regret the squabbling and dissension that is taking place among us over the "Dixiecratic" proposition. It is alright to squabble and fight politically over our state and county elections. That is a family affair that concerns no one but us.

The national situation concerning our present crisis is far too serious a matter to be divided on. It will take the same unity that we have always given to the old Democratic Party to get the results we want. The old Democratic Party of the South is gone. It has been converted into a "Yankee organization" that does not deserve the name "Democratic," as we have always known it.

It has given me a lot of respect for The Advertiser to see the safe, conservative stand it has taken in this matter. It has not been hysterical and yet it wants to find a logical solution. My ideas may be too Utopian to be worth anything, but I believe if the Solid South will unite behind a party of its own with the same unity and loyalty, we have always given the old party, we can develop a balance of power that will command the respect of both the Republicans and Yankee Democrats.

We in the South have never been given any consideration by either party, because the Republicans know they couldn't get us and the Democrats thought we belonged to them, to be led around like a pig with a ring in his nose.

It doesn't make any difference what such a party is named it can be called the Dixiecratic, the Southern Democratic, or any other name just so it stands for the old original things the old Democratic Party always stood for, states rights, fairness and justice. "A rose by any name will smell as sweet" and if we will quit our squabbling, drop state politics and personal animosities, when we cross the Mason and Dixon line and all pull together, we can have an organization that will carry its weight anywhere.

We may not develop enough strength for a long time to elect a president but we can elect representatives and senators who will work in a bloc and carry a balance of power in the Senate and in national elections we can tell the other parties that we owe no allegiance to either of them but will go with the one that offers the most to the South.

7-29-48

Don't think for a minute that either the Republican Party or the Yankee Democratic Party is a philanthropic institution. They are both controlled by leaders who are out for money and power and anyone who can help them get in will be given due consideration. They don't care for the Negro as such. Their only interest in his welfare is to get his vote. To prove this, why don't they get all hot and bothered about the poor Indian. Because none of them vote and there is nothing to gain by going to bat for his "civil rights." I guess we never can get our people to come together, though. So all I can say is that my vote and my influence, if I have any, will be Dixiecratic until something better comes along. DR. H. C. FOUNTAIN.

No Pulsing and Singing of the Blood

Thur 10-21-48

Atlanta, Ga.

Remembering the emotions and the singing and pulsing of the blood we all knew during the campaigns of Woodrow Wilson and of Franklin D. Roosevelt, this present parade of candidates reveals an almost shocking lack of enthusiasm for any candidate.

I have an idea that the popular vote may be relatively close, with Thomas E. Dewey scoring a most impressive electoral college victory. There are enough States in the East and West already assured for Dewey to give him a heavy electoral majority. What the South does will be interesting, but will not affect the outcome.

While the major candidates create emotions, they are not of the sort which causes the voter to feel like putting down all he has and following his candidate to the wars. Thomas E. Dewey arouses a growing respect and a gnawing, fretting worry as to whether he will be able to keep off the predatory hounds which bay in the growing crescendo of exultant victory. Harry S. Truman evokes a certain pity. He is so obviously sincere; so transparently tugged hither and yon by those who tell him they know politics better than he. The people who hear him are sympathetic and feel drawn to the man, but not to the candidate. In the case of Dewey they are drawn to the candidate, not to the man. This in itself may be significant. The people want a program and an administration of it. Not emotions. They have had a surfeit of emotions. Wallace arouses a growing contempt, because of his hypocrisy and dishonesty in thought.

Pitiable

But of them all, Strom Thurmond emerges as the most pitiable. He is a man troubled, as we all are. He is torn, as many are, by the recognition that the Negro must have legal equality in education, schools and other factors of citizenship, and he vaguely yearns to give him that, but he is afraid of it and afraid to trust his instincts and his desire to do the right thing. That is the true essence of tragedy.

Here we are up against the most complex and momentous political decisions of our time. Both Truman and Dewey are discussing the dominant issues of housing, inflation, tidelands oil, public power, the future of the Taft-Hartley Act and all that is bound up therein.

Towering above it all, leering forth from the mushroom atomic cloud loosed from the bottle of force by the Jinni science, is the problem of our foreign policy and of world peace.

But, none of these is for Thurmond.

Thur 10-21-48

Rights

In all his goings about, he is a pathetically sincere Jeremiah, thrust suddenly from 1856 into 1948, crying about Federal interference, and States' rights.

It is a little silly, really, when one considers that Gov. Strom Thurmond himself, and all those behind the Dixiecrats, have eagerly aided and abetted "interference" with States' rights. Federal "interference" was all right in bringing in REA and TVA. We sought it in support of cotton prices, in pegging tobacco; in soil conservation payments; in flood control; in public works; the various aids to agriculture; for aid in public health; for increasing Federal aid to roads, and so on. And it was not so many years ago that Southern Representatives, almost without a dissenting vote, helped create a Federal police force with power to reach into every home and which had the authority to ignore State police powers.

History

The whole history of our region, because of its poverty, has been a loud cry for "more Federal participation," and the many schoolhouses, courthouses, community buildings, bridges, city halls and parks, built by the late PWA and WPA, testify to an invasion of States' rights.

Strom Thurmond and his crowd are trying to say the only issue is "nigger." There are about 14,000,000 Negroes in the United States and it is fantastic to label them all as "nigger"—with all that word connotes. Fitting them into the guarantees of the Constitution of the United States requires the best that is in us, not the worst. Because we must do that job properly and justly. Even the most constant and earnest liberal realizes that the FEPC will do the Negro more harm than good. Federal imposition of the FEPC would be even more unworkable and corrupting than was Federal imposition of the prohibition law, which the Dixiecrats of that day sought and got. To impose the FEPC on the Negro would not merely be unconstitutional, and harmful, but unworkable. But, for Strom Thurmond to go about the country talking only about the FEPC and the invasion of States' rights is exactly as fraudulent as if the carnival barker and his shills were to try and foist off the two-headed calf as a threat to all calves or the bearded woman as a fate about to be imposed upon all beautiful womanhood.

We can fight this thing out in our own two parties, or we can split them up and divide our strength and get nowhere.

There is a very real issue of States' rights. It is a serious question which Gov. Earl Warren is discussing. But we will lose the States' rights battle if we take the issue of States' rights to mean Thurmond's polite phrase, "minority groups," which is his polite way of avoiding use of the word all his supporters use—"nigger."

DIXIECRATS LOSING GROUND

The Afro-American

Reports from various quarters of the South indicate all too clearly that the Dixiecrats are fighting a losing battle.

Added to their difficulties in getting their candidates' names on the ballot in several States is the fact that in a number of States — Mississippi, South Carolina and Texas among them—they have been repudiated by top officials of the Democratic Party.

Sat 8-21-48

The "revolt" which was predicted during the Democratic convention in Philadelphia last month certainly has not materialized, and, as we have pointed out before, it is not likely that it will to any sizeable degree.

(34d)

While resentment against President Truman persists in the South, it is not sufficiently organized to be considered a serious threat. Aside from tradition, a Southern party regular is little different from his counterpart in other sections of the nation.

Baltimore Md.

For all practical purposes, there still is only one party in the South and the practical politicians know that patronage and influence can best be obtained through established channels. They, therefore, are not willing to gamble on a will-o'-the-wisp proposition such as offered by the Dixiecrats.

The leadership of the Dixiecrats is extremely weak and their finances are uncertain. And while they harp on States' Rights, they are not consistent about it.

They oppose antilynching, anti-poll tax and fair employment practice legislation, but they favor Federal aid to education and other similar measures from which they may benefit by the allocation of Federal funds.

To save their political skins, Southern politicians must look ahead four years. They must also take cognizance of the growing world trend to accord full human rights to all, regardless of color, creed or political affiliation.

Those who consider the situation objectively realize quickly that the program of the Dixiecrats is out of step. The slogan of "white supremacy" is outmoded. That is why the Thurmond-Wright ticket isn't causing us to lose a wink of sleep.

The Nation

Sat 11-20-48

New York N.Y.

BARELY RECOVERED FROM THE SHOCK OF the Truman victory, the Dixiecrats are now letting it be known that they were merely waging a "family fight," and Senator-elect Russell Long has kindly paid tribute to President Truman for renouncing all malice. As Huey's son interprets the President's comment. "It leaves the way open for anyone to come back who wishes." We hope not. The Dixiecrats, after all, have nothing in common with the Democratic Party as Mr. Truman presented it during the campaign, and they would surely have shown him no mercy if the election had been thrown into the House, as they planned. There is emotional ground for Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt's bold advice to oust all Dixiecrats from the party, or rather to recognize their own violent withdrawal as permanent. Inasmuch as a sweeping purge of this sort might cost the Democrats the Senate, however, and possibly the House as well, party leaders are justified in looking upon such a course as a plain case of cutting off the nose to spite the face. Senator McGrath, Democratic national chairman, probably struck a more reasonable note when he made the distinction between "misdemeanors," which he said might be forgiven, and "mortal sins," which would not. Mr. McGrath also drew a line between separating active Dixiecrats from appointive jobs wherever feasible and denying them committee chairmanships in Congress. The first course is simple enough, but the second would call for the death of the seniority system at the hands of a majority in each house. Highly desirable as it is, that is a tall order and one not to be executed at the crack of a Presidential whip.

South's Problem

The Constitution

Editor Constitution: Should the so-called "civil rights" legislation be enacted we will have to face the problem that [illegible] promoted plank of the Northern-controlled parties politico will surely cause. We must face this crisis as good, level-headed Americans and if principle-guided, we shall shine forth as the Southern Cross and not the KKK cross.

State laws cannot countermand Federal rulings, but we can be the masters of our own fate in this problem by enacting State laws, backed by strong powers of enforcement, raising the sanitary and mental standards of the South. Private employers should set high hygienic requirements for their employees. If the Northern-controlled Congress does not see fit to provide us with needed aid to education, then we will "paddle our own canoe" and "clean up our own back yard," which already looks much more in order than the Yankee yards.

States' Rights Efforts Lead To GOP Victory, Resolution Declares

Tactics Condemned

AFL, CIO And Railroad Units Ask Pro-Truman Electors On Fall Ballot

Alabama labor leaders Sunday condemned the "dictatorial tactics and objectives" of the states' rights Democratic party.

In a resolution adopted in a special meeting here behind closed doors, they declared the states' rights movement would "insure the election of the nominess of the Republican party."

The meeting, attended by top-level officials of the Alabama Federation of Labor, the State CIO and the Alabama Brotherhood of Railway Workers, pledged labor's support to a move to place pro-Truman electors on the November ballot.

State Senator Joseph N. Langan of Mobile, who is spearheading the pro-Truman drive, addressed the session. He said he would do all he could to give labor a chance to vote for the national Democratic nominees, President Truman and Senator Barkley of Kentucky.

To Stay Over

Langan has called a meeting of pro-Truman Democrats here Monday morning, and many of the labor leaders indicated they would stay over for the convention.

The resolution adopted Sunday by the labor leaders said "certain discredited and repudiated politicians within Alabama have succeeded through subterfuge and other devious methods in circumventing the best interest and wishes of all the people."

It said the "issues now being put forth by this discredited group were not clearly defined" in the recent primaries.

"This certain group of co-called Democrats in Alabama has arbitrarily denied the people of Alabama of their constitutional right to cast their ballots for the nominees of their choice," the resolution said.

It charged the anti-Truman Democrats with bolting the national party and attempting to lead the people of Alabama out of the national organization.

Aid Republicans

"By so doing," it continued, "(they) deliberately insure the election of the nominees of the national Republican party."

The union officials resolved that "accredited representatives of all groups of organized labor in Alabama . . . do condemn the dictatorial tactics and objectives of these so-called Democrats to confuse and mislead the people . . . into unconsciously contributing to the election of a Republican president."

Among the 50 or more labor officials attending the meeting were:

Mon 8-16-48

Jack Brock, Birmingham, president of the Alabama Federation of Labor; Carey E. Haigler, Birmingham, State CIO director; Hugh Brown, Birmingham, secretary-treasurer of the Alabama Federation of Labor and president of its political action committee.

H. E. Sullivan, Montgomery, chairman of the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks' legislative committee; M. O. Jones, Mobile, executive committeeman of the political education league (AFL); Mrs. Mary Hendricks, Selma, state representative of the Ladies Auxiliary of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen.

William Mitch, Birmingham, president of the State United Mine Workers; R. B. Parr, Birmingham, president of the State United Steelworkers (CIO); R. T. Postman, Montgomery, representing C. B. Blankinship of Birmingham, state director of the Communication Workers, and J. P. Knight, Selma, chairman of the legislative branch of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen.

States' Rights Candidate Tells Marianna Hearers They Have Nothing To Lose

Organization Prepares To Launch Immediate Campaign To Place On Ticket—'Can't Afford To Wait'

Memphis Tenn.

By DICK ALLEN
Staff Correspondent

MARIANNA, Ark., Aug. 26.—Gov. J. Strom Thurmond, States' Rights Democrats' candidate for President, Thursday night declared Arkansas had "nothing to lose and everything to gain by rallying solidly behind the American Democracy of the States' Rights ticket."

Simultaneously, the States' Rights organization announced it would not wait on action of the Arkansas Democratic convention in Little Rock next month for the selection of presidential electors. The group will begin an immediate campaign to have their States' Rights electors placed on the Arkansas ballot by petition.

Can't Afford To Wait

"We are hopeful the convention will indorse our candidates and nominate electors pledged to cast votes for Thurmond and Wright," Wallace W. Wright, cochairman of the States' Rights Democrats Executive Committee declared, shortly before Governor Thurmond made his address. "But we cannot afford to await the action of that convention to open our campaign."

He said a States' Rights headquarters would be opened in Little Rock soon, and that petitions would be circulated throughout Arkansas next week to place Thurmond-Wright electors on the General Election ballot.

Governor Thurmond, in an address broadcast from Marianna over radio stations in Arkansas, Louisiana, Tennessee and Alabama, declared the States' Rights ticket "is the only ticket for Arkansas to support."

Fri 8-27-48

He said a vote for either Dewey or Truman in November would be an invitation for passage in January "of all those vicious bills" contained in the civil rights proposals advocated by both the Republican and Democratic parties.

Appeals to Convention

The South Carolina chief executive called on the Arkansas Democratic Convention, which meets in Little Rock next month, to name electors pledged to support the States' Rights ticket "and make us the regular nominees of the Democratic Party."

"The people of Alabama, Mississippi and South Carolina remember that through the years Arkansas never has shirked from taking her place shoulder-to-shoulder with us in all our common struggles," Governor Thurmond declared. "We cannot believe she will be in the enemy's camp when the ballots are tolled in November."

The presidential candidate's speech climaxed his two-day visit in Arkansas.

Here at the invitation of John Daggett, Marianna attorney, executive director of the Arkansas Free Enterprise Association, and a member of the States' Rights Democrats Executive Committee, Governor Thurmond and his wife arrived in Marianna Wednesday morning. He was guest at a luncheon Wednesday at which some 150 official delegates to the state Democratic convention also attended.

Theme of Attack

Throughout Governor Thurmond's address he lambasted what he called an increasing trend toward centralized government in Washington and an utter disregard for the Constitution's Bill of Rights.

"We who are Democrats," he said, "have faithfully adhered to the doctrine of Jefferson and the great leaders who came after him. But evil days have fallen now on American political life. Three national conventions met in Philadelphia in 1948. All three committed themselves to principles which are subversive to the American way of life under our Constitution."

He said those who advocate the centralization of all political power in the Federal Government and who seek to destroy the reserved rights of the states are using for their purpose the so-called Civil Rights program. He said the proposed AntiPoll Tax Bill is "a measure which acts to reform election laws through Federal intervention, despite the fact that one of those matters which the Bill of Rights reserves to the states is the regulation of qualifications for voting."

"It is obvious that any kind of Federal AntiPoll Tax Law is more than a measure to end poll taxes," Governor Thurmond declared. "It is a measure which would tear down that Bill of Rights barrier which prevents the ever-expanding horde of Washington officials from dickering with our elections."

Fri 8-27-48

Points To Europe

He called the proposed Anti-Lynch Bill a "Federal police measure," declaring that both Democrats and Republicans were promoting the measure because "it would be just as effective as an opening wedge toward the establishment of a Federal police power such as has been the terror of the common man of Europe for centuries."

Governor Thurmond declared the proposed Federal program to force mingling of the races is an attempt to stir up racial and religious hatred for political advantage.

Governor Thurmond charged that of all the schemes to "break down our state lines and turn our Government into some kind of dictatorship, the most vicious and un-American is the plan to place all private employers and workers under political control."

He asserted the proposed Fair Employment Practices Commission Law was "made to order for Communists and their fellow-travelers."

Governor Thurmond described the three main objectives of the States' Rights Democrats as:

To furnish the political opposition to a further centralization of power on the banks of the Potomac; to arouse the American people to a realization that the destruction of Constitutional government is threatened by the catering of both the Democratic and Republican parties to the demands of minority blocs, and to restore the South to its rightful position in the political life of the Nation.

He declared the States' Rights ticket would receive 100 votes in the electoral college, adding that if Truman and Dewey should split up the electoral votes in the states outside the South "then the election will be thrown into the House of Representatives, where each state will have one vote. The states which vote with us will then have the balance of power."

Governor Thurmond asserted:

"The States' Rights ticket is the only one people can vote for to protest the capture of their liberties by Federal political autocracy."

States' Righters Say $540 Was Largest Gift

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—The largest contribution from an individual received by the States' Rights Democrats before August 31 was $540, the national headquarters disclosed here yesterday.

Contributions, headquarters reported, totaled $13,449.78 from the time the national organization was formed on Aug. 4, until the end of the month.

9-21-48

For the same period, expenditures were listed as $14,890.53. This created an overdraft then on the books of $1,440.75. The account continued into September and the overdraft was absorbed by September assets.

Simultaneously with release of the financial report, States Rights headquarters here issued a statement from Merritt H. Gibson, Director of the national campaign, who was in Houston, Texas.

The statement quoted Gibson as saying:

"It is not true that (H. R.) Cullen contributed one penny to the national States' Rights campaign. All receipts will be reported according to law and those reports will be self-explanatory."

The headquarters said the Gibson statement was a denial of a report by Columnist Drew Pearson in Washington that the campaign had received a $100,000 contribution fro mCullen, a Texan oil man.

Washington Calling

Exploiting Wealth Of Tideland Oil

Montgomery Ala

• WASHINGTON.

THE miserable, petty practice of congressmen who compel their employes to kick back part of their salaries or who put names on the congressional payroll of those who perform no service should be exposed. Rep. J. Parnell Thomas, of New Jersey, is involved and now similar charges have been brought against Rep. Alvin O'Konski, of Wisconsin.

But this does seem petty indeed alongside the need for investigation of what may well be a scandal of major proportions. Ever since the middle of the Summer rumors have persisted that the oil lobby would spend millions of dollars to defeat President Truman.

Their interest was in the vast wealth of tideland oil which they are now exploiting. President Truman has stood firm for keeping the oil in the tidal waters under Federal jurisdiction. He has been backed by national defense chiefs who have argued the acute necessity for military reserves.

Thurs 11-25-48

On the other hand, the Republican platform called for turning over the tideland resources to the states. Therefore, it was essential to major oil interests to insure Truman's defeat.

How was this to be done? One way was to underwrite a revolt in the states of the normally solid South. In a close election the electoral votes of three or four Southern states might provide the margin between defeat and victory.

IN AUGUST hints came from the Democratic National Committee that oil interests in Texas were providing unlimited funds for the Dixiecrat revolt. The issue of the President's civil rights program, which had engendered deep and genuine feeling throughout the South, was a convenient battle front.

The report of expenditures by the Dixiecrat party shows nothing out of the way with respect oil. But such reports, and this is true not merely of the Dixiecrats, have tended to encroach more and more on the realm of fiction.

Comparatively at least, the Dixiecrat campaign was not a costly one. There were many sources of revenue, including the large utility companies. Perhaps the oil interests did not have to come through with any big amounts, the persistent rumors may be baseless.

But we have a right to know all that can possibly be known. This whole matter is vitally related to national security and the future of a resource that is rapidly wasting.

Thurs 11-25-48

This need not be a partisan political investigation. It is too big for that. Republicans of the conviction of Senator Charles Tobey, of New Hampshire, should be willing to join with Democrats to do the digging into what may well be a sordid piece of political business.

One of the newly elected Democratic senators, Robert Kerr, of Oklahoma, has his oil company. The Kerr-McGee Company is drilling in the Gulf of Mexico about twelve miles off the coast in the open sea. Before they were overwhelmed on Nov. 2, Republicans were proposing to investigate reports that Kerr had spent $400,000 in his primary race and would spend that much or more in his drive to defeat the Republican candidate Ross Rizley.

THE farthest operation attempted in the marginal sea is that of Magnolia Oil Company, an affiliate of Socony Vacuum, which subsequently abandoned operations 28 miles out in the Gulf of Mexico off Iberia Parish, Louisiana. The Humble Oil Company, an affiliate of Standard of New Jersey, is seven miles out. The Superior Oil Company has struck oil at 9,000 feet, 17 miles out.

The public is entitled to know the status of the great treasure of oil that lies under the tidal lands, for the Supreme Court has held that those lands belong to every citizen. If oil eight or nine thousand miles away in the Middle East is vital to our security, then how much more vital is the oil on our doorstep.

The Supreme Court decision was, however, limited to the tidelands off California. Specific suits must be filed by the Federal government to recover possession of the lands off Texas, Louisiana, and other states.

At one time Attorney General Tom Clark announced that a suit would be filed covering the Texas marginal lands. There were loud outcries from prominent Texans who filed in to protest to their fellow-Texan, Clark.

Thurs 11-25-48

In dealing with the states on the tidelands issue, the Federal government has been more than reasonable, particularly on the problem of state revenues from this source. If the public's property is to be safeguarded, action is essential on Capitol Hill and in the Department of Justice.

Drafts for '49 Platform Strong in Demand for Greater Local Control of Farms, Schools

PORTLAND, Me., Nov. 17 (AP)—The National Grange Convention started work today on a 1949 platform expected to feature a "states rights" approach on national problems.

Thurs 11-18-48

New York N.Y.

Tentative drafts of convention resolutions were strong in demands for greter local control. This was true particularly on problems relating to farming, education, health programs, waterway development, flood control and soil saving.

This stand for local control is in line with the farm organization's traditional stand. It frequently has warned that a "strong central government" soon would destroy democracy.

The Grange turned to the job of writing a new platform after granting its seventh degree to 17,008 members from various parts of the country.

This was the second highest number to be granted the degree at a national meeting. The record of 18,374 was set at Columbus, Ohio, last year.

On the controversial issue of Federal financial aid to education the Grange prepared to endorse a warning of National Master Albert S. Goss.

In his keynote address, Mr. Goss told the convention, it must "recognize the grave danger of having our school system fall under political control where the minds of our children could be moulded to suit the whim of the party in power."

The Agriculture Committee favors creation of state agricultural councils with power to coordinate work of Federal, state and local agencies handling farm programs.

Expression of Grange distrust for Federal controls could be found in resolutions opposing proposed federalization of state militias and peacetime military training.

In the matter of government control over use of land, the Grange prepared to go on record objecting to rule from Washington.

Thur 11-18-48

A resolution emphasized the need for greater effort to save the country's soil. It said this could be accomplished in part by means of land-use ordinances and by taxes on private land for building conservation projects.

Today's convention program featured award of the Grange's Community Service Prize of a fully equipped Grange hall to the Schley Grange of Hillsboro, N. C.

Greene Valley Grange, Halcott Center, N. Y., won second prize of Grange hall equipment valued at 1,500.

About 1,400 local granges in thirty-seven states competed for the prizes, which were contributed by the Sears Foundation.

LANEY LASHES STAND OF 'TRUMAN'S' PARTY

Arkansan Launches Attack Before 450 At States' Righters Dinner

Wed 11-17-48

By KENNETH TOLER

Memphis Press

From The Commercial Appeal
Jackson, Mississippi, Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Oct. 12.—President Truman's civil rights program was characterized as "the assassination of Democracy itself" here Tuesday night by Governor Laney of Arkansas at a $25 a plate States Rights Democratic Party dinner attended by approximately 450 persons.

One of the originators of the movement seeking to block the President's proposals, as well as his election, the Arkansan said the Truman program would be "the lynching of the Constitution, the crucifixion of States' Rights and the betrayal and death of personal liberty and freedom."

"Unethical Politicians"

"Can we afford to let it happen without protest?" he questioned. "Can we forget the sacrifices of those who established a nation?"

Governor Laney shared the program with James D. Arrington, editor-lawyer-mayor-humorist of Collins, who lambasted the Truman movement in Mississippi.

Governor Laney said "some well-meaning people who have not taken time to analyze the subject (civil rights proposals) are following blindly the disproved proposals of careless, unethical, politicians."

Wed 10-13-48

"For the sake of a vote, this leadership would sacrifice the integrity of themselves and the people of America. To win an election, they are ready to impose a program that has failed many times and that they do not believe in themselves.

"Those same leaders have not made any explanation as to how such proposals could be successfully operated the American way.

"If these proposals are not constitutional, if they tend toward centralized government, if they are Communistic in origin and content, if they do not conform to majority rule, if they do not accomplish the end claimed, if they are unworkable, if they are directly opposed to the foundation basic Democratic principles of our party, how can Harry Truman be a Democrat?

Calls It Amusing

How can J. Howard McGrath be a Democrat? How can those who supported the platform adopted at Philadelphia be Democrats? How can those who support Truman call themselves Democrats? Indeed, this is an amusing observation.

"There are those who say that the party must change its position, that it must be progressive. That is the position of Henry Wallace and his followers. I, too, believe in progress, but the abandonment of American principles and traditions and the substitution of doubtful, untried and tainted platforms and policies, does not mean progress to me.

"Yes, I am a Democrat. I am not a Trumanite."

Governor Laney said the changes proposed by President Truman "mean political debauchery, retrogression and degeneracy."

"It is the abandonment of the Democratic Party principles by those who support it. It is compromise to suit the occasion."

Wed 10-13-48

Governor Laney said the Sttes' Rights cause is "to save those enduring principles so long advocated by the Democratic Party. In fact, what we would to do is to save the Democratic Party, and while doing so, preserve a Nation."

Cites Purposes

"The practical politicians ask—can we elect a president? We do not know whether we can elect a president or not, but we believe that we can create respect for 30 million Southern Democrats, that we can awaken a people as to present political trends, that we can lay a basis for a sound Democratic Party, and with it all, preserve our personal and political integrity.

"Consequently, I suggest that we do some voting," Governor Laney said. "Voting for Thurmond and Wright—voting for States' Rights, voting for the preservation of respect for Southern Democrats and Americanism."

"We must now engage in the process of rebuilding the Democratic Party whih has been wrecked by disloyal members of the party. We want sane proposals. We want our party to be a Democratic Party.

"Those who are opposing Truman are making the greatest contribution to political history of the present era."

Dixie: Barrier To Totalitarianism

John T. Graves

"The South's political philosophy must, of necessity, be liberal—in the American way.

Columbia Record

The difference between an American Liberal and a national Liberal is the difference between Sam Jones and Ellis Arnall. The two men have much in common, and more apart. Arnall won Georgia's governorship by defeating the Talmadge crowd, and has now been beaten by a returning Talmadge. Jones won Louisiana's by ousting the Longs, and the Longs have come back, too. Both men made reputations in office as liberals. But Arnall is a "national liberal." He looks most to the federal scene and national favor. Sam Jones is an "American liberal." He holds himself at Lake Charles true to our most American principle. Some call it that principle home rule, some local self-government. Sam Jones calls it States' Rights. I am proud to present this famous American liberal today in example of the fact that the States' Rights movement is no one-sided cause but a move to preserve the American frame in which all our causes must be sought.

By SAM H. JONES
Former Governor Of Louisiana

Columbia S.C

In 1943, while governor, speaking at Vicksburg, I made this statement: "We of the South would prefer to solve our social economic and poitical problems within the Democratic Party, but if we canont do so, I, for one, am ready to go outside the party for a solution." The press, reporting that speech, said: "Ten thousand people present rose to their feet in applause." From that time forward I have not had the slightest doubt that, in the minds of the southern people, as distinguished from the politicians, there is going on a political change or evolution that cannot and will not be stopped.

Its first manifestation was the fight of southerners at the 1944 Chicago democratic convention to keep Wallace off the ticket for vice president. And it was southerners who did the job—not the big city bosses, nor the "clear it with Hillman" people. Had not the southerners sounded the alarm, the big-city bosses would have gone happily and stupidly along with Wallace. And Wallace would have been, today, the President of the United States.

The second manifestation is the fight today. It is in truth a fight for states' rights and against regimentation. It is as logical in the North as in the South, in New England as in Dixie. Unless it succeeds we may well see the end of American political practices, as they have existed from Jefferson down—and substitution of the centralized police state idea which has meant the death knell of every country that adopted it, with the exception of Russia whose doom is yet to come.

Under the present political setup, only the South can stop the trend toward collectivism and totalitarianism. Eliminate the South from consideration and you have two political parties vying for control. Each must depend on the "communist fringe" for victory. Each must cater to that "fringe vote." In election after election, we have moved closer to the communist objectives, not because of the will of the people, but because a small minority is skillfully using its balance of power. This has happened because the South has been effectively "blocked off" from active participation in national affairs.

Sat 9-25-48

The success of these collectivists depends on the continued inactivity of southerners. It is no wonder that cold water is poured from communist sources on the South's fight. The Wallace-ites know the South stopped their man in 1944. They know they have only this region to fear.

Border states have the two-party system. But the states' rights movement affords the only practical vehicle by which deep southerners can express themselves. It must be utilized if we are to convince Democrats and Republicans alike that henceworth we shall think for ourselves and act for ourselves. This is not a racial issue, nor are those who constittue the Southern states' rights movemet predominately reactionary, or anti-labor. They are not even the conservative bourbon type we hear so much about. Eliminate the Negro question, and the majority of southerners are liberal and progressive. This is always true of any region a large number of whose people are underprivileged. Such people are never satisfied with the status quo. But the South insists on moving forward under the banner of American political philosophy and by the use of American institutions and methods. President Truman's FEPC regimentation and police state force bills do not fit Southern ideas of Americanism. Thus we have reached an historical impasse which may well re-form American political lines.

Sat 9-25-48

The 1948 fight is merely the skirmish which will lead to the main battle of 1952 or 1956. In one of these two future elections the left-wingers will make their all-out bid for the control of America. But "the 1948 skirmish" will determine whether their appeal is sufficient to seize and maintain control of the machinery of one of our major political parties. It will also determine whether southerners are ready to act logically to prevent the control of our government by those embracing foreign ideologies.

It is the job of the South "to hold the line" until either the national Democrats or the Republicans come to their senses sufficiently to quit "playing with fire." If the existing parties are so decadent as to be unable to resist these un-American encroachments; if they are incapable of bold and aggressive action to resist these undermining influences,—then the new states' rights movement must take upon itself the task of uniting and welding together those of like faith throughout the nation.

Republicans Wonder If He Had 'Working Agreement' With The Reds During 1944 Campaign—Brannan Flays Foes

By D. HAROLD OLIVER
Associated Press Staff Writer

WASHINGTON, Sept. 3—A Democratic National Committee official suggested Friday that "any and all" committee members who are supporting the States' Rights presidential ticket should resign from the committee.

William J. Primm Jr., assistant to National Chairman J. Howard McGrath, made the proposal. He said such Democrats have "left the Democratic Party."

Brannan Hits Dewey

Primm's statement came in the midst of a controversy between Republicans and Democrats over Communist Party indorsement of the Roosevelt Truman ticket in 1944.

Also, Secretary of Agriculture Brannan spoke out again on the issue of Government support of some farm prices. Brannan said the G.O.P. presidential nominee, Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, and other party leaders want to destroy these supports by blaming them for high food prices.

G.O.P. National Chairman Hugh D. Scott Jr., demanded that President Truman say whether he accepted Communist indorsement as Mr. Roosevelt's running mate. The Democratic National Committee replied that President Roosevelt renounced such support before his fourth term election.

Primm's resignation proposal referred specifically to Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, States' Rights presidential candidate, and Col. Marion Rushton of Alabama, who represent their states on the National Committee.

Sat 9-4-48

Promise Is Reaffirmed

He described Rushton as the "campaign manager for the Dixiecrats" in Alabama.

Primm reaffirmed the National Committee's promise of recognition to any pro-Truman group which officially organizes in opposition to the States' Rights ticket.

"If these people," he said referring to the States' Righters, "think they can fight the national party ticket and then come in and ask that they be seated or recognized by the National Committee they are certainly mistaken."

Primm denied that McGrath had said in an interview that Southern senators and representatives supporting Thurmond's candidacy would lose their party status. He said the National Committee had no authority to read out of the pary duly elected legislators.

Will Not Interfere

He said he was authorized to say that McGrath "did not take nor has he any intention of taking any action against the duly elected members of the House and Senate as has been implied."

G.O.P. Chairman Scott's challenge of President Truman on the Communist indorsement issue came in a statement from the Republican National Committee.

He accused the President of trying to "snuff out" congressional investigations of Communists by "impetuous cries of 'red herring.'"

He said he wonders if there was a "working agreement" between Mr. Truman and the Communists in 1944. If so, he asked when it was ended.

ATES' RIGHTERS HIT AS GIANT CONSPIRACY

armichael Says Sponsors Want Republicans To Win

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Sept. 1.—(AP)—The States' Rights movement in the South was called by Alabama's Atty. Gen. Albert Carmichael Wednesday a "giant conspiracy" controlled by the Republican National Committee.

Addressing a session of the Methodist Committee on Social Action, he charged the split within Democratic ranks was brought about in interests of "a handful of intensely selfish people" in Alabama and the South.

"The record is against these professional States' Righters," the attorney general said. "I urge that you look carefully behind their loud and lofty pronouncements to see if they are not really advancing this cry to insure the triumph of a political party which puts property rights above individual or human rights."

He charged the States' Rights forces with "the greatest betrayal of the best interests of the people of this state, ever seen in Alabama."

Carmichael said this is being accomplished within the framework of the Democratic Party of Alabama "by so-called leaders whose sole political, economic and personal interest is that of bringing about a national regime favorable to the clients they represent."

THINKING PEOPLE

MR. R. F. HUDSON, Publisher: You did exactly what I expected and wanted you to do in your brilliant and forceful editorial of July 28, headlined "The Advertiser-Journal position." Thinking people all over the world—who have their feet on the ground, will applaud you.

NAIL'S HEAD

Mr. R. F. Hudson, Publisher:

I have never read a clearer and more forceful, editorial than the one which I have just read in The Advertiser, of this morning, captioned "The Advertiser-Journal Position."

You hit the nail on the head in as clear, forceful and unambiguous language as the subject could possibly be handled. Frankly, I just don't see how any Alabama Democrat could hesitate in determining what his duty was—that is, if he participated in our state primaries.

Some of those who have been inclined to criticize me and others who have taken the same position, have contended that we were not criticizing people for doing exactly the same thing as was done by the group which went off and supported Hoover as against Al Smith, in 1928. Nothing could be further from the truth. In 1928 those who bolted the Democratic Party of Alabama did not go into the general election in November and vote for the Presidential Electors nominated in the Democratic Primary, but what they did was to go into the General Election in November and vote for the Republican Presidential Elector nominees.

You have rendered a real service to the Democratic Party of Alabama in writing this forceful editorial in a paper which probably has more influence in Alabama than any other paper published in this state.

The Advertiser

I remember many years ago, when I was quite a youngster, I did a lot of work in making abstracts for some saw mill companies up in Wilcox and Monroe Counties, and I think that practically every man of any prominence in Monroeville and Camden subscribed to The Montgomery Advertiser, and those people up there would say that so far as their politics were concerned, The Montgomery Advertiser "was their Bible."

Montgomery

Again thanking you for this splendid editorial, which has been most helpful to all of us who are fighting for just what you stand for, and with kindest personal regards and all good wishes to you and your splendid organization, I am,

AMERICA WILL DIE

Mr. R. F. Hudson, Publisher:

Congratulations! The Advertiser-Journal position is on solid ground.

"The older I get, the smarter my Father becomes." I remember the purple rages the late Dean Albert J. Farrah used to work himself into back in 1932 and 1934 when I was a student in his Constitutional Law Class, every time there was an encroachment on States' Rights: such as (1) packing the Supreme Court (a means of encroachment, not an end), (2) N.R.A.

Your statement: "The rights reserved to the states by the Constitution should be the foundation upon which we stand, fighting as best we can against too much of centralized government. Loss of individual freedom. camouflaged as it might be for the necessities of life in the several leading nations of the world. And in Russia, ostensibly the "worker's paradise," labor is virtual economic peonage as judged by our standards of living.

at first by innocent looking laws, will under bureaucratic interpretation grow to harass and jeopardize the basic liberties guaranteed every individual under the Constitution," is wonderful.

The Negro question is but the veneer, or less, the polish on the fundamentals involved in the States' Rights legislation, for just as sure as there is a Federal F.E.P.C. law, we will have here in Alabama a Federal police—by whatever name they are called—for its enforcement. They will be in your office and mine, harassing the hell out of us all.

America has been built on individual freedom. Freedom of action, freedom to work and produce. And just as surely as this American freedom is continually stifled, America will die. We must not relinquish our freedoms—our States Rights.

Montgomery. LUTHER INGALLS.

REDEMPTION

Mr. R. F. Hudson, Publisher: Sun.

Please allow me to express my appreciation of your signed editorial in The Advertiser of the 28th, headed, "The Advertiser-Journal Position."

The President's proposals, which he chooses to designate "Civil Rights" viewed in its total disregard for the Constitution; all its political implications, including its effort to totally destroy States' Rights; its clearly marked path to dictatorship and in all its other absurdities, truly imposes a duty on the South to, in its own defense and indeed the defense of all our people, carry our mesasge to all the people of all the states.

8-1-48

During the days of Reconstruction, President Grant was said to remark, "The day will come when these defeated Southern States will be called upon to redeem this Republic." In the light of current experiences, brought on all of us by false and unworthy leaders, it seems to me that the day of which President Grant spoke has arrived.

A STEADYING INFLUENCE

Mr. R. F. Hudson, Publisher:

Nothing on earth ever did my heart more good than the editorial published in yesterday's Advertiser. It was an effective statement of position, and the thought in it that there was an obligation on The Advertiser and The Journal to carry the viewpoint of the South to the other states was excellent.

8-1-48

There have been many times in the past when I had to swallow when I voted under the rooster, but I never failed to follow through my primary commitment into the general election. Those who, like Joe Langan, and the group for which he is working, are trying now to work out some way to wiggle out from under their obligations, cannot possibly succeed, in my opinion, in carrying any real weight before the Alabama electorate.

Sun.

The Advertiser has always been, as both of us know, one of the great leaders in Alabama, close to the people and speaking for them. Your editorial, bringing The Advertiser back in line with the wishes of the overwhelming majority of Alabama's people, will be a beacon light and a steadying influence to our people in these trying times.

Little Headway In Dixiecrats Revolt Seen

Daily World — Atlanta, Ga. Sat. 7-31-48

Increased Negro Vote Big Factor

7-31-48

BY THE NNPA

Although Dixiecrats have decided to enter the names of Governor J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina and Governor Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi as Presidential and Vice Presidential candidates in all forty-eight states, a survey indicates that the States' Rights Democrats will make little headway in their revolt against President Truman over his civil rights program.

A very important factor in the political equation is the increased number of colored voters in the eleven states of the Deep South. They new constitute about 12 per cent of the vote. If there is a wide cleavage in the white vote, it is possible that coolred voters will represent the balance of power, particularly in states like Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia.

Sat. 7-31-48

The only states in the South where colored voters now constitute less than 12 per cent of the white are Alabama, where they represent only 1.2 per cent; Louisiana where they represent only 2.6 and Mississippi, where they represent less than 1 per cent.

The Georgia Democratic executive committee has refused to identify itself with the Dixiecrats in retaliation against the civil rights program and will give its support to the Truman-Barkley ticket.

VA. SITUATION

In Virginia there is a remote possibility that the Thurmond-Wright ticket will win indorsement from Senator Harry F. Byrd's organization, although Senator O. Willis Robertson already has announced his support of the Truman-Barkley ticket. Without indorsement of the Byrd machine, it is believed President Truman will carry the state in the November electon.

The Thurmond-Wright ticket is regarded as having no chance whatever of getting on the official ballot before August 4, when the time for filing petitions expires. There are few North Carolinians who believe that Governor Thomas E. Dewey has any real chance to win the electorial vote over President Truman.

The South Carolina Democratic convention ordered the eight nominees for electors not to vote for President Truman. It appears likely that the electoral votes of South Carolina wil go for Thurmnd and Wright.

Governor Millard F. Caldwell of Florida has said he will campaign for the Truman-Barkley ticket. Half of Florida's eight Presidential electors may vote fo rthe Thurmond-Wright ticket. Three more are undecided. Frank D. Upchurch, who led Florida's delegation at the Democratic national convention, has predicted that Governor Dewey may carry Florida.

TENNESSEE DOUBTFUL

Resentful of President Truman's civil rights program, Tennessee is doubtful. Whether it supports President Truman depends upon Boss Edward H. Crump of Memphis, who was opposed to his nomination. Crump is engaged in a bitter fight over Gubernatorial and Senatorial nominations in primaries next month, and the results of the primaries may determine whether he will throw his strength to the Thurmond-Wright ticket.

Despite the popularity of the revolt over civil rights, there is definite opposition to the States' Righters and there are indications that there will be a Truman slate of electors on the ballot in November.

Although opposition to the civil rights program in Arkansas is bitter, it appears that party loyalty will cause voters to support President Truman in the November election.

State Senator Joe Langan, of Mobile, has asked Senator L. Howard McGrath for funds to finance a convention in Montgomery, August 16 to put Truman electors on the ballot.

Gov. Thurmond Arrives at Houston for Rally

New Orleans La.

(The Associated Press)

Houston, Tex., Aug. 10.—Gov. J. Strom Thurmond, states' rights candidate for president of the United States, arrived here by plane today for a rally which will formally launch his group's national campaign.

The seven-passenger craft in which he flew from Columbia, S. C., landed at 4:31 p. m. (CST), more than two hours later than he had been expected.

With the South Carolina governor were Mrs. Thurmond; two South Carolina state senators, George Warren and James Hammond; R. M. Figg, Charleston, S. C., attorney, and George MacNabb, Thurmond's secretary.

Col. W. B. Bates, Houston attorney and chairman of the reception committee, presented Thurmond with a ten gallon hat. The newly organized "Dixiecrat" band played Dixie.

"I am glad to be here," Thurmond said.

The reception committee included H. R. Cullen, Houston multimillionaire oil man, who was host to Thurmond at a reception scheduled soon after his arrival.

Planes Switched

Part of the delay in Thurmond's arrival was caused by a switch of planes at Columbia before the governor's takeoff.

Wed. 8-11-48

Thurmond established his headquarters at the flag-bedecked Rice hotel. Banners on the structure flared the names of the 45-year-old Thurmond and his 53-year-old vice-presidential running mate, Gov. Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi. Confederate flags and the Stars and Stripes were placed side by side on the hotel's street balcony.

Thurmond and Wright will make speeches tomorrow night accepting their nomination.

After Wright reaches here tomorrow, he and Thurmond will hold a 9 a. m. (CST) press conference, then meet in conferences with supporters before speaking at the rally (8 p. m. CST) in the Sam Houston coliseum.

The coliseum is built on the site of a temporary structure which housed the 1928 Democratic national convention that nominated the late Al Smith for president.

On Special Train

Wright was aboard a special train of States' Rights Democrats from his home state. The train left Jackson, Miss., during the afternoon; is en route here by way of New Orleans, and will arrive at 7 a. m. tomorrow.

Already here at rally headquarters was the Dixiecrat national campaign director, Judge Merritt Gibson of Longview, Tex. He arrived from Jackson today.

Early arrivals included Wallace Wright of Mississippi and Leander Perez, district attorney of St. Bernard and Plaquemines parishes, La.

Perez said his state's electoral votes would go to Thurmond and Wright. He called it the "true Democratic ticket."

The states' rights group nominated its ticket in Birmingham after the National Democratic Convention had picked President Truman and Senator Alben Barkley as candidates. The Southern group is launching a campaign it hopes will sweep the 127 electoral votes in 11 Southern states to Thurmond and Wright.

Gibson says the states' rights Democrats plan to complete their organization in August, in as many states as possible, and to meet legal requirements in the separate states for listing electors on the November 2 ballot.

Texas Dixiecrats plan to carry their fight for the state's 23 presidential electors to the Democratic state convention at Fort Worth September 1. That convention could replace or reinstruct electors now pledged to Truman if it desired.

Googe Challenges Bloch On Dixiecrat Labor Stand

The Constitution

Fri 10-22-48

By M. L. ST. JOHN

Democratic Presidential Elector George Googe last night asked Dixiecratic Presidential Elector Charlie Bloch if he plans to jump over into the Republican Party now that the Dixiecratic Presidential candidate has come out in opposition to the Taft-Hartley labor act.

Googe recalled that Bloch was the only delegate at the Philadelphia National Democratic Convention to leap to his feet and boo when the Democratic platform plank called for repeal of the Republican-sponsored labor curbing bill.

Atlanta, Ga.

In an interview in Macon, Gov. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, presidential candidate of the States Rights Party, expressed opposition to the Taft-Hartley Act. Bloch is the only member of the State Democratic Executive Committee to move over into the Dixiecratic Party as an Elector.

"Mr. Bloch, in nominating Sen. Russell for President at the Democratic convention, said 'We're going to remain in the Democratic Party'," Googe said. "Now he has somersaulted out of the Democratic Party to the Dixiecrats and he is my opponent as an elector from the state-at-large. I wonder if Charlie, after his present candidate has announced opposition to the Taft-Hartley Act, won't now somersault out of the Dixiecratic Party and into the Republican Party."

Googe, Southern regional director of the AFL, said labor in Georgia is as solidly behind President Truman today as it has ever been on any political issue.

'Declaration Of Principles' Sets Forth States' Rights Arguments

Columbia Record, Columbia, S.C.

States' rights supporters called attention again today to the "Declaration of Principles" adopted at the Birmingham convention, a set of declarations which underline the group's beilefs in reserving for the states all powers not delegated to the national government by the constitution. Thu 8-5-48

The completion "Declaration" follows:

We affirm that a political party is an instrumentality for effectuating the principles upon which the party is founded. That a platform of principles is a solemn covenant with the people and with the members of the party. That no leader of the party, in temporary power, has the right or privilege to proceed contrary to the fundamental principles of the party, or the letter or spirit of the Constitution of the United States. That to act contrary to these principles is a breach of faith, a usurpation of power, and a forfeiture of the party name and party leadership. 8-5-48

We believe that racial and religious minorities should be protected in their rights guaranteed by the Constittuion, but the bold defiance of the Constitution in selfish appeals to such groups for the sake of political power forges the chains of slavery of such minorities by destroying the only bulwark of protection against tyrannical majorities. The protection of the Constitutional rights of a minority does not justify or require the destruction of Constitutional limitations on the power of the central government threatens to create a totalitarian state and to destroy individual liberty in America.

We believe that the protection of the American people against the onward march of totalitarian government requires a faithful observance of Article X of the American Bill of Rights which provides that: "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

We direct attention to the fact that the first platform of the Democratic party, adopted in 1840, resolved that: "Congress has no power under the Constitution to interfere with or control the domestic institutions of the several States, and that such States are the sole and proper judges of everything appertaining to their own affairs not prohibited by the Constitution.' Such pronouncement is the cornerstone of the Democrtaic party.

A long train of abuses and usurpations of power by unfaithful leaders who are alien to the Democratic parties of the states here represented, has become intolerable to those who believe in the preservation of constitutional government and individual liberty in America.

The executive department of the government is promoting the gradual but certain growth of a totalitarian state by domination and control of a politically minded supreme court. As examples of the threat to our form of government, the executive department, with the aid of the supreme court, has asserted national dominion and control of submerged oil-bearing lands in California, schools in Oklahoma and Missouri, primary elections in Texas, South Carolina and Louisiana, restrictive covenants in New York, and the District of Columbia, and other jurisdictions, as well as religious instruction in Illinois. By asserting paramount federal rights in these instances, a totalitarian concept has been promulgated which threatens the integrity of the states and the basic rights of their citizens. 8-5-48

We have repeatedly remonstrated with the leaders of the national organization of our party but our petitions, entreaties and warnings have been treated with contempt. The latest response to our entreaties was a Democratic convention in Philadelphia rigged to embarrass and humiliate the South. This alleged Democratic assembly called for a civil rights law that would eliminate segregation of every kind from all American life, prohibit all forms of discrimination in private employment, in public and private instruction and administration and treatment of students; in the operation of public and private health facilities; in all transportation, and require equal access to all places of public accommodations for all persons of all races, colors, creeds and national origin.

This infamous and iniquitous program calls for the reorganization of the civil rights section of the Department of Justice with a substantial increase in a bureaucratic staff to be devoted exclusively to the enforcement of the civil rights program; the establishment within the FBI of a special unit of investigators and a police state in a totalitarian, centralized, bureaucratic government. Thu 8-5-48

This convention hypocratically denounced totalitarianism abroad but unblushingly proposed and approved it at home. This convention would strengthen the grip of a police state upon a liberty loving people by the imposition of penalties upon local public officers who failed or refused to act in accordance with its ideas in suppressing mob violence.

We point out that if a foreign power undertook to force upon the people of the United States the measures advocated by the Democratic convention in Philadelphia, with respect to civil rights, it would mean war and the entire nation would resist such effort.

The convention that insulted the South in the party platform advocated giving the Virgin Islands and other dependencies of the United States "the maximum degree of local self-government." When an effort was made to amend this part of the platform so as to make it read that the party favored giving the Virgin Islands and the several states the maximum degree of local self-government, the amendment adding the words "these several states" was stricken out and the sovereign states were denied the rights that the party favors giving the Virgin Islands.

We point out that the South, with clock-wise regularity, has furnished the Democratic party approximately 50 per cent of the votes necessary to nominate a President every four years for nearly a century. In 1920 the only states in the Union that went democratic were the 11 southern states. 8-5-48

Notwithstanding this rugged loyalty to the party, the masters of political intrigue now allow Republican States in which there is scarcely a Democratic office holder to dominate and control the Party and fashion its policies.

As Democrats who are irrevocably committed to democracy as defined and expounded by Thomas Jefferson, Andrew Jackson and Woodrow Wilson, and who believe that all necessary steps must be taken for its preservation, we declare to the people of the United States as follows:

1. We believe that the Constitution of the United States is the greatest charter of human liberty ever conceived by the mind of man.

2. We oppose all efforts to invade or destroy the rights vouchsafed by it to every citizen of this Republic.

3. We stand for social and economic justice, which, we believe, can be vouchsafed to all citizens only by a strict adherence to our Constitution and the avoidance of any invasion or destruction of the Constitutional rights of the states and individuals. We oppose the totalitarian, centralized, bureaucratic government and the police state called for by the platforms adopted by the Democratic and Republican Conventions.

4. We stand for the segregation of the races and the racial integrity of each race; the Constitutional right to choose ones associates; to accept private employment without governmental interference, and to earn one's living in any lawful way. We oppose the elimination of segregation, the repeal of miscegenation statutes, the control of private employment by Federal bureaucrats called for by the misnamed civil rights program. We favor home rule, local self-government and a minimum interference with individual rights.

5. We oppose and condemn the action of the Democratic Convention in sponsoring a civil rights program calling for the elimination of segregation, social equality by Federal fiat, regulation of private employment practices, voting and local law enforcement.

6. We affirm that the effective enforcement of such a program would be utterly destructive of the social, economic and political life of the southern people, and of other localities in which there may be differences in race, creed or national origin in appreciable numbers.

7. We stand for the checks and balances provided by the three departments of our Government. We oppose the usurpation of legislative functions by the executive and judicial departments. We unreservedly condemn the effort to establish nation-wide a police state in this Republic that would destroy the last vestige of liberty enjoyed by a citizen. 8-5-48

8. We demand that there be returned to the people, to whom of right they belong, those powers needed for the preservation of human rights and the discharge of our responsibility as Democrats for human welfare.

We call upon all Democrats and upon all other loyal Americans who are opposed to totalitarianism at home and abroad to unite with us in ignominiously defeating Harry S. Truman and Thomas E. Dewey, and every other candidate for public office who would establish a police state in the United States of America.

Righters Carry Drive To Talladega

BY R. E. (BUSTER) HOGAN
News Special Correspondent

TALLADEGA, Ala., Sept. 14—"The personal liberty of every citizen is in danger if the "so-called civil rights program goes through.

This was one of the warnings given a Talladega audience at a States' Rights meeting last night. It came from Rep. Sam Hobbs, of Selma.

From Judge D. Hardy Riddle came the declaration that a totalitarian nation will result if "uncontrolled power "is allowed to continue to be centered in Washington.

Borden Burr, Birmingham attorney, asserted that the present Congress is being called on to ignore the system of checks and balances and the principle of home rule" created by our forefathers." Home rule, he said, was designed as the "loadstone of the government."

"The fathers planned it this way because they did not want the government in Washington to have those powers centralized," he added.

JUDGE RIDDLE DECLARED that "the Negro is going to have the chance to advance himself in the South but that advancement must come to him in the pattern of the South's racial segregation."

He asserted that the South has given the Negro a fair deal. This policy, he expressed the opinion, will be continued "because of the basic friendship between the Eouthern white and the Negro."

"The civil rights proposals are as much a danger to the people of North Dakota or any other state as they are to the people of Alabama," Rep. Hobbs declared.

The Selma congressman added the assertion that "the centralization of power in the hands of the federal government has already gone so far that there is no need to wait for Stalin or another Hitler to grasp the reins."

"There isn't a single free man under the domination of Dewey, Truman or Wallace and they are trying to make it worse," Rep. Hobbs continued. "Let us save this nation of ours from the destruction which was prophesized by our forefathers should we ever forget home rule."

Mr. Burr explained that before home rule, the first foundation of this government was a system of checks and balances to establish the functions of the executive, legislative and judicial departments. Home rule was established because the forefathers did not want the government in Washington to have those powers centralized. he added.

THE MEASURES jammed through a radical and hostile congress after the War Between the States were mild compared to the Truman committee report on civil rights, the Birmingham attorney declared.

But even during Reconstruction he added, the system of checks and balances continued to function and a Republican Supreme Court held illegal the laws which the Congress passed over the laws of President Andrew Johnson.

The Republicans never attempted to overthrow these Supreme Court decisions, but the present Congress has been called on to ignore them, he asserted.

"These things would never have been brought up if President Truman and his advisers had not felt that the Solid South was securely in the Democratic bag," he concluded.

States'-Righters Want Ticket In Every State

Thurmond Says He and Wright Expect to Win, Contends White Supremacy Isn't An Issue

34D

From Wire Dispatches.

Atlanta, July 24.—Militant Southern Democrats voted today to enter an anti-Truman, but Democratic ticket in every state in the Union in November.

The ticket will be under the name of the States' Rights Democrats. Candidates are Governor Strom Thurmond of South Carolina for President and Governor Fielding Wright of Mississippi for Vice-President.

Thurmond and Wright were recommended as candidates at the States'-Rights convention in Birmingham July 17.

Precisely how the party intends to go about obtaining places on the November general-election ballots in the 48 states was not disclosed. Adv. 7-25-48

Immediately after the decision by the steering committee, named at the Birmingham convention, Thurmond said, "We are running for President and Vice-President and expect to be elected."

Race-Hatred Not An Issue.

He emphasized that "we are not running on white supremacy, racial hatred, or class prejudice. We are running primarily on the issue of States'-Rights."

The 46-year-old South Carolinian said other problems, domestic and foreign, would be met "at the proper time," adding that steps would be taken to set up a party organization immediately.

An announcement by the committee said the decision to campaign was "to give millions of real Americans the opportunity of voting for these candidates and to preserve the American way of life. . .

"This," it continued, "is the most feasible way to preserve our American way of government. . . ."

Speech Due July 31.

Thurmond said he would make his first campaign speech at the Cherryville, N. C., watermelon festival July 31.

Thus did dissident Southern Democrats answer President Truman for his civil-rights proposals and the national party for incorporating them in a national platform.

The committee voted to make an immediate drive to get the 23 electoral votes of Texas in the bag.

And it was announced that the Democratic conventions in Mississippi and South Carolina will be called early in August to choose presidential electors pledged to Thurmond and Wright.

Thurmond and Wright will be notified officially of their nominations at a South-wide meeting in Houston August 11, and both will make acceptance speeches at that time.

The Houston meeting was timed to be just three days ahead of the meeting August 14 of the Texas Democratic executive committee to choose electors.

Judge Merrit Gibson, Longview, Tex., said there has been a marked movement against Truman in Texas since the Philadelphia convention, and toward the Thurmond - Wright ticket since the Birmingham convention. He said that if the state committee refuses to instruct the state's electors for the new ticket, their names will be entered in the second Texas primary August 28.

23 Votes Important.

"The people of Texas now see a way to vote against Truman and still vote Democratic," Judge Gibson said. "If the people are allowed to decide, Texas will go for the Thurmond-Wright ticket."

Texas stands sixth in the nation in the number of votes in the Electoral College, and has by far the largest number of electors in the South. The state's 23 electoral votes will be important in the effort to stop President Truman.

"A candidate must have 266 electoral votes to be elected President," Judge Gibson said. "If the race between President Truman and Governor Dewey is close, the electoral votes of the South might prevent either getting a majority. Then the election would be thrown into the House of Representatives."

One committee member, however, explained the States'-righters' aims thus:

"The national party is shot, the Republicans will win, but the Southern Democrats by sticking together may well become the majority of the minority party.

Will Be Ready.

"Therefore, when the Republicans win, the well-organized Southerners will be on hand to pick up and dominate what is left of the national Democratic organization."

Exactly how much support the fourth-party movement has is problematical. Today's meeting served to emphasize that most of the support for the States'-rights movement at present is coming from Alabama, Mississippi, South Carolina, and Texas. Men from these states dominated today's caucus, but there were some present from Florida, Louisiana, and Arkansas.

States' Righters To Carry Fight On U.S. Powers

Montgomery Advertiser

Group Will Establish Office In Washington For Opinion Campaign

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., Dec. 16 —(AP)—States' Rights Democrats decided here today to establish a public opinion headquarters in Washington to continue their fight against extension of federal powers. Adv 12-17-48

This action came at a meeting of the steering committee headed by Gov. Ben Laney of Arkansas.

The Washington office will be established under the name of States' Rights Institute. Its stated purpose will be creation of "nationwide informed public opinion" on questions involving "the reserved powers of the states."

The States' Rights group left the regular Democratic party over the question of state vs. federal handling of racial problems. Their action cost President Truman four Southern states in the November election.

To Name Committee

Gov. Laney will appoint a committee "to prepare plans and arrange for the incorporation of non-partisan and non-profit corporation" to carry on the public opinion campaign."

The Arkansas governor said he would name the committee after his return to Little Rock.

Gov. J. Strom Thurmon of South Carolina, the States' Rights nominee for president, did not attend today's session. State Senator J. H. Kennedy of Camden, S. C., who came as the governor's representative, said Gov. Thurmond was kept home by pressing state matters.

Gov. Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi, States' Rights candidate for vice president, was here for the session but explained he was not a member of the steering committee. Adv 12-17-48

The committee took no action to fix any general meeting of the States' Rights supporters. Such a meeting had been discussed in pre-meeting interviews with reporters. 34D

The resolution authorizing the Washington office included this statement:

"The preservation of the rights of the soverign people of each state . . . is vital to the salvation of the liberty and freedom of the American people." Adv 12-17-48

These rights, the resolution continued, are "under constant attack by those who approve the Socialist concept of a centralized bureaucratic government."

Check On Socialism

The States' Rights institute, the resolution asserted, will "provide a check on the trend toward centralization, state socialism and a dictatorship."

Here for the session today, in addition to the two governors, were:

Alabama—Former Gov. Frank M. Dixon, Birmingham; Horace C. Wilkinson, Birmingham, and W. D. Malone, Dothan.

Time To Stand Together

Tues. 8-3-48

Atlanta, Ga.

Editor Constitution: Now that President Truman's campaign has taken definite form and all the issues upon which he hopes to win have been set before the public, it becomes clear that he has based his hope of success upon the peculiarly un-American and anti-American appeal which all patriotic Americans, no matter how bitter they oppose him, had hoped that he would avoid. This appeal which he is now making is, even on the surface, is a new kind of sectionalism through arraying one part of the country against another. But beneath the surface it is even worse than that. President Truman and his henchmen are organizing and directing what actually amounts to a political civil war within the sections they are arraying class against class, religion against religion and race against race.

We all understand the reasons which for so long have made the South solidly Democratic. There was justification for this and there is still reason for the South remaining Democratic in local affairs. But that reason no longer applies in national affairs, for the fundamental factor in the South's Democratic tradition has been the fear of Negro domination, and Mr. Truman has made himself the political champion of the Negroes so that his success would threaten the South's interest more gravely than they have been in many decades. All the factors in the situation, all the true issues, all of President Truman's purposes, all the things that would come with his success, should make the South vote against him.

President Truman counts on the South's blindness; he depends upon the traditions and peculiar circumstances which have kept the South Democratic for several generations to hold it solid for him while he violates its every principle, and in spite of the fact that his success would threaten irreparable injury to all its interest and to all it holds dear. This is a time when we Southerners, who are thus attacked regardless of party, must ourselves disregard party and stand together in defense of our traditions and our principles.

Why Don't They Join The Republicans?

To the Editor of The News:

Seldom in the history of politics has there been a more interesting or incongruous spectacle than that of Horace Wilkinson and his electoral college disciples—on the end of he public skewer, wondering in which direction they should squirm. Should they plead for return to the good old party? Or should they continue their struggle to the bitter end, cast their votes for Thurmond, and attempt to make of the Dixiecratic movement a thing of pathetic permanence, despite the mere dribble of votes they received.

It now seems that President Truman, whose father was a Confederate officer during the Civil War, has completely out-generaled the Southern guerilla leaders—just as his aggressive strategy defeated not only the Republicans, but the left and right wings of his own party. A master strategist maneuvers his opponent into a position of complete negation. It was impossible for the last Republican Congress to act without contributing to the president's political good fortune. Whatever they did was wrong. And they committed the most fatal blunder of all—they did nothing. And so it is with the Dixiecrats; they cannot act except to their own disadvantage.

Suppose Horace and his boys plead for admission into the good old party? It will result in a total loss of face. Before the court of public opinion they will be admitting that it was a political gamble which could result only in personal political gain for themselves if successful. Chances are they would be forgiven like bad boys, only increasing the political stature of the president, the very thing they wanted least to do.

Suppose Horace and his disciples decided to vote for Thurmond in the electoral college. In that event their names will be forever emblazoned in the memory of the people of Alabama—first as traitors to the Democratic Party; next, as miserable tacticians in which few voters would place confidence in future elections. Unable to accede to the democratic process of the convention system under which they have thrived for so long, they attempted in outlaw fashion to set up what they called the true Democratic Party. They were soundly defeated at the polls. Now, once again failing to submit to the wishes of a majority of the voters throughout the land, certain of them say they will go to jail rather than vote for the regular nominee of the party and the people.

Tues 11-30-48

Harry Truman was the Democratic Party nominee. Now he has been chosen by all the people of the land. If Horace Wilkinson and his boys vote for Thurmond in the electoral college they will openly, publicly, officially and for all time be voting themselves out of the Democratic Party. If they so choose, such is their right. But the thoughtful voters of Alabama will ponder deeply before again allowing any or all of these men to either dominate the party or veto the right of the people to vote for the President of the United States. Why don't they be honest with both themselves and the people and join the ranks of the Alabama Republicans? There is no place for them in the Democratic Party. After all, wasn't it their own decision?

States' Righters Proposal Belated

The News

BY FRED TAYLOR

News Staff Writer

Wed 8-11-48

A proposal by Mobile State Sen. Joe Langan that States' Rights Democrats abandon their presidential ticket and attempt to replace President Truman with a compromise candidate was termed "impractical" today by states' rights leaders.

Birmingham Ala

The surprise request by Sen. Langan, who has been seeking to get names of pro-Truman elector candidates on the Alabama ballot came as states' righters from over the South gathered at Houston, Tex., for a Thurmond-Wright rally.

Albert Stapp, Birmingham business man and delegate-at-large to the Democratic National Convention and states' rights campaigner, characterized Langan's plan as "impractical at this late date."

"Sen. Langan's proposal that we ditch President Truman is exactly what we tried to before and during the Philadelphia convention," said Stapp. "We needed his help then. If we had had the help and support of every loyal Democrat in the South then, we might have been able to get a real Democrat nominated in Truman's place."

* * *

SID SMYER, attorney and member of the States' Rights Democrats executive committee directing the Thurmond-Wright campaign in this state, likewise considers Sen. Langan's proposal belated and impracticable.

"We had a pre-convention caucus at Philadelphia and tried to do just what Sen. Langan now proposes," said Smyer. "They booed and insulted us. Sen. Langan should have come forward with his proposal sooner with regard to Mr. Truman.'

As for the states' righters abandoning the Thurmond - Wright ticket, Smyer said "The States' Rights Democrats could not possibly do this."

"Our fight is a cause—a long range campaign not only to defeat President Truman but to recapture the Democratic Party and place in charge of it those who believe in states' rights and constitutional government."

SOUTH CAROLINA Gov. J. Strom Thurmond and Mississippi Gov. Fielding L. Wright will make acceptance speeches as nominees of States' Rights Democrats at the Houston rally tonight. Their addresses will be broadcast, beginning at 9:30 p.m., over ABC-WSGN, CBS-WAPI-WAFM and NBC-WBRC.

Langan's plan was outlined in a letter to State Democratic Chairman Gessner T. McCorvey, Mobile, one of 11 Alabama Democratic presidential elector nominees. McCorvey is among several Alabamians attending the Houston meeting. As spokesmen for the elector nominees, he will formally notify Thurmond and Wright of the group's pledge to support them for president and vice president in the electoral college.

The Mobile senator has called a convention of Democrats for 10 a.m. Monday at Whitley Hotel, Montgomery, to seek ways and means of placing a slate of pro-Truman elector candidates on the Nov. 2 general election ballot.

In his letter to McCorvey, he proposed "A convention of all Democratic electors could be called to meet and decide who would be president."

Wed 8-11-48

* * *

BUT SUCH A PLAN would be contingent on whether Democrats or Republicans win a majority of electoral votes in November balloting. He pointed out that if the GOP wins, it would be "immaterial" which way the South votes. His plan would come into play only if Democratic electors are in the majority.

"If the Democratic electors outside the South did not have a majority, then the South could demand a change in the platform and a different person other than Truman for president."

McCorvey was quoted by The Associated Press as saying he did not attach much importance to the Langan plan.

* * *

THE MOBILE lawmaker cited the Alabama Supreme Court ruling that electors of this state can vote as they please. He added that "if this ruling is sound, then all the Democratic electors of the nation would be free agents."

Langan said he personally was opposed to Truman and his "civil rights" program, but since Alabama participated in the national party convention "We should therefore support the party even though we are not in accord with some of the platform or Truman's stand regarding some of the platform."

The senator said the "ideal solution" would be to have two slates of electors running on the Democratic ticket—one favoring and the other opposing Truman. Then, he said, Alabama Democrats would be able to express their choice.

Licked States' Righters to Fight Truman's Racial Policies

Thurs 11-4-48

Atlanta, Nov. 3 (AP)—President Truman's triumph today left his Southern States' Rights opposition licked, temporarily at least, but in no frame of mind to quit its fight against his racial policies.

Some party leaders issued warlike pronouncements for renewal on the 1952 political battleground of the struggle against the President's proposals. Other Southern politicians, not directly aligned against the President this time, suggested the issues be fought out inside the party and in Congress.

The States' Righters hoped by a vote barrage to "stringhalt" the President's plans for laws against racial segregation, the poll tax, and lynching and for a fair-employment-practices commission. They corralled 38 electoral votes in their strongholds of Mississippi, Louisiana, Alabama, and South Carolina.

Alabama Democratic chairman Gessner T. McCovery, a States' Rights elector, blamed the new party's downfall on failure of other states to join the movement. He predicted others would be pulled into the fight and the struggle will be more fierce and effective four years hence.

Presidential nominee J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina and No. 2 standard-bearer Fielding Wright of Missouri deliberated the situation before issuing statements.

Thurs 11-4-48

McCorvey ridiculed a lawsuit which Governor James E. Folsom promised to bring to force Alabama's 11 electoral votes into the Truman-Barkley column. He said it would be "wasted effort."

Other Southerners took a moderate, if not enthusiastic, view of Truman's victory. Senator Claude Pepper of Florida, who sharply opposed Truman's nomination, said the President's winning fight was so gallant that "Roosevelt and Andrew Jackson are applauding."

Senator Olin D. Johnston of South Carolina, who opposed Truman's policies but voted for him, asserted the South could block the civil-rights program in Congress. He said Democratic control of Congress, giving Southerners key posts, would turn the tide.

In eight Southern states with 100 electoral votes, the States Righters generally ran behind the Republicans in yesterday's voting. These states are Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, North Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia.

The outcome, though, was no more palatable to the Republicans than to the States' Righters.

Will the Dixiecrats Last?

The Constitution

WASHINGTON—Will the Dixiecrat Party continue?

While some of its leaders profess to think so, the consensus of most informed political observers contacted by this reporter on a pre-election tour of the South is that it was a one-shot, one-election party and will disappear. Its prejudiced spirit, however, probably will continue as an influence in Southern politics to some extent for some time, ready to be exploited in one place or another by recurrent demagogues

Mon 11-1-48

Though the Party captured regular Democratic organizations in four States for this election—Mississippi, Louisiana, Alabama and South Carolina—there are practical reasons to believe this is only temporary. These reasons will become valid and apparent in the result of the national election.

In the first place, this election will remove the symbol that fired this revolt, Harry S. Truman and his civil rights program, and will transfer the symbol to the Republican Party which espouses the program and will be in a position to do something about it. That should tend to assuage friction within the Democratic Party and raise it up outside. Historically Democrats tend to forget their differences when in the minority and present a more united front.

Atlanta Ga

The election also will remove the symbol of Roosevelt New Dealism, which also was Harry S. Truman, and thus eliminate the motive of the powerful interests behind the Dixiecrats who want to get rid of New Dealism and used the Dixiecrat cloak behind which to operate. Where Franklin D. Roosevelt made only infrequent gestures on civil rights, and drew back strategically from time to time so that a successful revolt could never be stirred up against him in the South, Harry Truman gave these interests their long-awaited opportunity when he struck directly and thus raised the sensitive issue that would arouse the whole Southern people.

Mon 11-1-48

But, while President Truman struck a very delicate chord very indelicately, many people in the South will not desert him on this account in the election, as returns will show. Many, in fact, are very much ashamed at the nauseous spectacle the Dixiecrat movement has presented to the rest of the nation. Four States, which is all the Dixiecrats count, hardly offer the basis for a new party, nor in this election will they even constitute a balance of power which was supposed to be the Dixiecrat objective.

Regular party leaders, themselves, bear the best witness that the Dixiecrat Party success this year, such as it is, is the final explosion that will end a movement long generating rather than the beginning of a chain reaction. While regular Southern leaders ran hastily for cover in the storm stirred up over the racial issue, and are still in hiding, all but a very few kept out of the new Party very assiduously. They have too much at stake. Their attitude is a good clue, because politicians follow the first law of nature which is self-preservation, and they usually know, from long experience, what is necessary for self-preservation.

For another thing, the Dixiecrats have no real issue on which to found a permanent party. All they have is the racial issue and our history is full of political parties that fell on such prejudice. They offer nothing in the way of economic and social betterment in the South. To the contrary, big interests behind it would check economic and social reform.

Mon 11-1-48

As for "states' rights," the Southern people know as well as anybody else how phony this is in this day and age. They are fully aware that it was through initiative of the Federal Government, not the States, that great changes for the better in the South were brought about in recent years. In those who are crying "states' rights" also they recognize many who have spent much time in Washington trying to tap the Federal till for money for things which States could not finance.

In the long look, the rapid changes now going on in the South offer the best arguments against the perpetuation of the Dixiecrat Party. Some in the South hopefully see the current spectacle as the last gasp of the alliance of reaction and prejudice. They envisage economic improvement, education, and education on economic issues such as is now being provided by labor unions which are growing with the swift advance of industrialization in the South, as gradually increasing political progressivism in that section and also removing the causes of racial antagonism upon which reaction flourishes.

The Birmingham Meeting

(Note: The Columbia Record here reprints an article from the Wall Street Journal, by Albert Clark, a member of its staff, on the "Dixiecrats'" meeting at Birmingham. In doing so, The Record desires to give varying views on that meeting and the current political situation in the South.)

Wed 7-21-48

Dixie Democrats in open revolt against President Truman have taken steps to split the "Solid South."

Saturday a group of "states' rights" Democrats who bolted the Democratic convention at Philadelphia last week picked a ticket at a rump convention here to run against the president.

The dissenters were from three states—Mississippi, South Carolina and Alabama. They claim a total of 28 electoral votes. They picked Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, a leader in the anti-Truman movement, as their candidate for president and Gov. Fielding Wright of Mississippi as his running mate.

Electors Named

Alabama Democrats already have named their 11 electors, all pledged to vote against Mr. Truman or any other candidate who supports the so-called civil rights legislation. A slate of nine electors has been hand picked by an anti-Truman state convention in Mississippi. It was tacitly understod they'd never vote for Mr. Truman. Governor Thurmond is expected to have little trouble carrying his own state of South Carolina which has eight electoral votes.

But the militant "states' righters" will find it difficult to add to their strength.

The "states' rights' 'ticket will meet a lukewarm—if not cool reception in such upper south states as North Carolina and Virginia.

Tar heel politicians have been reluctant from the beginning to bolt the national party, through some of the state's leaders may give the Truman-Barkley ticket only passive support. Virginia, under the leadership of Gov. William Tuck and Sen. Harry Byrd, was one of the originators of the revolt movement. However, Messrs. Byrd and Tuck have adopted a cautious attitude in recent weeks and failed to show up here Saturday.

Some southern politicians say that there's an outside chance that some of the "border" southern states like Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee and Florida will go for the G.O.P.'s Dewey-Warren ticket.

Thurmond, Wright Not First Choices

In turning to Governors Thurmond and Wright, the anti-Truman Democrats did not pick their first choices. They had hoped to line up a ticket of better known men with wider appeal in the south. They pleaded unsuccessfully with Senator Byrd at Philadelphia last week to carry their banner. Senator Russel of Georgia "reluctantly" permitted his name to go before the Philadelphia conclave, and he garnered 263 southern votes. But he refused to get involved in the Birmingham meeting.

Wed 7-21-48

The Birmingham session itself broke up on a discordant note. Gov. Ben Laney of Arkansas, who came to this convention city but did not attend the meetings, issued a statement soon after the pow-wow broke up calling for party "unity" and warning against vindictive action. However, Mr. Laney sidestepped an endorsement of either President Truman or Mr. Thurmond.

The rebel convention was under the control of a small group of officials and ex-office holders in Missisipppi, Alabama and South Carolina. They included Sen. James O. Easterland and Governor Wright of Mississippi, Governor Thurmond, and former Gov. Frank Dixon of Alabama and Gessner T. McCorvey, chairman of the Alabama State Democratic Executive Committee.

Byrd, Tuck Not Represented

Senator Byrd and Governor Tuck were without representation. Nobody showed up from North Carolina. In fact, few political leaders from any southern state except for Mississippi, Alabama, and South Carolina were on hand.

Frank Upchurch, who headed Florida anti-Truman delegation to the Philadelphia convention, threw his support to the Thurmond-Wright team. Texas is split on the revolt question. Some Texans would like to return to the Truman fold. Former Gov. Dan Moody has been leader in the Lone Star State against the president. Texas did not join the walk-out at Philadelphia but withheld its votes from Mr. Truman to the last.

An estimated 5,000 to 6,000 Alabamians packed the municipal auditorium where the convention was held.

Wed 7-21-48

Immediately after his "nomination," Governor Thurmond launched a campaign based on white sepremacy and against civil rights concentration of power in the federal government. Governor Wright told the convention that the national Democratic party in Philadelphia "thought we were bluffing. Now we have called their bluff. There will be no weakening."

Despite declarations that there will be "no turning back' 'to President Truman, the "states' rights" group did not close the door behind them. The called another meeting of anti-Truman Democrats to be held here October 1 and there were some here who believed that even the three-state movement could callapse by that date if a way can be found to go back to the Truman fold without losing face.

Dixiecrats

The Dixiecrats: Past, Present, Future

The Advertiser

The Movement Was A Scorched Earth Operation

FORMER Gov. Chauncey Sparks says the Dixiecrat movement should be disbanded. Many Alabamians will agree with him.

Jun 11-7-48

It is certain that only the bitter-enders and those dispossessed of realism will now contend that the Dixiecrat movement has a future of any consequence.

Montgomery Ala

It was a worthy undertaking. It was an honorable cause. And, as we shall try to show, it served an important purpose.

But also the Dixiecrat movement was an asset to the man it was uncorked to defeat—President Truman. Beginning with the Alabama walk-out at the Philadelphia convention, the inflamed reprisals of the revolters stimulated the ardor and stiffened the resolution of Truman backers—which, as it turns out, seems to be a majority of the American people.

We venture the assertion—with no fear of contradiction by any competent witness attending the Philadelphia convention—that without the help of the walk-out spectacle of the Alabama and Mississippi delegations, Mayor Humphrey, eastern machine bosses and associated zealots could never have won adoption for the all-out Truman civil rights platform plank.

On that Wednesday in the Philadelphia convention, every delegate was alerted to the impending walk-out of 13 members of the Alabama delegation. All eyes, the photographers and portable radio microphones were centered on the half of the Alabama delegation that was going to go over the top at the zero hour.

Whether justly or unjustly, this activity incensed the delegates of other states because they felt it was the act of a group that wouldn't play on the team unless it ran the show.

That is why your radio brought you a thunder of boos from the convention hall when the Alabama walk occurred.

Jun 11-7-48

THE result was that Truman got his all-out plank, he ran on it and was elected. Logically, he construes that as a mandate.

In saying all of that, we want to make it abundantly clear that it is not said in a spirit of recrimination. This newspaper is in no position to do that because it was part of the Dixiecrat movement. More than that, the half of the Alabama delegation that walked out did precisely that which they had pledged the people of this state they would do.

So much to remark the untoward results of the Dixiecrat movement. As we said, the movement served the cause of the South, and to a lesser degree, the cause of the nation.

The insignificant 38 votes Thurmond was able to plop in the deep freeze influenced nothing. But the dramatic revolt served a larger and important purpose to the nation by setting off a national debate on States' Rights. That issue is today much more a part of the consciousness of the American people than it would have been had there been no Dixie rebellion.

More important, the Dixiecrat operation caused large groups of Americans—just as sincere and as good Americans as those in the South—to learn for the first time something about the South's oppressive race problem. The Dixiecrats thus won untold numbers of non-Southerners over as sympathizers.

THE Dixiecrat movement made it possible, for example, for this newspaper to have a long editorial on our race problem reprinted in Boston and Baltimore newspapers. That is true of other Southern papers. These relayed editorials were read by thousands of thoughtful, generous minded Americans whose solicitude for justice is not inferior to that of the South.

It even compelled—to sum up—the South-baiting Time Magazine to put its senior editors to work taking a second and penetrating look at the Southern problem and brought forth an article tartly delineating Northern hypocrisy in racial segregation. Such examples might be multiplied without end.

Therefore, one need not have been a Dixiecrat to see clearly that the movement was far better than nothing. Certainly repose and acquiescence in the Truman proposals was not indicated.

National attention was drawn to the South's problem. Our case was broadcast on a network that would not have been available but for the Dixiecrat incident.

Jun 11-7-48

It served, we may hope, to alter the party's viewpoints as other splinter parties, such as the Populists and the LaFollette Progressives, have done.

But by the standards of the Populists and Progressives, the voting strength of the Dixiecrats was not formidable. At the meridian of Southern anger, the party got but 38 electoral votes. It failed even to carry such Deep South states as Georgia and Texas. Its popular vote was less than that cast for the deranged Communist candidate, Henry Wallace.

IN THE strict sense, the Dixiecrats were not a political party. Its one concern was civil rights. Its one purpose, that avowed, was to scorch the earth before Truman. Its standard bearer never mentioned war and peace, social security or the high cost of living. The party used aliases. The official name was the States' Rights Party and was so used in some other states, but in Alabama we appropriated the Democratic rooster and infringed the name patent.

We do not agree with Gov. Sparks' inference that the four Dixiecrat states should return to the national party seeking amnesty, hat-in-hand. We revolted, we lost and it would cost us respect to say we're sorry.

Gov. Sparks, however, is altogether correct in observing that the civil rights issue will have been settled this way or that before the next election. And it will be settled, as he always pointed out, in one of two places—the courts and Congress.

Jun 11-7-48

Our present view is that despite the Truman mandate, there is an excellent chance of blocking civil rights legislation. And however galling it may be to some, we're going to be placing our reliance on such men as Senator Hill and Senator Sparkman. Their standing in Congress and the nation is such that the Democratic Party may forgive them their Dixiecrat excursion, permit them to keep their swords and continue in powerful committee posts.

Convention Pros And Cons; Dissatisfaction Is General

Advertiser
Montgomery Ala.

By RHEA CUMMING

The taxi driver and the Judge, the merchant and the man who works for him, all have one opinion or another about Act II of the Democratic Convention drama.

The news, as dead as yesterday's newspaper, is still wiggling around on the tongues of numerous disgusted Montgomerians. None seemed to be pleased with the outcome, but a few argued in defense of it. And the views were as varied as the colors of hair on a peroxide blonde.

One said the delegates from Alabama who had walked out of the Convention had "ruined themselves politically in the state."

Jun. 7-18-48

Another, still lamenting Eisenhower's refusal, thought only secondarily of Truman, and, even after it was all over in Philadelphia, he continued to wonder about Eisenhower.

"The men who served under him were drafted for the war," he said. "They didn't want to go either. They would like to have stayed at home and done what they wanted to do. But they went. Eisenhower knew that. Why wouldn't he be drafted when he was called to serve?"

Others, in argument, said Eisenhower had been drafted once like everybody else—why should he be drafted again.

Just Disgusted

The majority, however, were disgusted with the whole thing. They didn't like Alabama, as one said, "falling in its same old place—backwards."

If there were those who were glad Truman made it they didn't say so or they didn't cross our path. Only one came near it when he said, "I don't say the delegation was paid to walk out—but they could have been."

"By whom," he was asked.

"Don't you think Stalin would like to see Dewey come in?"

Others said they didn't like Truman even before he had to take a stand on "civil rights" plank.

7-18-48

"He just never made sense," one said of Truman. "He even looks like a puppet," another sneered.

Some said they didn't feel the delegates had a right to "walk out."

7-18-48

"They were there to vote. We voted for them to vote for us. And they went to the convention knowing that. That means that nearly half of us didn't cast even an opinion for Senator Russell, much less a vote."

Walk Approved

And then the other stand that: "We voted for them, knowing they would walk out. They had said publicly that they would and they couldn't do much else."

All in all, Montgomerians seem to feel that neither the turn to the right nor the turn to the left was right. Nothing seemed to fit—and a lot of them only knew the North couldn't force federal policing on the South. Others knew it could be done.

From extreme to extreme, it seems to be the only bit of news that has remained news over 24 hours. because Montgomerians weren't told anything solid that they could bank on happily. They had nothing to keep them from being baffled.

"Gessner McCorvey has the right idea, I think," a judge's assistant said. "The vote ought to be thrown into the House.

Some even lambasted the Constitution, saying that back in the late 1780's votes by electors were good things when communication was difficult and voters were few —"But now," she said, "with 147,000,000 population—"

One man said he admired the President after his speech.

"He knew he was licked—but doggonit, he was fighting anyway."

7-15-48

Other speech opinions were "Blasting the Republican Party and only telling a part of the truth," "It was the speech of a cheap politician," "When Truman tries to be funny, he's disgusting."

Dixiecrats' Presidential Nominee Favor 'Gradualism' For Negroes

BY HENRY LESESNE

COLUMBIA, S. C., Sept. 11—(NANA)—What sort of fellow is the Dixiecrat nominee for president, Gov. J. Strom Thurmond, of South Carolina?

As to personal habits, he shuns not only alcohol, but tobacco and coffee and, at 45, is a tireless walker.

Although a total abstainer himself, he has promised, in his two years as governor of his state, to sign any liquor law the Legislature passes.

"I am no prude," he says, "and certainly I have no holier-than-thou attitude."

Sun 9-12-48

Is the Dixiecrat nominee a Southern reactionary or Southern liberal?

Certainly, until the current controversy over the president's civil-rights program, the South Carolina governor was considered a liberal by all Southern standards.

He subscribed to the Southern philosophy of gradualism—that is, that any reform in the South respecting the Negro issue must be gradual and the change must come from within, and not by any federal or outside dictation.

Like most Southerners, he holds to the belief that the Negro has made more progress in the shortest period of time than any other race, but that his progress in the South must remain within the pattern of segregation.

Although he is opposed to any federal anti-poll tax law, for two years he has advocated that the South Carolina Legislature repeal the state's $1-a-year poll tax.

* * *

THE POLL TAX IN South Carolina, however, is not considered a deterrent to voting, as it applies only to the general election, whereas the Democratic primary, in which Negroes have recently won the right to participate, is the actual election.

South Carolina is the only state in the union without a secret ballot. That is, every party must furnish its own ballot in a general election. This is one of the factors which makes a responsible second party virtually impossible here. It takes a courageous soul to ask for a Republican ballot.

For two years the governor has strongly recommended to the Legislature a secret-ballot law. The state Democratic convention likewise urged it this year. The Legislature has balked, however.

The Dixiecrat presidential nominee is unalterably opposed to a federal anti-lynching law, but he abhors mob violence as much as any man. He has been a jurist many years.

A few months after Thurmond's inaugural as governor, the South's biggest lynching case in a decade broke in an upstate county. A mob of taxi drivers lynched a Negro who had allegedly stabbed a white cabbie.

The governor rushed his constabulary to the scene. Four days later, after 31 members of the mob had been arrested, the governor announced:

"We, in South Carolina, want the world to know we will tolerate no mob violence."

* * *

HE ASSIGNED special prosecutors to aid the local prosecutor. The state's handling of the case was without criticism. But the jury refused to convict.

Southerners argued the mere arrest of the mobsters was a deterrent to lynching, but even had the case been tried in a Federal Court, the verdict would have been the same.

Sun 9-12-48

The governor, in his two years in office, has plugged for "local government" among the counties, and for a new streamlined constitution to replace the present one. He got through the 1948 Legislature a measure to reorganize the state government with a view to eliminating waste and duplication of services.

Thurmond doesn't like the word "Dixiecrat," which the newspapers coined for the Southern bolters. The party's actual name is States' Rights Democrats.

The governor says the word "Dixiecrat" is a five-yard penalty against party elsewhere in the nation. The issue of states' rights is not purely a Southern issue, he points out.

The presidential nominee of the Dixiecrats comes from the rural county of Edgefield, in South Carolina. At Clemson College, he was an athlete! Summertimes he worked in a cotton mill.

After his graduation from college, Thurmond entered upon a career of public service — school teacher, school superintendent, state senator, circuit judge.

HE IS A VETERAN of World War II and holds 12 military medals. He served with the First Army in Europe and was with it all the way across the continent after landing on Normandy.

He has married since becoming governor. He hit the front pages in November, 1947, when he wed his office secretary, Miss Jean Crouch.

Thurmond is a tireless worker and often burns the midnight oil, frequently made out-of-state trips in the interest of trying to bring new industry to South Carolina.

Sun 9-12-48

He is an able and vigorous campaigner. Regardless of whether the Dixiecrat revolt amounts to more than a token protest, he is certain to be often in the headlines between now and November.

He says the Dixiecrats are not bolting the national party, but are fighting within the party to defeat the renomination of President Truman.

Sun 9-12-48

"Those who believe in the principles of state sovereignty will be the real Democratic Party when the fight is finished," he says. "The present Democratic Party will be discredited and totally ineffective as a national party after November."

Dixiecrat Leader's State Burns 2 Crosses in Night

Afro American Sat 8-7-

Baltimore Md.

COLUMBIA, S.C.—Gov. J. Strom Thurmond's race-baiting speeches in his bid as leader of the Dixiecrats for the presidency, last Thursday, reaped a harvest in two cross-burnings at schools in the State within a 40-mile distance of each other.

Six-foot tall, burlap-wrapped, gasoline-soaked crosses were set afire on the same night at Bettis Academy on the Aiken and Edgefield County line near Trenton and at Booker Washington Heights Elementary School here in Columbia.

Sat 8-7-48

It is believed that the same group of masked and robed men, who cruised around in both places in a cloth-covered automobile while the crosses were burning, were responsible for the outrages; but no effort has been made to apprehend the mauraders.

White Youths Evacuated

Bettis Academy is the junior high school from which a score of white Pennsylvania orphan children were ordered away early in July after they came there several weeks before to help the school's colored pupils build a dormitory.

At the time they were here, the Rev. A. C. Hightower, school principal, held out for a week against six or seven deputy sheriffs from the two counties, who patroled the school grounds at half-hour intervals seeing that segregation laws were observed, before yielding to pressure and suggesting that the group leave.

Sat 8-7-48

Terrorized 4-H Campers

The young people were sent to Bettis Academy from Philadelphia, by the American Friends (Quakers) Association, to do some bricklaying at the school, which the Friends partially support, that otherwise would not be done because of lack of funds.

The cross-burning at Bettis, Thursday night, was thought to have been done in an effort to demoralize members of 4-H Clubs in the Piedmont section of the State holding an annual summer camp in the area.

Ignorant whites, seeing some light-complexioned youth in the group, are believed to have thought this another interracial group.

Columbians Don't Scare Easily

The cross-burning at Columbia, latest since such incidents in West Columbia several weeks ago, was regarded as an attempt to intimidate the record turnout of colored voters expected for the Aug. 10 Democratic Primary, first in which they have been given the unquestionable right to participate.

Sat 8-7-48

Meanwhile, preparations are going forward for the record vote despite the fiery crosses. In the city, in Ward 9—largest enrolled membership in Richland County—1400 of the 1700 voters are colored. It is estimated that 3,500 of the approximate 15,000 primary voters will be colored, in the city alone.

Runs As Dixiecrat Opposing Dixiecratic Nominee

The Columbia Record

William B. Martin of Greenville, former Parker school teacher, who has announced his intention to make the race for sheriff of Greenville as a States Rights candidate in the general election, complicates things.

The regular Democratic party ticket, containing the names of the successful candidates in the Democratic primary, is the States Rights ticket, as Mr. Martin can discover by reading the declaration of principles adopted by the Democratic party of South Carolina.

Thur 8-19-48

Apparently Mr. Martin, a veteran of World War II, has been confused by the fact that the States Rights Democrats is not a new party in South Carolina although it is one in North Carolina, for example. In South Carolina, Alabama and Mississippi the States Righters have captured the Democratic party and are on their way, leaving the loyal Democrats in those states to shift for themselves as they may. Elsewhere the party is a new party.

Thur 8-19-48

But then isn't confusion the normal thing in South Carolina politics this year?

WATCH THE DIXIECRATS

It would be most unwise for Negroes to fail to take into account what is at least part of the motivation back of speeches and other statements by Dixiecrats. We need to remember at all times that some of these statements are deliberately made to infuriate a certain type of southern white man by raising the bogey man of "Negro political dominance" for quite cynical purposes.

But after taking this factor into account, it is both amusing and enlightening to read some of the current outbursts of southern oratory. For example, a friend has sent me a clipping from the Delta Democrat-Times of Greenville, Mississippi. It is a story by Hodding Carter of a speech made by Representative Walter Sillers who led the Mississippi delegation as it walked out of the Democratic convention in Philadelphia.

"The most powerful political figure in the Uniter States," Mr. Carter quotes Mr. Sillers as saying, "is Walter White, the president of the N. A. A. C. P. whose organization not only directs the policies of the Republican, Democratic and Communist-supported Progressive parties, but also the activities of their candidates."

TWO CRITICISMS TO OFFER

I have two criticisms and objections to Mr. Sillers' statement. The first is that it is not true. The second is that if it were true that I controlled the political parties, the record of the 80th Congress and of the do-nothing special session which has just adjourned would have been vastly different. The 80th Congress would have amended the Senate rules, passed the anti-lynching, F. E. P. C. and anti-poll tax legislation, done something fundamental about high prices and housing, and in other ways done the job the people of America wanted the Congress to do.

I have also a copy of the July 23rd issue of Alabama, a weekly news magazine published at Birmingham. From the advertisements by coal, textile, lumber, insurance and other corporations—many of them owned, financed and operated from the North—it is not difficult to see the tie-up between the Dixiecrats and conservative Republicans.

The entire issue is devoted to the recent Dixiecrat convention and is interspersed with attacks on Negro voters. The Democratic Party, so Alabama asserts, is now owned body and soul by "radical, minority pressure groups and crossbreeds." It belabors southern delegates to the Democratic convention who did not walk out, "It was a strange sight to see some Southerners sticking around in face of the humiliating platform the convention threw at the South. The insulting planks embraced every demand of Northern radicals, who drove pell-mell for full control under leadership of Walter White and his 'National Association for Advancement of Colored People.'"

"ALABAMA" and "STATES' RIGHTS"

Alabama has put us deeply in their debt as has States' Rights, an eight page tabloid also published at Birmingham, by reprinting in full the now famous advertisement, "Let 'Em Walk," which the NAACP and twenty other national Negro organizations published in the Philadelphia Bulletin during the Democratic convention. According to States' Rights, "The convention bowed to the Negro pressure and agreed to do all that was asked of it by White and his crowd," and "thereby turned down all that the South had asked."

Sat 8-28-48

May I take this opportunity to express deep gratitude to Alabama, States' Rights and to all the other Southern publications which are giving wide circulation—and for free too—to the clear cut and convincing words which Roy Wilkins wrote in this advertisement. We did not have the money to place the advertisement in as many papers as we wished. That is why we are delighted that the Dixiecrats are helping Negro organizations to carry the Negro's demand for full freedom throughout the South.

There is one lesson of very great significance in all this. By discarding politicians of the old school who were venal, by becoming independent, intelligent and uncompromising, the Negro has put the fear of God and his ballot in the minds and hearts of his enemies. For the first time in American history, he has put the reactionary South desperately on the defensive. If we continue to use courage, intelligence and unselfishness, we shall be able not only to better immeasurably the Negro's status, but to help America itself.

THE DIXIECRAT VOTE

IT DOES NOT PORTEND ANY IMMEDIATE POLITICAL CHANGE

Life
Mon 11-8-48
Chicago, Ill.

Probably the strangest—and most welcome—portent of the election is the difficulty of reading any long-term portent into the Henry Wallace and J. Strom Thurmond third-party movements. When Bryanism and Bull Moose insurgency were the dominant maverick impulses in our political life, they foreshadowed important changes in national legislation. But all that Wallace has proved is that a mere handful of Americans can be deluded by brummagem slogans of "peace" and "plenty" into supporting the effort of a foreign power to sow dissension among us. As for the Dixiecrat disturbance, it is somewhat more complex and enigmatic. But the very difficulty of analyzing it down into a set of durable meanings would seem to prove it a "one-shot" phenomenon.

The Southerners themselves have seemed rather mystified by the States' Rights Democratic party. Just before the election a number of Dixie editors were polled by a news service on the subject of Thurmond's presidential candidacy. Of those who answered the poll an even 90% concluded that the States' Rights party would die soon after the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November.

Does the record of the Dixiecrat campaign mean that "white supremacy" must forever call the tune in Southern politics, with the States' Righters eternally giving the pitch? If so, then such items as the admission of the Negro's right to vote in the South Carolina primaries are eddies on the margin of a stream that is flowing backward. But the stream is not flowing backward. In spite of the resurgence of Talmadgism in Georgia, it is impossible to believe that the movement to widen the franchise in the South can be stopped.

Life
Mon 11-8-48
Chicago, Ill.

Undoubtedly the Dixiecrat movement has turned entirely on Southern pride—if changes are to be made in the South's social structure, most Southerners, whether liberal or conservative, would prefer to make them for themselves, without federal prodding. But to keep the federal government off their necks Southerners must retain their Democratic committee seniority and power of maneuver in Congress.

This means that they cannot afford a permanent break with the official Democratic party organization. The Dixiecrat leaders have been aware of this from the start; hence their insistence that they were merely rejecting Harry Truman, not Harry Truman's party.

By analyzing the Thurmond movement down, one is compelled to proclaim it a transient thing. But this does not quite dispose of it. The really significant item in the poll of the Southern newspaper editors is the 23% who answered "yes" to a second question: "Do you think a merger of States' Rights Democrats and the Republican party is possible?" In Texas 61% of the editors envisaged a future for the States' Rights movement under a Republican banner.

Mon 11-8-48

This Texas response leads one to an interesting field for speculation. The Southwestern states, as distinct from the "old" South, have been having a terrific economic boom. Part of the wealth of Texas is in tideland oil, over which the states and the federal government have been contending. If Texas money forces its way eastward along the Gulf coast, as it shows indication of doing, the States' Rights issue may do much to prepare the way for the growth of an effective second party throughout the South. In which case the Dixiecrats will have unwittingly done something for the political health of a region.

States' Righters Plan Washington 'Bastion'

States' Rights Democratic chieftains and their followers today looked to the early establishment of what will amount to national campaign headquarters, in Washington.

Decision to set up the "public opinion" office to be known as the States' Rights Institute in the nation's capital was made at a Southwide conference here yesterday of a 16-member steering committee headed by Arkansas Gov. Ben Laney.

Its purpose is to continue the fight for the "States' Rights cause," which Gov. Laney said is "just as sacred and necessary" as before the presidential election.

This public opinion headquarters will serve as a spearhead aimed to combat extension of federal powers and specifically to work for defeat of President Truman's "civil rights" legislation.

From the Washington bastion, the States' Righters will campaign to spread principles of constitutional government and membership into every state in the union.

A RESOLUTION ADOPTED by representatives from 10 states meet-by Mississippi Gov. [illegible] Wright, vice presidential [illegible] mate of Gov. Strom Thur[illegible] called for Gov. Laney to appoint a committee to place the plan into operation Thurmond was unable to attend.

This committee, which the Arkansas governor was to name after his return to Little Rock, will arrange for incorporation of a "non-partisan and non-profit" corporation. That will be the "public opinion" institute. Fri 12-17-48

MAP DIXIECRAT STRATEGY—How best to carry on the States' Rights Democratic fight was discussed in a Southwide strategy meeting of Dixiecrat leaders at Tutwiler Hotel yesterday. Two of the the States' Rights chieftains attending were Arkansas Gov. Ben Laney, who called the meeting, and Mississippi Gov. Fielding Wright, vice presidential running mate of Gov. Strom Thurmond, who was unable to attend. Snapped in a conference outside the session room are Gov. Wright (left) and Gov. Laney.

Governor J. Strom Thurmond Lies

IN THE course of a demagogic attack on President Truman's civil rights proposals before the Dixiecrats in Houston, Tex., last week, Governor J. Strom Thurmond, Dixiecrat candidate for President of the United States, told a GREAT BIG BLACK LIE.

Sat 8-21-48

Governor Thurmond told the Dixiecrats that the idea and plan for the FEPC came from material worked up by Joseph Stalin in 1920 when he was leader of the Russian All Races Congress. Thurmond said that the FEPC was born in Communist Russia.

That is a DELIBERATE, DECEITFUL LIE.

Pittsburgh Pa

The FEPC came to the mind of President Franklin D. Roosevelt in June, 1941, when he was alarmed by the prospect of a march on Washington which had been threatened by A. Philip Randolph and some others. That is history which many people know.

Sat 8-21-48

However, the question of the origin of the FEPC is not too important.

What is important is that the Dixiecrats are sponsoring a liar for President.

All Christians must have been shocked when this man, concluding his address, called for the blessing of God upon this lie and his other mendacious sophistries.

The Dixiecrats are backing a man for President who, in terms of the above noted lie, has neither truth, honesty nor integrity in him or on his side.

Thurmond Tells Dixiecrat Plan

News Digest

34

WASHINGTON.—In one of the frankest denials of democratic intent ever uttered by a candidate for public office, Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, States Rights Democrat candidate for President, last week told reporters: "We're not interested in the popular vote. We're more concerned with the electoral vote. That's what determines elections."

Wed 10-6-48

Thurmond declared that the aim of the Dixiecrats is to throw the election into the House of Representatives by taking enough southern votes away from President Truman and Governor Dewey to deny either of them a majority in the electoral college. When a presidential election is thrown into the House each state delegation, regardless of the state's population, has just one vote.

This, Thurmond explained, means that "the small states will have a chance to make themselves heard."

The Dixiecrat leader asserted that he will get at least 127 electoral votes, claiming all of the southern states. Texas, which he explicitly claimed, was revealed last week by the Gallup poll to have a 63 per cent vote for President Truman.

The States Rights movement began with Truman's endorsement of the report of his Commission on Civil Rights, Thurmond said. He characterized civil rights legislation as "the beginning of the police state," and likened the Civil Rights Division of the Justice Dep't to "Hitler's secret police."

In addition to preventing Truman's reelection in '48, Thurmond said that the Dixiecrats aim at forcing the Democratic Party into retreating from the progressive human rights position expressed in its platform.

Candidate Thurmond vigorously denied frequent press reports that western oil interests are financing his campaign. He said his party is "pinched" and that the people who've contributed to it are "just plain people who previously have supported national Democratic tickets."

Wed 10-6-48

He said that most southern politicos are really for him, but are afraid to speak out for fear of political reprisals by "the Trumanites." Gov. Ben Laney of Arkansas, at least will speak out for him, however, Thurmond promised. He added that he is "not disturbed over the position of Sen. Harry F. Byrd of Virginia."

The States Rights chieftain abandoned his frankness, however, when he was asked about the Taft-Hartley law. "You want me to say I'm for it or against it," he remarked "but it's too complicated for that. I'm for labor legislation that will be fair to labor, management and the public."

Wed 10-6-48

Thurmond, who once bragged about his support of federal aid for education, now says that he's uneasy about it since the civil rights bills have been put forward.

States' Rights And -Rousers

"Nature abhors a vacuum . . ."

Some of the dead-bent critics of the States' Rights movement would have [illegible] [illegible], without emotion, without eloquence, without any of the sentiments and excesses to which all humans are prone, and, mirabile dictu, without mention of the race problem. It is all right to talk States' Rights, they feel, but you must do it very quietly and be as dull as possible about it. And if you so much as mention the Negro you are a fascist, a rabble-rouser and a first cousin of Theo. Bilbo.

The Columbia Record

34

Here is The Owosso (Michigan) Argus-Press, printed in Thomas E. Dewey's old home town, vowing that with all his good intentions, Governor Thurmond can no more escape the fascist-minded rabble-rousers in his movement than Henry Wallace can get away from the Communist plotters in his. The Michigan paper misunderstands Governor Thurmond if it thinks his statement that States' Rights and not "White Supremacy" is the issue in his campaign involves the hypocrisy of pretending the Negro question is not the animus behind Southern stress on States' Rights. What the governor means is that [illegible] don't have to agree with us on that question to see the justice, Americanism and common sense of leaving this and other matters to state control.

Columbia Record

It isn't rabble-rousing, fascism, Ku Kluxery or Bilboism-and-Southernbile to speak forcefully of the Southern race problem in advocating the basic American principles of States' Rights and local self-government. Indeed, many, many people throughout this nation—as this writer has discovered—are hard to interest in an abstraction like States' Rights but easy to interest, and win, when you tell them of the practical race problem that makes the South feel so deeply about States' Rights.

Columbia S.C.

In Owosso, the population is 16,000. The Negro population is—zero. There are no Negroes at all. If Owosso's population were divided as, say, Birmingham's is, there would be 8,280 whites and 7,720 colored. Merely to point this out to Owossans and ask them to wonder how they would feel in those circumstances—is to argue for States' Rights with them, even though you base it on the race problem.

Of course, as former Governor Frank Dixon, of Alabama, is pointing out, the States' Rights issue runs to more than the race problem today and, by that token, is entitled to far more national support than the race problem alone can win for it. "You have the heritage of freedom, based on hard-won victories in the past," he told University of Alabama students Monday night. "In its place you are offered a series of governments, borrowed from Eastern Europe, where all life is regimented, where all men are slaves. You are offered time-dishonored forms of centralized government, indistinguishable from the tyrannies of the past from which your forebears fought their way to freedom . . ."

Columbia S.C.

"We are feeding and supplying the world through our system of free enterprise and personal freedom—yet there are those who would throw all this away and go to that which a thousand times has been proved hopeless."

The Columbia Rec

"How dear to my heart are the scenes of my childhood." Tom Dewey ought to consider his old home town not for its editor's talented but uninformed comments but for two circumstances that result from the fact that Owosso has no Negro population. Because Owosso is unlike Alabama in this, Owossans don't really propose to tell Alabama how to behave. Not when they stop and think, for they are fine people there in Owosso and their Americanism is rock-bottom. And similarly, because Owosso is unlike New York, Owossans don't have to consider politics and an organized Negro minority when they wrestle with their consciences over the un-American business of trying to tell Alabamians how to behave.

Dixiecrats In Louisiana Push Truman Off Ballot

States' Righters Make Thurmond and Wright Democratic Party Nominees for Election

By the Associated Press.

Baton Rouge, La., Sept. 10.—President Truman's name was knocked off the Louisiana ballot today. He will be only a write-in candidate in the November 2 general elections.

The States' Rights Democratic candidates—Governor J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina for President and Governor Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi for Vice-President—were declared the Democratic Party nominees in Louisiana.

The Louisiana Democratic State Central Committee took this action by unanimous vote on a resolution by Judge Leander Perez of St. Bernard and Plaquemines Parishes (counties).

Pro-Truman forces are expected to counter the Louisiana move, but Chairman J. Howard McGrath of the Democratic National Committee said at Washington that he would have no comment until he had examined the legal aspects of the action at Baton Rouge.

Sat. 9-11-48

Thurmond Ends Texas Tour.

Regular Democratic electors are pledged to the States' Rights candidates in Mississippi, Alabama, and South Carolina. States' Rights leaders said they have qualified electors in Kentucky,

State Central Committee . . . to support candidates for President and Vice-President who will preserve the traditions of the people of this state and protect their right of self-government and all other State's rights in accordance with our American way of constitutional Government as opposed to candidates for said offices who are pleged to support the enactment of federal laws to regiment our people, to destroy their right of State Government and to force upon them foreign ideologies such as the Russian 'All-Races Law,' called here the F.E.P.C., which contains a fundamental threat to our American way of life and which would set up a federal police state for the certain destruction of our American freedom and liberties."

Party Symbol to Be Used.

Sat. 9-11-48

The resolution also declared that Thurmond and Wright "both have pledged themselves to support, defend, and preserve the right of the people of each state to local self-government and all State's rights and property within our American constitutional framework of Government."

Judge Perez explained the ballot would be headed by the regular Democratic Party's rooster symbol. Immediately beneath it will appear the names of Thurmond and Wright; then will follow the electors' names, and after them the names of candidates nominated in the August 31 Louisiana Democratic primary. The committee met to certify the primary election returns.

Write-in Basis Set.

To "prevent a split in the vote" for the nominees of the August 31 primary in the general election, Perez said States' Rights electors who have qualified with the secretary of state will be asked to withdraw. John U. Barr, New Orleans, Louisiana States' Rights leader, was not available immediately for comment.

Judge Perez said the names of Truman and Senator Alben Barkley of Kentucky, vice-presidential candidate, would not appear on the ballot, and they can be voted for only on a write-in basis.

The Louisiana election law on write-in candidates provides that 10 persons in the state must notify the clerks of the court of their willingness to stand as electors. These names are posted on election day and must be written into the ballot.

Sat. 9-11-48

Electors Unpledged.

The state's 10 Democratic electors were not pledged officially to the Thurmond-Wright ticket by the central committee's action. They are unpledged. Louisana electors customarily are unpledged. In reply to a question from the floor during the meeting, Judge Perez said "It isn't necessary. These are men who have told us they would not vote for Truman. I am one of them. I know them."

Perez told the committee the party is "at a crossroads."

"It's a matter of self-preservation," he declared "Are we going to lie down supinely and see the resurrection of carpetbagging in the South?" he asked.

Committee member Dudley Desmare, New Orleans, asked, "Does this mean we're leaving the Democratic Party?"

"No," shouted Chairman Henry Sevier of Tallulah. "This is the Democratic Party."

Both the Republican and Progressive Parties have qualified elector slates to appear on the ballot.

States' Righters Barred From Indiana Ballot

Indianapolis, Sept. 10 (AP)—The States' Rights Party will not be on the Indiana general election ballot.

Circuit Judge Lloyd E. Claycombe today permanently enjoined the State Election Board from giving the Southern Democrats a place on the ballot.

In an unusual procedure Cleon Foust, Indiana attorney general, joined with the plaintiff, an Indianapolis Negro dentist, in asking that the injunction be made permanent. Foust told the court:

"As a result of our investigation, I am of the opinion that the States' Rights petition is highly irregular. I believe the Election Board, if not defrauded, was misled. I believe the injunction should be made permanent."

Foust said that not more than 700 of the 11,188 signatures on the petition were properly acknowledged.

Extra Session for Place on Ballot, Passman's Plea

BY EDGAR POE
(The Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

Washington, July 31.—A Louisiana congressman today called on the "officials of my state" to summons the Legislature in an extraordinary session to pave the way for a Thurmond-Wright ticket of president electors.

Rep. Otto E. Passman, Fifth District, simultaneously advocated indirectly defeat of both President Truman and Thomas E. Dewey, the Republican standard bearer.

Declaring that the "grass roots movement" in Louisiana and other sections of the South is "growing by leaps and bounds," Congressman Passman said if the South's political leaders will speak out and lend some assistance, the states rights ticket has a good chance of rolling up a greater number of presidential electors than the Truman-Barkley ticket.

Says South Insulted

"If the political leaders of Louisiana and some other states fully realized," he said, "what is going on in Washington and some other centers in this country to tear down the traditions in the South, they would be doing everything in their power to defeat it.

New Orleans, La.

"The time has come for all true Southerners to stand up and be counted. The South is being insulted right and left, by both the Northern Democrats and the Republicans. Only this week President Truman issued an executive order setting up an FEPC in all federal departments, and calling for anti-segregation in the armed forces."

Congressman Passman charged that the president's directives are "nothing but a surrender to the radicals and Communists in this country." He said Mr. Truman, politically, "is bad and Dewey worse." Both the Northern Democrats and Republicans are "demagoguing of the worse sort" with the civil rights proposals, he added.

'Thrown Into House'

Upon his return to Washington, he said he has received from colleagues and others fresh reports that the "states rights" Democrats' movement, headed by Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, and Gov. Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi, is spreading.

"If a states rights presidential ticket can get on the ballot all over the South. I would not be surprised to see the election of the next president thrown into the House of Representatives. To be elected, a presidential candidate must get at least 266 electorial college votes and there is a possibility that neither Truman or Dewey will get that many if the South withholds its votes."

In his dictated statement, Congressman Passman used the word "officials" instead of "governor" in advocating a special session of the Legislature to provide for a Thurmond-Wright set of electors. Under present law of Louisiana, it is necessary to obtain at least 1000 citizens who are not now registered voters to register and sign a petition to pave the way for a set of electors that would be pledged to the "states' rights" ticket in the November 2 general election.

States' Rights Lead Reported In Monroe

MONROEVILLE — If a sample poll conducted by the Monroe Journal in Monroeville and vicinity last week is indicative of the political pulse in this area, Gov. J. Strom Thurmond and his States' Right ticket will walk away with the vote in Monroe County come the presidential election in November.

Of 50 persons interviewed from all walks of life, some 37 indicated they would support the presidential electors pledge to the States' Rights candidate, Gov. Thurmond of South Carolina and his vice-president running mate, Gov. Fielding Wright of Mississippi.

Ten persons said they thought Southerners should remain with the National Democratic Party and fight out differences with President Harry Truman over civil rights within the party.

Eight farmers from various sections of the county were polled and all favored the States' Rights ticket. Of 11 women voters interviewed, seven favored the National Democratic Party and four were States' Rights.

Some persons were asked if they would vote for President Truman if the present electors were pledged to cast their electoral votes for him. Eight said they would and 14 declared they would not vote for him under any circumstances.

Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York, Republican candidate, received two votes in the sample poll. Both persons said they had never voted the Republican ticket before but believed Mr. Dewey was the best man in the race.

Henry wallace and his Progressive Party did not receive a vote in the sample poll. One man declared he was not in favor of any of the candidates and would not vote in the November election.

Among the persons interviewed were business men, farmers, clerks, bankers, housewives, doctors, lawyers, carpenters, and saw mill workers.

Dixiecrats Pull Floperoo In Houston

Sunday Worker

HOUSTON, Texas.—The "huge" Dixiecrat "States Rights" rally held in Houston on Oct. 18, was a dismal political flop. Heralded by expensive full-page ads, radio and news stories, and offering barbecue and drinks free after admission for $1.20, the announced full scale program of Southern Governors, Senators and Congressmen failed to draw more than about 1200 people.

The audience was sparsely scattered in the huge Coliseum which can hold ten thousand, and the people who did attend began a prompt exit when a collection speaker got started. Somebody must have been left holding a lot of beef—barbecue had been prepared to feed 7,500 people!

The main speaker of the evening, Gov. Ben Lancy of Arkansas, trotted out the usual Dixiecrat line. He was introduced by H. R. Cullen, Houston oilman and noted arch-enemy of all labor and progressive causes. Multimillionarie Cullen is a chief financial backer of the Dixiecrats.

The Houston rally was intended as a great sendoff for a whirlwind tour of the state by a large number of spread-eagle Dixiecrat orators, eager to capture Texas' 23 electoral votes. With its multimillionaire backing, the States Rights Party is carrying on a formidable radio and newspaper campaign.

Meanwhile, the Labor Committee of the Progressive Party has begun distribution of tens of thousands of copies of a leaflet entitled: DIXIECHAT KU KLUXISM MENACES ALL LABOR. Printed in both English and Spanish, the leaflet hits hard at the favorite Dixiecrat argument that FEPC will cost the white workers jobs and lower their wages. The leaflet exposes who is backing the system of Jimcrow and discrimination and how it lines their pockets with profits. Finally the leaflet exposes the failure of the Democrats and Republicans to fight for FEPC or any legislation of benefit to the workers.

Remember the Prohibition Law?

The Constitution

Our ears continue to be assaulted with the phrases, "civil rights" and "States' rights."

There is a very real difference between them. But as they are hurled through the air and pressed on paper with ink, they have come to mean, to many persons, the same thing.

That, in fact, is what confuses the current issue.

Certain States' rights are covered, specifically, in the Constitution of the United States. In the first 10 amendments to the Constitution, which are themselves the basis of our individual rights as citizens—and therefore guarantee our civil rights—the tenth one reads:

Tues 7-27-48

"The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people."

These States' rights may be said generally to cover the conduct of domestic affairs, not touching on, or in conflict with, the rights held by the United States Government. Civil rights are the rights of a citizen to freedom of speech, religion, the right to be secure against unreasonable search and seizure, the right to trial by jury, to bond, to habeas corpus, and so on.

Each State is bound by, and may not dispute, the Constitution of the United States and its interpretation by the Supreme Court.

Atlanta Ga.

Issue We have recently completed the National Convention of the nation's two chief political parties. Each has included a platform on civil rights. The plank in the Democratic platform was only a little more specific.

The issue, covered by both parties, has to do, chiefly, with the Negro citizen's rights, although also involved are citizenship rights of the lesser minority groups in the country—Mexicans in the border States and California, and citizens of Japanese and Chinese descent, as well as every numerically smaller racial groups.

Also involved, in the Fair Employment Practices proposals, are the rights to work without discrimination because of race, color or religion.

Specifically These proposed civil rights, specifically before the voters, which the States in the South insist are States' rights, are best illustrated by the proposed Federal law against lynching, and a Federal law to outlaw the poll tax as a prerequisite to voting. The States argue that these are properly the affairs of States within the limits of the Constitution.

The Fair Employment Practices Act is opposed as being against the constitutional rights of individuals and organizations and their right to hire whom they choose. It ignores such vital factors as personality, congeniality and ability to work with others. It is regarded as unconstitutional also because it would impose upon the States a Federal police power nullifying their own domestic State laws and courts.

Events Nothing more clearly demonstrates the fact that we are but human than this dispute about States' rights.

Nothing more clearly proves that it is events, and not political platforms and pledges, which bring about political decisions by the people, than our history in this field of States' rights.

Tues 7-27-48

The first great test of States' rights was, of course, the attempt at secession. Many believed the States had the constitutional right to withdraw. There was an ambiguity there, and Abraham Lincoln and his party opposed. After the war was well under way, Lincoln issued his emancipation proclamation. He did so, as he said, out of no primary interest in slavery, but because he believed it would help the Union. It was in open defiance of State laws, all constitutional, admitting slavery.

Others Others have followed. In our time many of the Southern States participated fanatically in supporting an anti-States' rights plank for Federal prohibition and Federal police to enforce it, against those States which had laws allowing sale of liquors, beer and wine. No States were more active in disavowing States' rights in this field than Mississippi, South Carolina and Alabama. Some of Georgia's delegates to the National Convention did vote against it. It is not always principle which rules. This law mocks us in this present fight.

When the kidnaping, growing out of prohibition's rackets, became a national menace, public sentiment everywhere demanded that Federal law step in and act because of the inefficiency of State law enforcement agents. This law is contrary to the principle.

Time So it goes. Time indeed changes many things. Jefferson wanted to abolish slavery, but specifically said the Negro could never enjoy even political equality. Yet, even at the Wallace Convention, the Negro keynoter called upon Jeffersonian doctrine. Lincoln was even more emphatic in stating that the Negro could not and should not have political or other equalities. The Democratic Party split in 1860 on the issue of States' rights. Yet now come both the parties of Jefferson and Lincoln, revealing what time and events have wrought with public opinion.

Meanwhile, whatever the Congress does with legislation in the field of civil rights will go to the Supreme Court. We shall have to wait a long time, even though the Congress may act, before we know what is left of States' rights. And by then we may have changed our minds.

Dixiecrats Costly To South

(From the ~~New York~~ Star)

The Constitution

All hands agree that Gov. J. Strom Thurmond, of South Carolina, is a nice man; yet John Cabell Breckinridge was a nice man, too, but South Carolina, after 88 years, is still paying the bill that he ran up for her. Thurmond may not cost as much, but the South Carolinians may rest assured that he will be expensive.

The Dixiecrats of 1860 chose Breckinridge precisely because he was not a raving secessionist. This year they have chosen Thurmond because he, among other Southern political fauna, is recognizably a representative of homo sapiens and not of Alouatta ursina, the howling monkey, a species freely exported across the Potomac to Washington. In 1860 they gave Breckinridge 72 electoral votes. This year they will presumably give Thurmond 17, those of Mississippi and South Carolina, with the possibility of 23 additional from Alabama and Georgia, making a total of 40; but they may very easily give 26 more, in North Carolina and Tennessee, to Dewey, which would come to the same thing as far as the election is concerned. In 1860 they defeated Douglas, and in 1948 they have a good chance to defeat Truman.

Fri 8-27-48

Vitality After 1860 their reward was ruin so complete that the South has never entirely recovered. Their reward may be less disastrous in 1948, but it will be bad enough.

The South might well add to its litany, "From nice men in politics, good Lord, deliver us!"

Atlanta Ga

Perhaps it is utterly unrealistic to expect Southern politicians to do anything intelligent, but it would be something of a relief if they would make a bonehead play that had some suggestion of novelty. A repetition, step by step, of the whole series of errors that wrecked the South 88 years ago is merely a bore.

In fact, the heaviest handicap that the South has dragged for the past 20 years is not that it has shocked the nation, or alarmed the nation, but simply that it has made the rest of America tired. The few Southerners in Washington who are suspected of having read a book since 1865—such men as Pepper, Hill, Kefauver and Fulbright—have all made mistakes, but they haven't bored and country and are, therefore, regarded with a certain interest and admiration.

Reward One Southerner, Arnall, of Georgia, has even given an appearance of vitality to the moldering cadaver of States' rights. He discovered that a State has a right to institute proceedings in the U. S. Supreme Court and he sued 21 railroads for conspiracy against his State. That really did startle the country, because it was the first time within living memory that the principle of States' rights had been invoked to do something, instead of to refrain from doing anything. States' rights is a principle, no doubt, but it had come to be regarded in the light of Cornford's definition: "A principle is a rule of inaction, giving valid general reasons for not doing in specific circumstances what to unprincipled instinct would seem to be right."

The Dixiecrat party is the party of terrified men. No doubt they are physically brave enough. Gov. Thurmond himself has an admirable war record—but so had Maj.-Gen. John C. Breckinridge. One of the tragedies of human existence is the fact that so many men who dare to face a machine gun without flinching break and run for the rear the instant an idea whizzes close to their ears.

Dangerous This is not to say that the white South has no cause for alarm. Of course, it has cause for alarm. A free society is always dangerous, for peril is a condition of freedom. But the peril cannot be escaped by choking the growth of freedom, or by attempts to render society static.

The Southerners who understand the peril best are not the Dixiecrats, but those leaders who, seeing the danger and understanding its dimensions far better, yet stand unterrified and ready to meet it with intelligent action. These are the forces that are being isolated and exposed by the blind panic of the Dixiecrats as James Louis Petigru, of Charleston, was isolated and exposed by the secession of 1861.

Fri 8-27-48

The strange thing is that the Thurmond followers are sincerely convinced that they are the men of courage and that the others are the runaways. It is an illusion, but unfortunately when men act in the world of illusion they produce results in the world of reality.

Their idea may be entirely gaseous, but the effect will be as solid as the Army of Occupation that held the South pinned down by bayonets for 10 years after Appomattox.

Their revolt is releasing all parties, including the Democratic, from any obligation to respect Southern preferences and prejudices, and is opening up to the Republican Party the possibility of capturing three or four million additional votes among Southern Negroes. If the Dixiecrats have any idea that Dewey will not seize that opportunity, they have grossly underestimated the ruthlessness of the man.

Gov. Thurmond has a long platform, but it is all found in Proverbs 6:10—"Yet a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep." And the commentary follows in the next verse: "So shall thy poverty come as one that travelleth and thy want as an armed man."

Dixiecrats Should Resign

Wed 11-17-48

To the Editor:

Alabama's Dixiecrat leaders should now resign as titular heads of the Democratic Party of our state. If they do not resign, the people should throw them out and let them stand at the head of the Dixiecrat Party that they sired and brought into being.

Birmingham Ala.

As a taxpayer in Alabama, I have confidence in the Democratic Party.

Messrs. Rushton, McCorvey, Dixon, Thurmond, Wright, etc., remind one of the neighborhood boy who was fortunate enough to possess the baseball, catcher's mitt, bat, and fielder's glove, who when we gathered on a vacant lot to play, refused to participate unless he could be the pitcher, captain and umpire.

Well, in this case we were all in possession of the necessities it took to play this game. President Truman didn't need the assistance of either the Dixiecrats or Henry Wallace. So now it is imperative that the people of Alabama haul Democratic leaders who are and were friendly to President Truman.

The Oligarchs and the Dixiecrats

Wed. 10-20-48

New York N.Y.

ATLANTA

Ellis Arnall, former Governor of Georgia, is, like most Southerners, an enthusiastic football fan. And thereby hangs a tale. The tale is amusing, but it also casts considerable light on one aspect of Southern politics.

Some time ago Arnall organized a party of friends to make the long trip from Atlanta to see the annual Sugar Bowl game in New Orleans. The party occupied a number of suites in an expensive New Orleans hotel. So it was with some understandable misgivings that Arnall, after the game, asked the hotel's lady cashier for his bill.

He was surprised when she smiled prettily, and replied, "That's all right, Governor, your bill has been taken care of."

He was even more surprised when he was told that it was the Mississippi Power and Light Company which had been so generous.

His amazement must have been obvious, and a sudden suspicion apparently crossed the mind of the lady cashier.

"You are the Governor of Mississippi, aren't you?" she asked.

Not Only Civil Rights

This little story is not without meaning. The present Governor of Mississippi is Fielding Wright. Governor Wright is also the Vice-Presidential candidate of the Dixiecrats, or States' Rights party. It is pretty generally assumed outside of the South that the Dixiecrat movement is simply the South's outraged response to President Truman's civil rights proposals. It is that, but it is also a great deal more than that.

By and large, the Democratic party in the South has been controlled by a conservative oligarchy. In other times the oligarchs were mostly big planters. Now the planters have been pretty much replaced by utility magnates, textile men, industrialists, bankers and, more and more, the new oil barons of Texas and the Gulf states. The States' Rights party is essentially the response of this conservative oligarchy to the pressures which have been steadily pushing the national Democratic party farther to the Left. Almost every States' Rights politician speaks as bitterly of Franklin Roosevelt, who never really pressed the racial issue, as of Harry Truman, who did.

There is no doubt that there has been a particularly cozy relationship between the Dixiecrats and the oil kings. Southern oil men were more enraged by the Supreme Court decision which awarded to the Federal government ownership of the last great national oil reserves in the tidelands than by the Truman civil rights proposals. Nor was this rage confined to the Gulf states, for there is good reason to believe that offshore oil deposits exist along the Southern Atlantic seaboard as well. One indication of the influence of the oil men among the Dixiecrats is that the tidelands oil issue has received at least as much attention at the various Dixiecrats' get-togethers as the civil rights issue.

Support From Oil Money

Just how much oil money has greased the Dixiecrat wheels is unknown, although the Justice Department is now hard at work trying to find out. But there is no doubt that the oil industry's support for the Dixiecrats has been more than moral.

One leading supporter has been H. R. Cullen, a fabulously rich Houston oil man (he is also fabulously generous: he recently made an outright gift to Texas charity of the fantastic sum of $160,000,000). Cullen arranged for a private plane to take H. Strom Thurmond, the Dixiecrat Presidential candidate, to the Houston convention, and a special train to take Fielding Wright and his Mississippi cohorts to the same meeting. He is believed to be the chief sparkplug of the oil industry's backing for the Dixiecrats. Among the oil corporations, the Humble Oil Company has reportedly particularly interested itself in the Thurmond-Wright "crusade."

The oil barons' generous enthusiasm for the Dixiecrats is now said to be waning. The Republicans are sure to win, and they are committed in their platform to removing offshore oil from Federal control. Yet in most Southern states the Dixiecrat organization will be kept alive after the elections, largely to insure conservative control of the political machinery.

There is nothing particularly unhealthy in the fact that the oil men, or the other business interests, should try to protect or improve their economic position by political means. Every economic group in the United States does the same thing. Yet there are some pretty unhealthy aspects of the Dixiecrat movement as an expression of Southern conservatism.

Wed 10-20-48

All the more malodorous hatemongers, from Gerald L. K. Smith to the decrepit "Alfalfa Bill" Murray, have gleefully leaped on the Dixiecrat bandwagon. The States' Rights propaganda paper is using the same mailing list as the "Southern Outlook," a revolting racist sheet which "The Montgomery Advertiser" accurately compared to the worst products of Nazi Germany.

In brief, the real danger is that the Southern conservative oligarchy, in an effort to preserve the threatened status quo, will be tempted to turn more and more to this sort of thing, to the end that every issue, from offshore oil to the minimum wage, may be hidden and submerged in the race issue.

DEMOCRATS URGED TO DROP DIXIECRATS

The Times

Mrs. Roosevelt Would Exclude Truman Foes, but Move Would Cost Control of Senate

Tues 11-9-48

New York N.Y.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt urged yesterday the permanent ousting of Southern Dixiecrats from the Democratic party, since President Truman won without their help and over their opposition.

"It is inconceivable to me how these Southerners who walked out of the Democratic Convention, formed their own party, won four states and did their best to beat the Democratic President can now walk back into the party, explain that 'boys will be boys' and then take up several committee chairmanships won by the uphill fights of loyal and progressive Democrats," she said.

If her suggestion for ousting the Dixiecrats were put into effect, the Democrats would forfeit control of the Senate and endanger their control of the House. Of the fifty-four Democrats in the Senate that meets Jan. 3, eight are from the four states that voted for Gov. J. Strom Thurmond, the States Rights candidate for President.

If they swung to the Republicans, that party would control the Senate, fifty to forty-six. Of the 263 Democrats in the House, thirty are from the same Southern states. Their ouster would leave the Democrats with a majority of seventeen.

New Program Opened

Mrs. Roosevelt made her plea for dropping the Southerners from the Democratic party in the first of a series of American Broadcasting Company programs entitled "Eleanor and Anna Roosevelt," which features Mrs. Roosevelt and her daughter, Mrs. John Boettiger.

Mrs. Roosevelt spoke from Paris by transatlantic telephone to the American Broadcasting studios in New York. Mrs. Boettiger spoke in Hollywood.

Among the Southerners who will be entitled to committee chairmanships if recognized as Democrats, Mrs. Roosevelt noted, are Representative John Rankin of Mississippi, who she described as one of the worst Southern reactionaries, and Senator Olin Johnson of South Carolina, who, she said, campaigned against President Truman but was one of the first on his train to congratulate the Democratic winner on his return to Washington.

"I think the people who voted for President Truman did so out of approval for his civil rights bill and other progressivee measures, and would not want to see him hampered by having important committee chairmanships in the hands of the fellows who most bitterly opposed the President," she continued.

Tues 11-9-48

Sees Only 2 Major Factions

"I have felt for a long time that there are really only two major political factions in the United States — Liberals and Conservatives. And it would be much more logical if our political parties were divided along those lines.

"The Democratic party has seemed to me to be predominantly the party of liberalism, although sometimes, through the curious evolution of politics, it embraced Southerners who number among their ranks some of the most reactionary men in public life. Similarly the Republican party is traditionally the party of conservatism, although it embraces some very fine liberals.

"Now, for the first time in history, the Democrats have won an election without the Solid South. Some of the more reactionary Southerners have chosen to break with the Democratic party and I think it would be a good idea to make the break final. Possibly the Southern conservatives would be welcomed into the Republican party, with whom they have voted so often in recent years.

"My husband tried to rid the Democratic party of some of the most reactionary Southerners some years ago, when he undertook to defeat several legislators who he felt were sabotaging the liberal measures he felt he had been mandated to put into effect. He failed in this, but now that the Dixiecrats have chosen of their own accord to walk out on their party during an election, I think the Democrats should insist they stay out."

What Is Ahead For States' Rights?

"'Where lies the land to which the ship would go?'
Far, far ahead, is all her seamen know . . ."

Columbia Record

Tues 8-31-48

Columbia, S.C.

States' Rights leaders may confer but they cannot possibly see beyond this year's election. That is because the way beyond is clear for nobody—no party, no state or nation, no individual. Governors Thurmond and Wright and their associates know only that the course upon which they are presently set is the right and practical one for them and their people, and that its greatest immediate objectives are being achieved.

"Love it as you may, you can't export Dixie," a thoughtful friend insists. He means our set-up is too special to win the nation to its cause.

But you can export the South's passion for a cause that is already national and basic to a nation's philosophy and way. Our race problem gives us stronger feeling now for local self-government and against federalism gone mad than any other Americans, but the feelings exist everywhere. They are the dominant political ones in the whole nation, reflected in both national and state elections since the war. We have no monopoly on states' rights. But because of our special situation and the strength of conviction it induces, we are called to lead in new emphasis on states' rights. That is not exporting. It is just taking your place in line—the head of the line.

In able reply to The Cincinnati Enquirer's taunt that States' Rights Democrats are "all steamed up and have no where to go," Editor Cash Stanley indicates that there are even places to go than the White House, and that "down in their hearts the citizens of Maine, or California or of Michigan or Illinois are just as hostile to remote political control from Washington. . . ."

Editor Stanley will be interested in knowing that the motto of Illinois, as it appears on the Illinois stone in the Washington monument is—"State Sovereignty."

As southern States' Rights Democrats "export" their feelings now to the country as a whole they need some speical committees, it seems to me. One would be a committee against the frivolous and in adequate term "Dixiecrat." Another, a committee against being taken by Gerald Smith or any other of the rabble-rousing lunatic fringe of un-American wavers of American flags. Another against saying "nigger" or failing to like our colored people in the South. Another for keeping the cause from being identified exclusively with conservatives since it is neither a conservative nor a liberal cause in fact but one for preserving the system under which conservatives and liberals contest.

Tues 8-31-48

And shouldn't there be a committee, too, for keeping the public advised against confusionists who say States' Rights Democrats have no place to go just because their present objectives are wisely confined to the great business of taking as many votes as possible from both Truman and Dewey in the name of (1) anti-federalism-gone-mad and (2) the South's need and right to be recognized as a prized American minority?

And, oh yes, a committee on the Upper South to persuade several fine editors there that, even though it is impudent and very irregular, wisdom can sometimes come from the Deep South and that they might be at least as unprejudiced in their judgment and as good tempered as, say, the editor of The Owosso, (Mich.) Argus-Independent, in Dewey's boyhood home.

Dixiecrat Revolt Had Some Benefit

New York, N.Y.

Star 11-11-48

Of course Mrs. Roosevelt has no right to say anything about the South because she was not born anywhere below the Potomac. I am inclined to make allowance for her, nevertheless. The dear lady is in Paris busy with the UN, and so something out of touch with our forms and mores over here. Besides, what she says makes very excellent sense: the Democratic party has the chance of a lifetime to stay out of adultery, has all to gain and nothing to lose by leaving the Dixiecrats out of the family circle till their table manners improve.

New York, N.Y.

This would not be "reprisal" (a low-class word Democratic Party Chairman J. Howard McGrath tastefully shuns) but justifiable self defense. Why should the party tie the millstone about its neck? Already, we have retiring Rep. Fred Hartley telling Rotary in Atlanta that "the South" will have to stand with the Republican Old Guard against repeal of the Taft-Hartley law – just as, throughout the campaign, it was the other father of that execrated labor-control measure, Sen. Robert Taft, who toured all the way to the warm Gulf assuring the bourbons that, Dewey or no Dewey, the GOP in Congress would continue to be their natural ally against reforms even more important to the Republic than retraction of the labor law.

Logical Recommendation

If the Dixiecrats come back into the party unreconstructed, in name only, this nominal adherence will bring the party only embarrassment and chagrin. The party will not be ahead even in numbers, since on the crucial issues the Dixiecrats will vote with the opposition. On the other hand, the administration will not be able to disavow these saboteurs sitting on its own side of the House and accepted into the Democratic fellowship.

Mrs. Roosevelt's recommendation follows a logic absolute; she is not harsh, but radical; she projects an honest division of the major parties on the ideological line for the benefit of the people, to permit clarity in the elective choice. Certainly this is desirable, and is sufficient grounds for a firm decision, removed from maudlin sentimentality, on the part of the Democratic leadership.

It is tangent reasoning to make much of the fact that the party "owes nothing" to the Dixiecrats. This is true only in the strictly partisan sense that the Dixiecrats did all they could in the campaign to defeat Truman and elect Dewey. In a larger sense (the one Mrs. Roosevelt is talking about) the party is indebted to the Dixiecrats – for walking out. For it is apparent that the public confidence in the Democratic party would not have risen or held, even after the adoption of the uncomprisingly liberal platform at Philadelphia, if the bourbon heretics had not gone off plangorously to form a separate party.

Claim to Liberalism

But for this severance, the electorate would not have seen good faith in the Democratic promises: the walkout itself, not the willingness of the convention to risk it, was the clincher to the party's claim of genuine liberalism. By the same token, and looking to the legislative battles ahead and to other elections to come, the Democratic party cannot "lose character" more promptly and surely than by folding the unrepentant Dixiecrats back into its arms.

Star 11-11-48

I say "unrepentant" advisedly, for repentance should be the shibboleth Some of the Southern bolters may have seen the light in the election returns – as much light, at least, as Joe Martin says he has seen. For these, Mr. McGrath conscientiously could spread the welcome mat. For the rest, who will continue to stand against what the New Deal Democratic party stands for, it were far better to leave them adrift, seeking their natural mates in some other association, than to give them the chance to begin boring from within anew.

Mrs. Roosevelt is right, and Mr. McGrath can be right. It is not a question of reprisals, but one of restoring the popular faith in the party system by which we endeavor to maintain responsive and responsible government.

I do not consider that the majority of the working people are of the slums, and the working people are still true Democrats and not Dixiecrats. President Truman was elected without Mr. Wilkinson's support and without the support of any other Alabamian because they did not have the opportunity of voting for him.

Dixiecrat Votes

Wash Post

Mon 11-8-48

Wash D.C.

Fortunately the country escaped an indecisive election that would have thrown the choice of President into the House of Representatives. Such a catastrophe would have put Congressmen with Dixiecrat sympathies in a strategic position to barter votes in exchange for concessions in respect to the civil rights program. Although the 38 electoral votes of the four States in the Thurmond column were not sufficient to defeat President Truman, the fact that the regular Democratic Party machinery was captured by the Dixiecrats in four States, and that the Thurmond adherents polled substantial votes in several other Southern States, gives warning of a bitter battle ahead should the President attempt to push his civil rights program.

Effective opposition to the civil rights program cannot be gauged by the number of votes cast for Thurmond, since that vote was so concentrated as virtually to insure that members of Congress representing the disaffected areas will present a united front on this controversial issue. Moreover, Representatives from Dixiecrat States can no doubt count on the sympathetic support of a good many members from the Southern States who clung to the party, though sharing the opinions of the Dixiecrats.

Predictions that the schism in the ranks of the Southern Democrats would result in the creation of a third party that would constitute a permanent challenge to the regular organizations appear unlikely of fulfillment. The Southern Democrats have, however, learned from their experience that it is possible to put pressure on the regular party organization by separatist movements that serve bad as well as good causes. This kind of protest voting is not calculated to further efforts to break the stranglehold of party regularity that has handicapped the South, but rather to enable the South to exploit a docile electorate that is a product of the region's traditional adherence to a single party.

Amid all this shouting about states' rights, members of organized labor would do well to take a peep at who is doing the shouting, and see just what and why of the fuss. Who was the attorney who represented Greenwood Cafe in the injunction case against a union? Who put the secret police on the busses in Mississippi and broke the bus strike? Just call the roll one by one of the so-called states' righters and examine their labor record; one peep is enough for me.

The Dixie Doodle Cats walked out of the Democratic convention in Philadelphia, and have since, throughout the South, preached a doctrine of race hatred, discrimination and ill-will. The voters of Alabama selected a group of delegates to the convention. Who elected the so-called delegates to attend the rump convention held in Birmingham by the seceders?

States' rights is not the issue. States' rights is a coat of many colors which the Southern rebels are using to cover up the main issues, race discrimination and the disfranchisment of the Negro. This same group of seceders were the backers of the "Boswell amendment." Does Alabama, Mississippi or Texas need more states' rights than does California, Illinois or Kentucky? Where were these noble defenders of states' rights when Congress passed an act making it a federal offense to rob a bank in Alabama or any other state?

8-24-48

I believe in the Declaration of Independence, which reads, "We hold these truths to be self-evident; that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." No one denies the Negro the right to pay the same taxes as do the white. No one denied him the right to bear arms and bleed and die for his country. This is as it should be. But why deny him any of his rights guaranteed to him by the Constitution of the United States? The Negro is the only race of people which did not come to this country by choice. Good or bad, intelligent or ignorant, educated or unlettered, honest or dishonest, the Negro is just what the white man made out of him.

What does this group of political gad-abouts want? I am glad that I belong to an organization (U. M. W. of A.) that stands for, not states' rights, but human rights.

In 1860 They Had A Rump Convention

Footnotes to History:

In 1856, under attack from Northern radicals, the South became ultra-sensitive at much of the false and unjust criticism. There also was the deep conviction that slavery was a matter for the States and not the Federal Government.

There were efforts made by the moderates to bring about Federal legislation which would abolish slavery, but which at the same time would reimburse the Southern slave owners (not many Southerners owned slaves) for their property, out of Federal funds. This effort was not a new one. It was made first by Thomas Jefferson. It was last made by Abraham Lincoln. He had made it previously, but he repeated it at the illfated "peace conference" at Hampton Roads in February of 1865. This was attended, among others, by Georgia's Alexander Stephens, then Confederate Vice President. But the Peace Commissioners were so restricted in their instructions by President Jefferson Davis that nothing came of it save futility. Stephens went home, never again to speak to Davis during the war, and to consider the Mississippian as having once more ruined the chance of the Confederacy for an honorable peace or end to the war.

Birmingham

So, in the end everything was lost. I try here to speak of what I conceive to be the best interests of the South. I do not think they are being served by the sound and the fury of the Birmingham rump meeting of disaffected Democrats. Even if they have some little success in the primaries and the election of November, they are doing harm to the future interests of the South. I am willing to concede they believe they are serving those interests. But the thoughtful Southerner will see they are not.

As in 1856-60 when we were led to defend slavery as God-given and God-indorsed; when we were so needled and infuriated by the Northern politicians, who were often false and hypocritical, that we stubbornly made slavery the "keystone" of the new nation, we were tricked and pushed into supporting a moral wrong.

That is about to happen to us again.

The position of the Birmingham rump meeting is, for the moment, a popular one. It is the place where the bands play "Dixie" and men cheer the old shibboleths.

But, the true Southerner will see that, despite the hypocricy and the infuriating smugness of the North, we cannot longer oppose civil rights. It is true that they are pushed cynically by the big city machines for votes. But, the fact remains that under the Constitution, all citizens have a right to vote and to the protection of the law. We cannot defend a moral wrong. The Convention showed that every State outside the South was against us.

Protection

We still have the protection of the Supreme Court and the Constitution of the United States. There are rights reserved to the States under the Constitution. It is true that many persons have come to believe the Supreme Court is too liberal in its interpretation of the Constitution. But, even so, they cannot remove it entirely. The fact is, citizens have a right to vote. But qualifications can be made. The fact is, citizens have a right to protection of the law, from the gang killings of the East and lynchings in the South. We shall have to take what the Supreme Court says about that when the legislation has been passed and tested in the courts. The South may not lose everything it fears. I doubt if life in the South will be greatly changed. Basic segregation will remain.

Atlanta, Ga.

Equality

The platform calls for "equal treatment" in the armed services. Whether that means an end to segregation in the services remains to be seen. The laws have not been written, much less introduced, passed and court-tested. The platform calls on Congress to pass legislation giving equal rights in employment. The laws relating to that have not been written or introduced. They may or may not contain features greatly objectionable to the South. These laws, generally referred to as the FEPC (Fair Employment Practices Act), are the ones most objectionable to the South. Whether they be constitutional has not yet been determined. There is no mention of social equality.

The point is—~~nothing had been~~ done as yet.

Solution

Now, how does the South propose to meet these threats? Some go to Birmingham. As far as I am concerned, those who go to Birmingham are on the road to a political Damascus with the scales still on their eyes. Their sort of action can withhold electoral votes, which will be meaningless if the Republicans win as expected.

Those really devoted to the South are seeking the long-time answer.

As of now, there seem to be but two. One is for all those who want to quit the Democratic Party to do so and join in an effort to establish the Republican Party. You don't do that merely by voting for it. You do it by establishing Party machinery at the precinct level.

The second procedure is for those who stay in the Party to uphold the hands of our Congressmen and Senators, and not to destroy them and remove them from committees by setting up a Southern ticket which will destroy even their minor committee and prestige positions.

7-14-48

We have got to do the best we can. The rest of the nation is against us. The Republican Party proposes the identical measures. This time we have got to act differently and with less blindness than in 1856-60 when they also walked out and held a rump meeting and played "Dixie" and whooped and hollered. It sounds good and is exciting. But the results are disastrous. We don't seek disaster.

Primm Against Civil Rights If It's Left Up To Congress

By A. F. MAHAN, JR.

WASHINGTON — (AP) —W. J. Primm, Jr., assistant to the chairman of the Democratic National Committee, doesn't favor enactment of President Truman's civil rights program—by Congress.

He said this May 27 when he became chief aide to Senator J. Howard McGrath, party chairman, and he told a reporter Monday: "I haven't changed."

There are some things in the civil rights program to which Primm said he could agree, but he believes that "under the constitution they should be handled by the legislatures of the several states, rather than through the National Congress."

"I am opposed to the poll tax as a prerequisite for voting," he said in an interview, "but I strongly believe its abolition is up to the people within the states and their legislatures."

He did not say with what other, if any, parts of the President's civil rights program he agrees—provided action is taken within the states.

His stand puts him in direct conflict with the views of the President, nominal party head, and with his boss, McGrath.

"They knew how I felt when I was appointed," the 38-year-old Alabamian said.

Primm recently called upon Democratic national committeemen in the South who are supporting the states' rights presidential candidacy of Gov. Strom Thurmond, of South Carolina, to resign their party posts.

"They are openly fighting the nominees of the Democratic Party, and if (Gov. Thomas E.) Dewey is elected president, I am positive the Republicans will force a civil rights program upon the South," he said.

"They're giving aid to the Republicans, splitting the Democrats."

In announcing acceptance of his committee appointment, Primm stated:

"All Democrats must settle their differences and put their shoulders to the wheel to insure that the record of progressive liberalism made by Democratic administrations since 1932 will be continued.

"I will give my wholehearted support and cooperation to efforts to unite and organize our party for victory in November."

This slender, bespectacled grandson of a Confederate general told a reporter he is serving in his party post "without salary or an expense account because I don't believe we should turn this country over to the Republicans or any other reactionary force."

Primm was born in Camden, Ala., in the heart of that state's "black belt," where the Negro population predominates. His parents reside in Montgomery, where Primm plans to cast his November ballot.

He attended both Alabama Polytechnic Institute (Auburn) and the University of Alabama, and once published two weekly newspapers in his home state, the Tuscaloosa Warrior and the Shelby County Democrat.

He came to Washington in 1943 as an assistant to the late Senator Josiah W. Bailey (D), North Carolina, whose daughter he had married in 1942. He quit in 1945 to devote himself to his own business interests—an importing firm with headquarters in Los Angeles and the Pacific Petroleum Corporation.

Primm long has identified himself with Democratic politics, having been one of the organizers of the Young Democratic Clubs of America and having been Young Democratic national committeeman from Alabama for years. He served as national young Democratic committee chairman seven years.

He was a political trouble-shooter for the late Gov. Bibb Graves, of Alabama, during his second term and spent four years setting up a third-term campaign for Graves, who died before the election.

He and the former Elizabeth Bailey have two daughters and reside on Calvert Street here.

He has retained his Southern drawl and he has a blonde Southern girl as his secretary, Carolyn Harward, of Durham, N. C.

Of course, Army brass will oppose significant reforms. Army Secretary Kenneth C. Royall contends that there is already equality of treatment and opportunity for colored personnel in the Army.

A Reminder for Supervisors

The order establishing regulations governing fair employment practices will serve as a reminder to personnel officers in Government agencies that they are not to engage in discriminatory practices in hiring, promoting and dismissing employees.

It sets up within the Civil Service Commission a Fair Employment Board, and gives to employees the right of appeal to that board in cases where racial discrimination is alleged. Wed 9-1-48

Inasmuch, as the Federal Government is spending billions of dollars for equipment, material and supplies, President Truman might have gone further and ordered inserted in all Government contracts a provision requiring the contractor not to discriminate in his employment practices. Such a provision would be entirely legal and effective.

127 Electoral Votes, Dixiecrats Hope

Birmingham News
B'ham, Ala

BY REX THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

States' rights leaders say they can pick up as many as 127 electoral votes—perhaps more—in the November election.

Here is a state-by-state survey, based on the way delegates talked at Saturday's anti-Truman conference of Southern Democrats:

Alabama—11 electoral votes already pledged against Truman.

Mississippi—9 votes, also committed to vote for someone besides Truman. Sun 7-18-48

Louisiana—10 votes not committed, but former Gov. Sam Jones says state Democratic committee can instruct electors.

Tennessee—12 electors chosen in convention, states' righters say convention has power to remove electors; therefore can make them vote any way it wants.

Georgia—12 votes. Electors still to be named in primary election.

Florida—8 electors already chosen in primary. No way to instruct them, states' righters concede, if they want to support Truman.

Texas—33 votes. Electors will be chosen by Democratic convention and can be instructed.

Arkansas—9 electors to be named in convention and can be pledged against Truman. 7-18-48

Virginia—11 representatives in electoral college. Already chosen by convention and pledged for Truman, but anti-Truman forces contend party can instruct them otherwise.

South Carolina—8 electors to be chosen by state Democratic executive committee. Electors will be pledged against Truman by state convention resolution, but subject to change because of Friday's court ruling that the Democratic Party is open to everybody. That may result in a new convention and widespread changes.

North Carolina—14 electors. Chosen in convention and not pledged but can be.

In addition, the states' righters hope to win support in Oklahoma, which has 10 votes, and Maryland, with 8, and plan to enter anti-Truman elector candidates in Missouri and Kentucky, home states of Mr. Truman and his running mate, Senator Alben Barkley.

A victory in Missouri would give the states' rights move 15 electoral votes, and Kentucky could add another 11.

Dixiecrats Plan To Give Party Harder Wallop

Arkansas Gov. Ben Laney and a handpicked committee will go to Washington next week in their move to revitalize and broaden the States' Rights Democratic movement. Birmingham Ala

This committee, which includes Horace Wilkinson, Birmingham attorney, will make plans to open national campaign headquarters there. [illegible] 48

They want to give the Dixiecratic Party which carried four Deep South states against President Truman and for Strom Thurmond, a new look and more wallop.

As John Newsome, North Alabama campaign manager, revealed, they want to discard any semblance of sectionalism and shake off the name "Dixiecrats" in the nationalization process.

* * *

BESIDES LANEY and Wilkinson, other members of the committee are Leander Perez, New Orleans lawyer, close lieutenant of Gov. Earl Long and the man who was the driving force behind States' Righters in Louisiana, and O. W. Baylor, head of the Dixiecrats in Kentucky.

Plans for setting up national campaign headquarters, which will be known as the States' Rights Institute, were made in Birmingham recently by the 16-member Laney Committee. Sat [illegible] 48

It is from this national outpost—a sort of public opinion headquarters—that they will campaign to spread "principles of constitutional government" and membership into every state in the union.

This institute also is expected to serve as a lobbying headquarters from which to fight President Truman's "civil rights" legislation.

Gov. Laney and others of this subcommittee will confer with Charles W. Collins, Washington attorney and author of "Whither the Solid South," to chart the course of the nationalist.

Collins, it was said, will handle legal proceedings and other matters in getting the headquarters offices opened.

South Carolina's Electors Pledged to States'-Rights Ticket

Columbia, S. C., Aug. 7 (AP)—South Carolina's eight prospective Democratic Electoral College votes were pledged tonight to the States'-Rights Democratic ticket.

They brought the pledged total to 28 from three Southern states.

State Party Executive Committee Chairman W. P. Baskin, Bishopville, announced the South Carolina pledge after a poll by mail of the committee's 46 members.

The committee "overwhelmingly indorsed" the Southern States' Rights Democratic ticket of South Caroline Governor J. Strom Thurmond and Governor Fielding H. Wright of Mississippi, Baskin said.

Previously, Mississippi and Alabama, with a combined total of 20 Electoral College votes, pledged their elector nominees to the Thurmond-Wright ticket.

The State Democratic Convention of last May instructed the electors not to vote for President Truman or any other candidate advocating a similar civil-rights program.

In view of the combined action of the executive committee and the state convention, Baskin said, "The party's electors, although they have not yet been named, will be bound to support and vote for" the Thurmond-Wright ticket.

Kicked Out Of The Party

The Lighthouse

Sun. 9-12-48

Columbia, S.C.

J. Howard McGrath and other officials of the Democratic National Committee have just about put out of the party those who are backing the Dixiecrats against president Truman.

The ouster is not what the Dixiecrats hoped for. They had felt that the national party would not dare to take the action it has. They had wanted to hold recognition in both organizations, all in the inflated contention that the national party has betrayed the South merely by recommending certain legislation under which minority groups would benefit.

The Dixiecrats are now outside of the Democratic party. They have been kicked out. If there is to be a worth the while Democratic organization in the southern states now whooping it up against civil rights, the people have the opportunity now to develop the organization.

ALABAMA TRUMANITES ATTEMPT TO CRACK DIXIECRAT COUNTRY

The [illegible]

Mon. 8-16-48

[illegible]

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Aug. 16—(AP)—Alabama followers of President Truman, backed by organized labor, meet here today to try to crack this States' Rights Democratic stronghold.

The president's supporters, headed by State Senator Joseph N. Langan of Mobile, assembled here to select a slate of electors pledged to Mr. Truman and map plans for getting their names on Alabama's November ballot.

This state's electors who were nominated in the May and June Democratic primaries are pledged to cast their votes in the electoral college for the States' Right nominees, Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina and Gov. Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi.

If Langan is successful in getting a pro-Truman slate on the ballot, the voters in the general election will have a choice between the States' Rights Democrats and the national Democrats.

The pro-Truman convention goes into session knowing it has the support of organized labor in the state. Top-level union officials met here yesterday and condemned the States' Rights movement as assurance of a Republican victory at the polls.

The Mobile senator has two plans in mind:

First, he says, he will try to get a slate of electors pledged to the Truman-Barkley ticket on the ballot.

If that fails, he has hinted at a court suit to try to force the electors pledged to the States' Rights ticqet to switch to the national Democraic nominees.

Langan's proposal that both pro-Truman and anti-Truman slates of electors be placed on the ballot received a flat rejection from state Democratic chairman Gesner T. McCorvey. The party leader also warned the senator he might be written out of the Alabama Democratic party for opposing its primary nominees.

Langan addresed the meeting of labor leaders yesterday and said he would do all in his power "to give labor a chance to vote" for President Truman in Alabama.

Sectional Revolt Appears To Have Eliminated Truman

Hard Victory Won To Get Negroes Admitted To Democratic Primaries May Prove to be Futile; Foes of Civil Rights to Take Over

Nashville, The Globe Tenn.

Birmingham, Alabama— Colored Democrats were conspicuous by their absence from the Dixiecrat convention here on Saturday of last week. It was a meeting the like of which has not been held in the South since a faction walked out of the 1860 Democratic Convention and launched a movement that split the nation into Union and Confederate States.

As in 1860, the party split over the "Negro Question" but the latest crack up of the Democratic party is not likely to assume any such serious concern to the nation as the split in 1860.

But the plight of the colored man and woman who have fought valiantly in the South to become active members of the Democratic Party was rendered almost pathetic by the calling of the Dixiecrat convention and what is to result from it. The indications are that in Alabama, Mississippi, Georgia, South Carolina and Mississippi, states in which ever so much money has been spent to force the admission of colored citizens into the Democratic Party, the Dixiecrats will control affairs. They issued what amounts to a demand to senators and congressmen that they come out and speak out in approval of the stand the Dixiecrats have taken on the civil rights issue. It is probable that these senators and congressmen will be forced to do this in order to hold their jobs. Thus the Democratic Party in the South will be based wholly on hostility to the Negro. No Negro will likely have either the desire or the courage to be a Democrat in any of the states that will be controlled by Dixiecrats.

Fri. 7/23/48

It now seems probable that in most Southern States the regularly elected electors will take the advice of the Dixiecrat leaders and cast the electoral votes of their states for the two nominees of the Dixiecrat majority. This will mean that a colored voter will have no chance to express his preference for President Truman.

In those states where the chosen electors feel they must vote for President Truman, the Dixiecrats will call state conventions and choose new electors to go on the ballot. The Dixiecrats pledge 127 electoral votes to their own nominees, leaving no electoral votes in the South to President Truman If this happens a colored man's vote for Mr. Truman will be worse than wasted.

7/23/48 Fri.

In Tennessee, the Dixiecrats will just about make it certain that the Republican electors will be elected. They are able to split the Democratic Party in twain, which means that they will deprive Mr. Truman of Tennessee's electoral vote. They are likely to accomplish the same thing in North Carolina and probably Virginia.

The big objective of the Dixiecrats of course is to make President Truman the worse defeated candidate for the president their party has nominated since the Civil War. They feel that Mr. Truman is not likely to carry any Northern states because of the Henry Wallace Ticket. Thus if the Dixiecrats can deprive Mr. Truman of all of the Southern electors by taking a number of them for their own candidates and making it possible for Republicans to take the remainder, Mr. Truman will be "the worse beaten candidate." He will have many millions of popular votes but no electoral votes at all.

The one bright spot in a very dark picture is that the radical Dixiecrats nominated just about the worse ticket that could have been put together. Gov Thurmond of South Carolina and Gov. Wright of Mississippi qualify as the most demagogic governors in the South. The states they govern are rated the most backward states in the South. It is probable that should the Democratic congressmen and senators of the South unite in providing electors for Mr. Truman in their states they could succeed in getting them elected. But at present it seems that senators and congressmen are either disposed to keep quiet or to oby the demand of the Dixiecrats that they speak out in opposition to President Truman.

The Dixiecrats, out of the mouth of one of their orators, got a slogan that is going to be heard thruout their campaign The northern wing of the party, this orator stated, was made up of "communicrats and mulattocrats.'" They bear down in opposition to the fair employment practices bill and pretend that their opposition to it is based solely on what it would do to help Negroes. But it is known that there never would have been an FEPC bill offered had it been for Negroes, only. It was meant to stop discrimination against Catholics and Jews, as well as Negroes. But they find it advisable to keep such views within the hearing of fellow-bigots.

With the help of money contributed by Republicans, both white and colored, the battle to get Southern Negroes admitted as members of the Democratic Party of the South has been won. But for 1948, at least, Negroes of the South will not want to be members of the party of their choice. It will be because all liberal Southern Democrats have been rendered helpless and are being pressured to become full-fledged Dixiecrats, or else.

Dixie and the 'Dixiecrat' Will-o'-the-Wisp

The Atlanta Constitution - Atlanta, Ga.

The first Virginia "Dixiecrat" organizations have been established, with a view to drumming up support for the Thurmond-Wright presidential ticket nominated at Birmingham on July 17. What political future is there for this movement, either in Virginia or the South as a whole?

Such third or fourth-party splinter movements have seldom made much progress in the South—or anywhere else in this country, for that matter. Usually they simply draw strength from the established parties without going anywhere much themselves. That will almost certainly be the fate of the "Dixiecrats."

Wed. 9-1-48

Insofar as it was a gesture of independence, the Birmingham convention had something to commend it. The South sorely needs a greater measure of independence. However, it needs primarily to show the Democratic Party that it is not slavishly lashed to that organization's chariot wheel and to show the Republican Party that it has enough guts and savvy to vote GOP when the Republican candidate and platform are the more appealing of the two.

It is possible that the Thurmond-Wright ticket will get a plurality of the votes cast for the four major contesting parties in Mississippi, South Carolina and Alabama, and that it will draw off enough support from Truman and Barkley to throw another State or two to Dewey and Warren. But suppose that happens: What then?

Nobody could possibly imagine that an all-Southern party dedicated to the cause of States' rights and very little else, has any real future. The South has had a hard enough time making itself felt as a minority element in the Democratic Party. If it were to divide its strength between that party and a third political group, its influence would shrink to almost nothing.

It is argued on behalf of the Thurmond-Wright ticket that this is one way of hitting back at President Truman for his "civil rights" proposals. But the truth of the matter is that the Southern objectors won't be as effective in preventing the legislation in question as determined efforts by Southerners inside the two established parties.

Wed. 9-1-48

There were delegates at the Birmingham "Dixiecrat" convention who might be termed sincere and patriotic Southerners, devoted to the cause of States' rights and anxious to promote the well-being of the Negro. But there were others who have been identified with sinister movements founded on bigotry, men who were using States' rights as a mere smoke screen. The well-intentioned and authentic members of the convention had better look about them and see in whose political bed they have landed.

The Anniston, Ala., Star, in an able analysis of the "Dixiecrat" movement, warned against "hot-headed oratory," and said: "We have a high regard for Ex-Gov. Frank M Dixon. . . . But recently he seems to have come under the influence of Horace Wilkinson (of Birmingham), and the address he made before the rump convention in Birmingham yesterday sounded, in some respects, as though he were addressing a Ku Klux Klan convocation. It was racism and sectionalism at its worst, and it will certainly do more harm than good to the cause he purported to represent."

The Arkansas Gazette, of Little Rock, in another discriminating comment on the Thurmond-Wright movement, saw in it evidence that the South's allegiance to the two major parties has been re-emphasized and confirmed by the region's unwillingness to bolt on a wholesale scale at Philadelphia, or to join up with the "Dixiecrats" immediately thereafter at Birmingham. The Gazette discerned in the phenomenon "heartening signs of a new political maturity, of the recognition by a majority of Southerners that the South cannot continue as a separate political entity. . . ." It appraised the revolt arrestingly as "in a peculiar inverted way . . . a milepost on the road to reunion."

There is much to be said for the points of view expressed by the Anniston and Little Rock papers.

More than half a century ago the Farmers' Alliance became politically powerful in the South, and it won control of half a dozen State Legislatures in the 1890 elections, and elected several Governors. But, as Francis B. Simkins points out in his recent book, "The South Old and New," "The Farmers' Alliance was defeated in most Southern States in 1892 because it refused to heed ("Pitchfork Ben") Tillman's advice to remain within the Democratic Party." It was not until the presidential election of 1896 that the Alliance and the Populists teamed up with the Democrats to make their weight felt heavily in a national campaign.

Wed 9-1-48

In that election, too, a small group of Democrats bolted to Palmer and Buckner because of William Jennings Bryan's espousal of Free Silver. Yet, like the Democrats of 1948, the "Gold Democrats" of 1896 were powerless to accomplish anything of importance.

The South's future does not lie in such erratic political behavior, however sincere its motivation. Far more is to be gained by working within the two major parties. Virginians and other Southerners who cast ballots for Thurmond and Wright in November will merely help to insure the election of Gov. Dewey, who certainly gives no indications that he will offer them the slightest encouragement in their desire to defeat "civil rights" bills.

The way to build a sorely needed two-party system below the Potomac is for the Southern electorate to show conclusively that it can never hereafter be counted in advance as in the bag for either the Democrats or the Republicans. We must become politically emancipated and vote for whichever of the two major parties offers us a candidate and platform most to our liking. States' rights are extremely important, but to go chasing off after the States' rights will-o'-the-wisp, represented by the candidates of an all-Southern rump outfit gathered at Birmingham, is neither intelligence nor wise. It is a good way to kill the influence of the South with both parties.

The States' Righters and the Oil Kings

The Constitution

Thur. 10-21-48

Atlanta Ga.

Ellis Arnall, former Governor of Georgia, is, like most Southerners, an enthusiastic football fan. And thereby hangs a tale. The tale is amusing, but it also casts considerable light on one aspect of Southern politics. Some time ago, Arnall organized a party of friends to make the long trip from Atlanta to see the annual Sugar Bowl game in New Orleans. The party occupied a number of suites in an expensive New Orleans hotel. So it was with some understandable misgivings that Arnall, after the game, asked the hotel's lady cashier for his bill.

He was surprised when she smiled prettily and replied, "That's all right, Governor, your bill has been taken care of."

He was even more surprised when he was told that it was the Mississippi Power & Light Company which had been so generous.

His amazement must have been obvious, and a sudden suspicion apparently crossed the mind of the lady cashier.

"You are the Governor of Mississippi, aren't you?" she asked.

This little story is not without meaning. The present Governor of Mississippi is Fielding Wright. Gov. Wright is also the Vice Presidential candidate of the Dixiecrats, or States' Rights Party. It is pretty generally assumed outside of the South that the Dixiecrat movement is simply the South's outraged response to President Truman's Civil Rights proposals. It is that, but it is also a great deal more than that.

By and large, the Democratic Party in the South has been controlled by a conservative oligarchy. In other times, the oligarchs were mostly big planters. Now the planters have been pretty much replaced by utility magnates, textile men, industrialists, bankers, and, more and more, the new oil barons of Texas and the Gulf States. The States' Rights Party is essentially the response of this conservative oligarchy to the pressures which have been steadily pushing the National Democratic Party further to the left. Almost every States' Rights politician speaks as bitterly of Franklin Roosevelt, who never really pressed the racial issue, as of Harry Truman, who did.

There is no doubt that there has been a particularly cozy relationship between the Dixiecrats and the oil kings. Southern oilmen were more enraged by the Supreme Court decision, which awarded to the Federal government ownership of the last great national oil reserves in the Tidelands, than by the Truman civil rights proposals. Nor was this rage confined to the Gulf States, for there is good reason to believe that offshore oil deposits exist along the Southern Atlantic seaboard as well. One indication of the influence of the oil men among the Dixiecrats is that the Tidelands oil issue has received at least as much attention at the various Dixiecrat get-togethers as the civil rights issue.

Just how much oil money has greased the Dixiecrat wheels is unknown, although the Justice Department is now hard at work trying to find out. But there is no doubt that the oil industry's support for the Dixiecrats has been more than moral.

One leading supporter has been H. R. Cullen, a fabulously rich Houston oil man (he is also fabulously generous—he recently made an outright gift to Texas charity of the fantastic sum of $160,000,000). Cullen arranged for a private plane to take H. Strom Thurmond, the Dixiecrat Presidential candidate, to the Houston convention, and a special train to take Fielding Wright and his Mississippi cohorts to the same meeting. He is believed to be the chief sparkplug of the oil industry's backing for the Dixiecrats. Among the oil corporations, the Humble Oil Company has reportedly particularly interested itself in the Thurmond-Wright "crusade."

The oil barons' generous enthusiasm for the Dixiecrats is now said to be waning. The Republicans are sure to win, and they are committed in their platform to removing offshore oil from Federal control. Yet in most Southern States, the Dixiecrat organization will be kept alive after the elections, largely to ensure conservative control of the political machinery.

Thur 10-21-48

There is nothing particularly unhealthy in the fact that the oil men, or the other business interests, should try to protect or improve their economic position by political means. Every economic group in the United States does the same thing. Yet there are some pretty unhealthy aspects of the Dixiecrat movement as an expression of Southern conservatism.

All the more malodorous hate-mongers, from Gerald L. K. Smith to the decrepit "Alfalfa Bill" Murray, have gleefully leapt on the Dixiecrat bandwagon. The States' Rights propaganda paper is using the same mailing list as the "Southern Outlook," a revolting racist sheet which the Montgomery Advertiser accurately compared to the worst products of Nazi Germany. In brief, the real danger is that the Southern conservative oligarchy, in an effort to preserve the threatened status quo, will be tempted to turn more and more to this sort of thing, to the end that every issue, from offshore oil to the minimum wage, may be hidden and submerged in the race issue.

States' Righters Fail To Qualify In Missouri

The Columbia Record

Columbia S.C.

Group Investigates Ballot Laws In Kentucky, Colorado, Elsewhere

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14—(AP)—The States Rights Democrats can't challenge President Truman in his home state of Missouri next November.

The new party's headquarters was informed it can't qualify its presidential ticket for the ballot by the Aug. 23 deadline.

Making this known today, W. Austin Seay of Winona, Miss., director of the anti-Truman group's Washington headquarters, told a reporter, however, that States Righters are checking up ballot possibilities in other states.

Sat 8-14-48

The group is investigating ballot laws in Kentucky, Colorado and elsewhere, Seay said.

The Missouri situation was outlined to Seay in a message from national hadquarters in Jackson, Miss., he reported.

The message said that Missouri law provides that a new party, to get on the ballot, must have 22,000 notarized signatures by Aug. 23, or hold a state convention truly representative of the whole state at whch electors would have to be named from each congressional district and two at large.

The message went on to say it is regretted that the new party could not qualify in Mr. Truman's state "as indications are that Missouri will not go far for him and does not want to go to Dewey. A lot of voters will stay at home in Missouri on election day."

In other directions, the Southern civil rights revolt appeared to be tapering off slightly as a serious threat to Mr. Truman's election chances.

Developments in Texas and Arkansas this week have made some administration lieutenants more optimistic than ever that Mr. Truman may grab every Dixie electoral vote, as Democratic national Chairman J. Howard McGrath has predicted repeatedly.

Sat 8-14-48

Texas backers of the Dixiecrat ticket apparently face serious trouble in getting their candidates on the ballot, with Gov. Beauford Jester pictured as a possible obstacle to their control of the forthcoming state Democratic convention.

The states' rights ticket—headed by Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina and his running mate Gov. Fielding Wright of Mississippi—is sure of a place on the ballot in South Carolina, Alabama and Mississippi.

But Dixiecrats also want a crack at Texas' 23 electoral votes, the largest bloc in the South.

The apparent victory of Sidney McMath, 36-year-old Hot Springs prosecutor, in the Arkansas governor's race is pointed to by President Truman's backers as another straw blown their way by the political winds.

No Commitment

While there has been no public commitment from McMath, administration lieutenants predict he will hold his state's party in line for the president.

Sat 8-14-48

Most politicians here think the 28 electoral votes of South Carolina, Alabama and Mississippi may be lost to Mr. Truman.

But the administration camp has been talking of possible court suits to force those electors to support the President—if he should carry the three states.

Their loss could be fatal in a close presidential race. Although the South's electoral vote hasn't tipped the result in many years because most recent presidents have been elected by margins rolled up elsewhere, this year promises to be different.

Sat 8-14-48

The South, which had become sort of a step child in national elections—contributing heavily to the Democratic war chest but getting little attention from any of the candidates—may be the scene of fairly heavy campaigning before the November elections.

Strategists have told Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York, the GOP presidential nominee, he has a chance to carry some Dixie states and he may therefore drop below the Mason and Dixon line for some speech-making, his running mate, Gov. Earl Warren of California, is almost certain to do so.

McGrath already has said Mr. Truman is thinking about campaigning in the South. His No. 2 man, Senator Alben Barkley of Kentucky, knows the ground well and can be expected to get in some political licks there.

The Mission Of The Dixiecrats

"The itch of disputing . . . ."

I don't know how other Southern editorialists feel about it, but as for me I am having a perfectly wonderful time arguing with some of them on the great history in which we are playing a part this year. And I think it is good for us and for the public, too.

The Savannah Morning News insists that the "practical thing" for the South to do is support the Republican ticket this year. "But it seems to me that the practical thing is to get as many protest votes in the South as possible, and in my part—and The Savannah News'—you can do that with a Thurmond-Wright ticket. The News knows that if we had to depend on persuading people in these parts to vote Republican, even now, there would not be half as much response as there is going to be from asking them to vote for Thurmond and Wright.

Thurs 8-26-48

Even Editor Peter Molyneaux, of The Southern Weekly, who is sure that voting Republican is the answer in Texas, writes that "in Mississippi, in Alabama, and in South Carolina, where the Republican vote is negligible and where the Dixiecrats are the official Democratic party—Thurmond and Wright are doing a great service to the South. But in Texas and some other Southern states the proper course is to vote Republican!" Even though the Georgia situation is not yet come to a head anti-Truman, pro-Thurmond, feeling is at least as strong in that state as in the adjoining ones—and will dominate before November.

Thurs 8-26-48

It is our practical problem here in the South that gives us our passion for States' Rights, true. That is why the Deep South is named by destiny now to speak the great nation-wide move, a move more precious in what it seeks to save and restore than the fate of either the Republican or the Democratic party. The Deep South people are in the strange new position of being in line with people all over America in this movement. Listen to Editor Robert E. McClure, in The Santa Monica, (California) Evening Outlook: "We believe the Republican party will be well advised to let the South alone in this matter of the poll tax. If and when the present clamor for federal force against the South subsides, most of the Southern states can be trusted to accomplish this reform, as four have already done . . . ."

"Moreover," says the California paper, "the principle of States' Rights which has been invoked by the South is one which has been strongly championed by the Republican party in recent years, and its reassertion is needed to correct the present great extension and abuse of the federal power."

Thurs 8-26-48

From Ellwood City, Pa., Carl C. Davidson writes to endorse this column's comments—reprinted in The Pittsburgh Post Gazette—on the Ray Sprigle stories of Negro life in the South. "You know what you are talking about," he says. "Ray is very clever. He is a good writer, but he does not give a damn for the Negro." Mr. Davidson adds that "the strength of the Democratic party in the North is in the slums of the cities," and that "there is a lot of difference between a Southern and a Northern Democrat."

Thurs 8-26-48

Editor Dabney grants in The Richmond Times-Dispatch that the Thurmond-Wright ticket may win in Mississippi, South Carolina and Alabama, and may give "another state or two" in the South to the Republicans. It must be that, like Editor Chapman in The Roanoke (Va.) Times, he sees his own Virginia going Republican. But when you consider how the Democrats of Virginia led the whole South initially against Truman, and when you consider how large a Democratic majority exists in that state for ordinary purposes, it is at least a fair bet that Virginia's electors will end up pledged, as Democrats, to Thurmond and Wright. Why should Virginia Democrats risk having their Congressmen defeated in a party division just to have their electors loyal to the Harry Truman they so bitterly oppose?

Dixiecrats Told to Quit Democrat Committee

McGrath Aide Pledges National Party To Support All Groups Backing Truman

Sat. 9-4-48

By the Associated Press.

Washington, Sept. 3.—A Democratic National Committee official suggested today that "any and all" committee members who are supporting the States' Rights presidential ticket should resign from the committee.

William J. Primm, Jr., assistant to National Chairman J. Howard McGrath, made the proposal. He said such Democrats have "left the Democratic Party."

Primm's statement came in the midst of a controversy between Republicans and Democrats over Communist Party indorsement of the Roosevelt-Truman ticket in 1944.

Also, Secretary of Agriculture Brannan spoke out again on the issue of Government support of some farm prices. Brannan said the G.O.P. presidential nominee, Governor Thomas E. Dewey and other party leaders want to destroy these supports by blaming them for high food prices.

Brannan contended that farm-price supports are not responsible for high living costs. He pointed out that wheat prices have dropped almost a dollar a bushel, "but bread prices have not come down."

F. D. R.'s Statement Recalled.

G.O.P. National Chairman Hugh D. Scott, Jr., demanded that President Truman say whether he accepted Communist

Dixie De

Birmingh

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., July 17—(UP)—"Away down south in the land of cotton, old times here are not forgotten. . . ."

Sat 7-17-48

You can hardly hear the words for the noise.

Dixiecrats jam Birmingham hotel lobbies and the wide sidewalks. They sang "Dixie" all last night and it's keeping on today. The official band is warming up for today's meeting with "Dixie" about the only tune they'll play.

The bandsmen won't need their music sheets.

"Look away, look away. . ."

'Alfalfa Bill' Present

Look away down there in the Tutwiler lobby, and you'll see "Alfalfa Bill" Murray, governor of Oklahoma 15 years ago, who was one of the first bolters against the modern Democratic party.

He left in 1933, one year after a futile bid for the presidential nomination which went to Franklin D. Roosevelt. He disputed the national recovery administration and has since voted for Republican presidential losers.

Look away over there by the cigar-stand, snake-dancing. It's a gang of students from the University of Mississippi, official delegates from the campus to the Dixiecrat meeting. Most of them wear the wide-brimmed black hats of julep-sipping planters.

Student Meet Governor

The students met Gov. Fielding L. Wright of their home state when he got to town last night to continue sparkplugging the anti-civil rights campaign.

Murray, now 79 and living in a hotel at Tishomingo, Okla., author of a recent book on the race question, says he just came as an observer. His eyelids fan slowly behind thick glasses as he says he has no advice—just wants the men here to know he's behind them.

Drawing Up Plans

Look away up to the upper floors, where leaders of the revolt are drawing final plans in rooms as smoke-filled as any in Philadelphia earlier in the week. Soon they'll present them to the 6,000 expected in the auditorium to determine what course will be set for the South's voters.

"In Dixie land I'll take my stand, . . ."

Sat 7-17-48

The walking delegates of Alabama and Mississippi couldn't get the Democratic band to play it while they marched out of the Philadelphia meeting. The tune was slow to come for the demonstration for Senator Richard Russell of Georgia.

But in Birmingham you hear it everywhere.

Glover Blasts Carmichael; Asks Names Of Camp Raiders

The Advertiser

Thur 9-16-48

Montgomery Ala

By G. C. LONG, JR.

Alabama Atty. Gen. Albert A. Carmichael is still feeling the repercussions of the blast he let loose recently on the States' Rights movement at a meeting of a group of Methodist ministers here.

The latest criticism of the attorney general for his speech comes from Ben Glover, state senator from Leroy, in the form of a letter to Carmichael. The letter was released by Glover.

Glover said he felt it was "very unfortunate" that Alabama's attorney general "has taken it upon himself to create confusion, making wild assertions that are not in the least true."

Carmichael said Wednesday that he knew nothing of Glover's letter, that he had not received it and, therefore, could not answer any of the senator's criticisms.

Glover said that since he was one of the "early believers" in the States' Rights movement he considered the attack by the attorney general on the leaders of the movement a personal attack upon himself.

Carmichael's Speech

In his speech, Carmichael stated:

"The August, 1948, version of States' Rights includes, as an auxiliary, a small bunch of thugs, bums and hoodlums, covered by sheets, acting under the instruction of some revolutionaries who hold high places in the States' Rights organization in the Birmingham area. The sole purpose of this organization of revolutionaries, bums and thugs is to so weaken democracy in Alabama and throughout the South as to make a Republican victory certain."

Thur 9-16-48

Writing the attorney general that he had made some "rather rash statements," Glover said that he, himself, was being called a member of the Ku Klux Klan by Carmichael and a person who "wants to pit race against race."

The attorney general also said in the speech that some of the leaders in a Klan raid on a Birmingham area Negro girl Scout camp some weeks ago were "pretty well" known and would be revealed in "due time."

Offers Challenge

Glover called on Carmichael to reveal the names of the "guilty ones in this raid and see how many leaders of the States' Righters are involved."

The senator also declared that the attorney general "intimated that we people in Alabama who believe in principle instead of political patronage had something to do with a raid in Jefferson

Thur 9-16-48

Glover said that he was proud to cast his vote with such leaders in the States' Rights movement as Gessner T. McCorvey, Mobile, chairman of the Alabama Democratic Executive Committee; Horace Wilkinson, Birmingham attorney; Hugh Lock, Birmingham, and former Gov. Frank Dixon, Birmingham.

He said he was proud to vote with those and "many thousands" in Alabama "who value principle above petty personal Truman patronage."

Text of Letter

The text of Glover's letter, dated Sept. 11, which Carmichael said he had not received, is:

"I notice in some weekly publications that you appeared last Tuesday night before a Methodist committee and made some rather rash statements."

"I consider myself one of the early believers in States' Rights. I attended the early meetings that were called by Gov. (Fielding L.) Wright of Mississippi (who is the vice-presidential candidate on the States' Rights ticket.)

"I feel that in your attack on the leaders of the States' Righters that you are in a way attacking me. You are accusing me of being a member of Ku Klux Klan. You are accusing me of being a person that wants to pit race against race. You have intimated that we people in Alabama who believe in principle instead of political patronage had something to do with a raid in Jefferson County. Why do you not name the guilty ones in this raid and see how many leaders of the States' Righters are involved?

"I feel that it is very unfortunate that the attorney general of the State of Alabama has taken it upon himself to create confusion, making wild assertions that are not in the least true.

"I am happy that you have found another Rooster that you could vote under. That is your privilege, but for me, I am proud to vote under the Alabama Rooster with the McCorveys, the Wilkinsons, the Locks, the Dixons and the many thousands in Alabama who value principle above petty personal Truman patronage."

Will Dixiecrats Give Georgia to GOP?

Atlanta Constitution - Atlanta Georgia

Gov.-Nominate Herman Talmadge won't be the only State leader "sitting out" the first doubtful presidential campaign in Georgia since Reconstruction days. Georgia's Sen. Russell, who received the votes of the South for the Democratic presidential nomination at Philadelphia, will remain Democratic, of course. He showed that when he refused the Dixiecratic presidential nomination to stay in the Democratic Party. In view of his battle against the so-called civil rights program, however, it is unlikely that he will take the stump for Truman.

Russell and most of Georgia's congressional delegation—all opponents of the so-called civil rights program, and all in a good position to fight such legislation as long as they are Democratic leaders—may sit still and let Truman do his own fighting to carry Georgia. The Dixiecrats drew their full strength when they obtained the indorsement of Rep. Eugene Cox. It is possible that Rep. Henderson Lanham may speak a good word in behalf of the National Democratic Party.

Wed 10-6-48

Georgia's Democratic presidential electors are outstanding, influential, and capable enough to put up a powerful battle. They include such men as Abit Nix, of Athens, and Claude Pittman, of Cartersville, former candidates for Governor; Quimby Melton, of Griffin, editor, and Harry Strozier, of Macon, liberal attorney and writer.

The Republican Party also is putting up some outstanding, capable and influential men as presidential electors in Georgia for this election. Harry Sommers and Elbert Tuttle, both of Atlanta, and Mayor Roy Foster, of Wadley, are among their electors. Sommers and Tuttle were considered as candidates for Governor and Lieutenant Governor, but the party decided not to enter candidates until 1950. Many Democrats would have voted for this pair.

With National Chairman Hugh Scott speaking at a victory dinner here Friday night, the Republicans are making their greatest bid to carry Georgia. The split in the Georgia party has been healed, and the party is led by outstanding persons.

Wed 10-6-48

The organization of the States' Rights Party as a fourth party in Georgia (Henry Wallace's Progressives are the third party) is giving the Republicans their best chance to carry this State.

What Georgia leaders will permit their names to be used as electors for the Dixiecrats is a matter for conjecture. The States' Rights Party is yet to be organized. Rep. Cox said that 85 percent of his people would vote for Gov. Thurmond. Talmadge leaders in the State Democratic Committee said privately that many, many Georgians who voted for Talmadge on the anti-Truman civil rights program would cast their ballots for Thurmond. Bill Morris, Augusta publisher who unsuccessfully claimed the title of State Democratic Chairman under Acting Gov. Thompson's direction, is supporting the Dixiecrats.

Many believe the Dixiecrats will push the Democrats—and may let the Republicans win.

Two Southern Editors Consider Dixiecrats Dead

Courier Journal - Mon 11-22-48

Louisville Ky.

Pair Predicts States' Righters Out of Picture

Remember the Dixiecrats? Two Southern newspaper editors believe you might as well forget them.

They think the Dixiecrats may continue some sort of political existence for a time in some Southern states. But that's all.

McClellan Van de Veer of The Birmingham Age-Herald and Harry Ashmore of The Arkansas Gazette, Little Rock, agree that the States' Rights Party, nicknamed Dixiecrats, is dead so far as national power is concerned.

Based On 'White Supremacy.'

The Dixiecrats based their appeal in the just-past election, their first, on something closely approaching the familiar cry of "white supremacy." They were against any Federal legislation for Negroes' rights or protection, or for nonsegregation. The avowed reason for the party's birth was to uphold States' rights against President Truman's civil-rights proposals—anti-poll tax, antilynching and the like.

Van der Veer and Aashmore expressed their views on the party while attending a meeting of the National Conference of Editorial Writers which closed here Saturday.

Van der Veer told an interviewer he thought the Dixiecrats might remain dormant in Alabama and some few other states. This depends, he said, on whether the national Administration tries to press civil-rights proposals too strongly "without seeking Democratic unity."

Mon 11-22-48

Dislike Outside Compulsion.

The trouble in Southern states is opposition to compulsion from outside, Van der Veer said.

"If Washington will try for a compromise, which I think can be found, then the Dixiecrat movement will die quickly," he said. Otherwise, they may succeed in holding a measure of control in Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi, and South Carolina for the sake of political power alone, he believes, if not for the sake of the party's principles.

Van der Veer attributed the success of the Dixiecrats in Alabama largely to a ready-made rupture in the Democratic Party there. Two main elements existed in the state Democratic committee. The larger, he said, went into the States' Rights movement. Whether the others will be able to put up slates of local candidates that will beat the Dixiecrat element remains to be seen.

Admits Negro's Right to Vote.

As Van der Veer sees it, the Alabama situation is one in which the local Dixiecrats attempt to use race feeling as a weapon for political maneuvering.

Ashmore said he considered the racial issue of the Dixiecrats a false front for ultraconservative policies on other matters. "It is a dead issue and it won't do the job as it has in the past," he said.

Mon 11-22-48

His paper has acknowledged the right of the Negro to vote. "Twenty-five years ago we couldn't have done that and survived," he remarked.

Ashmore sees as a serious result of the Dixiecrat movement a setback to the arrival of the two-party system in the South. The Dixiecrat party is composed of Democrats who are "Republicans at heart," he said. This will slow the movement of those nominal Democrats into the Republican Party but, Ashmore believes, there ultimately will be an active Republican element and hence a two-party system in Southern states. He remarked that this would, of course, be against the wishes of the Democratic "monopoly."

Lost Out In Arkansas.

The Dixiecrats were "dead" in Arkansas before the election, he said. This was because they lost their fight to control the Democratic state machine in convention.

Touching further on the race question, Ashmore observed that 700,000 Negroes voted this year and estimated that 2,000,000 would vote four years hence. "The average citizen's mind is changed and he accepts the fact that the Negro is going to vote," Ashmore said.

For Human Rights

The News
Mon 7-26-48
B'ham, Ala.

To the Editor of The News:

After listening to the broadcast of the Dixie Democrats convention I weep with respect and disdain—respect for a country which is attempting to establish democracy throughout its borders, disdain for any group which attempts to retard the progress of democracy under the banner of states' rights. The speakers at the convention spoke with hysterical fervor of democracy, freedom, justice and equality, but the orators meant democracy for the Caucasians within the borders of the South who boast of their superiority behind barriers of segregation, Jim Crow and the dual system of justice. Of the varied definitions of democracy, their type doesn't approach the real meaning of democracy as we interpret it according to the Constitution of the United States of America. Stalin says they have democracy in Russia.

In the preamble of the constitution one finds these words, "We, the people of the United States." It is important that this government is of the people, not of the states. What do the Dixie Democrats mean when they say states' rights? Are these right superior or more essential than human and the people's rights—right to justice and equal opportunity? If this be so, let us stop at once proclaiming the United States a democracy—land of the free and haven for the oppressed. Peoples the world over are rebelling against tyranny rule; they are awakening to the typocrisy of superior and inferior races, and today voices throughout the world protest against government without representation. "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their creator with certain inalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." The Dixie Democrats should read our Declaration of Independence and study our constitution. Both bring out the value and importance of human rights over states' rights.

Mon 7-13-48

Do states' rights mean a dual system of justice? Justice is not two-faced. Is there a type of punishment for the Caucasian and a different one for the Negro when identical crime has been committed? Punishment should be the same for everyone, regardless of race, creed, color, national origin or economic status. The success of a democracy depends upon the extending of human rights to all its citizens. If the South continues to ignore and deny these rights to all its citizens, I see no progress for this section of our great country. It will be only a region with 18th century thinking and a stagnant society, refusing to permit a change which will inevitably come like the falling of the walls of Jericho. The cup of the minorities runs over; surely there is enough human justice, freedom, opportunity and equality for all the citizens of our democracy to enjoy.

The Fuse Is Lit on This Dynamite

The Constitution
Sun 11-14-48
Atlanta Ga.

Control of the important House Committees in the Eighty-first Congress will be divided by the South and East, leaving the Far Western two-thirds of the nation without political representation in the chairmanships if the sacrosanct seniority rule is followed.

In the Senate, under the same rule, never yet violated, the South, the border territory and some of the Far Western States would get the dominant positions, leaving the East, Midwest and Pacific Northwest with no Little Democratic Jack Horners to pull out any plums.

If the rule is followed—and it always has been—only one State west of the Mississippi, Missouri, will have a House chairman. It is for this reason that the long-honored rule of seniority may be abrogated by the Democrats themselves. If there is a fight on it, and Southern Democrats may make one, unity of the majority party may be disturbed.

Under the established rules of procedure, the majority party will elect a Ways and Means Committee which will give the Democrats a 15 to 10 margin. This committee then sits as a committee on committees and makes literally all committee assignments from chairman on down the line.

The time-honored rule allows no elasticity in the naming of chairmen. The ranking Democrat simply moves up. In selecting committee members efforts are made to place men on committees for which they seem best-fitted and also to create some sort of geographical representation.

But as matters now stand the House committees will be headed entirely by Eastern and Southern Democrats, a fact which the Democrats from the Middle West and West will not like.

With basically the same situation existing in the Senate the party leaders in Key West are sure to have this unusual situation before them for study.

The fact that the South, which includes the Dixiecrats, will get 22 important committee chairmanships if the seniority rule is followed, will also make restive those Democrats who believe the members from the Dixiecrat States should not be honored with chairmanships. The party leaders will have difficulty keeping this from the floor. There are Democrats who will insist that a change be made and the election of the 15 Democrats to head up the Ways and Means Committee will be the most important one in political history. It is there the fight will be made. The Democratic caucus will elect.

The 22 Southern Democrats, including Missouri and Oklahoma as Southern States, are:

Agriculture, Representative Harold D. Cooley (N. C.); Armed Services, Representative Carl Vinson (Ga.); District of Columbia, Representative John L. McMillan (S. C.); Merchant Marine and Fisheries, Representative Schuyler Otis Bland (Va.); Public Works, Representative William M. Whittington (Miss.); Un-American Activities, Representative John S. Wood (Ga.); Veterans Affairs, Representative John E. Rankin (Miss.); Ways and Means, Representative Robert L. Doughton (N. C.).

Three other top posts would go to border State members, as follows: Appropriations, Representative Clarence Cannon (Mo.); Banking and Currency, Representative Brent Spence (Ky.); Postoffice and Civil Service, Representative Tom Murray (Tenn.).

Nine of the 15 top Senate posts will go to Southerners, as follows:

Banking and Currency, Sen. Burnet R. Maybank (S. C.); District of Columbia, Sen. Spessard L. Holland (Fla.); Expenditures, Sen. John L. McClellan (Ark.); Finance, Sen. Walter F. George (Ga.); Foreign Relations, Sen. Tom Connally (Tex.), and Postoffice and Civil Service, Sen. Olin D. Johnston (S. C.). Three would go to border States: Agriculture, Sen. Elmer Thomas (Okla.); Appropriations, Sen. Kenneth McKellar (Tenn.), and Armed Services, Sen. Millard E. Tydings (Md.).

Sun 11-14-48

This, too, will cause a straining at old leashes. The seniority rule was regarded as so holy that when Congress reluctantly submitted to the LaFollette-Monroney Committee report for streamlining legislation it barred that committee from any meddling with basic rules.

If changes are made we hope they can be established by rule changes and not by punitive decisions. That will not be good for the party. To expect the administration to turn over important committees to its sworn enemies is not good sense. The three or four so involved will be pressed to resign.

It is an important and explosive situation, and we may be sure that Key West is hearing talk about it and that there will be more later on in Washington.

Request For Second Convention Expected

Columbia Record
Columbia, S.C.
Thur 7-22-48

Gov. J. Strom Thurmond is expected to request a second convention of South Carolina Democratic Party Chairman William P. Baskin.

Francis F. Coleman, Charleston county party chairman, said that the governor had informed him that he would make a second request of Baskin.

Prior to the national Democratic convention, Thurmond wrote Baskin urging that a convention be held following the national rally.

Baskin, meanwhile, said he had not called a state convention or a meeting of the state executive committee.

7-22-48

The chairman said he had not received a letter from Thurmond telling of his resignation as national executive committeemen. The party rules provide that a successor, in the case of death or resignation from the national committee, be appointed by the state executive committee.

The committee also has yet to name the eight members to the electoral college that will represent South Carolina.

Baskin said that he had not heard any reports that he was being considered as national executive committeeman for the state.

He declined to comment on the controversy that has waged following Federal Judge J. Waties Waring's decision opening party books and ranks completely to Negroes.

"I am one of the defendants in the case," Baskin said. "Any comment will come from my attorneys."

$96,542 Has Been Spent So Far In Campaign

MISSISSIPPI GAVE MOST

Fri 10-22-48

From The Commercial Appeal
Jackson, Mississippi, Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Oct. 21.—Contributions totaling $158,975 have been received by the States' Rights Democratic Party since its official creation on Aug. 4, national headquarters here announced Thursday.

Of the amount, $96,542 has been expended, leaving a balance as of Oct. 19 of $62,433.

Nearly Every State

George Wallace, Jackson banker and treasurer of the party, said $82,060 of the contributions were raised in Mississippi, and the remaining $76,915 from other states. He said contributions have been received from practically every state.

The party came into existence following the Aug. 3 Democratic state convention here at which Governor Thurmond of South Carolina was officially nominated for President, and Governor Wright of Mississippi selected as vice presidential nominee. Both had been recommended as standard bearers of the States' Rights at the Birmingham, Ala., Southwide rally which followed the Democratic National Convention.

Mr. Wallace said none of the funds had been used in promoting the candidacy of candidates for other office. He denied specifically the charge made by Drew Pearson that States' Rights money was being used in Senator Ball's re-election in Minnesota.

Contributions Listed

When the party came into existence, it started with a fund of $10,045 carried over from a state organization setup in Mississippi.

Largest individual contributor in Mississippi was L. O. Crosby Jr. of Pcayune, in the amount of $1000. Outside the state, the largest reported individual donation was $3500 by W. D. Malone of Dothan, Ala.

Fri 10-22-48

Other large donors reported by the party in its report to the clerk of the United States House of Representatives included: R. A. Welch of Houston, Texas, and S. W. Richrdon of Point-A-La-Hache, La., each $2500; and the following each $1000: Lester Bates of Columbia, S. C.; L. J. Williams of Yemassee, S. C.; C. F. Rowley, Joe Brown, and R. J McDougal, all of Arabi, La.; L. H. Perry of Dalcom, La.; Louis Bagueris Jr. of Arabi; Robert J. Lobrano, L. K. Nicholson, Esmond Phelps, C. S. Braselman and R. G. Robinson, all of New Orleans.

Punishment Unlikely For Dixiecrat Senators

The Columbia Record

Wed 9-8-48

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8.—(UP)—There is no likelihood that Senate Democrats will try to punish dissident Dixiecrat senators by stripping them of Democratic committee assignments, a party source said today.

This is true, the official said, despite the Democratic national committee's warning that supporters of the Dixiecrat ticket are automatically removing themselves from the Democratic party.

His statement came as the committee's efforts to swing rebels back into line extended to Texas and Alabama.

Wed. 9-8-48

Won't Be Allowed

W. J. Primm, assistant to Democratic National Chairman J. Howard McGrath, said anyone who takes part in today's Dixiecrat convention at Dallas will not be allowed at the regular Democratic convention at Fort Worth next week.

At the same time, Primm renewed his demand that Col. Marion Rushton resign as Alabama national committeeman because of his opposition to regular party nominees. He said Rushton's reported concern over the formalities of quitting are groundless—"all he has to do is simply resign."

Thus far only four of the 22 Southern senators have formally committed themselves to support the Dixiecrat ticket, although many more were making threats of bolting last spring when the civil rights issue split the Democratic party.

Columbia S.C.

Senators James O. Eastland and John C. Stennis of Mississippi have both taken an active part in the Dixiecrat movement. In Alabama, Senators Lister Hill and John Sparkman are formally committed to support presidential electors now pledged to the Dixiecrat ticket, but neither has gone beyond the formal obligation.

Even in South Carolina, home state of Gov. J. Strom Thurmond, Dixiecrat presidential nominee, Senators Burnet R. Maybank and Olin D. Johnston have failed to pick sides so far. Maybank, who recently won renomination, may appear as senatorial candidate in November on both the Dixiecrat and national Democratic tickets.

First To Get Warnings

South Carolina Democrats were the first to receive "support-Truman-or-else" warnings from the Democratic national committee.

If the threat were carried through in Congress, Dixiecrat members could be denied the committee seats and seniority which they have gained as Democrats. However, action of that type apparently is not in the offing.

Senator Glen Taylor of Idaho in effect bolted the Democratic party last winter when he joined Henry A. Wallace's Progressive party movement. During the session of Congress the Democrats made no attempt to force him off his committees.

Power Of The Federal Government Still Growing

One out of every six American adults or 15,800,000 persons are receiving money from the federal government in the form of salaries, wages, pensions and other benefits, a survey by the United Press reveals.

And here is the proof, if any additional proof was needed, that the United States isn't what it used to be, the land of free enterprise and state rights. It isn't the republic that the founders envisaged and which we sometimes talk as if we believed it to be.

The federal government at Washington was founded as a government of limited powers and limited income. And so it remained—for years.

But it isn't so any more. The American economy is rather a mixed economy directed in great part by the federal government, which prescribes much of the conditions of employment and even the minimum wage, which regulates both employers and labor unions by extending, by judicial decision, the definition of interstate commerce to include window washers in skyscrapers when the skyscraper houses businesses engaged in interstate commerce.

Sat 9-25-48

The council of economic advisors estimates the wage and salary payments to civilian employes of the federal government, exclusive of postoffice wages and salaries, as now running at an annual rate of $4,600,000,000; payments to members of the armed forces, currently being increased, as now running at an annual rate of $3,300,000,000; social insurance benefits at a $2,000,000,000 rate; subsidies and other payments to farmers at $700,000,000.

This vast accumulation of federal power is due primarily to three things: the series of wars, civil and international, in which the United States has been engaged since the 1850's; the writing into the constitution of the United States in 1913 of the Sixteenth amendment giving the Congress power to lay and collect taxes on incomes; and, finally, the practice, culminating in the New Deal, of looking to the federal government for the solution of any and every kind of problem, economic, agricultural, governmental, educational.

The federal government has found it advisable in almost every war, dating back at least to the Confederate war, to assume the powers deemed necessary to conduct and win the war. And after each of these assumptions of power the nation has never quite been able to get back to the status quo ante bellum. The land grant colleges set up by the act of July 2, 1862, created a precedent for other federal grants in aid.

It was not until the income tax amendment was made law, however, that the federal government had the money to finance this system of usurpation of state rights for which it had been prepared. Washington didn't even have the money to construct the vast bureaucracy which now bedevils individuals wherever they may be in these United States, almost made over into what the Charleston News and Courier calls the United State. All this was remedied as the income tax went into effect and the rates climbed steadily. The federal government had the money to bribe the states from which the money came, to surrender one right after another, to set up bureaucracies of their own in order to spend these federal funds and the "matching" state funds. The process has been both insidious and rapid, gaining velocity with the years.

In 1920 the year which marked the peak of inflation after World War I government expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30 were less than one-sixth as much as they are today and federal taxes constituted only nine per cent of national income as compared with 19 per cent or more today. The difference is to be explained by the fact that we've had another world war and before that a depression and the New Deal. The New Deal went beyond anything else that had ever been undertaken in the United States, contravening the Democratic platform of 1932, but it was the legitimate child of what had gone on before under Republican administrations. It was simply an extension of the Republican farm bills, the Republican protective tariffs and the Republican system of grants in aid to the states; even W.P.A. had its Republican ancestor in Herbert Hoover's emergency relief fund.

And we can never quite be the same again. Maybe we do not even want to be the same again. There is the system of social insurance, set up by the New Deal, which instead of being curtailed will unquestionably be expanded and diversified. There is the farm aid and control program, originally a Republican conception, which neither the Democrats nor the Republicans, no, not even the States Righters, propose to abandon. And there is a whole system of regulatory controls over business, industry and labor which may be changed but not repealed. Finally as a result of the series of wars, there have been added to the federal obligations the necessity of maintaining a large army of civilian employes to keep the federal money rolling out to the veterans. And each war has increased the scope of federal benefits as well as the number of beneficiaries.

Sat 9-25-48

Finally federal expenditures are swollen now by the necessity of supporting a military establishment which is huge by comparison with peace time forces in former years, even though it is none too adequate for today's threatening world situation. And on top of this the United States is spending also for defense billions in its foreign aid program, made necessary by the fact that it has not been able to work out a modus vivendi with Soviet Russia.

The United States can never return to the "good old days" unless it is willing to eliminate some of the functions which the federal government has assumed. If it wants to subsidize agriculture, subsidize housing, subsidize business, regulate labor relations, provide governmental social insurance, it will have to pay for them, not once but two or three times in maintaining the subsidies and at the same time maintaining federal and at state bureaucrats to expend the money, which other bureaucrats have collected. The problem which confronts us today is perhaps not the repeal of any major portion of these acts but the preservation of the narrowing field still reserved for free enterprise. The States Rights advocates have a bigger issue if they would seize upon it. Already they are doing some good in calling attention to the dangers inherent in the one big state idea. But they concentrate too much on the so-called civil rights program, limiting their appeal almost entirely to the South.

Old South Faces Its Problem!

ONE of the most encouraging items to come out of the so-called Dixiecrat Rebellion, it seems to me, is the wave of horror that appears to have swept many of the leaders at the discovery that some of what was said and done at Philadelphia had made them eligible to be propositioned by Gerald L. K. Smith, and his baying pack of rabble-rousers and hate-mongers. He wants to cuddle, which is enough to give any self-respecting human being the horrors. Jrl. 7-30-48

Governor J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, presidential candidate of the Dixiecrat splinter ticket, with all possible speed shoved Gerald out of the bed with the flat statement: "We do not invite, we do not need the support of Gerald L. K. Smith or any other rabble-rousers who use race prejudice and class hatred to inflame the emotions of our people." Period.

The South also very quickly, once it had cooled off and gathered in conclave, switched its campaign to a states rights movement when an examination into the convention speeches and behavior might make it appear that they were "agin" liberte, egalite, fraternite, as our French cousins put it back in the 18th Century when they got the aristocrats and the feudal system off their necks.

THE extreme left-wingers will probably tell you that this states rights issue is nothing but a cover for the deeper and more explosive problem of racism, but, you know, I don't believe it.

I believe that the South can, wants to and will work itself out of the bondage of mediaevalism to which it has fallen heir from past generations and different human concepts, and will make a better job of it IF NOT INTERFERED WITH.

The North has never really understood or sympathized with the South and its problems, or, for that matter, very much cared about its difficulties.

There is more to the Negro question than meets the eye or than can be solved by laws. For it is above all a human problem with which the North has not dealt too ably in the past. Los Angeles Calif.

The North which never has been emotionally tangled with the Negro has only just now brought itself to the stage where a Negro can become a member of a major league baseball team, travel with the whites and enter a first-class hotel.

Slowly, and only with infinite patience and effort, our hidden Jim-Crowism is being broken down.

It has been the work only of our own consciences and the slow but inevitable unfolding of the human spirit. There has been no outside pressure of any kind to complicate our development. But I wonder how we would have reacted had, let us say, a bloc of Western Senators attempted to legislate us into tolerances and understandings that are being reached by education and our human need to live and think in the 20th century.

Jrl. 7-30-48

THE educated white Southerner in some ways is worse off than the Negro. For the Negro has the moral lift and some of the dubious pleasures of being oppressed and discriminated against, but the Southerner must live with the guilt of being an oppressor and discriminator which by nature, desire and breeding he is not. When this feeling reaches into the higher echelons of culture and society it must be well nigh intolerable.

The South did not invent slavery. As late as 1944, the Germans, a supposedly enlightened people, practiced it. The Russians are still using slave labor and robbing victim peoples of all human rights. Generations to follow in those countries will pay a terrible price for this.

If the Northerner could only understand how desperately anxious the South must be to be quit of this heritage of the entanglement of the soul, and how slow and painful is the process, it would aid the difficult task of their fellow Americans below the Mason-Dixon line with sympathy and understanding rather than handicapping them by attempted coercion.

There is no "rebellion" in the South, but only the evidence of a lonely and harrowing struggle.

N. C. DIXIECRAT FIGHT HEADS FOR TOP COURT

Columbia Record

Sat 8-21-48

RALEIGH, N. C., Aug. 21—(UP)—The fight by North Carolina Dixiecrats to get their slate on the state ballot in November was headed for the state Supreme Court today after the States' Righters won the first legal round in Superior Court.

The Dixiecrats fought a state board of elections ruling that the Dixiecrat petition was invalid because too many of the signers had voted previously in a primary election.

But Judge W. C. Harris said the rule barring primary election voters from signing a petition for a new party was "an unreasonable regulation."

The board of elections rule is stiffer than state law, which requires only that signatures of 10,000 registered voters appear on the petition and does not exclude those who voted in other party primaries.

The board of elections said it would appeal Judge Harris' ruling to the state Supreme Court.

Raymond Maxwell, executive secretary of the board of elections, admitted that the Dixiecrats had met state requirements by submitting a petition bearing the names of more than 10,000 registered voters.

Dixiecrats Will Top Truman Ticket—Rushton

The News

Birmingham, Ala.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Sept. 15—(AP)—More electoral votes will be cast for the States' Rights presidential ticket than for the national Democratic candidates, Marion Rushton predicted.

Wed.

Rushton, Alabama's Democratic national committeeman, did not give any figures.

Addressing a Civic Club last night, Rushton said the national party now realizes that "the once solid South is no longer in the bag." 9-15-48

"THE STATES' RIGHTS group is now in a bargaining position," he added, "and it is going to use that position to further its purpose."

He said the several states were supposed to have control over all matters not specifically delegated to the federal government.

"But," the Montgomery attorney continued, "it seems the Democratic Party has decided that the national government should take over such things as segregation within the individual states, murder, voting, marriage and employment, which rights the states have had since their organization years ago."

Discussing segregation, Rushton declared:

Wed.

"We do not need and do not want someone who doesn't understand the problems of the South to come down and tell us what we should do about segregation. 9-15-48

"Negroes are not our equal and they should be treated thus. As they progress, the South will give them their chance to show it."

(WILLIAM J. PRIMM, JR., assistant to National Democratic Chairman Howard McGrath, criticized Rushton recently for retaining his national party office while actively supporting the States' Rights movement.

(Rushton replied he had submitted his resignation to the State Democratic Executive Committee, which has not acted on it. He said he could not resign "on my own motion.")

Daniel Resigns As Thurmond's Aide

Sat 8-14-48

Gov. J. Strom Thurmond announced today that his executive secretary, Col. William Lowndes Daniel, Jr., of Columbia and Greenwood, has resigned his position.

He said Colonel Daniel had indicated to him some months ago that he would like to return to private life. A date for the resignation had been agreed upon, but Colonel Daniel has remained longer than anticipated because of unforeseen developments connected with the governor's nomination as a presidential candidate.

Columbia, S.C.

"It is with considerable regret that I have accepted Colonel Daniel's resignation," Governor Thurmond said. "His service to the State of South Carolina has been of exceptionally high quality, and he has handled the exacting duties of the office with great ability.

"My association with Colonel Daniel has been a genuine pleasure to me, and I greatly appreciate his energetic assistance in the Governor's office," the Governor added.

Colonel Daniel has served as executive secretary throughout Governor Thurmond's administration, having accepted the position at the time of the inauguration in January, 1947.

During the war he was a colonel and was a member of the War Department General Staff under General Marshall. He was one of the planners of the Joint Chiefs of Staff for the world-wide troops of the Army, Navy, Marines, and Coast Guard.

Sat 8-14-48

"I have profound admiration for Governor Thurmond and for his able, progressive, determined, and courageous leadership in the affairs of our State," Colonel Daniel said. "I also admire the firm stand he has taken in matters that affect the Nation and the world at this critical time. I feel that Governor Thurmond is one of South Carolina's outstanding statesmen of all time and one of the Nation's greatest men. The Nation and the world will hear more and more of him as time goes on. Those who are attempting to tear down what our ancestors struggled so hard to establish and fought so hard to preserve, will have to reckon with him in no small way."

Colonel Daniel expressed his personal appreciation to all those with whom he has been associated in connection with the duties of the office.

He said he planned to leave immediately for a vacation trip of several weeks. Because of leaving over the weekend he said he would be unable to say goodbye personally to those with whom he has been associated, but that he hoped to visit them for that purpose upon his return to the state.

Col. D. H. Kennedy, of Williston, will serve as acting secretary until the new executive secretary, not yet announced, reports for duty in the next several weeks, Governor Thurmond said.

States Righters Still Call Themselves Democrats

The Columbia Record

Times 8-24-48

The Charleston News and Courier persists in its idea that the States Rights Democrats is a fourth political party and that it is here to stay.

"An American who has been a Democrat cannot vote for Dewey and Warren" it points out, "and be counted a Democrat, though he be a United States Senator. An American cannot vote against Truman and Barkley, voting for Thurmond and Wright, States Rights candidates, and be counted a Democrat though he be a member of the House of Congress . .

"In the United States Senate of the Eighty-first Congress will be at least three political parties. The fiction that Southern 'Democrats' often voting with Republicans to defeat Truman measures remain 'Democrats' will be abandoned.

"The likelihood that the Democrats will control the Senate next year does not exist."

It is pretty hard to get around The News and Courier's logic. But the States Rights Democrats manage somehow to accomplish this feat, not only in South Carolina, but also in Mississippi and Alabama.

The News and Courier is the South Carolina organ of the States Rights Democrats, but it has no influence with them.

MISSISSIPPIANS VOTE 10 TO 1 FOR THURMOND

States' Righters Apparently Lose Recognition

Memphis, Tenn.

AMENDMENTS DEFEATED

From The Commercial Appeal
Jackson, Mississippi, Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 3.—States' Rights Democrats won the presidential election in Mississippi Tuesday, but apparently sacrificed national party recognition through refusal to support its nominees.

The Thurmond-Wright States' Rights presidential electors won an easy victory in the Magnolia state, cornering about 88 per cent of the votes cast. In view of President Truman's national victory, he will not need the state's nine electoral votes which he lost to Governor J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, the opposition wing's nominee.

Amendment Vote One-Sided

Mississippi voters, also by a one-sided tally, rejected two proposed constitutional amendments, one prescribing "good morals" as a prerequisite to vote, and the other for annual instead of biennial ses- [illegible]

On the basis of tabulations from 1253 of the state's 1725 precincts, the presidential election stood:

Thurmond	128,622
Truman	13,631
Dewey (Ind.)	1880
Dewey (Reg.)	1781
Wallace	235

The "good morals" amendment was downed, 197,226 to 28,717, while the annual session proposal lost, 73,783 to 25,815.

In view of the committee chairmanships slated to go to Southerners in the Congress, it is not unlikely that the Democratic State Convention, which pledged the party's electors to the States' Rights ticket, may meet and rejoin the party and attempt to work out their differences within the ranks. The state convention is in recess and can be convened by Chairman Tom Dunn of Meridian. That course, however, will likely be bitterly opposed by States' Rights leaders, including Governor Wright, the faction's vice presidential nominee.

Tabulations indicated that many voters remained away from the polls. Figuring in the smaller than anticipated vote was the good weather which permitted voters to remain in the fields and harvest the cotton crop. It is unlikely the total will reach the conservative 180,000 vote estimate.

Abernathy Wins

Representative T. G. Abernethy of the Fourth Congressional District, the lone incumbent Democrat opposed, won without effort over his Republican opponent, W. B. Smith, of Vaiden. Mr. Abernethy is a member of the House Agriculture Committee and with victory of the Democrats is placed in a more strategic position to help farmers.

Democratic nominees unopposed in Tuesday's general election were:

Senator James O. Eastland, Representatives John Rankin, First District; Jamie Whitten, Second; W. M. Whittington, Third; Arthur Winstead, Fifth; W. M. Colmer, Sixth, and John Bell Williams, Seventh.

Supreme Court Justices W. G. Roberds, incumbent, Northern District; Julian P. Alexander, incumbent, Central District; Percy M. Lee Sr., Central District for term commencing in January, 1951, and Lee Hall, Southern District, for term being relinquished in January by Justice V. A. Griffith.

Chancellor Herbert Holmes, Third Judicial District, and John Greene Jr., 16th Circuit Court District judge for unexpired term of Senator Stennis.

States' Righter Denies Charge Movement Is 'Political Hoax'

BATON ROUGE, La., Aug. 13—(AP)—A charge that the "Dixiecrat" movement, opposing President Truman's civil rights program, is a scheme to elect one party by dividing another, met prompt denial from the Louisiana States' Rights chairman, John U. Barr, of New Orleans.

The charge was made last night in Baton Rouge by E. H. Williams, president of the Louisiana Federation of Labor, on behalf of the AFL Labor League for Political Education.

Terming the AFL statement "propaganda," Barr replied:

"Mr. Williams will have plenty of time between now and November to plead the Truman case. But on Nov. 2, after the people have given the Thurmond-Wright (States' Rights) ticket the biggest vote in Louisiana political history, I'm certain that Mr. Williams will realize that there is no division of genuine Democrats in Louisiana."

* * *

WILLIAMS CALLED the Dixiecrat" movement "a collossal political hoax," and declared it was "conceived, fostered and put into effect by fair-haired radicals of the Wall Street money interests."

The Labor League charged Barr with previously attempting "to divide the Democratic Party in the South," and called upon the "Dixiecrat" leadership "to declare itself in fact affiliated with the Republican Party."

Shreveport Veteran First Petition Signer

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 13—(AP)—A Shreveport war veteran, C. P. Chandler, was declared today the first signer of a petition for nominating States' Rights electors for the November election in Louisiana.

The claim was made for Chandler last night by Robert Chandler, Shreveport attorney and co-chairman of the States' Rights Executive Committee in Louisiana.

The Shreveport co-chairman said circulation of the nominating petitions was started in that city yesterday.

The States' Rights electors will be given a place on the Louisiana ballot if the secretary of state is presented petitions containing 1,000 names of unaffiliated voters.

To Bar Truman

Dixie Deal On Electors Reported

Wash Post

Nov-11-8-48

By the United Press

Radio Commentator Charles Parmer said yesterday he had learned that States Rights Democrats are planning a "sensational political maneuver" to deprive President Truman of the election if he refuses to bury his civil rights program for the next four years.

Speaking over station WEAM, Arlington, Va., Parmer said "a southern statesman of outstanding integrity" (whom he did not name) told him about the plan "which, if carried through and if successful, might close the White House doors to Mr. Truman on January 20," Inauguration Day.

He said Senators Byrd (D., Va.) and George (D., Ga.) have been chosen by the States Righters to "spearhead a movement" to obtain "a most solemn pledge that the Administration will not again propose to Congress its civil rights program."

If that pledge is not given, Parmer went on, the plan calls for enough southern presidential electors to withhold their electoral college votes from Mr. Truman to throw the election into the House of Representatives "where a real upset might happen."

Southern Democrats already hold enough congressional "balance of power" in a coalition with Republicans, to defeat important parts of the President's legislative program if they want.

Defeated at the polls in their "States Rights" drive to oust Mr. Truman, many members of the Dixie bloc reportedly are ready to return to the regular Democratic fold and compromise on major issues if the price isn't too high. But observers believe they will balk at any compromise on the President's Civil Rights program, which started the Southern revolt last spring.

Parmer said the States' Rights group was going even farther than this, and planning to exact a pledge to scuttle the controversial anti-poll tax, antilynching, antisegregation and fair employment practice bills for four years.

To Truman or McGrath

Demand for the pledge, he said, will be made either to President Truman directly or to Democratic National Chairman J. Howard McGrath, "together with northern Democrats in the Senate."

He said that since the election attempts are being made "to sew up all southern Democratic electors—to get them to vote for Governor (J. Strom) Thurmond in the electoral college if the pledge is not given."

He went on to say that the 87 southern Democratic electors, added to the 38 elected on the Thurmond-Wright ticket, would total 125 votes—"not enough to elect, but more than enough to throw the contest into the House."

States' Righters Jubilant Over Louisiana Vote

Hope For 10 Electoral Bids After Truman Name Is Scratched

BATON ROUGE, La., Sept. 11—(AP)—With President Truman's name scratched off the ballot, States' Rights Democrats were jubilant today over prospects of bagging Louisiana's 10 electoral votes in November.

Sept 9-11-48

In unprecedented action the Louisiana Democratic State Central Committee eliminated the National Democratic Party ticket from the Nov. 2 general election ballot. At the same time the committee in its unanimous decision yesterday substituted the States' Rights ticket of Govs. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina and Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi as the Democratic nominees on Louisiana ballots.

* * *

THE COMMITTEE'S ACTION was a protest over the president's civil rights program.

States' Rights reaction was immediate and exultant at the move which eliminates President Truman except as a write-in candidate.

Gov. Thurmond, winding up a Texas tour at San Angelo, said he expects other states to follow suit in designating him and Gov. Wright as the nominees of "the real Democrats."

Gov. Wright declined comment but Judge Merritt Gibson, National States' Rights campaign director, interpreted the action as "further confirmation" of a Southern sweep leaving President Truman "without a single Southern state."

U. S. Sen. James Eastland (D., Miss.) told a States' Rights rally at Memphis, Tenn., President Truman is "hopelessly defeated," and added "the least the South will gain is control of the Democratic Party." He said the race lies between the States' Righters and the Republicans in November.

* * *

THE STATES' RIGHTERS now claim 45 eltctors in six states. It takes 266 of the total 531 to win. The States' Righters' count is Louisiana, 10; Alabama, 11; Mississippi, 9, and South Carolina, 8; plus four of Florida's eight and three of Tennessee's 12. The Louisiana, Alabama, Mississippi and South Carolina counts represent the total electors in those states.

The States' Righters will also appear on tickets in four states with 59 electors, Kentucky, Virginia, North Carolina and Texas; and they are trying to get on ballots in Arkansas, Georgia, North Dakota, Minnesota.

The New Orleans Times-Picayune in a poll of the electors reported five said they would vote for Thurmond and Wright; two said they had no comment, and three could not be reached MARIANNA, Ark., Aug. 25.—Gov. J. Strom Thurmond, candidate for president on the States' Rights Democrats' ticket, brought his campaign to Arkansas Wednesday and sought to convince state Democratic leaders that they should throw their weight behind the States' Rights cause.

Thur 8-26-48

The South Carolina Governor will officially open his Arkansas campaign with a full scale address here Thursday night, but he arrived in Marianna a day early for conferences with delegates to the Arkansas Democratic Convention in Little Rock next month.

Memphis Tenn

Lunch With Delegates

The convention will decide whether Governor Thurmond and Gov. Fielding Wright of Mississippi, his running mate, will have their electors on the Arkansas ballot as the regular Democratic nominees, or whether they will have to go on the ballot as independents.

Escorted from Memphis to Marianna by the Tennessee and Arkansas Highway Patrols, Governor Turmond immediately went to the Bear Creek Lake resort, seven miles from Marianna, for a luncheon with convention delegates and chairmen and secretaries of various county central committees in East Arkansas.

An executive session pow-wow, from which newspapermen were barred, followed the luncheon.

John Daggett, Marianna attorney, member of the States' Rights Executive Committee, and executive director of the Arkansas Free Enterprise Association, said the conference after the luncheon was confined to "an informal discussion" of strategy which the States' Rights group is following.

"We felt the delegates wanted to meet Governor Thurmond and get an idea of what he is trying to do," Mr. Daggett declared. "It was an informal meeting and no decisions concerning the future actions of East Arkansas delegates to the convention were reached."

Thur 8-26-48

Favors Race Separation

Governor Thurmond admitted that he tried "to sell the delegates" on the idea of supporting the States' Rights ticket.

The presidential candidate, accompanied here by his wife, told newspapermen that "we would like to be the regular Democratic nominees of Arkansas in the general election."

"Of course,' he said, "if we are not the nominees we will get on the ballot as States Rights candidates."

Governor Thurmond said he believed Arkansas people "feel like other Southerners."

"We are fighting for the principles of our Nation," he said. "We believe that if any of the proposals advocated by either Dewey, Truman or Wallace are adopted, then the American way of life will be changed."

Thur 8-26-48

Here in the heart of one of Arkansas' most heavily populated negro sections, Governor Thurmond flatly asserted:

"I favor the separation of the races. Both Truman and Dewey have advocated abolishing segregation."

He then attacked all of the Civil Rights legislation proposed by the Democratic and Republican parties, adding that he would have more to say on that subject in his Thursday night speech.

Governor Thurmond said he was confident the cause of the States' Righters would be successful. He revealed that after his Arkansas appearance, he would speak in Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Texas and Virginia. He predicted that he would carry Tennessee.

Laney Is Absent

Lieut. Gov. Nathan Gordon and his wife were the official representatives from Arkansas at Wednesday's luncheon, due to the absence from the state of Governor Laney. Although advance notice on the meeting had said that Governor-designate Sid McMath was "assured" of being present, a telegram was received saying Mr. McMath was "sick in bed" at a Colorado vacation resort.

Governor Wright of Mississippi also was absent.

Governor Thurmond and his wife will be entertained at various social functions while in Marianna. Thursday the Governor will visit the University of Arkansas Cotton Experiment Station near here before making his four-state radio broadcast from the Marianna ball park Thursday night.

Gov. J. Strom Thurmond's speech will be broadcast over WREC at 9:30 tonight.

Do States' Rights Demos Have Eye On Future, Observers Here Wonder

BY FRED TAYLOR

Some speakers at States' Rights Democratic rallies have gone to considerable pains to explain that the movement has no political motivation.

Instead, they emphasize that it is a "cause"—a "crusade."

There have been intimations that leaders of the States' Rights movement have a lot more in the back of their minds than the November presidential election.

POTENT ISSUE—It is pointed out that the war on President Truman's "civil rights" recommendations, generally regarded as one of the biggest political blunders a Democratic presidential candidate ever made, has given some professional politicos a golden opportunity to attempt a comeback.

Bham Age

There is no question but that the "civil rights" issue is about the hottest one ever plopped into the laps of Southern politicians. It is comparatively easy to rally the rank and file of Alabama Democrats to fight the president's program.

You don't have to be a crystal ball gazer or employ a political divining rod to determine that Mr. Truman is a very unpopular man hereabouts. If he had skipped nimbly around such recommendations, which really were a groin blow to Southerners, as the masterful Roosevelt did, then the picture would be an entirely different one in Alabama and the South.

But if the president had a slate of elector candidates, or even if his name were on the November ballot, the votes he would receive in Alabama would fall far short of a majority.

Sun 9-12-48

STATES' RIGHTS SLATE—But apparently Mr. Truman was thinking more of Henry Wallace's program and that of the Republicans aimed at heavy-voting minorities of the East and North than he was of the Southern vote. His advisers must have convinced the president that the South would fall in line anyway, as it always had.

Anyway, there has been talk for some time that the States' Righters planned to put out a slate of candidates in this state in 1950. Reports are they contemplate projecting candidates for offices ranging from U. S. Senate and governor down to the smallest state and county jobs.

This undoubtedly prompted the question put by William J. Primm, executive assistant to Democratic National Chairman J. Howard McGrath, the other day when he blasted away at Frank Dixon, Horace Wilkinson and Marion Rushton.

Primm, who is a native of Wilcox County, formerly lived in Montgomery but now resides in Washington, asked:

"Could it be that the Dixiecrats are organizing in Alabama for 1950 in an attempt to elect the next governor and United States senator?"

DISAVOW RACE INTENTIONS—Dixon, former governor, reiterated to this column some weeks ago that he did not intend running for senator, for governor or for any other political post.

He admitted that strong efforts were being made to get him into one of these races, but that he intended to continue his law practice.

John Newsome, former Ninth District congressman, who was pressed into service as North Alabama director of the States' Rights campaign, has emphasized and reemphasized he has no personal political ambitions—that he is not running for office and doesn't intend to.

Furthermore, Newsome declared that the States' Rights campaign is not aimed at any Alabama officeholder in 1950 or any future year. Rather, he said, it is aimed toward consolidation of opinion expressed by a majority of Alabama Democrats in the primary last May.

Sun 9-12-48

DIFFERENT VIEW—Sidney W. Smyer, Birmingham attorney and former Jefferson County legislator, recently expressed an entirely different view.

But Smyer, who is executive committeeman for the States' Rights campaign in Jefferson, gave no intimation that he planned to make any political race.

What he did say at a county States, Rights rally was this:

"Reports that we are not political are wrong. We are political. That's why we've organized. What we take up in the future is up to you."

"GIVEN UP"—Jay G. Hayden, writing from Washington for the North American Newspaper Alliance, said:

"The sudden burst of aggressiveness against the Dixiecrats by the regular Democratic managers (McGrath, Primm, et al), is plain evidence that they have given up hope of winning back these rebels by peaceful persuasion.

"Indeed, it appears that the only hope of holding the normally Democratic Solid South even appreciably intact now rests on the chance that Federal Courts, manned mostly by President Truman and Roosevelt, will manage somehow to thwart the Dixiecrat plans."

Sun 9-12-48

Alabama's Supreme Court and a Florida Circuit Court have ruled that Democratic electors may vote as they please. But steps are being taken to appeal these decisions to the Federal Courts in the hope that the U. S. Supreme Court, before the electorial college meets, will establish the dictum that presidential electors, however named or instructed, must vote for the nominees of their party.

STATES' RIGHTERS AIM AT 35 STATE BALLOTS

Co-Chairman Says Movement Is Gaining Momentum

By The Associated Press

HATTIESBURG, Miss., Aug. 19.—States' Righters have hopes of placing the names of Govs. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina and Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi on the ballots in as many as 35 states.

This was revealed Thursday by Wallace W. Wright of Jackson, cochairman of the National States' Rights Democrats.

For Entire Country

Wright said in an interview that the States' Rights movement is gaining momentum steadily and may sweep the entire Nation.

"This movement is gathering force like a rolling snowball," he declared. "The interest is not confined to the South for the reason that the principles involved affect every man, woman and child in the country, irrespective of where they may reside . . .

"The States' Righters offer the only opportunity for conservative people of this country to express themselves by their vote, since both major political parties unmistakably lean to the left and the new Progressive Party to the extreme left."

Fri 8-20-48

Wright, who is no relation to the Mississippi governor, admitted that the biggest task facing the States' Righters was the winning of the electoral votes of Texas.

He is serving as cochairman of the new party with Gov. Ben Laney of Arkansas.

SOMERVILLE, Tenn., Aug. 19.—(AP)—A Tennessee leader of States' Rights Democrats predicted Thursday that electors pledged to the Southern party's nominees will appear on the ballot in this state.

Charles A. Stainback, Somerville attorney and chairman of States' Rights Democrats here, said he had reecived assurance of sufficient statewide support to get the States' Rights electors on the ballot.

Will Seek Pledges

Stainback said an effort will be made to get the state's 12 regular Democratic electors to pledge themselves to vote for Governor Thurmond for president and Governor Wright of Mississippi for vice president.

Fri 8-20-48

If this effort fails, he said, a statewide convention will be held and electors will be selected to represent the States' Rights group.

Regular Democratic electors pledged to vote for the Thurmond-Wright ticket will be included on the States' Rights slate, he said, but electors will be named to oppose those who do not agree to forsake the Truman-Barkley combination.

Tennessee law provides, in effect, that electors named by a statewide convention may be placed on the ballot.

Governor Warren States The State Rights Case

Sat 8-14-48

Columbia S.C.

Governor Earl Warren of California, Republican candidate for the vice presidency, has come forward in a Saturday Evening Post article with a workable state rights program.

The Southern Democrats, setting up their States Rights Democratic party, revolving around the state rights issue as applied to Truman's civil rights program, are plagued by the fact that the South has been anything but consistent in supporting the state rights doctrine. Even yet some of them believe in federal aid for state-owned power projects and nearly all of them probably will admit to advocating federal aid for agriculture. Governor J. Strom Thurmond believes in federal aid for the aged, dependent children and the blind.

Governor Warren's plan is to see to it that every problem capable of being solved at the local level be solved there. The state can step in and solve it when it cannot be solved on the local level. The federal government should intervene only when the problem is a national problem, incapable of solution on either local or state levels.

"We operate this state on the premise that in government every problem capable of solution on the local level ought to be solved on that level," Governor Warren says. "When a task is too big for the community or brings distress, the state must step in and see that government's obligation to the individual is fulfilled.

"Similarly, everything that can be solved by the state should be solved on that level. Only if problems cross the boundary line or when the state can't care for the needs of the people does it become the duty of the federal government to act, and even these programs should be carried out, wherever possible, without setting up a central administration in Washington.

"We want decentralization of authority because the strength of the republic depends largely upon the virility of the state and local governments. Unfortunately, one school of political thought puts the reverse English on this principle, and that is responsible for the top-heavy, expensive government bureaus that are a public burden today. The greatest evil is not the cost of these bureaus, but the fact that they get farther and farther away from the people."

This is roughly, of course, the position that the Democratic party used to take. It is roughly the position adopted by the States Rights Democrats. President Franklin D. Roosevelt, when he was governor of New York, was a state rights advocate, pointing out that the existence of the states as effective governments was the guarantee to the United States that there would never be a Hitler or a Stalin here. The sovereignty of the states must first be destroyed if there is to be dictatorship in the United States, he said.

Sat 8-14-48

This was sound when Franklin D. Roosevelt advocated it—later, of course, he was to do more than anyone else to defeat his own words and to persuade the states to surrender to the one big state idea; it is sound now when Governor Warren and Governor Thurmond advocate it.

If Governor Warren can hold on to these principles, as Governor Roosevelt, made President, did not; if he can persuade his presidential running mate Governor Thomas E. Dewey of New York to subscribe to them—he may of course already subscribe to them—and apply them to the so-called civil rights measures the Republican party may make itself the dominant party of the South as the Democratic party used to be and it certainly can make it so that the Republicans have a chance hereafter of winning in any Southern state.

The South and Governor Warren are together in principle. The Republican platforms of 1936, 1940, 1944 and 1948 make the Republican party a state rights party. "The New Deal administration," the platform charged in 1936, "constantly seeks to usurp the rights reserved to the states and to the people."

The one important conflict with the state rights principle embodied in the 1948 Republican platform is the F. E. P. C. plank. "This right of equal opportunity to work and to advance in life should never be limited on any individual because of race, religion, color or country of origin," the plank reads. "We favor the enactment and just enforcement of such federal legislation as may be necessary to maintain this right at all times in every part of the republic."

And even this plank, thanks to that saving phrase "as may be necessary," could be brought into conformity with the state rights doctrine as enunciated by Governor Warren.

The anti-lynching law and the anti-poll tax law sections of the Republican platform contain no pledge to enact federal legislation.

That pledge is made in the Democratic party platform.

The exceptional Negro, of course, has greater economic opportunities in the South, where he has made most of them for himself, than in the North where he can find employment only in business or industry operated by whites. The F. E. P. C. may be needed in New York therefore; it may be needed in Massachusetts, Michigan or Illinois. These states and all others should be protected in their right to enact F. E. P. C. laws. There are other states, however, in which the enactment now of F. E. P. C. laws would do harm rather than good to the Negroes themselves, states in which F. E. P. C. would be simply another experiment noble in motive to undermine all law enforcement. And these states should be protected in their right to decline to enact such a measure.

Sat 8-14-48

"The racial problems of such a heterogeneous nation as ours cannot be 'solved' except by gradually expanding tolerance over great periods of time," Dorothy Thompson points out. "We have to live with them, as we have to live with all our real problems—each of us, of whatever race, bearing his share of the burden, with as much justice, mercy and humor of which he is capable. Unroll the whole issue of race and religious prejudice in an attempt at a radical solution and, instead of brotherly love, you will promote hate; instead of social peace, civil war; instead of mercy, persecution; and instead of justice, revenge."

Nominee Of States' Rights Party Is 6 To 4 Favorite In South Carolina Polling

The [illegible] News

Sun 9-12-48

BY GEORGE GALLUP

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

Gov. J. Strom Thurmond, presidential candidate of the Southern States' Rights Party, holds a long lead in his home state of South Carolina at present, although the Truman forces in the state are actively working to change the situation in the seven weeks remaining to election day.

The first complete survey report finds that if an election were held today, Gov. Thurmond would poll nearly six out of every 10 votes cast. In the same poll the voters expressed a desire to change the election balloting system of South Carolina, only state which does not have a true secret ballot.

The poll question on candidates was:

"If the presidential election were being held today, how would you vote—for Truman, for Dewey, for Thurmond or for Wallace?"

The following table gives the vote with the percentage of undecided voters included in the first column and eliminated in the second:

SOUTH CAROLINA
(8 Electoral Votes)

Thurmond	52%	59%
Truman	26	29
Dewey	10	11
Wallace	x	1
Undecided	12

xLess than 1 per cent.

* * *

Other States Affected

SOUTH CAROLINA is normally the staunchest Democratic state in the union, its electoral votes always being considered a sure thing for the party. But this year the Democrats face not only the possible loss of South Carolina, but also the possible loss of electoral votes in Mississippi and Alabama, where the regular Democratic electors are reported pledged to cast their electoral votes for Gov. Thurmond. In Florida, half of the electoral votes are reported to the Thurmond ticket. This makes a total of at least 32 possible Thurmond electoral votes—a serious threat to the Democrats at a time when they will need every electoral vote they can scrape up.

Sun 9-12-48

Ballot System Unique

SOUTH CAROLINA'S election balloting system differs from other states in that the names of the opposing party candidates are not printed on the same ballot. Voters must ask for the ballot of the party they wish to support. If they ask for the Democratic ballot, they are handed a ballot with only the Democratic candidates listed, not the Republican candidates. If they wish to vote Republican the ballot they receive lists only the Republicans. Each party in the state prints its own ballots for use on election day.

The issue of whether this system should be changed was put up to South Carolina voters by the Institute poll as follows:

"Do you think voters in South Carolina should or should not have the right to vote by secret ballot in general elections—that is, to mark their choice of any presidential candidate secretly and on the same ballot?"

Should	80%
Should not	8
No opinion	12

The unusual balloting system in South Carolina may be one reason for the one-sided vote usually found in the state. Many of its counties turn up with virtually unanimous votes for the Democrats.

In 1936 Lancaster County and Horry County went 100 per cent Democratic, not a single vote being cast for the GOP. In 1944 Calhoun County went Democratic by 99.8 per cent, and McCormick County by 99.7 per cent.

The whole state went Democratic by 98½ per cent in 1936, 95½ per cent in 1940 and 95 per cent in 1944.

States Rights Democrats Frown at Name 'Dixiecrats' Devised to Fit Paper's Headline

9-5-48

CHARLOTTE, N. C., Sept. 4 (NANA) — The Dixiecrats don't like the name "Dixiecrats."

"I don't care for it," says Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, the party's nominee for President. He said that it puts the States Rights Democrats behind the eight ball in other sections of the nation.

Gov. Thurmond added: "It is not only an eight ball, but it's a five-yard penalty in talking to the voters of the North, the Midwest and Far West."

The States Rights Democrats have Bill Weisner, telegraph editor of the Charlotte News, to thank for putting Dixiecrat into the American vocabulary.

Mr. Weisner was writing a headline on a story about the States Rights Democrats which would not fit. Dixiecrats would.

He admits that he first thought of "SRD," as would some headline writers in these days of alphabetical agencies, to identify the party bolters.

But Mr. Weisner took the view that he shouldn't use it; opposition politicians might make capital of it. They might have said the initials stood for "Standing Room for Democrats," or something like that.

Way "Up" In Dixie

We have a feeling that when the Dixiecrats get the real lowdown on the ancestry of their theme song they will repudiate it and try enthusing their congregations with most any other ballad except "Dixie."

"Dixie" has a noble ancestry and does not mean what the Dixiecrats think it means. For proof we quote from The American Educator Encyclopedia, a widely circulated set of books, used by school teachers. Vol. 3, page 1086 gives, in part, the following enlightenment:

"DIXIE or DIXIE-LAND, a term which came, by popular error, to be identified with the South durnig the Civil War. The story goes that early in the nineteeth century a man named Dixie lived in Manhattan (New York) Island and kept there a large number of slaves, whom he treated with great kindness. When feeling against slavery began to grow intense, Dixie sent some of his Negroes South, and they sorrowfully at leaving their kind master 'sighed for Dixie's land.'"

7/23/48

And so "Way up in Dixie" is the original version of the song of which the present version, "Way Down in Dixie," is a sort of parody and one that misconstrues the views colored folk in the days of slavery had regarding life down South compared to life on Manhattan Island.

7/23/48

It is stated that the author of even the "Dixie" that pictures the longing of the Negro for the slave-life of the South later regretted ever having written it when, in the Civil War, it became the rival of "Yankee Doodle." Dixie's author ,as might be expected was, himself, a Northerner. And as might be expected, originally "Dixie" was a Negro melody. Which reminds one of Hambone's observation that: "It sure is terrible the way white folks can beat the Negroes stealing."

When Mr. Roosevelt had something to give out in the shape of postoffices and WPA the Dixiecrats could sing "Happy Days Are Here Again" in perfect unison with Mr. Marcantonio and the delegates from Harlem. But now in days that are "dark and dreary" they propose to fall back on a distorted version of dear old "Dixie."

Sound And Fury

The trouble with the Dixiecrats is that they started their crusade too late to arouse any serious concern among the people of the United States. They are looked upon merely as a windy, amusing faction, wholly bereft of any power to thwart the general purpose of the nation to fulfill its destiny as a real, rather than a ritualistic democracy.

It is fortunate for the nation, and unfortunate for the Dixiecrats, that native-born Southerners are on the firing line, writing in the greatest newspapers of the country, and interpreting the Southern revolters to the nation. The most noted of these is Thomas L. Stokes, the eminent columnist, who constantly reminds the world that the professional Southerners who make newspaper headlines by their mouthings do not express the sentiments of the intelligent and God-fearing people of the South. Their seeming importance comes from the fact that, by resort to all kinds of political rascality, they have captured and control the people's governments. Mr. Stokes also shows that they are mere stooges of Northern Big Business interests that use these politicians to exploit the South.

These windy politicians have also been notably caricatured by Kenny Delmar's Senator Claghorn, and just to prove that they could ,better employ their time and talents trying to raise the economic, educational and cultural standards of their section, instead of constantly bragging about having the world's most illustrious strain of human beings, Erskine Caldwell, native-born Southerner, has debunked the braggarts with his "Tobacco Road," and "Now You See Their Faces."

The fact that the United States has elected to assume leadership of the world--a world in which darker races are in the majority,—makes it a certainty that this country must reject race discrimination and the corny interpretations of the Federal Constitution that Dixiecrat politicians seek to give it.

Also the fact that this nation more than four-score years ago fought a bloody civil war to re-affirm that "We the People," rather than "We the States" founded the Federal government makes it unthinkable that the nation will sanction a revocation of the righteous, though costly, decision that was reached at the end of that war.

Real Showdown Will Come

The Columbia Record.

And what of this Southern revolt and the future?

There is, of course, occasion for it. The Republican party has never been a spokesman for the South. The first Republican victory resulted in the election of Abraham Lincoln and it was a Republican Congress or the "radicals" in that Republican Congress which imposed upon the South the many evils of the reconstruction regime. It was this error—Republican error—which tied the South to the one party system.

Now the Democratic party, which once represented something of the South's ideas and in which the South had a considerable voice until 1932 has been changed into a radical party, somewhat left of center, in which the South has no real voice, which treats the South with a disdain that even the Republicans cannot equal.

Many Southerners cannot in logic continue their alliance with the Democratic party. They served notice upon the party before the Philadelphia convention that unless some attention was given to their views they would bolt the party.

There are other Southerners, the labor group in particular, who still feel an attachment for the Democratic party and there are politicians who value their party seniority over principle and who desire, therefore, to still maintain their places in the Democratic party. Fri. 8-6-48

At the same time that the Democratic party was being changed the Republican party also was changing. But the South still lacks any real voice in Republican party affairs and cannot get it until we build up in the South a real Republican party.

Columbia, S.C.

What are the South's remedies in this situation? There is the remedy adopted by the Dixiecrats of setting up the States Rights Democratic party as a fourth party. Even though Governor J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, the nominee of the Birmingham mass meeting or conference-convention, for president, talks about actually being elected his advisors know he does not have a chance. South Carolina's vote will probably go to him. So will Alabama's and also Mississippi's. He has only an outside chance of getting his name on the ticket at all in North Carolina and a fighting chance of getting his name on the ticket in Texas. Any Southern party is doomed to be a minority party from the beginning, even if it carried all of the Southern states. The real race will be between Dewey of the Republicans and Truman of the Democrats. The States Rights party has no value except to voice a political protest. 8-6-48

Logic would have suggested that these States Rights leaders in deserting the Democratic party go over to the Republican party. That would have made their protest effective and it would have given the South an effective voice in the councils of both parties since those who prefer to remain Democrats could have been left in control of the Democratic party in the Southern revolt states.

The States Rights party movement is designed to prevent just this. It is designed to make certain that the Southern revolt is not effective. It is devised to preserve the one party system in the South and to make certain that the South is back in the bag again for the Democratic party in 1952. Some of its leaders may not recognize the fact. They are sincere advocates of the state rights position in opposing the so-called civil rights bills.

But they want to conduct their campaign through the Democratic party organizations in the South wherever possible. The 11 electoral votes of Alabama will be granted the States Rights party nominees through the Democratic party of Alabama. When an Alabama voter supports the regular Democratic ticket—the rooster ticket—he will be voting for Thurmond and Wright whether he desires to do so or not. This course will be followed in Mississippi also. And it will be the same thing in South Carolina. The state Democratic executive committee is empowered to name the candidates for electors and to instruct them how to cast their votes. 8-6-48

The States Rights Democratic party is therefore actually not a fourth party. It is not intended to be a fourth party. It is intended simply to be a caretaker for the Democratic party in the South. And when the Truman era ends as it will, and the Republicans are elected as they will be in November, both without the aid of the States Rights Democrats, the Democratic party of South Carolina and Mississippi and Alabama will carry on like the Democratic party of Georgia, Florida, Texas, Arkansas Oklahoma, Louisiana and North Carolina.

Southern Democrats will control the Democratic party in Congress for the next four years. They will determine the party's policies and make the party's decisions. They will get the pick of the Democratic committee assignments.

But when the convention meets in 1952 the South will discover again that it is the red-haired stepchild in national Democratic party affairs. It will find itself left out in the cold as it was in 1948.

Then the South will possibly come to recognize the futility of political protests, may even come to recognize the grave mistake it is being led into this year by the States Rights proponents, the mistake of wasting its energy on a splinter party movement instead of concentrating on the upbuilding of a decent Republican party. For now except for the States Rights diversion is the time to set up a real two-party system in the South. 8-4-48

The possibility is that it may be the last chance for the South if it hopes to prevent the enactment of the unconstitutional civil rights measures. For by 1952, when the South will have had its lesson, it may be too late. The civil rights measures may be law.

History Plagues The Southerners On State Rights

Columbia Record

Mon 8-16-48

Columbia S.C.

Arthur Krock of the New York Times draws a parallel between the state rights fight of the Southern Democrats in the 1948 national convention against Truman's civil rights program and the anti-state rights fight put up by some of them in the 1932 convention against the Al Smith anti-prohibition plank.

In 1932 a strong minority of the Southern Democrats, Mr. Krock points out, were Federalists on the issue which divided that gathering—national prohibition and its federal enforcement through the Volstead act.

At the 1932 convention, over the protest of some of Mr. Roosevelt's Southern spokesmen, a majority of the platform committee voted for a plank calling for the outright repeal of prohibition. Al Smith defended the majority report with a state rights argument. "Since when," he wanted to know, "has it become any violation of fundamental Democratic party creed to declare emphatically in favor of the rights of the states?"

And, as Mr. Krock notes, the same language and precedents were cited in 1932 to support the repeal argument as are being cited this year to support the Southern idea that the federal government has no right to invade the police power of the states.

The Southern vote was split in 1932 with 139 Southerners voting in favor of state rights for the repeal of prohibition and 117 against state rights and for the compromise plank.

The Southern vote stood:

For the Al Smith plank—Alabama 3, Arkansas 5, Florida 13, Georgia 0, Louisiana 17, Mississippi 0, North Carolina 8, South Carolina 18, Tennessee 18, Texas 46, Virginia 11.

Against the Al Smith plank—Alabama 21, Arkansas 13, Florida 1, Georgia 28, Louisiana 3. Mississippi 20, North Carolina 18, South Carolina 0, Tennessee 6, Texas 0, Virginia 13.

The majority of the Southern states were actually recorded as opposed to state rights when applied to prohibition. On the state basis the vote stood six to five against state rights, with Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Mississippi, North Carolina and Virginia voting against the repeal plank.

Only two states, in both 1932 and 1948, had perfect state rights records. These states were South Carolina and Texas. Florida, with one dry vote against state rights in 1932, has an almost consistent record and Louisiana is not far behind. Tennessee voted three to one for state rights.

It is significant that Mississippi the delegation from which walked out of the Philadelphia convention in 1948 voted unanimously against state rights in 1932 and Alabama half of whose delegation also walked out, was seven to one against state rights when the issue was prohibition.

Mon 8-16-48

The same charge of inconsistency, of course, applies to the Northern states which in 1932 were voting for state rights and prohibition's repeal—New York for example —and in 1948 were voting against state rights and in favor of more Negro and "liberal" votes.

But these two votes—and the inconsistency of the South would be still more apparent if the comparison should be made between the Southern votes in Congress on prohibition and on any of the civil rights bills—make it apparent what difficulties the State Rights Democrats labor under in trying to make state rights the issue. For the South has always reserved the right to throw state rights overboard when it suited its convenience.

Mon 8-16-48

Representative Joseph Bryson of South Carolina is an advocate of state rights on civil rights, but he is also the leading congressional advocate of national prohibition.

States Rights Party Cannot Make Up Its Mind

The Columbia Record

Mon 8-23-48

Columbia S.C.

Says the Charleston News and Courier, which boasts that it is the South Carolina organ of the States Rights Democratic party as it used to boast of its independence:

"The national States Rights party is not Southern. It is the party that enters the field for the protection of Minnesota, Maine, the Dakotas and all the states subject to domination by great cities controlling states, which cities are subject to machines, the Arveys, the O'Dwyers, the Frankie Hagues —and Walter White, Philip Randolph, other colored citizens.

"No matter what the result in November shall be, the national States Rights party will stay in the field for the security of the republic. It is the defense of the Republic against secret enemies, the enemies that assail from the dark.

"Without states' rights can be a United State.

"Without states' rights cannot be the American republic."

Apparently The News and Courier considers the States Rights Democratic party a new fourth party. If this is to be so the party should repudiate its alliance with the Democratic party of South Carolina, the Democratic party of Mississippi and the Democratic party of Alabama and spurn their proffer of the Democratic electoral votes in these three states. No fourth party, called the States Rights party, should masquerade as the Democratic party in South Carolina, Alabama or Mississippi or any other state. It should leave the Democratic party organization to the Democrats, to whom it belongs.

Mon 8-23-48

The truth is that the States Rights party isn't yet a true party, despite The News and Courier's wishful thinking. It is simply a protest and to make this protest effective it is more interested in electoral votes—hence its alliance with the Democratic party in Alabama, Mississippi and South Carolina —than in principles.

Like the Democratic party of South Carolina it is confused. Some of its spokesmen talk as if it were a fourth party; some talk as if it were still the real Democratic party —and it still retains the word Democratic in its name—and predict that after the election it will take over the Democratic party in Congress.

The Dixiecrats

(From The Hale County News, Moundville)

The Times

[illegible]

The Southern bolters of the Democratic Party, dubbed Dixiecrats, forms the most unique development in the presidential campaign. Ostensibly their aim is the defeat of Truman and of all civil rights legislation on the national level. They have taken up the battle cry of "states' rights" and claim to be the defenders of the individual's liberty and freedom. Actually the real issues are entirely different. Their protestations against civil rights and for states' rights are merely a camouflage to cover their real purposes. The bolt has been led by a coalition of entrenched reactionaries who are primarily interested in maintaining their privileged stations. Their stranglehold upon the politics of their respective states has been challenged and seriously endangered by the sweep of a liberal movement across the South that is interested in progress and the development of our resources. The reactionaries have seized upon the strategy of stirring up prejudice and fomenting racial strife as a blind to their real purposes.

He Would Sell His Soul

To the Editor of The News:

He would sell his soul and his country for the Negro and Zionist vote. That is what the president's program means. It also means that there will be no more states' rights.

He says he is fighting communism abroad. Is he trying to cram it down the throats of his own people? We certainly do not want a police state in the United States.

As far as I can see, if anyone, regardless of color or race, wants to organize an industry or business of his own, if within the law he is at liberty to do so. No one is going to say no.

The white man is responsible for America's great industries. They are, mainly, the ones who pay the taxes that keep the country going. They are the ones who gave this country all the great statesmen. They are the ones who built the hospitals, colleges, schools, churches, amusement and recreational facilities. They are the ones that should have the right to choose their own employes and to promote those who should be promoted. No one is forced to work for any individual concern. If they don't like their jobs or the rules of the company, let them seek employment elsewhere.

Birmingham, Ala.

The white men came to this country with nothing but faith in God, a will to work and a burning desire for freedom. They are the ones who have built this great country of ours. Why try to tear it down because someone wants to be elected to some political office, an office they are not capable of holding, at the expense of our freedom?

Until we learn that we are, in fact, God's people, His servants, and that we must put all our trust and faith in Him and look to Him for guidance we will have neither peace nor prosperity.

Thurs. 7-22-48

The reason that Southerners believe in states' rights so strongly, and stick together as they do, is because most of them are pure Anglo-Saxons. They are a race of peculiar people, peculiar to God. They are a race chosen, by God, for service to Him.

The Southern Negro is treated as well or better than his Northern brother. They have the sympathy and true Christian assistance of the Southerner. They have mutual understanding, something that one sees in no other part of the country. They are given almost any kind of employment. There are professional men among them. They have their own businesses, their own homes, churches, schools and amusement facilities. If they have the industry to work, earn and save, as have the white race, no one begrudges their prosperity. This is a free country and as a man does so is he.

Editor, The Advertiser:

Several years ago, a controversial bill was pending in Congress, and a committee of ladies was sent to interview a senator who was obstructing its passage. During the conversation with him a member of the committee reminded him that his constituents were strongly for the measure.

"That may be true, but I am unalterably opposed to it, and will never vote for it," he answered, seemingly a little vexed.

"Suppose they should demand, that you as their elected representative, support it, what course would you follow?" I asked.

After some hesitation, he replied, "I would hand them my resignation, as that would be the honorable way out."

Sun 9-12-48

In the past few months I have thought many times of his, "that is the only honorable way out," in connection with the apparent hostile attitude of our two senators. They are definitely opposing the will of a majority of Alabama voters.

When Senator Hill was a candidate for delegate he promised that he would oppose the nomination of Truman in every way possible. I wonder if he and Mr. Sparkman consider what they are said to have done—not in a smoke filled room in Philadelphia—but at a buffet supper attended by all the senators present, the night before Truman's nomination, keeping the promise they had made to the voters back home.

Montgomery Ala

Suppose they have announced that they will support the States' Rights ticket, who cares for their two little votes? What the States' Rights ticket needs is their support and influence. If they can't give this they are evidently aiding Truman, and the majority of the voters should notify them that they will consider them as bolters in the future . . .

Louisiana States' Rights Papers Are Presented

BATON ROUGE, La., Aug. 26.—(AP)—Louisiana States' Rights Democrats Thursday filed nominating papers to place electors for the Thurmond-Wright presidential ticket on the Louisiana ballot.

Stamps Farar, New Orleans attorney representing the States' Righters Legal Committee, said the petitions had 1200 signatures, 200 more than are required under Louisiana law.

8-27-48

Secretary of State Wade O. Martin Jr. said the States' Righters' elector candidates' names would appear on the November ballot.

"I have received the nominating papers, the attorney general has checked and approved them for form and legality, and the names of the nominees will go on the ballot," Martin said.

For ballot purposes, the States' Rights Democrats in this state are using the names "States' Righters." Louisiana law prohibits use of the word "Democrat" for any nominees other than those named by the Democratic Party under regular procedure.

Cutting Off Your Nose To Spite Your Face

The State Press

34d

The action of Dixiecrats, State Righters, or what-have-you, reminds us of the familiar saying: "cutting off your nose to spite your face". Their action is just as contemptible. However, the action of these southern would-be-politicians is not surprising to any person with a decent mind, for that is an aristocracy of the south.

In the first place the rebelious program is motivated through hate, therefore leaving clairvoyant powers unnecessary for the analysis of the sponsors.

Fri 10-1-48

The whole program of the Dixiecrats grew from fear of Mr. Truman's Civil Rights proposal to get legislation to combat hate in an effort to set a pattern in our own country that we are attempting to set in foreign territories. This aroused the ire of these men who immediately saw their government (established within our national government which is violating the federal constitution) destroyed, taking away their self-gained power to deal with the Negro as they felt.

Little Rock, Arkansas

The enigma of the whole controversy is that the Dixiecrats are hollering that such a program as outlined by Mr. Truman in his proposal, "is infringing upon our constitutional rights". They have become so imbued in their ideas that they have really lost all concepts of the constitution. They think they are right. The statistical facts that the section of the country they govern is far below any standard of comparison to the rest of these United States have no bearing on their reasoning power.

Just what do the Dixiecrats expect to accomplish? The only thing they can accomplish is the defeat of Harry Truman. And that will have to be with the help of Henry Wallace. They will never defeat Civil Rights. The defeat of Harry Truman will not delay Civil Rights, neither will it hasten them. Among the first of the proposals to become effective will be the ones the southerners hate most. They will not become effective because of the defeat of Truman, or the election of Dewey, nor will the defeat of Dewey and the election of Truman bring Civil Rights. They are coming because they are the will of the people, and nothing Dixiecrats, State Righters, or southern politicians can do will stop them.

Fri 10-1-48

The people whose minds are open to decency have discovered how hate can retard progress and bring on disaster. They saw recently the world-wide suffering, property destruction and lives of young men, women and children snuffed out because of hate programs. So only a warped mind can entertain any remote idea that the people are going to sit idly by and let a minority section of the country continue to spread hate. The people have realized from practices in other countries that to limit liberty is the surest way to destroy it.

This is no condemnation of the Dixiecrats. We feel that an organized force of men who fear democracy is one of the best things that could happen at this time. It gives the entire world an opportunity to see the men, who have been parading under the cloak of democracy, who actually engaged in retarding the progress of America.

The Dixiecrats Kill States' Rights

Tues 10-19-48

Atlanta Ga.

I read an editorial from the Dixiecrat organ in Augusta. It was written right out of the cliche-handbook. "Dire dangers" leaped from its shallow depths. Even our old friend, "enlisting in this crusade," was there, a little shabby, to be sure, but still on the job. "Imposing the yoke" was there, overworked and down at the heel. "This hour of peril" was well down in the latter paragraphs. A little anemic, it is true, but clinging to the sentence structure. Somewhat embarrassed to be in such shabby company, "the Ark of the Covenant" jostled wearily with "the party of Jefferson and Jackson." "The cobwebs of misunderstanding" were on duty, ready to be "wiped away from before the eyes." "Breed anarchy and havoc" was well down in the last paragraph.

What it was trying to say was that there wasn't anybody else in the States' Rights Dixiecrat coop but "us blue-blooded political chickens."

Piety

Why, the word "racial" wasn't even mentioned from the platform or the floor, protested the editorial with great piety. Naturally, almost every one chosen to serve for the party has a long record on the subject. There were exceptions, but they were few.

This was the most rib-tickling statement of all. The truth is, and the inescapable truth is, that in the Dixiecrat coop is every Ku Klux element in the State; the Gerald L. K. Smith legion; all the Columbian Fascist remnants; all the old gang that fought Roosevelt for 14 years, plus the old crowd that has been behind every reactionary front in the past 16 years. It is harmful to the states' right fight which, if lost, will be lost because of the Dixiecrats. For all its protesting in the name of the South it is the most harmful force operating against the South's future. That it should fool some well-meaning persons is to be expected.

Tues 10-19-48

Of Course

Certainly there are some good and excellent people in the Dixiecrat movement. There are many such in the Ku Klux Klan who have been led by emotions and unfounded fears to hurry behind its sheets for promised protection. I understand perfectly why many such persons join the Klan and I do not criticize them. They have fears and grievances and neither their local, State nor national government provides an opportunity for them to express them. The klansmen I hold in contempt are those who go into it hoping they can beat, whip or kill persons and be secure. They are the same sort of persons who did the beating, the torturing and the murdering at Hitler's concentration camps and gas chamber. Others who are contemptible are those who go into it for the fat profits to be made in it and who deliberately make uninformed, good people afraid so as to take their money in dues and in payment for uniforms, which cost about $2 and sell for $15. These are in the Dixiecrat movement—all of them.

So, of course, there are good people in the Dixiecrat movement. The pity is they are not running it. The Dixiecrats are being run from Houston, Texas, and from sub-stations in Birmingham, Ala., and Jackson, Miss.

Issue

There is a very real problem of states' rights. It is an important one and one vital to America. Only Gov. Earl Warren, the Republican vice presidential nominee, is talking about it in its true light.

The crux of the issue is how far the Federal Government can go in taking over the problems of local governments. The issue will be met by the next Congress. It is an issue important to all the States, not just the South.

Yet, the tragedy of it is that the South is trying to say to the nation that the issue is the lynching bill and the poll tax bill and the right of the States to discriminate against the Negro if they wish. and the right of the States to maintain existing failures to provide equal school opportunity.

Facts

Inevitably, therefore, in the eyes of the nation the legitimate and important issue of states' rights is dirtied up and corrupted until the rest of the nation cannot join in to fight for it. The Dixiecrats are killing off the chance for states' rights to win.

It is an inescapable fact that the Dixiecrat States' Righters are doing the South and the things in which the South believes great and probably irreparable harm. That is, in fact, what the real and invisible backers of the States' Rights Dixiecrats plan. The Dixiecrats are fighting the best interests of states' rights.

The rest of the nation would like to fight with us for states' rights. But they won't fight with us for wrong and for narrow sectionalism.

Tues 10-19-48

Look at France and at Italy, where many parties have broken down government.

Let us fight this thing out within the two-party system.

Dixiecrats and the G. O. P.

Winston Salem Journal

AN ASSOCIATED PRESS dispatch from Indianapolis says that the Republican State Chairman of Indiana now admits that petition forms on which signatures were obtained to put Dixiecrat candidates on the ballot in that state were printed in Republican state headquarters. It remains to be seen whether or not the Dixiecrats will get the names of their candidates on the ticket. A restraining order against such action has been issued by the court and the question is to be settled later.

Fri 9-10-48

Winston Salem, N.C.

But there seems no question that the Dixiecrats will be on the Indiana ticket if the Republican organization of that state has its way. And that is true, no doubt, in all other states. Republican leaders everywhere, we are confident, would like to see the Democratic Party split into factions, because they know that would insure the election of a Republican President.

The Indiana Republicans are encouraging the Dixiecrats for the same reason that the Alabama Republicans are. The Attorney General of Alabama made a speech the other day in which he intimated that the men who are crying loudest for states' rights are really working to divide the South in order "to insure the triumph of a political party which puts property rights above individual rights." Liaison between the Republican Party and certain so-called leaders in Alabama, he said, is complete. He declared that the Democratic Party machinery in Alabama was being prostituted for the purpose of helping elect a Republican.

As for the race issue, the Alabama Attorney General declared it was not nearly so much involved as some persons would have it appear. Although this matter is a serious one, he charged that a goodly part of the professed concern for states' rights revolves around special interests rather than around racial adjustments. "The States' Righters dearly love that old red herring, the race issue," he said, adding that they do not want the race issue settled as it is their stock in trade.

The Attorney General of Alabama is a native of that state whose family long has served Southern causes. His name is Albert A. Carmichael, and he has been mentioned during the past few months as a possible candidate for Governor. He is supporting the Democratic ticket headed by President Truman. His forthright statement of his convictions concerning the Dixiecrats no doubt will have tremendous weight with the voters of his state.

Fri 9-10-48

The overwhelming majority of the voters of Alabama, like the voters of North Carolina, are Democrats. And we are confident that the more they think about it, the more determined these Democrats will become not to help the Republican Party win the Presidential election this year.

Before this campaign is over the vast majority of Democrats in North Carolina, we are sure, will reach the conclusion that The Durham Herald arrived at this week, when it said:

"It is to be hoped that the elections will bring a Democratic Congress back to power and continue Mr. Truman in office. The Republicans are no more capable of sound leadership than they were when they were last in complete control of the government. The 80th Congress has proved that beyond a shadow of a doubt."

The States' Rights Movement

The News

All answers to the question of what will become now of the states' rights movement led by the Thurmond-Wright ticket must be tempered by the realization that the question really breaks down into several parts. Will, and should, the revolt continue to live under a separate organization? How should the battle for states' rights be continued?

For there is no question of the fact that Southerners will carry on their efforts to assure state handling of matters they believe can best be taken care of through local or state governments. That cause was not defeated. What lost was the effort to turn the states' rights issue into a national movement.

Fri 11-5-48

Southerners have battled for the cause for many years. The question of forcing upon the South civil rights measures as conceived in other sections of the country has been before Congress repeatedly. And repeatedly the South has been able to present its viewpoints in such a way as to forestall hasty and ill-timed action. The South will continue to press for its views.

Charlotte

* * *

But how should it do this? What is the most effective way of carrying on the cause?

The South must face the fact that the civil rights issue is not dead. In one sense it will never die, for it is a matter of human rights, the approach to which continually changes as people and their circumstances change. But as an immediate political issue, it is still very much with us.

President Truman is expected to continue his efforts in behalf of his civil rights program. In a speech in Harlem, New York, in the closing days of his campaign, he recommitted himself to his full 10-point program, four points of which had so aroused the South. This making of a civil rights speech during his campaign underscored his commitment on the subject. Before the Philadelphia convention, he could have avoided a split with the South on the issue. Afterwards he could have soft-pedaled it. He did neither. The issue is almost certain, therefore, to come before the next Congress.

When the issue is joined, President Truman will hold office in his own right. He could have lost all of the old South to Thurmond and Wright, instead of only four states, and still have received more electoral votes than Dewey got. The South is not as strong in the Democratic Party as it used to be.

* * *

The South, however, still has power. It is still strong enough in Congress to form alliances to kill undesired legislation. How far it should go in doing this is another question, but the ability to do so is a threat that national leaders cannot overlook.

How, then, shall we battle for that which we think right? Before the election, this newspaper expressed the conviction that the South's fight should be carried on within the national Democratic Party. That conviction is all the stronger now that the strength of the party has been so forcefully demonstrated.

Fri 11-5-48

Already the South has alienated itself to some extent from the national Democratic Party. We have lost influence in its counsels. Those who openly supported the revolt and thereby jeopardized the party's success may find themselves greatly reduced in political influence for a time.

That phrase, "for a time," is important. The damage is not irreparable. But to improve the relations, or even to keep them from becoming worse, will require tolerance and forbearance and patience on all sides. There was a lot of heat in the campaign. There was much untruth and misunderstanding. Now, however, that the election is over, the time has come for cool heads and calm hearts to prevail. If that is done, then the net result of all that has taken place may be good.

Oligarchs And Dixiecrats

The News

ATLANTA, Ga.—Ellis Arnall, former governor of Georgia, is, like most Southerners, an enthusiastic football fan. And thereby hangs a tale. The tale is amusing but it also casts considerable light on one aspect of Southern politics.

Thurs 10-21-48

Some time ago, Arnall organized a party of friends to make the long trip from Atlanta to see the annual Sugar Bowl game in New Orleans. The party occupied a number of suites in an expensive New Orleans hotel. So it was with some understandable misgivings that Arnall, after the game, asked the hotel's lady cashier for his bill.

B'ham, Ala

He was surprised when she smiled prettily and replied, "That's all right, governor, your bill has been taken care of."

He was even more surprised when he was told that it was the Mississippi Power and Light Company which had been so generous.

His amazement must have been obvious, and a sudden suspicion apparently crossed the mind of the lady cashier.

"You are the governor of Mississippi, aren't you?" she asked.

* * *

Meaning Of Story

THIS LITTLE STORY is not without meaning. The present governor of Mississippi is Fielding Wright. Gov. Wright is also vice presidential candidate of the Dixiecrats, or States' Rights Party. It is pretty generally assumed outside of the South that the Dixiecrat movement is simply the South's outraged response to President Truman's Civil Rights proposals. It is that, but it is also a great deal more than that.

By and large, the Democratic Party in the South has been controlled by a conservative oligarchy. In other times, the oligarchs were mostly big planters. Now the planters have been pretty much replaced by utility magnates, textile men, industrialists, bankers, and, more and more, the new oil barons of Texas and the Gulf states. The States' Rights Party is essentially the response of this conservative oligarchy to the pressures which have been steadily pushing the national Democratic Party further to the left. Almost every States' Rights politician speaks as bitterly of Franklin Roosevelt, who never really pressed the racial issue, as of Harry Truman, who did.

There is no doubt that there has been a particularly cozy relationship between the Dixiecrats and the oil kings. Southern oilmen were more enraged by the Supreme Court decision, which awarded to the federal government ownership of the last great national oil reserves in the tidelands, than by the Truman civil rights proposals. Nor was this rage confined to the Gulf states, for there is good reason to believe that offshore oil deposits exist along the Southern Atlantic seaboard as well. One indication of the influence of the oil men among the Dixiecrats is that the Tidelands oil issue has received at least as much attention at the various Dixiecrat get-togethers as the civil rights issue.

* * *

Oil Men's Support

JUST HOW MUCH OIL MONEY has greased the Dixiecrat wheels is unknown, although the Justice Department is now hard at work trying to find out. But there is no doubt that the oil industry's support for the Dixiecrats has been more than normal.

One leading supporter has been H. R. Cullen, a fabulously rich Houston oil man (he is also fabulously generous—he recently made an outright gift to Texas charity of the fantastic sum of $160,000,000). Cullen arranged for a private plane to take H. Strom Thurmond, the Dixiecrat presidential candidate, to the Houston convention, and a special train to take Fielding Wright and his Mississippi cohorts to the same meeting. He is believed to be the chief sparkplug of the oil industry's backing for the Dixiecrats. Among the oil corporations, the Humble Oil Company has reportedly particularly interested itself in the Thurmond-Wright "crusade."

Thurs 10-21-48

The oil barons' generous enthusiasm for the Dixiecrats is now said to be waning. The Republicans are sure to win, and they are committed in their platform to removing offshore oil from federal control. Yet in most Southern states, the Dixiecrat organization will be kept alive after the elections, largely to ensure conservative control of the political machinery.

* * *

Unhealthy Aspects

THERE IS NOTHING PARTICULARLY unhealthy in the fact that the oil men, or the other business interests, should try to protect or improve their economic position by political means. Every economic group in the United States does the same thing. Yet there are some pretty unhealthy aspects of the Dixiecrat movement as an expression of Southern conservatism.

All the more malodorous hate-mongers, from Gerald L. K. Smith to the decrepit "Alfalfa Bill" Murray, have gleefully leapt on the Dixiecrat bandwagon. The States' Rights propaganda paper is using the same mailing list as The Southern Outlook, a revolting racist sheet which The Montgomery Advertiser accurately compared to the worst products of Nazi Germany. In brief, the real danger is that the Southern conservative oligarchy, in an effort to preserve the threatened status quo, will be tempted to turn more and more to this sort of thing, to the end that every issue, from offshore oil to the minimum wage, may be hidden and submerged in the race issue.—©

Attorney General Albert Carmichael aimed a blast at the States' Righters in an address before the Methodist Committee on Social Action held Tuesday, September 1st at Dexter Avenue Methodist Church, Montgomery.

9-48

He charged the split within the Democratic Party was brought about by a "handful of intensely selfish people . . . whose sole political, economic and personal interest is that of bringing about a national regime favorable to the clients they represent."

Montgomery Ala

Links Dixiecrats And Ku Klux Klan

Linking the Dixiecrats and the Ku Klux Klan, the attorney general charged that the States' Rights Party is tied to the Ku Klux Klan.

"The August version of States' Righters includes an auxiliary, a small bunch of thugs, bums and hoodlums, covered by sheets, acting under the instructions of some revolutionaries who hold high places in the States' Rights organization in the Birmingham area.

Describing the whole States' Rights movement as a "giant conspiracy and controlled directly by the National Committee of the Republican Party," Carmichael further charged that, "Liaison between the Republican Party and certain so-called leaders in Alabama is complete."

Party Rights Over Human Rights

"The record against the professional States' Righters is complete," the attorney general said. "I urge you to look carefully behind their loud and lofty pronouncements . . . to see if they are not really advancing this cry to insure the triumph of political party rights above individual or human rights."

9-48

Carmichael charged the Dixiecrats with "the greatest betrayal of the best interest of the people of this state, ever seen in Alabama."

"Funds? Why, do you think the war chest of the National Republican Party is going to allow things to go to ruin with the States' Righters down in Alabama? Certainly not."

"I Am A Democrat"

"I am a Democrat," he declared, "and I don't propose to be a party to the prostituting of the machinery of the Democratic Party for the purpose of helping elect a Republican..."

Citing his record of opposition to Federal interference with those spheres of government which rightfully fall within the domain of state governments, he declared, "I shall continue to oppose the enactment of any so-called Civil Rights legislation by the Congress of the United States . . . believing this to be something which the framers of our Constitution wisely addressed to each of the sovereign states."

States' Righters Block State Efforts

Carmichael declared that the leaders of the States' Rights movement had been the very people who in the past had blocked every effort to enact legislation by the state legislature to remedy the evils which call forth the Federal proposals.

9-48

He declared, "The whole truth of the matter is that the states have not been able to exercise their rights. Why? Because those interests who are so in favor of giving the states their rights bring powerful lobbies to the state legislature and prevent the states from exercising their rights . . ."

"The last fifteen years has demonstrated that great things may be done for the people on a nation-wide basis, but doing those things is costly to those paying the bills. 'Let's start this old hoax,' they say, 'called States' Rights. Let's place these rights where they can't be exercised.'

"Our founding fathers visualized free states, not states whose legislatures are practically helpless in the face of powerful lobbies."

Where Does The Money Come From?

"Do you think for one minute that this fabulous financed campaign in favor of States' Rights is conducted with a view to benefiting the people as a whole? Not on your life. The 1948 version of States' Rights revolves around the dollar bill. Do you think for one minute that these rabid States' Righters are interested in the race issue? Do you think for one minute they are interested in solving the race question . . .?

"Most of the leaders of the States' Righters do not want the race issue settled. It is their stock and trade. The States' Righters dearly love that old red herring, the race issue."

Promises Court Action

Carmichael reminded his listeners of the time when the Methodist Church was struggling to unify its Southern branch with their Northern brethren. "That bloody wart on the body of our social structure sometimes referred to as the Ku Klux Klan, slithered forward and requested that the matter be turned over to that crowd of bums."

In the most forthright and courageous statement made in years by any top-ranking public figure in Alabama, Carmichael declared that the hoodlum leaders responsible for the racial disturbances in Birmingham are "pretty well known."

9-48

"Their identity," he predicted, "will be revealed in due time, accompanied, I hope, by proper indictment, and followed, I trust, by trial and conviction. That's a fine crowd, that Ku Klux Klan. They perform such acts of bravery—covering their heads with sheets, and invading the private quarters of two white women."

Off The Bench

The Fight For States' Rights

Montgomery Advertiser

REGARDLESS of the outcome of the presidential election next month, the citizens of America, and there are many millions of them, but not as vocal as they should be, who believe that the welfare of the United States depends upon adherence to the principles of the American Constitution, drawn up in 1787, should continue the fight for States' Rights all down the line, from constable to president. It may be that it is now too late to do much about it, though I don't think so.

Mon 10-25-48

JONES

The doctrine, a fundamental one, has had some terrible batterings. The years 1865, with all their varied amendments to the federal constitution (several of them declared to be a part of the constitution by fraud and force) witnessed the weakening of the independent States of the Union to build up the great octopus on the banks of the Potomac. But the heretofore time-honored doctrine of States' Rights received its worst blows during the New Deal years, 1933-1945, and to relate regretfully, many of these blows were struck by some of our Southern leaders at Washington and in the States of the Deep South.

Montgomery Ala

The pendulum now seems to be swinging back toward respect for the Constitution of the United States, and it may be that in a few years the Democratic Party, traditional custodian of States' Rights, will return to its ancient moorings and lead the battle for Constitutional Government in this country. But, if the party is to do this, it must be placed in the hands of plain Democratic Americans, men and women, with a will, a determination to make the Democratic Party stand for democratic ideals and principles as these are known in the history of our country.

If our party is to live, and be an influential factor in the life of our people, it must purge itself of those who believe in doctrines that smack of Communism, who wish to use the party to build up a strong national government at Washington and to weaken the States at home, and to destroy the last vestigase of local self-government and home rule. These forces, powerful minority groups at the North, and quislings at the South, will continue to increase their infleunce, if the Southern people don't fight.

Mon 10-25-48

THE crisis the South faces today, in many respects, is greater than that of 1861. I hope that our old line, and now embattled, Democrats can hold the fort within the party and return it to the doctrines on which it was founded and which have made it a factor for good in American history. But, if it is not possible to do this, the South might try, perhaps as one remedy, the issuance of a declaration of political independence and form its own political party, dedicated to the preservation of the American way of life.

All real Southern Democrats are disgusted with some of the things the party now stands for, things so utterly repugnant to our sound constitutional principles, and so plainly a cowardly effort to wheedle minority votes at the North. And, we are tired, too, of the unholy control exercised over the Democratic Party by the big bosses and political gangs at the North and in the West, among them the Pendergasts, the Hagues, the Kellys and others. The average Southern Democrat is mighty tired of the ukases and directives which come to him daily from National Party Headquarters in Washington.

If Mr. Truman is defeated next month, and it now seems he will be, a good part of the defeat can be fairly attributed to the inept management of the party bosses at Washington. If the big debacle takes place November 2, and the party is denied a return to the White House, then the rank and file of Democrats in the country who have been kicked around for years should insist on a thorough house-cleaning, cellar to garret. The old political bosses should be ousted from their party offices, and some plain old-fashioned, simple American-loving Democrats should take their places, put the old Democratic ship back on an even keel and chart her off of the shoals and rocks which its present leadership has put her on.

Mon 10-25-48

A CAREFUL study of events in the the United States since 1933, of the laws enacted by Congress, and thorough study of the U. S. Supreme Court's decisions on constitutional questions and States' Rights, will convince anyone how perilously close we are drifting toward totalitarian government, not in the States themselves, but at Washington. There is too much foreign ideology imbedded in our national laws and Supreme Court decisions.

The great principles for which the War of the Revolution was waged, and World Wars I and II, have been lost sight of. Instead of the government existing for the benefit of its people, to bless them with wise and sound laws protecting their rights to home rule and local self-government, the general idea among the pseudo-politicians who infest the places of power in Washington, an idea that is in every department of government headed by bossy bureaucrats, is that the people exist for the government, to have their daily lives and every hour of them controlled by directives and orders issued by government officials, and to be taxed without limit, to keep swarms of over-bearing officeholders on the gravy train, to consume the substance of the citizens and workers.

The writer hopes that the Democratic Party can be brought back to its fundamental principles, can be weaned from the totalitarian and foreign ideologies it now follows, and become again a great and powerful party, interested in preserving the noble American doctrines which have made our country so great and useful.

The Question of State Rights

The Black Dispatch, Okla, Okla.

"The wicked flee when no man pursueth"

Just why Governor Strom Thurmond, of South Carolina, the Dixiecrat candidate for president of the United States, had to take time out last week to announce that there is a difference between civil rights and state rights is the $64 question. The good governor could not wait for his watermelon festival July 31, to explain the difference between these two vital issues; he suddenly had to rush into print with his apostacy, all of which causes us to remember the admonition of one of Shakespeare's famous characters: Sat.

"Methinks ~~that too~~ much protestation ceases to be a virtue."

Governor Thurmond is quoted last week as saying:

> "We are not running on white supremacy, racial hatred or class prejudice. We are running primarily upon the issue of state rights."

7-8-48. Sat

Evidently someone has charged that the Dixiecrat ticket was fashioned in an atmosphere of white supremacy, racial hatred and class prejudice, for we could not conceive of a busy man, running for president of the United States, taking time out to answer a question that had not been asked. Unless, of course, we must fall back upon the Biblical admonition, "The wicked flee when no man pursueth."

Everyone knows the basic theory of state rights is vested in the belief of southern commonwealths that practically all power and authority should be vested in state government, and that only a slight amount of responsibility should be delegated to the federal structure. We think friend Strom will agree to this definition of state rights. The original thought of the colonists who attended the constitutional convention was that the purpose of the federal government was solely one of coordinating effort in opposition to foreign aggression. Life, liberty and property were placed in the hands of the state. Those old boys who wrote the constitution did a good job in reserving practically all rights to the states.

Sat. 7-8-48

But when the South went to war in 1861 it shouted state rights when all informed persons know that the real issue was human slavery. The South wanted Dixie to have the right to own, buy and sell slaves in every state in the Union. It wanted the right to enter free territory to repossess its slaves and it wanted the privilege of extending slavery into the expanding western and northern territory. It appears to the Black Dispatch that so far as slavery and state rights were concerned during ante-bellum days they were cumulative—heaped together. We are unable to see how they can be separated in the sense Governor Thurmond would.

Some months ago the white primary was outlawed in Texas, and in a still later decision relating to Georgia and South Carolina federal courts decided that Negroes should be given ballot privileges on parity with all other citizens. Immediately the South launched savage and violent discussion regarding state rights. During the war President Roosevelt issued an executive order having to do with equalizing opportunity for citizens to work. The South immediately began to shout about state rights in connection with labor, and the South went far enough during the war to arrest and maltreat representatives of the federal labor bureaus who sought black labor down in Dixie with whom to man war plants of the government. They said such action was an invasion of state rights.

And then Walter White and the NAACP went before congress asking for an anti-lynching bill. During the spirited debates in congress Southern congressmen argued at length that passage of a law by congress to halt the inhuman slaying of Negroes was another invasion of state rights which the South would fight to the last ditch. Mind you now, the South in eighty years has done nothing itself about mob murder, and it tells the federal government it can't, and stay within the precincts of the federal charter.

But the outburst regarding state rights came when President Truman called upon his civil rights committee to make its report. The President heard the committee and then made a report to congress, asking for immediate and specific legislation. No one had heard of Fielding Wright and very little of Strom Thurmond until the civil rights discussions in congress subsequent to President Truman's civil rights talk. In fact little was said four years ago when the Democrats in national convention incorporated a civil rights plank more specific in its meaning than the 1948 plank. At least Thurmond and Wright made no unfriendly comment that is recorded in protest to the 1944 plank of civil rights.

It is difficult for the Black Dispatch to discover the twilight zone upon which Governor Thurmond gazes, dividing state rights from civil rights. The state insists that all of the rights of individuals are in the hands of local government, and then it proceeds to take away fundamental rights of certain individuals. It shouts white supremacy and calls in the Ku Klux (invisible government) to enforce its unwritten laws having no statutory background.

If Governor Thurmond were honest would he not agree that just now the South is exorcised because it believes central government is going to penalize the mob, silence the Ku Klux, place the ballot in every man's hand, blot out army jim crow and grant every citizen an equal chance to earn a living? The state will not secure the black man in the above constitutional guarantees and avers that the federal government is invading the state's rights if it attempts it.

The new fourth party has been formed, and its condidates nominated without any attention whatsoever being given to general domestic questions or to foreign affairs. In the meeting at Birmingham, news stories regarding same had to do with the shrieks and screams of neurotic Southerners who jumped up and down shouting that segregation and jim crow will be maintained at any cost.

In fact, the Birmingham daily papers quoted some very strong and emphatic statements made by Governor Thurmond while making his acceptance speech, in which the South Carolinian stated that segregation and the matter of keeping the Negro in his place down in his section of the country was the major objective of the Dixiecrats. It looks as though the fourth party was organized primarily to fight again for all of the sordid things lost at Appomatix.

It should not be difficult for anyone to see that in southern psychology there is nothing that separates civil rights from state rights. At this particular time the South demands that Dixie be given the right to determine whether the Negro shall be slave or free. Somehow it tangles up white supremacy and social equality in its discussions of the subject. Governor Thurmond may be confused about it, but every teen-age white youngster below the Mason and Dixon line understands and knows the relationship that civil rights have to state rights.

States' Rights

Commercial Appeal

Mon. 10-25-48

Memphis, Tenn.

The decision of its leaders, meeting here yesterday to form a permanent States' Rights Party regardless of the outcome of the Nov. 2 elections, if carried out sincerely and vigorously, will answer some of its critics who regard it as merely a protest movement.

States' Rights, or home rule as opposed to centralized, autocratic government, is the basis of the American form of government. It is as vital to Oregon as to Mississippi. It contemplates democratic processes and the greatest good for the greatest number in preference to legislation through minority pressure groups.

Yet we feel that its purposes would be better served if the proponents would work through the two major parties to achieve their ends. The Congress is organized on the basis of numerical party representation and seniority. While the hope for a balance-of-power situation may be achieved by the States' Rights group for the moment, think of the chaos that would result if other dissident blocs or sectional proponents were to set up their own parties.

It is no secret that WALTER REUTHER is driving to bring union members into a Labor Party. There are other factions in our economic and political life who would like to band together for their own purposes and with little or no regard for the overall welfare of the Nation.

We have only to look at chaotic France to know what to expect. We have seen the Communists, numerically weak but extremely vocal, cunningly maneuver their faction into strategic power in multiple-party countries.

Certainly we should advocate states' rights. But within the two major parties. If the Democratic Party is defeated in the coming elections, as certainly it will be under President TRUMAN, then the stalwart believers in states' rights will have the opportunity to regroup and drive the left-wing autocrats from control of the party and its conventions.

States' Righters Will Live On

The Advertiser

Montgomery, Ala.

Mon. 10-25-48

MEMPHIS, TENN.

(AP)—States' Rights Democrats here today resolved their party shall not die—regardless of the outcome of the Nov. 2 election.

Representatives from 10 Southern states adopted a resolution that, in effect, left the movement within the framework of the Democratic Party, but pledged to fight the issue of states' rights to a finish. The resolution read:

"The States' Rights movement came into being to save constitutional government and individual liberty in America. We will continue this fight until the fight is won.

"Therefore, be it resolved that our organization continue its fight until its objective has been achieved."

Judge Merritt H. Gibson of Longview, Texas, the party's national campaign director, interpreted the statement to mean the party would continue its fight until the Democrats recognized what he called "local self government," or until the States' Rights Democrats gained control of the party.

To Bolt the Bolters?

Poor Fielding Wright, "recommended" by the Fourth Party for the Vice Presidency, is always asking for it. At Philadelphia there was always a scurry at the Southern caucus session to try and keep poor Fielding, who is enamored of his own demagogics, from monopolizing the floor.

Constitution
Atlanta, Ga.

And now, just when he has blasted The Atlanta Constitution, among others, for asking who financed last week's rump convention at Birmingham, by announcing with great piety that the expenses were paid by the patriotic delegates themselves, and not as most people thought by the interests behind the tidelands oil lobby—now comes, of all persons, Gerald L. K. Smith. wed. 7-21-48

Says Gerald: "As to my presence in Birmingham, I was invited to the conference by one of THE THREE HEAVIEST FINANCIAL SUPPORTERS. I was invited to speak by some of the very individuals who effected Thurmond's nomination." wed. 7-21-48

So, there goes poor Fielding's pious explanation of the financing of the dismal doings at Birmingham. The boys ought really not to let poor Fielding say things before they check them over.

The latest development in the Birmingham farce is that Gov. Strom Thurmond, of South Carolina, who was "recommended" for President, has now cracked down on the "white supremacy" followers in a surprise action, saying that he believed in Negro rights and was campaigning on States' rights, not white supremacy.

Gerald L. K. Smith has already left him, in bitterness, with a declaration that white supremacy is the Governor's platform "whether he realizes it or not!"

wed. 7-21-48

This repudiation by Gov. Thurmond makes it necessary, we suppose, for the "white supremacy" rebels to bolt the bolters and hold still another rump convention and form still another rebel party.

We are in no mood to say "we told you so," but as the developments unfold, our analysis of the revolt is sustained and for Democrats the answer is plain enough. They must either fight it out within the Party, as Gov. Ben Laney, of Arkansas, decided after Philadelphia, or they can quit the Party and go over into the Republican Party and spend eight or 12 years helping to build it from the ground up here in the South. There isn't any other answer. wed. 7-21-48

There were but 600 registered persons at Birmingham. The others were all "interested onlookers," like Gerald Smith, eager to see if there was grist there for their mills.

Where will those who will bolt the bolters on Gov. Thurmond's statement hold their convention?

We suggest Gov. Wright's office.

It will be large enough.

South's Fourth Party

Herald Tribune

Indignant Southern Democrats, hoping to punish President Truman for his civil rights program, embarked upon a campaign for their "fourth party" ticket—Governor J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina for President, and Governor Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi for Vice-President. They faced an uphill battle.

In the first place, the Southern insurgents were not entirely harmonious among themselves. Their extremists—men like "Alfalfa Bill" Murray, Oklahoma's former Governor—laid the emphasis on "white supremacy," meaning that Negroes must be treated as a subservient race. Governor Thurmond, however, disliked that emphasis. He said he was "not interested one whit in the question of white supremacy." New York, N.Y.

Thurmond stressed "states' rights," meaning that the Federal government should keep hands off and let the Southern states solve the racial problem in their own way. He said he had always advocated better facilities for the Negroes. He pointed out that he favored repeal of the poll tax, which prevents many Negroes from voting; and that he insisted on apprehending and bringing to trial twenty-three persons in connection with the lynching of a Negro in Greenville, S. C., in April, 1947. All were acquitted.

Sun, 7-25-48

Loyal Democrats Shy Away

The second big obstacle which confronted Thurmond's states'-rights campaign was that most Southern Democratic leaders thought it would be better to retain party orthodoxy. Among those who were cool to the "fourth party" were Governor Thompson of Georgia, Governor Earl Long of Louisiana, Governor Laney of Arkansas, Senator Byrd, of Virginia, and Edward H. Crump, of Tennessee. 7-25-48

The dissident Democrats were fairly sure of swinging twenty votes in the Electoral College for Thurmond. The prospective votes were from Mississippi and Alabama, but they would scarcely be sufficient in themselves to upset Truman if there were a November swing in his direction. The Thurmond Southerners, therefore, planned a campaign through the South between now and October. Their goal was to persuade loyal Democratic organizations in various states to select as their state electors men who were against Truman and for Thurmond—regardless of what the individual voters might prefer.

Nix To Dixiecrats

~~The Tuscaloosa News~~ The Advertiser

On a national basis the Dixiecratic revolt convention looks like a little potato indeed. But it has a real danger to the South.

That danger lies in two facts:

First, the persons set upon attending this convention are by no means representative of the progresisve South. By and large they are of the reactionary type, as has been shown so clearly during the pre-primary campaign and the fight on the futile walkout issue. Mixed and mingled with the group are dyed-in-the-wool Democratic bolters of 1928. Look behind the masks of some of these men and you will certainly see Republicans in disguise, men who have been working for weeks and months to remove Alabama from the Democratic Party and help insure a Republican victory in November.

It is tragic indeed that some of the stalwarts of Alabama Democracy through the years, have been hood-winked by the machinations of these pseudo-Democrats and past-master string-pullers. Mon.

Second point of danger is the fact that this unrepresentative, unrestrained, self-centered group may libel the South throughout the nation with its antics which are almost certain to transpire.

It seems that Saturday will be a day for Senator Claghorns in Birmingham, and the joke senator of Fred Allen will take on flesh and blood. That is a danger to this state and the South, because all know that Claghorns have no place in this modern picture. Montgomery, Ala.

Yet a third danger to Alabama Democracy is that Saturday's convention may bring a permanent, visible split in the political ranks of the majority party in this state. It may even reach down to the grass roots of county politics, certainly in close Democratic-Republican counties, of which there are a few in Alabama.

Many will not think this is much of a danger, as they have been hoping all along for something to develop a two-party system in this state. 7-19-48

THE ROAD TO NOWHERE

The Advertiser

The South will get nowhere with the Dixiecrat movement. It is the road to nowhere.

It's leadership is bankrupt.

It quite evidently does not even command a wide Southern following. Montgomery, Ala.

It is entirely negative in its approach. Its inflamed and uninspired leaders did little more than bellow and cry "nigger." That is far short of an answer to the South's grave problem.

The Advertiser has no doubt that the South's standing has been greatly damaged by that which boiled out of the nation's radio sets from the Birmingham cauldron. Tues. 7-20-48

The Advertiser believes that we are more than ever estranged from our allies, present and potential.

As a result of the Birmingham convention, Senator Claghorn is a less fictional character to the nation than before. Like it or not, we have got to have the goodwill of the people of other regions of the United States. We will not avail ourselves of it by shouting "nigger." We cannot win friends by hoarse blasphemies and the appearance of unreasoning obstinacy.

THE BIRMINGHAM convention even lacked the intelligent leadership to make it plain to the nation that we in the South mean to give the colored man his break, that we are providing him schools and health protection and encouraging his economic advancement. Tues,

Instead of this constructive and impressive approach, the Dixiecrats featured the wild and crude Horace Wilkinson with his lewd "nigger" stories.

The meeting was of a kind such as attracted the clammy and sinister presence of Gerald L. K. Smith, who mutters darkly that the Jews and Negroes are getting too much power.

By 1 o'clock the American Broadcasting Company had cut the convention off its network because it was too inflammatory.

THE convention was by no means representative of the South. Few states had full delegations.

Gov. Ben Laney of Arkansas was in Birmingham but held to his hotel suite and did not fully participate in the proceedings. He declined to be the nominee of the convention.

Senator Richard B. Russell of Georgia, who has so often and so ably carried the fight against civil rights measures in congressional struggles, sent word aforetime that he would not allow his name to be used.

Alabama's two senators remained away from the meeting, as did its congressmen with the exception of Birmingham's Laurie Battle.

The governors, senators and congressmen of other Southern states were not in Birmingham. They were conspicuously absent. The South's leadership was not attracted.

AS THE ANNISTON STAR says, it was more a "Roman holiday" than convention. The Advertiser

The convention shouted "nigger" and burned President Truman in effigy. That is not the kind of thing to disarm and convince the people in other regions that the South is responsible and decent. Montgomery, Ala.

The leading newspapers of the South are unanimous in deploring the ugly carnival scene. Tues. 7-20-48

The South does not want to be judged by what went on in Birmingham. But in large and melancholy degree it will be so judged, and at a time when we need to command the maximum in good will. We will be hobbled by malice and glee over the grotesque marathon spluttering.

Gov. Laney said:

"The spirit of obstinacy and revenge is not the spirit of the Southland."

But the convention will make a lot of people think so.

Alabama's presidential electors are pledged to withhold Alabama's votes from Truman, but they are not pledged to travel with these vengeful despoilers of our dignity and good name.

Top Dixiecrat Has 'Southern Liberal' Views

Post

Washington, D.C.

Sun. 7-25-48

By Henry Lesesne

COLUMBIA, S. C., July 24.—Although hardly an Ellis Arnall, Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, the States' rights candidate for President, was known as a liberal by all Southern standards before the civil rights controversy came along.

In his campaign two years ago, Thurmond eschewed all appeal to racial prejudice and was even accused by some of his opponents of being a Communist. In fact, his election was interpreted as confirming a long-felt suspicion that the Southern people are more advanced in their thinking than professional Southern politicians believe.

He is an anti-poll taxer. For two years he tried to get the South Carolina Legislature to repeal the State's poll tax, but unsuccessfully. Post,

It should be said that in South Carolina the $1-a-year poll tax applies to the general election and not to the Democratic primary, which heretofore has been the only meaningful election. There are certain qualifications for voting in the general election, but almost any white man could enroll in the Democratic Party and vote in the all-important primary. Washington, D.C.

The 45-year-old Governor did get through this year's Legislature a bill he considered No. 1 on his program—to modernize the State government. It creates a commission which has broad powers to eliminate overlapping and duplication.

Sun. 7-25-48

Prosecuted Lynch Mob

ALTHOUGH he has opposed Federal intervention in State affairs, even in lynching cases the Governor is a vigorous foe of lynching and the mob spirit. This was demonstrated a few months after he took office, when a mob of taxi drivers lynched Willie Earle in an upstate county.

The Governor sent members of his constabulary to aid in the investigation, and four days later, when 31 members of the mob had been rounded up, he announced: "We in South Carolina want the world to know we will tolerate no mob violence."

Thurmond instructed the Attorney General's office to assist the local prosecutor "to the limit," and although the jury acquitted the defendants, there was no criticism of the State's handling of the case.

For two years the Governor has strongly recommended to the Legislature the enactment of a secret voting law for South Carolina. This is the only State which does not have some semblance of secret ballot, and it is even impossible to vote a split ticket.

Each party prints its own ballot. In the last general election there were six different ballots for Federal office representing the candidates of six different parties or factions. The single ballot is regarded as a means of providing a chance for the development of a two-party system.

The Legislature balked, but at the State Democratic convention—in the only floor action that got beyond the control of the party leaders—the delegates strongly endorsed the Governor's recommendation.

Assailed 'Invasion'

THURMOND nevertheless, is Governor of a State which has deliberately tried for four years to circumvent the Texas case decision of the Supreme Court that Negroes must vote in the South's white Democratic primaries.

When the Supreme Court upheld a decision declaring South Carolina's "private club" primary unconstitutional, Thurmond criticized the ruling as an invasion of States' rights.

Thurmond is particularly bitter, on the same grounds, about the Truman proposal for a National Fair Employment Practices Act. He says it would mean an end to the Southern way of life.

Thurmond's program for South Carolina includes a new constitution to replace the wordy and outmoded one adopted in 1895. He has asked for a merit system for State employes and for "home rule" for the counties and municipalities. At present local affairs of each county are handled by the Legislature, which sits for several months each year.

The Governor got through the last Legislature a proposed constitutional amendment limiting the Governor's pardon and parole power to capital cases. This power has been notoriously abused in the past, but Thurmond has not issued one pardon or parole.

A Tillman Disciple

THE Governor comes from the rural county of Edgefield and learned the art of handshaking as a farm boy from the late Senator Benjamin Ryan (Pitchfork Ben) Tillman, who led the agarian movement in South Carolina.

Thurmond was an athlete at Clemson College. During vacations he worked in a cotton mill. Ever since finishing college he's been in public service—school teacher, school superintendent, State Senator and circuit judge. He resigned from the bench to run for Governor. Post.

He has a large farm in his home county and owns the only hotel in Edgefield. He is a combat veteran of World War II, holding the rank of lieutenant colonel. He has 12 military medals, including the Purple Heart, Legion of Merit, Bronze Star, Belgian Cross of the Order of the Crown and the French Croix de Guerre. Sun. 7-25-48

Thurmond has shown an interest in education and advocated a permanent higher pay scale for teachers, which was passed in 1947. He favors Federal aid to education— provided the States control the spending of the money. Washington, D.C.

In November, 1947, the Governor hit the front pages when he was married to his pretty secretary, the former Jean Crouch. He was strongly urged by labor groups to run for the Senate this summer against Senator Burnet R. Maybank. He refused, saying he had been elected Governor and that he intended to serve the full four years.

Reaction To Dixiecratting

Claghornesque Antics

The Richmond Times-Dispatch

IT IS GOOD to know that Virginia took no official part in yesterday's Claghornesque goings-on at Birmingham. However much most Southerners resent the treatment the South received at Philadelphia, there is no political nourishment in the Alabama conclave.. Among the characters in prominent roles there are persons with whom a self-respecting group of Southerners could scarcely afford to be associated. Montgomery, Ala.

Southern reporters who attended the caucus of rebellious Dixie delegates in Philadelphia a week ago today, say that they were made positively ashamed by the antics there. The worst caricatures of Southern politicians seemed not to exaggerate the statements and the attitudes manifested on that occasion. Some of the same people gathered yesterday at Birmingham.

Virginia's delegation at Philadelphia showed clearly that it was embarrassed at being catalogued in the mind of the convention with some of the mountebanks from the lower South, James Latimer declares in an article on another page today. Fortunately this state is not officially involved in the Confederate flagwaving and futile posturing in Alabama.

Wed. 7-21-48

Birmingham Aftermath

The Atlanta Constitution

FOR all its sound and fury, the rump convention held over the week end at Birmingham attracted official Democratic Party representation from only three Southern states.

Mississippi and Alabama, who walked out at Philadelphia, were joined by South Carolina whose governor, Strom Thurmond, has been "recommended" for the presidency by those attending the Birmingham "conference," to use the terminology upon which its sponsors insisted.

Wed. 7-21-48

The surprise withdrawal and denunciation of the rump convention by Arkansas's Gov. Laney—who had been pushed, before adoption of the platform in Philadelphia, as a Southern presidential candidate—weakened the Dixiecrats' position. It had been thought, when he refused to allow his nomination after the civil rights plank was placed in the Democratic Party platform, that Laney would be selected as the standard-bearer at Birmingham. When he refused the "recommendation" of the "conference," branding it an ill-considered action stemming from selfish political scheming, it was an unexpected blow. Wed. 7-21-48

But Gov. Laney's position—"Whatever is done must be done through the official Democratic organizations in each state"—was a conclusion at which party leaders in Georgia, North Carolina, Virginia, Tennessee, Florida and even Texas had long since arrived.

Georgia's Senator Russell, who has fought vigorously and intelligently against enactment of the President's civil rights proposals, spoke for all thoughtful Southern Democrats when, refusing to allow his name to be "recommended" at Birmingham, he declared that the South most effectively can resist encroachments on its traditions by remaining within the patry.

It is our conviction that view will prevail and that the hotheads who met at Birmingham will in time be proved to have accomplished nothing more than did the fervid but futile Grass Roots Convention held in Macon a few years ago.

Dixiecrats Cloak Their Ambitions With a Show of Southern Piety

Courier Journal - Sat. 10-16-48

(34)

By John Ed Pearce

Courier-Journal Staff Writer

Louisville, Ky

THERE were no fiery crosses burned here when J. Strom Thurmond, the Dixiecrat Presidential nominee, came to town. No white-robed Klansmen rode to the public meeting here, nor to the one in Lexington. On the contrary, they were orderly gatherings in which a few hundred people listened and cheered while Mr. Thurmond warned of the threat to States Rights and promised to protect Southern Tradition against Communism, greed in Washington, and mixing of the races.

A Dixiecrat meeting is the strangest type of political gathering of our time, if indeed it can be called a political gathering. The present is a time for the most momentous political decisions of our history. The issues of labor, conservation, flood control, public power, public lands, tidelands oil, tariffs, wages, inflation, housing, and the frightening question of foreign policy must be studied and decided by the political candidate.

But not by Mr. Thurmond. For him these issues simply do not exist. Judging from his addresses in Kentucky, the one burning issue in our world today is that of States Rights. The rest are not even worthy of his mention. Not once in his talks here and in Lexington did the chief Dixiecrat refer to any problem, foreign or domestic, other than the threat to local self-government by the vote-crazed politicians of other parties, and the iniquity of the F.E.P.C. with which Truman and Dewey would destroy the American way of life.

The Dixiecrats and Mr. Thurmond could be largely forgiven the silliness of their movement if one could believe that their incessant prating of States Rights was based on nothing more evil than a desire to cling to a dream of the Old South. For the problems of the South are more complex and difficult, especially for those who must continue to live in the South, than is imagined by those who see its evils from the outside. And even among the most earnest liberals of the South is a sincere doubt of the wisdom of Federal imposition of a Fair Employment Practices Commission on a people whose hatred of the Negro has been enlarged, ingrained and exploited for generations by politicians and industrialists who see in the system of segregation a vast cheap labor pool, and a source of endless political profit.

Behind the Thurmond demand for State Rights, two real issues lie hidden

•

BUT this constant scream of States Rights and the horrors of F.E.P.C. is the shallowest sort of sham. There is too much evidence that the Dixiecrats—organizers, backers, listeners and principals—have no honest concern for the entire field of States Rights. For 16 years the South has eagerly abetted such "invasions of States Rights" as R.E.A., T.V.A., Federal road projects, public works, aid to farmers, flood control, school lunch programs and the dozens of measures by which the States have fed at the Federal trough. Southern legislators in Washington have voted for Federal aid to education and health with more consistency than the representatives of any other section.

Sat 10-16-48

States Rights is the issue only insofar as it concerns the right of States to solve—or refuse to solve—their race problems. The real issue is one word, and that word is never spoken. It is one thought, and that thought is never expressed.

The issue is Nigger.

NOT Negro; not the 14,000,000 citizens of our democracy who are trying to raise themselves to a higher standard of life and living through the equal rights and opportunities guaranteed them by our Constitution. Not the people who are striving against disheartening odds to take a decent, respectable place in society, despite the efforts of those who object to their difference in skin coloration.

The issue is not the Negro, the human being who exists and struggles. It is Nigger, that non-existent creature which lives only in the hate-filled minds that conceived it. The word is never spoken, yet it hangs in the air, sweaty, rancid, brutish, hulking and menacing, bespeaking the fear and ignorance of the minds that bore it. On the platform Mr. Thurmond and his fellow travelers shout of Americanism, our way of life, the right to choose one's associates, Communism, Reds. But they mean Nigger.

MR. THURMOND, of course, never says the word; he's not the type. And it is comical to listen as he tiptoes around the issue, like an old-fashioned father trying to explain sex to his son without saying the words. He creeps up close to the issue, sidles in with an innuendo, and then eases past the danger point with a side-step and a show of studious piety.

It is as obvious and awkward an effort as that of a man trying to get his shoes off and get into bed without waking his wife. Not that he's fooling his audience. They know what he's talking about. They know and they love it. They came to hear him preach segregation, the right of the white man to "keep the Negro in his place," the right of the South to "handle its own problems."

They string along with his platitudes, just as they string along with the advice of underlings who caution against intolerance, but they don't take it seriously. No sooner had Orval Baylor warned the Louisville audience to beware of race friction and intolerance than a committeeman waddled down from the speakers' platform and ordered from the floor two Negro reporters who were sitting in the same room with the white people (though apart from them).

J. STROM THURMOND never utters the coarse words they would like to hear, but they know what he means. It it as though he were whistling the tune of a dirty song, to which the audience knows the dirty words. Mr. Thurmond never says the dirty words, but his listeners laugh and slap their thighs when he reaches the part where the dirty words are supposed to be. "Catering to minority groups," he says, but the old codger down front in Lexington's Woodland Auditorium knows what he means. "You mean the nigger vote!" he cackles.

Behind this sordid foofaraw lies a plan of cool, quiet calculation. Behind Mr. Thurmond are men who foresee the day when control of the Democratic Party returns to the South. "We will recapture control of the Democratic Party and return it to its traditional principles," declares Mr. Thurmond, and these words have more than nostalgic meaning.

Sat 10-16-48

They mean political control and the economic spoils that accrue from it. With control of the party in Southern hands, States Rights could really mean something—control over tidelands oil, control over public grazing lands, public forests, public power.

•

THE financial interests of the Dixiecrat circus must chuckle to see the race issue serve their purpose. For to them States Rights means something entirely different. It means the power to auction off to the highest private bidders the right to exploit our nation's power and resources. They can foresee a day of financial gain from political control, when the rights to public power, tidelands oil and public lands is handed over, for a price, to the same men who have fought the Congressional fight against Government conservation, who financed the original Dixiecrat organization, and who hope to use the States Rights issue as another route to a vast grab of our national resources. To them the race issue on which Mr. Thurmond's strange crusade depends is a tool to be used as Hitler used the Jewish issue, an appeal to baseness which cloaks a grab for power.

•

BETWEEN these two groups—the race haters on one side, the spoilers on the other—Mr. Thurmond is almost a pathetic figure. His deep-seated desire for Southern welfare would rebel at the economic despoilation that his fellows plan. He probably meant it when he declared last June that he was not "one whit interested in White Supremacy."

Yet without white supremacy his campaign would collapse. Were he not the champion of white supremacy, the protector of Southern womanhood—and he is, whether he wants to be or not—J. Strom Thurmond couldn't draw enough people to start a checker game.

It is strange that such a man as he is could lead a movement motivated by the grossness which keeps this one alive. Here is a man with the one easily understandable, clear-cut uncontroversial issue in the whole campaign, an issue to which he holds sole rights—the issue of white man versus Negro. Yet he uses it only by innuendo, though it is an issue of magic appeal to many people.

For J. Strom Thurmond is not the classic race-hater. He is a man deeply troubled by threat of a social change that would destroy a way of life to which he is accustomed, and raise into a position of legal equality a people he has been reared to regard as inferior.

He is torn, as the majority of sincere Southerners are torn, between a desire to be a decent Christian man, and an inner insistence on a racial system that is, in itself, un-Christian.

The Dixiecrats Have Their Youth, Too

Courier Journal

Thur 9-9-48

And they are as unattractive as those who yelled for Wallace at Philadelphia

Louisville Ky

By Tarleton Collier

SOME of my colleagues on these pages, and no less the word-intoxicated Rebecca West, have made a number of penetrating observations about the young people in the Wallace movement. The idea seemed to be that youth, in this case, is not the youth of hobbledehoy and sweet-scented manuscript but a kind of hebephrenic perversion of "the glad season of life." Miss West particularly saw them as the lack-luster and unsavory products of frustration, seeking a desperately needed fulfilment in the promises of a messiah.

Without arguing the point, although this might be done at some length, I should like only to give into their hands for dissection the young gorillas of the other side.

These are the ones who threw most of the eggs at Henry Wallace, shouted most of the indecencies ("What color is your father?" "Where's your black girl friend?"), kicked and pounded most savagely at his automobile, roved the Wallace meetings in shirt-tailed mobs. They were capable of almost anything in their irresponsibility.

Now and then you got the idea that they were only kids out for a lark. There were, true enough, signs of prank-playing in the Hallowe'en spirit. But the older they came, the more bitter were the contortions of their faces, the more they ran in gangs. They were almost of an age and temper to be eager recruits for the Klan, with the solidification of its ritualistic mumbo-jumbo.

Thur 9-9-48

THEY were healthy and muscular. Unlike their opposites, the introverts, they showed no signs of being "sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought." Looking at them as types, you were likely to find a meaningless and empty ring in Wallace's talk of the need of a quart of milk for every child in the South. Their frustrations, if any, were the frustrations and limitations of their communities, their homes, their schools and their churches.

And this is the point. With few exceptions they were not chided. They were actually abetted here and there. As the Wallace motorcade moved through Albertsville, Ala., for example, the lumbering sound truck, shrouded in Wallace-Taylor posters, lagged behind. A town policeman called out to the crowd: "Who wants this one?" With a whoop a young sharp-shooter let fly the inevitable egg, blurring the legend: "Vote for Wallace—Peace, Freedom, Security."

WALLACE himself had several words for them, which varied according to his mood and experience. They were "young hoodlums" or they were "deluded people"—or, when they pressed about him taunting, almost within arms' reach, they were "gentlemen with a right to express their opinions," just as he asked, faintly pleading, for the right to express his.

In such moments, the strain upon the Progressives' Presidential candidate was plain to see. The man has no craft at all to serve him in the give-and-take of political routine. A professional campaigner knows how to turn heckling back upon the hecklers, as Alabamans found out when they tried to bait big Jim Folsom. Wallace stands stiffly and self-consciously. Once the eggs and garbage flew, Wallace stood up to them stoutly enough; but until they came, or even if they did not come at all, he talked as if out of but half of his thought, the other being held paralyzed by a dreadful anticipation. He fumbled, thrown off his mental balance by the punctuation of boos. He seemed never to have recovered entirely from the shock of the first onslaughts, in the North Carolina leg of his Southern invasion.

Those were unexpected. But you came to get the impression that they were not unwelcome to anybody in the Wallace organization except Wallace himself, that pathologically shy and introverted man. Every meeting interrupted or broken up was like money in the bank for the Progressives. And how they lack money and need it! Except for cash the Wallace managers collected from newspaper correspondents in advance for the latters' share of the daily automobile hire, there were no signs of folding money in hand.

So brief and hurried were all of the meetings after the party moved south from North Carolina that there was no time, or any congenial atmosphere, for the Progressives' routine of raising money from the audiences. Only once thereafter was it tried, and that in the friendly surroundings of a group made up about three-fourths of Negroes, in a small church in Knoxville. Even then time pressed, as the party had to dash off to catch a plane. Clark Foreman, the party treasurer, got less than $200, with $10 as the largest contribution. However, the profitable appeals will come later, in other regions, with the experiences of the Southern trip as an eloquent talking point.

EXCEPT in his radio talks, nowhere else than in the final meeting in Knoxville was Wallace able to extend himself on his campaign theme. Generally his talks were swift highlights. There were the pictures of the little man opposed by the exploiting big interests, the quart of milk a day, a promise of Southern development through greater farm production, soil improvement, a billion for these purposes and for business stimulation—with emphasis always on small business. The billion was the round sum Wallace held up as now going to "a totalitarian Government in China, undemocratic regimes in Greece and Turkey." And along with all this was his incessant harping on the need of partnership and a common cause among the races, his advocating an end of segregation as the first and greatest need of Southern progress, income, use and sharing of resources.
